A testator having bequeathed annuities issuing out of a leasehold estate to some annuitants for life, to some during the continuance of the fund, and to others indefinitely, with a general provision for an increase or diminution of the annuities, in proportion to the increased or diminished income of the estate; and a particular provision that, on the death of some of the annuitants for life, their portions should be paid to the survivors: the annuities given indefinitely are payable during the continuance of the fund; and the amount of annuities ceasing by the death of annuitants for life not named in the particular provision belongs not to the survivors but forms part of the residue. Hack v. Tuck, 3 Swan. 270. And see Hedges v. Harpur, 3 De G. & J. 129; 27 L. J., Ch. 742; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1209; 6 W. R. 842.

The testator desired that A., B. and C. might each enjoy during life the interest of 800*l.* sterling, the principal to devolve eventually to his residuary legatees. He directed the residue of his property to be divided into three equal parts, one part to each of his brothers and his sister; and if his brothers and sister should not survive him or have legal issue living at the testator's death, then their shares to devolve in equal proportions to the survivors, as well as the shares that might have been devised to their issue. The testator's estate was not sufficient to pay the legacies in full:—Held, upon the death of one of the tenants for life, that an apportionment of the legacy of 800*l.*, set apart to answer her life interest, fell into the residue, and was not given over to the residuary legatees in their individual character; and that the surviving tenants for life were entitled to have the deficiencies in their annuities satisfied out of the released fund. Arnold v. Arnold, 2 Myl. & K. 365; 4 L. J., Ch. 79.

N. T. devised an annuity of 300*l.* per annum to his wife for life, then to accumulate, to make a portion for his first daughter who should marry, then in order to raise portions for other daughters, then to remain to his eldest son, and on his decease to the heirs male of his body, and in case of his having no issue remainder to the next eldest son and his heir male. The daughters married in the life of the wife; the eldest and two other sons of testator died, leaving the wife without issue. This is not personal estate vesting absolutely in the eldest son (on the principle that it would be an estate tail in land), neither does it vest as an executory devise on the fourth son of testator, who survived; but it is an annuity, and being exhausted by the events, there being nobody to take it, as such, sinks into the residuary estate of the testator. Turner v. Turner, 1 Bro. C. C. 317; Ambl. 776.

A testator, after giving legacies, directed the conversion and investment of his real and personal estate, and the appropriation of a sufficient sum to produce an annuity to be paid to his wife for life, and then to a charity, and the testator gave the residue of the net produce of his real and personal estate to certain persons named. The gift to the charity failed by reason of there being no pure personalty:—Held, that the annuity fell into the residue. Pearson v. Hullah, 17 L. T. 113.

A testator by his will gave certain annuities, and directed that the sums set apart to secure them should, as the annuitants died, sink into the residue of the personal estate. By a codicil to his will he stated that in case his property would not provide an income equal to the annuities, they should be ratably reduced. His estate was deficient, and the annuities were ratably reduced. Upon the death of any annuitant, the sum set apart to secure the reduced annuity will belong to the residuary legatee, and is not to be applied to increase the reduced annuities to the amount given by the will. Farmer v. Mills, 4 Russ. 86; 28 R. R. 14.

A testator gave 400*l.* a year to his wife if she recovered her mental faculties, otherwise 200*l.* a year, and to be paid out of his government stock; and he directed, as soon as conveniently might be after her death, the investment of the stock out of which the annuity was payable in land to be conveyed in strict settlement. The wife did not recover:—Held, that the extra 200*l.* a year became part of the residue to be invested, and did not belong to the tenant for life. Tucker v. Boswell, 5 Beav. 607.

The testator, after directing that his property should be realised, and after payment of his debts and funeral expenses should be invested in the 3 per cent. consols, left the annual interest to his executor, to be paid to five persons by way of annuities, two of which were given simply in the words "30*l.* to A., 20*l.* to B." In a subsequent part of his will he gave all his household furniture, the whole of his personal property of every kind not specified above, to his wife:—Held, that the capital producing the two sums above mentioned, subject to the life interest of the annuitants, passed to the wife. Clowes v. Clowes, 9 Sim. 403.

A testator directed his trustees to set apart sufficient stock to produce 700*l.* a year, and pay, among others, an annuity of 200*l.* a year to his brother Thomas for life, and after his decease to continue it amongst his brother's children then living in equal shares during their lives, and at the decease of any of them the stock from which the 200*l.* a year arose was to be sold, and the produce divided equally amongst the children of him or her so dying as they should severally attain twenty-one, with interest in the meantime to be applied for their benefit; and he said, "I give them vested interests therein"; and if any of his brother's children should at his decease be dead and have left issue, such issue should be entitled amongst them to the money they would eventually have been entitled to had their parent outlived his brother. If any of the parties anticipated the payment or sold his interest before due, it was declared to be forfeited, and applied as if such parties had died before the legacy fell due. The testator then appointed his trustees executors and residuary legatees. 23,333*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* was set aside, to answer the 700*l.* a year. The testator's brother Thomas died, leaving six children, of whom Richard was one living at the date of the will; and he, after the decease of his father until his death, received an annuity of 33*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, being one-sixth of the 200*l.* a year. Richard died, leaving three children surviving, one of whom was born in the lifetime of the original testator:—Held, that the children of Richard were not entitled to the money representing the annuity to which he was entitled, but that it fell into the testator's residuary estate. Greenwood v. Roberts, 21 L. J., Ch. 262.

Destination of Income of such Funds.]—See post, INTERMEDIATE RENTS AND PROFITS.

Gifts which Fail—Rule.]—A bequest of "all and singular other my property and estate" will include not only everything not before mentioned in the will, but everything the previous disposition of which fails, unless it appears from the will that the property comprised in the previous disposition was intended to be excepted for all purposes from the residuary bequest, and not merely for the purpose of giving it to the particular legatee. Bernard v. Minshull, 1 Johns. 276; 28 L. J., Ch. 649; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 931.

Contingent Legacy which Fails.]—Devise of lands to his executors to be sold, and thereout to pay 500*l.* to A. if he return from beyond sea, and the residue to B. A. died before testator. This 500*l.* legacy, being given on a contingency that never happened, is as no legacy, and falls into the residue; otherwise, if it had been an absolute legacy of 500*l.* Sprigg v. Sprigg, 2 Vern. 394.

The words "what remain" at the close of a bequest of a specific fund:—Held, a general residuary disposition, the full sense not being necessarily confined; comprising therefore personal estate bequeathed upon a contingency too remote; not being to take place until thirty years after the testator's death. Crooke v. De Vandes, 11 Ves. 330.

Construction of a residuary clause as comprehending a legacy given upon a contingency which did not happen. Bird v. Le Fevre, 15 Ves. 589.

Testator gave 1,000*l.* to his natural son, and if he died under twenty-one then that sum and the residue to go to the testator's family, and he gave the residue to his natural son, to be applied as above directed. The son died under twenty-one:—Held, that the 1,000*l.* was part of the residue, and did not pass to the testator's next of kin as a legacy. Breashur v. Dor, 4 Sim. 21.

Construction of a trust by deed, of money to accumulate, until the grantor's grandchildren, then living, or to be born, respectively attain twenty-one; and on attaining, &c., to pay to each as they should respectively attain such age, their respective shares to be ascertained by the number in being as they respectively attain twenty-one, without regard to such as might afterwards be born. No interest vested until payment. The measure of distribution is the number existing at each period. Those who had received have no further claim upon the fund, increased by shares falling in; therefore one dying under twenty-one after all the others had either received their shares or died under twenty-one, that share is undisposed of by the deed, and passed by a bequest of "all effects whatsoever," following specific descriptions of property. Campbell v. Prescott, 15 Ves. 500.

Legacy Adeemed.]—A testator gives to A. B. the residue of his personal estate, except South Sea stock, which he gives to C. D. The stock is afterwards converted into money. It falls into the residue given to A. B. Wingfield v. Newton, 2 Coll. C. C. 520, n.

Life Interest forfeited by Residuary Legatee.]—Trust by will to permit testator's wife to receive interest and rents for life, for the maintenance of herself and childreu, and in case of her marriage that the interest, &c., shall not be paid to her any longer, but be applied by his executors and trustees (she being an executrix with them) for maintenance of the children, revoked on her marriage, and not restored by a general residuary disposition to her. Duncan v. Duncan, 19 Ves. 396; G. Cooper, 254.

Lapsed Legacies.]—Residuary bequest of personalty includes everything; as a void or lapsed legacy. Durour v. Motteux, 1 Ves. Sen. 320.

General residuary disposition of real and personal estate, not hereinbefore specifically disposed of:—Held, to comprehend specific legacies lapsed, the word "specifically" being construed "particularly." Roberts v. Cook, 16 Ves. 451.

General residuary clause passes all that is not sufficiently disposed of, as in case of lapse. Brown v. Higgs, 4 Ves. 708; 4 R. R. 323.

Testator, intending to dispose of all his personal estate, gives the residue in fifth shares, but appoints his brother "heir to whatever part of his estate should be unappropriated by his will." One of the five shares lapsed in testator's lifetime:—Held, that the above was an ultimate general residuary clause, and comprised this as including not merely what was not mentioned, but everything not effectually given. Jackson v. Kelly, 2 Ves. Sen. 285.

Testator bequeathed all his personal estate, except the money laid out in stock, mortgages, and bonds, to A.; and as to his money in stock and on mortgages and bonds, he gave the same to B. The gift to B. failed by an event analogous to a lapse:—Held, the property which was intended to be given to B. passed under the residuary bequest to A. Evans v. Jones, 2 Coll. C. C. 516.

A testatrix having a general power of appointment over a sum of stock under the will of T. S. appointed the stock to her sons Joseph and John, and her other children, equally; and she left any other sum of money or property to which she then was or might thereafter become entitled under the will of T. S. to be divided amongst such of her children as might be living at her death; and she constituted Joseph her residuary legatee. John died before her:—Held, that Joseph was entitled to the share of the stock intended for John. Spooner's Trusts, In re, 2 Sim. (N.S.) 129; 21 L. J., Ch. 151.

Residuary clause passes all personal property that is not disposed of, as by lapse, though it was contended upon the particular expressions to have been separated, and not intended to pass with the residue. Cambridge v. Rous, 8 Ves. 13.

A., having a power to appoint 1,000*l.* by will, and which in default of appointment was given over to B., duly appointed it to C., who died in the testator's life. He afterwards made a codicil, giving his residue, and the dividends due at his death on the 1,000*l.*, to his wife:—Held, that under the 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, the 1,000*l.* passed to the wife under the residuary gift. Bush v. Cowan, 32 Beav. 228. And see Harris v. Davis, ante, col. 948–9.

Gift Void through Illegality.]—Testator, disposing "of the property of which he should be possessed at his death, after payment of debts and expenses," first made several bequests, specific and general, and then, after directing a certain purpose to be fulfilled out of the surplus property which should remain, gave the remainder in a certain way:—Held, that the latter gift was a gift only of the residue that should remain after deducting what would be required for the object proposed, and that, in the event of that object failing through illegality, the failure would not inure for the benefit of the residuary legatee. Mitford v. Reynolds, 1 Ph. 185; 12 L. J., Ch. 40.

A leasehold house, the bequest of which, being to a charity, fails, passes under a general disposition of the residue, and does not belong to the next of kin as undisposed of. Shanley v. Baker, 4 Ves. 732.

A testator, after sundry other legacies to B. and others, gave B. a sum of 1,000*l.* in trust to invest and accumulate, and pay the accumulated fund to any son he might have named John who should attain twenty-one years of age; and if the first son he should have, and call John, should die before twenty-two, then to the next, and so on; and if no son called John should attain twenty-two years, then B. was to retain the 1,000*l.* for his own use. The testator then declared that his residuary estate should be divided among his pecuniary and particular legatees, in proportion to the particular legacies:—Held, that B. was entitled to retain the sum of 1,000*l.* for his own use (the gift to the son John at twenty-one being void for remoteness), but that the same fell into the residue. Joy v. Aspinwall, 18 Jur. 284.

—— Void for Uncertainty.]—A testator, after giving a fund to his executors upon certain trusts, declared it to be his will that in the event of the failure of those trusts (an event which happened) his said trustees, and the survivors or survivor of them, his executors or administrators, should apply the fund for charitable or other purposes as they or he should think fit, without being accountable to any persons whomsoever for such their dispositions thereof:—Held, that these words created a trust, but a trust of so indefinite a nature that it could not be carried into effect: the bequest therefore failed, and the fund fell into the residue. Ellis v. Selby, 1 Myl. & Cr. 286; 5 L. J., Ch. 214. Affirming 7 Sim. 352.

Gift for Impossible Purpose.]—Testator in the eighth clause of his will directed his executors to purchase a piece of ground which he described, and to erect a monument upon it, for the interment of his own body and the bodies of his parents and sisters, and to pay the expense out of the surplus of his property after discharging his debts and legacies. By the ninth clause he gave the remainder of his property to a charity.

The owner of the piece of land refused to sell it:—Held, that the subject-matter of the ninth clause was not so implicated with the subject-matter of the eighth as that the eighth having failed the ninth must fail also; and that the eighth having failed the whole surplus of the testator's property passed by the ninth clause. Mitford v. Reynolds, 16 Sim. 105; 17 L. J., Ch. 238; 12 Jur. 197.

—— Made under Mistake.]—Certain real estates were settled, on an event which happened, to the use of the survivor of the intended husband and wife, in fee. The wife survived. The husband by his will devised all his real estates to his wife for life, and after her death to executors upon trust to sell, and subject to certain bequests, &c., gave one-fourth of the proceeds to such persons as his wife should appoint, and the remainder equally amongst his executors. All the executors died in the lifetime of the wife, and previously to the date of her will. The wife by her will (made since the passing of the Wills Act), acting upon the supposition that her husband had intended to include in his will the settled estates, which came to her by survivorship, devised them to the uses concerning the same declared by him in his will:—Held, that the settled estates were not well devised by the testatrix to the uses of her husband's will, but that they fell into and formed part of her residuary estate. Culsha v. Cheese, 7 Hare, 236; 18 L. J., Ch. 269; 13 Jur. 802.

Legacies bequeathed by the will of a husband, and subsequently of the widow, proving void, they fall into the residue of the estate, and are not to be distributed among the remaining legatees. Lake v. Cook, 2 Ken. Ch. 54.

Interests Undisposed of.] — A domiciled Englishman dies abroad, having by an instrument which was admitted to probate in England, appointed K. to make a will for him conformably to instructions given or to be given to him, and nominated him as his universal heir. Evidence being given that by the foreign law the universal heir would take all that was not otherwise disposed of by the testator's instructions, and the instructions referred to not being proved:—Held, that K. was entitled to the whole of the testator's property for his own use. Reynolds v. Kortright, 2 Eq. R. 784; 18 Beav. 417; 2 W. R. 445.

Testatrix directed all her estate to be turned into cash; if amounting to 20,000*l.* to go thus: if less, in similar proportions: then subject to some legacies, debts, &c., the residue of her estate in sixteenths; two to her mother for life, the others to different persons absolutely. She then made three residuary legatees. The shares given are only of the 20,000*l.* subject to charges: all beyond that goes to the residuary legatees. Legacy decreed to feme covert: settlement directed. Green v. Scott, 1 Ves. 282.

"I bequeath to my wife all the household furniture and movable goods and chattels in and belonging to my dwelling-house, except my books; I bequeath to her the use of my plate, with power to dispose of such portion thereof as she shall think proper":—Held, that the wife took a life interest only in the plate, and that as she had not disposed of it during her life it fell into the residue. Espinasse v. Luffingham, 3 Jo. & Lat. 186; 8 Ir. Eq. R. 129.

Testator, after devising his real estate to his natural son T. A., bequeathed as follows: "I give and bequeath unto my sister E., to be paid out of the rents and profits of the aforesaid lands, the sum of 250*l.* per annum, and to live free from rent in the house I now occupy in H., with the land and buildings I now occupy, containing about nine Lancashire acres, with the use of my household furniture, plate, linen, books, wines, spirits, carriages and horses, cows, hay, and farming utensils and stock, for her sole use during her natural life, or so long as she shall remain unmarried; in either event, then to go to T. A.; but should she marry, then my will and mind is that my executors shall pay her 100*l.* per annum for her own use during her natural life out of the rents and profits of my said estate." The sister married in the testator's lifetime:—Held, that the consumable articles did not go to T. A., but fell into the residue, and that the annuities of 250*l.* per annum and 100*l.* per annum were not cumulative. Andrew v. Andrew, 1 Coll. C. C. 690.

Testator gave 19,000*l.* consols to trustees in trust for E. B. for life, and after her death for her children; and in case she should die without leaving a child, he directed that the trust fund should be considered as part of his personal estate, and be disposed of in due course of administration; and he gave the residue of his effects to E. B., her executors and administrators, to and for her own use and benefit, she and they paying thereout all the debts due from him at his decease, together with the expenses of his funeral, the charges of proving and establishing his will, and other incidental expenses, and he appointed her his executrix. E. B. survived the testator, and died without leaving a child:—Held, that thereupon the trust fund did not become undisposed of, but formed part of the testator's residuary estate, and belonged as such to E. B.'s estate. Scott v. Moore, 14 Sim. 35; 13 L. J., Ch. 283; 8 Jur. 281.

A testator bequeathed an annuity to D., and to A., B. and C. his residue, to be equally divided, &c., except the Swansea Canal shares, which were not to be sold till after the death of D.:—Held, that the Swansea Canal shares passed by the residuary gift. James v. Irving, 10 Beav. 276.

Trustees of a settlement were to stand possessed of the trust fund (consisting of twelve-fifteenths of a larger fund), in trust, as to one share, for the settlor's daughter A. for her life, and then for her children, who were to take vested interests, if sons at twenty-one, and if daughters at twenty-one or marriage; and if A. should have no children who should live to attain a vested interest in the fund, then to stand possessed of the share so given to A. and her children, in trust as to one moiety for the settlor's daughter B. and her children, and as to the other moiety for his daughter C. and her children, under the same limitations and restrictions to which the gift to A. and her children had been subjected. Then followed similar dispositions of the remainder of the trust fund in favour of B. and her children and C. and her children, with limitations over of each share (in the event of either B. or C. dying without leaving children who should attain a vested interest) to the other two daughters and their children, in moieties as before. But in case there should not be any child or children of A., B. and C., who should live to gain a vested and transmissible interest in the said twelve-fifteenth parts, or any part thereof, under and by virtue of the settlement, then the trustees were to pay, assign, and transfer the whole of the twelve fifteenth parts unto the next of kin of the settlor. The settlor died, having by his will made A., B. and C. his residuary legatees. After his death C. died without issue; then B. died without issue, leaving A. surviving her, who had two children, one of whom, a daughter, was married:—Held, that A., having a child who had lived to gain a vested and transmissible interest in the fund, was not entitled to any portion of it under the limitation to the "next of kin" of the settlor; consequently, that so much of the fund as did not pass under the limitations, other than that to the next of kin, resulted to the settlor, and passed under his will to his residuary legatees. Westwood v. Slater, 1 De G. & Sm. 1.

L. by his will gave all his freeholds and leaseholds to trustees upon trust to invest the surplus for four years, and to pay the interest from the proceeds of his plate and effects directed to be sold to his daughter for life for her separate use, without anticipation, with "remainder" to her children equally, remainder to the children of his brothers, and a like disposition of all his other property, and on the question whether the accumulations during the four years were undisposed of:—Held, that they were not; but a general gift of the residue passed everything. Jearrad v. Tracey, 1 W. R. 501.

—— In Spite of Erroneous Recital.]—A testator, by a codicil, erroneously recited that he had already disposed of part of one portion of his property by his will, and gave the residue of this portion to a legatee:—Held, that the whole of this portion passed to the legatee, and did not fall into the general residue. Langan v. Bergin, [1896] 1 Ir. R. 331.

Lapsed Legacies Excluded where Intention shewn.]—A., by will, declares his intention to dispose of his household goods by his codicil, &c., and devises the residue of his personal estate not disposed of nor reserved to be disposed of, by his codicil, to his wife. Afterwards the testator makes a codicil, and does not dispose of his household goods thereby; the household goods shall not go to the residuary legatee, but according to the statute of distributions. Davers v. Dewes, 3 P. Wms. 40.

Residue under particular circumstances will not take in lapsed legacies, the residue being given as a small remainder of about 100*l.*, and the lapsed legacies amounting to 20,000*l.* In general, the residue takes in lapsed legacies; as to real estates it is otherwise. But the legatee must be a general legatee. Att-Gen. v. Johnstone, Ambl. 577, 580.

A testator bequeathed to his executors and trustees all his personal estate (except such goods as were by his will especially bequeathed, and also except his leasehold estates, which he declared it to be his intention to exonerate from the payment of his debts and legacies), upon trust, in the first place, to pay his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and legacies; and in case there should be any residue of his personal estate (except as aforesaid) he gave the same to his son R. And after giving certain specific legacies, the testator gave all his freehold hereditaments to the same trustees, upon trust for his said son R. for life, with remainder to his grandson W. for life, with divers remainders over in tail. And the testator gave all his leasehold estates to the same trustees, in trust to permit the clear rents thereof to be received, taken, and enjoyed by the person for the time being entitled to the freeholds, until such person should by good assurance become seised of the freeholds in fee simple in possession; and then in trust to convey and assign the leaseholds to him:—Held, that the limitations of the leaseholds beyond the life estates of R. and W. were void for remoteness; and that the interest thus improperly attempted to be given did not belong absolutely to W. as the last tenant for life, nor did it pass by the residuary bequest to R., because the exception of the leaseholds out of the residuary gift was not simply for the purpose of making a separate bequest of them, but also to exonerate them from payment of the debts and legacies; and therefore held, that, beyond W.'s life estate, the leaseholds were undisposed of by the will, and belonged to the next of kin of the testator. Wainman v. Field, Kay, 507.

A general residuary gift carries with it every legacy which fails to take effect, unless the testator has shewn an intention that property which he has excepted from the residue is never to fall into it. Blight, In re, Blight v. Hartnoll, 52 L. J., Ch. 672; L. R. 23 Ch. D. 218; 48 L. T. 543; 31 W. R. 535—C. A.

E. B., by her will, bequeathed to C. H. all her personal property, with the exception of a certain wharf upon which she had charged certain annuities and had given directions for the payment off of certain mortgages upon it:—Held, that E. B. had treated the wharf as part of her own personal property, and had shewn no intention inconsistent with its falling into residue, and that after satisfaction of the annuities and mortgages it passed to C. H. under the residuary gift. Ib.

Davers v. Dewes (supra) doubted. Wainman v. Field (supra) distinguished. Ib.

A testator gave to each of his brothers and sisters named in his will, "or to their legal representatives," 500*l.*, to be paid them in two years after his death. He then gave legacies to several nephews and nieces by name. The whole amount of the legacies was 6,100*l.* He gave the residue to his wife "except 4,100*l.*, of which she is only to have the use during her life, and which I wish to be devised amongst my relatives to whom I have left legacies in the fore part of this instrument, in proportion to the legacies left above, which will just make their legacies double the first bequest." On inspecting the original will, which was a holograph, 4,100*l.* seemed to have been substituted for 5,100*l.*:—Held, that the 4,100*l.* was not so taken out of the residue as to prevent the shares of it which lapsed from going to the residuary legatee. Thompson v. Whitelock, 4 De G. & J. 490; 28 L. J., Ch. 473; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 991; 7 W. R. 625.

Testatrix bequeathed certain leaseholds to trustees upon trust for sale, and to apply the proceeds in or towards payment of her debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and legacies as far as the same would go; and as to all the moneys and personal estate not thereinbefore by her disposed of, and not consisting of lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or the produce thereof, she bequeathed the same for charitable purposes. The produce of the leaseholds was more than sufficient for payment of her debts, funeral expenses, and legacies, and she had not devised any other than leasehold lands to be sold:—Held, that the surplus produce of the leaseholds did not fall into the residue, but was undisposed of. Russell v. Clowes, 2 Coll. C. C. 648; 10 Jur. 732.

A testator gave all his real and personal estate to trustees, except as to money due to him from E., to convert by sale and invest in the funds, "and pay the interest thereof unto his wife" for life, with remainder over:—Held, that the widow was entitled to the interest arising from the debt from E. Dobson v. Banks, 32 Beav. 259. And see Cambridge v. Rous, supra, col. 1213; Hawks v. Longridge, ante, col. 1190: Torrens v. Millington, 26 W. R. 753.

General or Particular Residue—Lapsed Gift.]—A testator bequeathed particular chattels at his residence to A., and his chattels there "not thereinbefore otherwise disposed of" to B., and his general residue to C. The gift to A. lapsed by her death in the testator's lifetime:—Held, that the chattels bequeathed to A. passed to B., as part of a particular residue, and not to C. as part of the general residue. Distinction between a general and a particular residue. De Trafford v. Tempest, 21 Beav. 564.

A testatrix, after bequeathing divers annuities and legacies, and amongst others a sum of stock to M. M., to vest at twenty-one or marriage, devised and bequeathed a West India plantation, and all the residue of her money in the funds, after payment of the annuities and legacies thereinbefore bequeathed, and also her plate, books and certain portraits, to E. G. T. and M. T. for their lives equally, and after the death of either the whole to the survivor for life, and after the decease of the survivor then unto such children of M. T. as he should by deed or will appoint, and in default of appointment then the plantation and the residue of the money in the funds to be equally divided among the said children and their heirs; and if but one child the whole to such child and his or her heirs, the funded property to be an interest vested in them being sons at twenty-one, and being daughters at twenty-one or marriage; but in case M. T. should die without issue of her body lawfully begotten, the testatrix devised the plantation equally among all the children of A. W. and their heirs; and in case M. T. should die without issue as aforesaid, she then bequeathed her said residue of her money in the funds, and all her said plate, books, and portraits, unto M. T. for life, and after his decease to his eldest son for ever; but in case M. T. should die under age and without issue then the said residue of her money in the funds, plate, books, and portraits unto M. M. absolutely. All the rest and residue of her estate and effects the testatrix gave and bequeathed unto E. G. T. and M. T. absolutely, M. T. having survived E. G. T., and died without having been married:—Held, that the stock legacy to M. M., which had lapsed by her death under age and unmarried, passed under the residuary bequest of the funded property for the benefit of M. T., and did not sink into the general residue. Malcolm v. Taylor, 2 Russ. & M. 416.

Upon the construction of a will:—Held, that lapsed legacies fell into the general and not into a particular residue. Master v. Laprimaudaye, 2 Coll. C. C. 448.

—— Gift which Fails.]—Testator gave after his wife's death four pictures to the trustees of the National Gallery, and "all the rest, residue, and remainder of my pictures . . . and other articles and effects . . . not herein or by any codicil specially bequeathed," to his wife absolutely; and after certain other bequests he gave "all the residue and remainder of my moneys . . . goods, chattels, and personal estate and effects whatsoever not herein specifically bequeathed" to his trustees on certain trusts. The trustees of the National Gallery declined the bequest:—Held, that the bequest of the four pictures fell into the second residuary bequest. Patching v. Barnett, 49 L. J., Ch. 665; 43 L. T. 50; 28 W. R. 886.

Testatrix, after giving certain legacies, bequeathed "all her moneys, securities for money, moneys secured on mortgage, railway stocks and shares, moneys to be produced from sale of any property at S. or P., to which she was entitled, all moneys to which she was entitled under the will of her late grandfather, and also all her moneys secured upon any securities or in any way or manner howsoever," to trustees, upon trust, after payment of her legacies and debts, to invest and pay the income to A. for life, and after her decease to pay thereout a certain charitable legacy, and as to the residue thereof upon certain trusts in favour of the defendants. The will contained a residuary bequest in favour of A. The charitable legacy was partially invalid under the Statute of Mortmain:—Held, that the portion of such legacy which failed passed to the defendants under the particular gift of residue, and not to A. under the general residuary gift. Champney v. Davy, 48 L. J., Ch. 268; 11 Ch. D. 949; 40 L. T. 189; 27 W. R. 390.

—— Gift recited but not made.]—See Langan v. Bergin, supra, col. 1217.

Lapsed Share of Residue.]—Where a residue was to be divided in three portions, and one third was given to A., another third to B., and as to the other third "500*l.* part thereof to C., and the residue and remainder of such third to other parties," and C. died in the lifetime of testatrix:—Held, that the 500*l.* lapsed to the next of kin. Lloyd v. Lloyd, 4 Beav. 231; 10 L. J., Ch. 327; 5 Jur. 673.

A testator having by his will directed his executors to transfer 500*l.*, part of his residuary estate, to H. N., and made a specific disposition of the other parts, and having afterwards drawn a pen through the name of H. N., and by a codicil declared that he razed her name out of his will with his own hand, the 500*l.* belongs as undisposed of to his next of kin. The costs of ascertaining the right to that sum paid thereout in exemption of the general residue. Skrymsher v. Northcote, 1 Swan. 566; 1 Wils. Ch. 248; 18 R. R. 142.

Testator gave the whole of his personal property, after payment of his debts, to his wife during her widowhood, remainder to his son, his only child; and if his son should die under twenty-one, he expressed it to be his wish to give 500*l.* to each of his brothers and sister, Joseph, James, and Mary, "and any further surplus to be equally divided between these my said brothers and sister, or their legal heirs and successors." The testator's son survived him, and died under twenty-one. His brother Joseph died in his lifetime:—Held, that the gift of the further surplus was not a residuary gift, but was a gift of the surplus of the testator's property after the three sums of 500*l.* each should be subtracted from it, and that the legal heirs and successors to the brothers and sister were not intended to take unless all of them died, so as not to take; and consequently that there was an intestacy as to the 500*l.* and the share of the further surplus given to Joseph. Gibson v. Hale, 17 Sim. 129; 14 Jur. 27.

Testator bequeathed Greenacre to Catherine S. for life, with remainder to her son John S. in fee; provided that if he should die in his mother's lifetime, then and in such case the testator gave Greenacre, together with the residue of his real and personal estate, to trustees, in trust for Isabella A. for life, remainder in trust as to one-fourth for such persons as she should appoint by will; and upon further trust, to divide, convey, assign, and transfer all the rest, residue, and remainder of the trust property unto and to the use of Maria C., Rose B., and John S. absolutely. John S. survived his mother, and Isabella A. died intestate:—Held, that the trustees took the residuary real estate on the testator's death; and that Maria C., Rose B., and John S. were not entitled to the one-fourth of the property which was subjected to Isabella A.'s appointment, but that it was undisposed of. Simmons v. Rudall, 1 Sim. (N.S.) 115; 15 Jur. 162.

The testator gave his real and personal estate to his executors upon trust, after conversion and payment thereout of his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and legacies, to stand possessed of the residue, and divide the same into ten equal parts or shares, which he bequeathed to ten persons named in his will, and he declared that if the net residue of his property, after payment of the debts, &c., should exceed 10,000*l.*, then 10,000*l.* only should be applicable to the said trust, 1,000*l.* in each share; and in that case the testator gave the residue of his said property beyond the 10,000*l.* to his nephews and nieces in equal shares. The net residue, after the payment of debts, &c., exceeded 10,000*l.* One of the tenth shares lapsed by the death, in the testator's lifetime, of one of the ten legatees:—Held, that the lapsed share of 1,000*l.* did not pass as residue to the nephews and nieces, but was undisposed of. Green v. Pertwee, 5 Hare, 249; 15 L. J., Ch. 372; 10 Jur. 538.

Residue divided between certain residuary legatees, one of whom dies in the lifetime of the testator. By codicil the testator confirms his will except as to any legacy lapsed:—Held, that the share of the deceased legatee was undisposed of. Wood's Will, In re, 29 Beav. 236.

Property Subject to Power of Appointment.]—Sect. 27 of the Wills Act refers exclusively to general powers of appointment, and does not apply to limited or special powers. Property comprised in a limited or special power of appointment exercised by will is not within s. 24 of the Wills Act, as being real or personal estate comprised in the will. Dictum in Wells, In re, Hardisty v. Wells (42 Ch. D. 646), approved; Stillman v. Weedon (16 Sim. 26) considered. Doyle v. Coyle, [1895] 1 Ir. R. 205.

And see POWERS.

b. What Words will pass Particular Property.

i. Real Estate.

"Bequeath."]—The word "bequeath" is large enough to carry real estate, if distinctly applied to it. Whicker v. Hume, 14 Beav. 518.

Though a testator has elsewhere in his will used the words "devise" and "bequest" correctly in their technical senses, the words "bequeathed" and "bequest" in the residuary clause may be construed to include real estate. Jackson v. Hosie, 27 L. R. Ir. 450—C. A.

"Business."] — A testator devised and bequeathed his whole property to trustees upon trust to invest such part as they should think fit in his business, and carry on the same till his son should attain the age of twenty-one years, and out of the profits to pay his widow the yearly sum of 200*l.* so long as she should remain a widow; and he directed the trustees, when his son should attain twenty-one, to transfer the business to his son. He then gave certain legacies to his other children, and provided that all his personal estate not required for the business should be continued in its then state of investment or altered at the discretion of the trustees, and the proceeds applied for the same purposes as the capital employed in the business. The business was carried on in a freehold shop:—Held, that the direction to transfer the business did not pass the freehold shop, and that the residuary gift carried the surplus profits of the business during the minority of her son. Henton, In re, Henton v. Henton, 30 W. R. 702.

Effects.]—A gift, in a will, of "moneys and effects":—Held, under particular circumstances, sufficient to pass real estates. Titchfield (Marquis) v. Horncastle, 7 L. J., Ch. 279; 2 Jur. 610.

The word "effects" in a will equivalent to "property" or "worldly substance." Campbell v. Prescott, 15 Ves. 507.

A testator, by a will prior to the 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, gave all the rents of his lands to three persons, to be equally divided between them according to value, but without any words of inheritance; and then accurately enumerating his real estate, proceeded to give his "stock-in-trade," money, book debts, and effects not included in the above statement to two of such persons, also without words of inheritance:—Held, first, that the direction in the first part of the will, that the rents were to be divided "according to value," did not amount to a direction to sell, and that the three first donees only took for life; secondly, that the word "effects" carried the reversion in the lands to the second set of donees in fee, subject to the life estate of the three first donees. Milsome v. Long, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1073.

A testator gave, devised, and bequeathed his household goods, &c., "and everything he should die possessed of," to A., for life, and after her death, he gave, devised, and bequeathed "the whole of his effects which might be then remaining, unto and to the use of P.":—Held, that the real estate passed. Phillips v. Beal, 25 Beav. 25.

Copyholds held to pass under a will by the words "moneys, property, or effects," aided by the context. Streatfield v. Cooper, 27 Beav. 338.

Effects held to be ejusdem generis, and not to apply to real estate. Cross v. Wilkes, 35 Beav. 562.

Testator gave, devised, and bequeathed to his wife all his "furniture, goods, chattels, and effects, whatsoever the same may be or wheresoever the same may be situate":—Held, on the context, that the gift passed all the property of the testator, whether real or personal. Hall v. Hall, 61 L. J., Ch. 289; [1892] 1 Ch. 361; 66 L. T. 206; 40 W. R. 277—C. A.

And see Estate and Effects, infra.

Estate.]—The word estate, when used in a will, is genus generalissimum, and will, of its own proper force, without any proof aliunde of an intention to aid the construction, carry realty as well as personalty, and is not to be confined and restrained to personalty only unless there is a clear intent expressed in other parts of the will, to be gathered either from the whole will, or from the way in which the word is used in the particular part of the will where the contested use of it arises. Hamilton Corporation v. Hodsdon, 6 Moore, P. C. 76; 11 Jur. 193.

Testator, by his will, devised to J. (his heir-at-law) part of his estate in fee, and also a life-estate, in another portion of his estate, named P.; and also gave to F. (his wife) a life-estate in part of P., during her viduity, with remainder to his other son N. in tail, remainder to his (the testator's) daughters for life; and after giving certain specific chattels to F., the will proceeded as follows: "I give all the remainder of my estate that is now in my possession, or may hereafter be mine, excepting what I have particularly given away, unto my wife, F., and it is my will, that, whatever my estate may consist of, after debts and legacies are paid, it be kept together under the direction of my wife F." N. died without issue, and F., the widow, also died unmarried and intestate. The heirs-at-law of J. sold the estate P. to the appellants, subject to the life-estate of the daughters. In a suit by the appellants, against the daughters of the testator, the co-heiresses of F., for a partition:—Held, by the judicial committee, affirming the decree of the court in Bermuda, that the remainder in fee in the estate P. passed to F., under the residuary clause, there being nothing in the context of the will to confine the natural and legal meaning of the word "estate" to personalty only. Ib.

The word "estate" in will, unless qualified, passes both real and personal estate. Barnes v. Patch, 8 Ves. 604; 7 R. R. 127. S. P., O'Toole v. Browne, 2 W. R. 430.

Under general word "estate" in will, real estate passes unless restrained by apparent contrary intent. Woollam v. Kenworthy, 9 Ves. 137.

Word "estate," when used generally, includes not only the lands or thing, but also the estate or interest. So, if "in or at" such a place is added; but if it is further added "in the occupations of particular tenants," quære. Goodwin v. Goodwin, 1 Ves. 228.

A testator gave and bequeathed the "residue of his estate, after taking out 1,000*l.*," to his uncle:—Held, that the residuary real and personal estate passed, the testator having previously made pecuniary gifts out of "his freehold and personal estate." Hawksworth v. Hawksworth, 27 Beav. 1.

The word "estate" in a will, will primâ facie pass real estate, and the burden of proof lies on those who contend the contrary. Patterson v. Huddart, 17 Beav. 210; 1 W. R. 423.

—— Coupled with other Words.]—The word "estate" and other similar words which, when used in a will, are of themselves sufficient to pass real as well as personal estate, will not be cut down and confined to the latter merely because the accompanying expressions and the limitations and trusts of the will are applicable to personal estate only. Stein v. Ritherdon, 37 L. J., Ch. 369; 19 L. T. 184; 16 W. R. 477.

Therefore, where a testator in 1866, after specific bequests of pure personalty, bequeathed all the rest and residue of his estate and effects to trustees, their executors, administrators and assigns, upon trusts applicable to personalty only, with an ultimate limitation to the next-of-kin:—Held, that a freehold house which belonged to the testator passed under the residuary gift to the trustees. Ib.

"All my freehold lands in tenure of L., and the residue of my estate, consisting of ready money, plate, jewels, leases, judgments, mortgages, &c., or in any other thing whatsoever and wheresoever, I give to A. or her assigns for ever." The court will intend an intestacy in favour of the heir-at-law, unless there is a clear intention to pass the real estate. Timewell v. Perkins, 2 Atk. 102.

One devises all his goods, chattels, and estate whatsoever, on condition to pay his debts and legacies; these words pass his real estate, he having by will devised a considerable legacy to his eldest son, and other legacies and the surplus of his estate after his wife's death, to be equally divided between his four children. Lumley v. May, Pre. Ch. 37.

It has been held that where "estate" is mentioned generally, accompanied with personal things, it should be restrained to personal, but never where real estate is mentioned; for then the personal things mentioned shall be considered only as an enumeration of those specific things. Bailis v. Gale, 2 Ves. Sen. 51. And see Ridout v. Pain, 3 Atk. 485.

A testator, after giving a specific legacy and an annuity, gave all his property to trustees, upon trusts for his granddaughter and her issue, with provisions for their benefit, and for the religious education of the granddaughter, who was a minor. The legatee and annuitant died soon after the making of the will. After this the testator, by codicil, gave and bequeathed "the whole of my estate, and all my household goods and furniture, linen, china, watches, and all other my personal property and effects that I may be possessed of at the time of my death," to his servant R., free from legacy duty, such gift not to prejudice any claim R. might have for wages; and the testator in all other respects ratified and confirmed his will. The grandchild was still living, and a minor:—Held, by the vice-chancellor of Lancaster, that the testator's real estate was unaffected by the codicil. Molyneux v. Rowe, 25 L. J., Ch. 570; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 769; 4 W. R. 539.

The codicil revoked the disposition of the real estate made by the will, for that the words of description in the codicil, following the words "the whole of my estate," comprised the whole personal estate, and the above words must therefore apply to the real estate. Turner, L.J. Ib.

—— Estate and Effects.]—A testator, after devising a freehold to two others and the survivor, her heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns for ever, proceeded, "And I give all the rest of my household furniture, books, linen, and china, except as hereinafter mentioned, goods, chattels, estate, and effects, of what nature or kind soever, and wheresoever the same shall be, at the time of my decease, unto R. and S., their executors, administrators, and assigns in trust." He afterwards specifically bequeathed his ready money and various chattels :—Held, by the court of exchequer, that the word "estate," thus circumstanced, did not pass real estate; but this court, not being satisfied, directed a case to the common pleas. Sanderson v. Dobson, 10 Beav. 478. And see S. C. at law, 1 Ex. 141.

F. possessing, as far as appeared, personalty only, by his will, inter alia, left all the rest, &c., of his estate and effects to trustees upon trust to invest in the public funds or upon government or real securities, with power to vary the same. After a suit had been instituted and reference ordered, it was discovered that two chapel shares were real estate, and upon the question whether the above words passed real estate :—Held, that they did, according to the present law, which varied from the earlier cases; and a sale directed. Fullerton v. Martin, 1 Drew. 238; 22 L. J., Ch. 893; 17 Jur. 778; 1 Eq. R. 224; 1 W. R. 379.

A testator, after specific gifts of freeholds, leaseholds, and chattels, gave "all the rest of his household furniture, books, linen, and china (except as thereinafter mentioned), goods, chattels, estate, and effects to R. and S., their executors, administrators, and assigns," on trust. The testator then disposed of his ready money, moneys to arise from a certain sale, securities for money and moneys owing, and made certain specific bequests :—Held, that the whole of the residuary estate, real and personal, passed to R. and S. by force of the word "estate." Dobson v. Bowness, 37 L. J., Ch. 309; L. R. 5 Eq. 404; 16 W. R. 640.

T. A. H. by will gave all the residue of his "estate and effects" to trustees upon trust to invest the same in 3 per cents., and with power to alter, or vary, or transpose, at their discretion, and to pay the interest and dividends to D. for life, and after to her children. The testator acquired real estate after the date of his will, but left no heir; and on the question, as between the residuary legatee and the crown, whether the real estate passed :—Held, that it did. D'Almaine v. Moseley, 1 Eq. R. 252; 1 Drew. 629; 22 L. J., Ch. 971; 17 Jur. 872; 1 W. R. 475.

The word "estate," in a will, will primâ facie pass real estate, and the burden of proof lies on those who contend the contrary. Patterson v. Huddart, 17 Beav. 210; 1 W. R. 423.

A testatrix, after giving certain legacies to charities, and directing that they should be paid out of her personal estate, bequeathed her pictures, furniture, books, &c., to her daughters: and as to all the rest and residue of her estate and effects whatsoever, and all her diamonds and other jewels, not thereinbefore disposed of, she gave the same to trustees, their executors and administrators, upon trust, to sell the same and hold the money upon certain trusts :—Held, that her real estate passed under the word "estate." Ib.

A testator gave "all his estate, effects, and property whatsoever and wheresoever," which he was or might be possessed of or entitled to, "to his three executors, their executors and administrators," upon trust to stand possessed thereof, and the proceeds thereof, upon certain trusts for children and grandchildren :—Held, that this, by itself, would pass real estate, but, upon the subsequent expressions and the general scope and object of the will, the contrary was held. The court principally relied on the absence of the words "[illegible]" "devise," and "rent," and the use of the expression "possession," "executors and administrators," "principal, the balance, the principal of the said legacies," the direction to claim a share from his personal representatives, and the power to appoint new trustees, applicable to "executors," and not to "heirs." Coard v. Holderness, 20 Beav. 147; 24 L. J., Ch. 388; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 316; 3 W. R. 311.

—— Where Trusts applicable to Personalty.] —Under a devise of all the residue of the testator's estate and effects whatsoever and wheresoever, of what nature or kind soever, to trustees upon trusts applicable only to personal property: —Held, that the real estate passed, with a resulting trust for the heir. Dunnage v. White, 1 J. & W. 583; 21 R. R. 239.

A will made after the Wills Act, 1 Vict. c. 26, whereby the testator gave, devised, and bequeathed all his estates and effects whatsoever and wheresoever, and of what nature or kind soever, to be paid, assigned, or transferred to A. on his attaining twenty-one :—Held, to pass real estate (copyhold of inheritance) subsequently acquired, notwithstanding a direction in the will that in the meantime the executors should apply the interest, dividends, and proceeds of such estate and effects, or so much thereof, or so much of the principal thereof, as they should think necessary in the maintenance, education, and putting forth of A. in the world, and should invest the said estates and effects on real or personal security at their discretion. The directions applicable only to personal estate may in such a case be construed as referring not to the whole subject-matter of the gifts, but to such portions of the estate as may consist of personalty to which such directions may be fitly applied. Stokes v. Salomons, 9 Hare, 75.

The word "estate," in a will, will primâ facie pass real estate, and the burden of proof lies on those who contend the contrary. Patterson v. Huddart, 17 Beav. 120; 1 W. R. 423.

A testatrix after giving pecuniary and specific legacies, and after directing her charity legacies to be paid out of her personal estate, "gave and bequeathed" all the rest "of her estate and effects whatsoever and wheresoever, and all her diamonds and other jewels," to trustees, their "executors and administrators," upon trust to sell and divide :—Held, that the real estate passed to them. Ib.

A gift of "all the residue of my estate and effects to A. B. and C., upon trust to collect, get in, and recover the same, and invest in stock, and pay the dividends, &c., to persons beneficially entitled"; A. and B. being also executors :—Held, to pass real estate. D'Almaine v. Moseley, 1 Drew. 629; 1 Eq. R. 252; 22 L. J., Ch. 971; 17 Jur. 872; 1 W. R. 474.

A testator devised and bequeathed all his estate and effects to trustees, their heirs, executors, and administrators, to convert his personal estate, not being money, and to stand possessed of the money to arise by such sale, and of the rest and residue of his estate and effects, to invest the same in government or real securities, and to stand possessed of such investments for benefit of his widow and children and his brothers and sisters :—Held, that the real estate passed to the trustees, but that the beneficial interest therein was undisposed of by the ... and consequently resulted to the heir. ... v. Longley, 41 L. J., Ch. 168; L. R. ... Eq. 133; 25 L. T. 736; 20 W. R. 227. And see Whicker v. Hume, supra, col. 1221.

Estates.]—Under a devise to trustees during life of A. of all testator's estates and farms:—Held, word "estate" referred only to the thing, and not to the interest in it. Sayer v. Masterman, Ambl. 345.

—— Coupled with Other Words.]—Personal estate to be laid out in land, but lent on mortgage instead, considered as land, having been always out in trustees, and the uses never united with the possession, and passed by such general words in a will as would pass land, as "all my estates, &c., whatsoever and wheresoever." Rashleigh v. Master, 1 Ves. 201; 3 Bro. C. C. 99.

A bequest of "all my goods, chattels, estate, and estates whatsoever," will pass real as well as personal property. Churchill v. Dibben, 9 Sim. 447, n.

A testator gave to his wife all his money, goods, chattels, estates, and effects, of what nature or kind soever, and wheresoever the same might be found at the time of his decease, for her life; and at her decease all his property of goods, money, chattels, estate, or effects whatsoever, to be equally divided between all his children, &c.:—Held, that the testator's real estate passed. Midland Counties Railway Co. v. Oswin, 1 Coll. C. C. 74; 3 Railw. Cas. 497; 13 L. J., Ch. 209; 8 Jur. 138.

Testator gave to his executors "all his goods, estates, bonds, debts, to be sold," &c. The word "estates" will pass a copyhold which was surrendered to the use of the will. Jongsma v. Jongsma, 1 Cox, 362.

"Fortune"—Words of Complete Disposition—Foreign Real Property.]—A testatrix, of French birth, made her will, dated 1868, in the French language. The will was, however, in English form, and the testatrix's domicil was English. The testatrix gave legacies and annuities to various persons, including her only daughter, and a specific legacy of articles of vertu to her only son. The testatrix then declared that, after the deduction of all the above bequests, together with the necessary sums to secure the payment of the annuities, the residue of her fortune (le surplus de ma fortune) should belong to her grandson. The only real estate which the testatrix possessed was situate in France. Her personal property was not quite sufficient to pay all her debts and legacies. The question was, whether the testatrix's real estate in France, devolving to her French heirs, could be taken as intended by the testatrix to be comprised in her will, and to be subjected by her to the same obligation of contributing to the payment of debts and legacies, in which event the French heirs would be put to their election:—Held, that, according to the authorities, the universality of a gift of property contained in a will was not sufficient to demonstrate or create a ground of inference that the testator meant it to extend to property which was incapable, although his own, of being given by the particular instrument; and that, therefore, the testatrix could not be said to have intended to affect her French real estate, there being nothing in the will from which the court could infer any such intention so as to take the case out of the rule above stated. Baring v. Ashburton, 54 L. T. 463.

"Lands" Coupled with Words applicable only to Personalty.]—A. devises to her niece thus: "I make my niece G. executrix of all my goods, lands, and chattels," and dies, not having any leasehold interest, yet her lands of inheritance pass not by these words. Piggot v. Penrice, Pre. Ch. 471.

Legacy.]—The word "legacy" primâ facie has reference to personal estate only. Windus v. Windus, 6 De G. M. & G. 549; 21 Beav. 373; 26 L. J., Ch. 185; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 269, 1101.

Money.]—A husband directed the income arising from his principal money to be paid to his wife, while unmarried, for the support of herself and the education of his children, and at her death or marriage to be divided among them. The testator had but little money strictly so called, but he had large personal property, and some freehold property:—Held, that the whole of the personal property passed, including leaseholds, but not the freehold property. Prichard v. Prichard, 40 L. J., Ch. 92; L. R. 11 Eq. 232; 24 L. T. 259.

Personal Estate—Proceeds of Real Estate.]—See cases ante, col. 1157.

Personal Estate and Effects.]—A testator gave his personal estate to his executors, with a direction to collect the rents of his freeholds, leaseholds, and copyholds, and thereout pay annuities. He gave his residuary legatee all his personal estate and effects:—Held, that by reference to the former part of the will the residuary real estate passed. Lines v. Lines, 22 L. T. 400; 17 W. R. 1004.

A testator devised his real estate (subject to charges) in strict settlement, and gave all his "railway, canal, and navigation shares . . . and personal estate" to his executor, to pay his debts and legacies, and his residuary personal estate and effects to M. He was possessed of two navigation shares, which by the act creating them were made of the nature of real estate. Before his death, the undertaking to which the shares belong became vested in a railway company, by an act which provided for the extinguishment of the freehold rights in the shares, upon their conveyance to the railway company. The shares were never conveyed to the railway company:—Held, that by the railway company's act, or if not, by the will, they were converted into personal estate, and went to the residuary legatee under the gift of his personal estate and effects. Cadman v. Cadman, 41 L. J., Ch. 468; L. R. 13 Eq. 470; 20 W. R. 356.

Personal Estate and Property.]—Gift of "personal estate and property whatsoever and wheresoever" held not to pass real estate. Buchanan v. Harrison, 31 L. J., Ch. 74; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 965; 10 W. R. 118.

A bequest of "the whole of my personal property, estate, and effects, of every and whatsoever kind they may be," will not carry real estate. Belaney v. Belaney, 36 L. J., Ch. 265; L. R. 2 Ch. 138; 16 L. T. 269; 15 W. R. 369.

The assignee of a term of years afterwards purchased the reversion, which was conveyed to a trustee for him in fee. In the deed of conveyance was contained a recital of the purchaser's desire that the term should not merge. The purchaser afterwards made a will bequeathing all his personal estate:—Held, that the term passed by the bequest. Ib.

A testator gave to his wife all his household furniture, personal effects, and properties of every description that he might be possessed of at his death, and also all moneys which might then be in his possession or due to him:—Held, that the gift did not include his realty. Yates, Ex parte, 20 L. T. 940; 17 W. R. 872. See also Smalley, In re, Smalley v. Smalley, ante, col. 1161.

"What I possess or die possessed of."]—A feme covert having power to dispose by will of personal property, and of a real estate at N., by her will, after reciting the power, gave several pecuniary legacies, and then gave to her husband her fields and house at N., likewise the remainder of her personalty, and all she might die possessed of, after payment of her debts, legacies, and funeral and testamentary expenses:—Held, that the husband took a life estate only in the realty, notwithstanding the gift to him of all the testatrix might die possessed of. Monk v. Mawdsley, 1 Sim. 286; 5 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 149.

A testator, possessed only of personalty, by the residuary clause of his will bequeathed the same to his wife for life, and after her decease to his children in certain proportions. Having subsequently acquired real estate, he made a codicil, by which he left certain shares to his wife, "on the same terms as I have everything else (everything I possess I leave her)":—Held, that the words shewed a present intention, and passed the real estate. Warner v. Warner, 20 L. J., Ch. 273; 15 Jur. 11.

Devise of all "estate and effects that I shall die possessed of" carries after-purchased lands. Churchman v. Ireland, 1 Russ. & M. 250.

By will testator nominated wife his executrix, "thereby bequeathing to her all the property of whatever description or sort that I may die possessed," &c.:—Held, she is entitled, though not as executrix, to all his property that such a will could pass. Noel v. Hoy, 5 Madd. 38; 21 R. R. 271.

A gift to A. and B., "whom I appoint my executors of all that I possess in any way belonging to me, by them freely to be possessed or enjoyed, of whatever nature or matter it may be," will pass the fee-simple of real estate. Thomas v. Phelps, 4 Russ. 348; 6 L. J. (O.S.), Ch. 110; 28 R. R. 120.

A testator gave, devised, and bequeathed his household goods, &c., "and everything he should die possessed of," to A., for life, and after her death, he gave, devised, and bequeathed "the whole of his effects which might be then remaining, unto and to the use of" P.:—Held, that the real estate passed. Phillips v. Beal, 25 Beav. 25.

Testator being seised in fee of a house in the town of C., and of estates in the counties of H. and L., gave pecuniary legacies to his two sons (one of whom was his heir), and also to his two daughters, M. and C. He then gave to his wife for her life the possession of his house, together with the use of his plate, furniture, &c., and the interest of his stock in the funds during her life, "save and except the clauses in favour of my daughters as already mentioned; at her decease it is my will and pleasure that M. and C. shall divide equally between them as residuary legatees whatever I may die possessed of, except what is already mentioned in favour of others":—Held, that M. and C. took an estate in fee in remainder expectant on the death of the testator's widow, in the house in C., and an estate in fee commencing on the widow's decease, in the estates in H. and L., and that the widow did not take a life interest by implication in those estates, but that the heir took them by descent during her life, Davenport v. Coltman, 12 Sim. 588; 11 L. J., Ch. 262; 6 Jur. 381. And see S. C. at law, 9 M. & W. 481; 11 L. J., Ex. 114.

Profits.]—See Rents and Profits, infra.

Property.]—The word "property" has the most extensive meaning, when used in a will. Jones v. Skinner, 5 L. J., Ch. 87.

A testator, by his will, devised his "property," and referred to the income by the words "dividends" and "interest":—Held, that his real estate was included in the word "property," notwithstanding the use of the other words. Morrison v. Hoppe, 4 De G. & Sm. 234; 15 Jur. 737.

Under the word property, reversionary interest in realty does not pass. Buchanan v. Harrison, 31 L. J., Ch. 74; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 965; 10 W. R. 118.

A testator gave to his wife, for her use and benefit, "his leases, moneys, goods, furniture, plate, book-debts, securities for money, and all other property, of every description, that he might be possessed of":—Held, that the real estate passed. Greenwich Hospital Improvement Act, In re, 20 Beav. 458. And see Coard v. Holderness, supra, col. 1226.

—— Where Trusts applicable to Personalty.]—Testator having given to his eldest son a particular estate, without words of limitation, proceeded to settle the residue of his property upon certain trusts between such son and his two sisters and their families, using words in the course of such devise more properly applicable to personal estate, as that his son's share (which in another place was called a portion) was to be placed in the names of trustees, and that in certain cases some of the capital might be advanced; the son's interest, too, in the residue was only for life:—Held, nevertheless, that the reversion in fee of the particular estate passed by the residuary clause. Saumarez v. Saumarez, 4 Myl. & Cr. 331.

A specific devise of real estate was followed by a devise and bequest of all the testator's other property whatsoever and wheresoever to trustees upon trusts which were expressed in terms more appropriate to personalty than to realty. The testator was not, at the date of his will, entitled to any real estate other than that specifically devised, but he subsequently became entitled to real estate of great value:—Held, that such subsequently acquired real estate passed by the will. Lloyd v. Lloyd, 38 L. J., Ch. 458; L. R. 7 Eq. 458; 20 L. T. 898; 17 W. R. 702.

Rents and Profits.]—Devise of profits is a devise of land. Johnson v. Arnold, 1 Ves. Sen. 171.

Devise of profits will pass land. Allan v. Backhouse, 2 V. & B. 74; 13 R. R. 23. Affirmed, Jac. 631; 23 R. R. 167.

A testator resident in Jamaica devised the rents, issues, and profits of his estate called Islington and Cove's Pen in that island to A. B.:—Held, that the estate, and the slaves, mules, cattle, and machinery thereon passed under this devise. Stewart v. Garnett, 3 Sim. 398. See Rucker, Ex parte, 3 Deac. & C. 704.

Devise of "one moiety of the rents, issues, and profits of my estate, named T., in the parish of M., to be divided equally amongst my grandchildren; the other moiety of the rents, issues, and profits of my said estate I give to R. and his heirs":—Held, that the grandchildren take the fee as tenants in common in a moiety of the estate. Ib., 3 Sim. 398.

A sale directed on the words "rents and profits" alone, though generally contrary to testator's intention, in aid of a creditor, on the ground of law, that in a will those words meant and passed the land itself. Another construction, however, as to legatees, upon the addition of the words "as the rents and profits, &c., should advance the money." Baines v. Dixon, 1 Ves. Sen. 41.

Residuary Legatee.]—The term "residuary legatee" is not of an invariable nature; it must be fashioned and moulded by the context of the will. Singleton v. Tomlinson, 3 App. Cas. 404; 38 L. T. 653; 26 W. R. 722.—H. L. (I.)

—— Appointment of—When Realty passes by.]—Testator gave all his real and personal estate to his brother James and his nephew Malcolm, their heirs, executors, &c., in trust, by or out of his personal estate, or by sale, mortgage, or other disposition of his real estate or any part thereof, to pay his sister 1,500*l.*, and after giving 1,000*l.* to his brother James, he left to his brother Donald 2,000*l.*, and added, "and also to be my residuary legatee"; after which he gave 200*l.* to another of his sisters:—Held, that Donald was the testator's residuary devisee as well as legatee. Evans v. Crosbie, 15 Sim. 600; 16 L. J., Ch. 494; 11 Jur. 510.

A testator, by his will, devised all his estates to three trustees, whom he also named his executors, and charged same with various annuities and pecuniary legacies, and concluded thus: "I give, devise, and bequeath unto my said trustees, to be equally divided between them, share and share alike, all the rest, residue, and remainder of my property not herein disposed of, to answer any contingency that may arise or happen with respect to the trusts of this my will, or in case of nonpayment of my rents, as also to answer the several legacies and bequests herein mentioned, and to pay the expense of agency." By codicil to this will the testator made some alterations in the bequests of the annuities given by the will, and proceeded thus: "I leave my brother-in-law, P. N. (one of the trustees named in the will), residuary legatee to all my property; and I hereby empower him to keep clerks, agents, &c., in any manner he thinks proper, and also to fee one of the first lawyers upon any question he may think fit to consult for advice, and to do all other acts he may think proper, with or without the consent of my other trustees or executors":—Held, that all the real estate of the testator, not previously disposed of, passed to P. N. and that he took beneficial interest therein. Warren v. Newton, Dr. 464.

E. by her will, after a specific devise of real estate to S., and pecuniary legacies of 50*l.* and 200*l.*, bequeathed three other pecuniary legacies of 100*l.* each, with the proviso that "if her estate would not produce these sums of 100*l.* each, after the previous legacies were paid," then these sums were to abate; and she appointed S. her "residuary legatee." E. left real estate not specifically devised:—Held, that the real estate not specifically devised passed to S., as residuary devisee as well as legatee. Salter, In re, Farrant v. Carter, 44 L. T. 603.

A testator commenced his will by saying "As to my estate which God has been pleased in His good providence to bestow upon me, I do make and ordain this my last will and testament, as follows." He then made separate dispositions of two specified farms, then gave several pecuniary legacies, then bequeathed his shares in a quarry, then gave some further pecuniary legacies, and concluded with "and I make M. P., R. H. and O. P. my residuary legatees":—Held, that the testator's freehold estate not specifically mentioned in the will passed to these residuary legatees. Hughes v. Pritchard, 46 L. J., Ch. 840; 6 Ch. D. 24; 37 L. T. 259; 25 W. R. 761. And see Davenport v. Coltman, supra, col. 1230.

—— When Realty does not pass by.]—In a will, the words "I constitute A. and B. my residuary legatees," will not pass real estate. Windus v. Windus, 21 Beav. 373. Affirmed, 6 De G. M. & G. 549; 26 L. J., Ch. 185; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1101.

A will recited that the testator was possessed of particular items of property, personal and real, and specified the different items; the enumeration, though not exhaustive, was nearly complete at the date of the will. The testator left a number of legacies (inter alia one shilling to his presumptive heir), which did not exhaust the personal estate as enumerated. and devised his farms (some of which were freehold) in inaccurate language, using the word "bequeath" in disposing of realty; but he did not express an intention to deal with his entire property. The will concluded by appointing J. W. his "residuary legatee." After the date of the will the testator invested a large sum in the purchase of a fee-simple estate:—Held, that the purchased estate did not pass to J. W. under the residuary clause. In a will including realty and personalty real estate does not pass under the words "residuary legatee" proprio vigore, without an expressed intention to dispose of the testator's entire property. Gethin v. Allen, 23 L. R., Ir. 236.

A testator concluded his will in these words: "As to all my personal estate, &c., subject however to my debts and legacies hereinbefore bequeathed, I give the same to W. R. W., whom I appoint executor of this my will, and also in case of any residue I appoint him my residuary legatee":—Held, that the residuary clause was confined to personal estate, and that under it certain rents undisposed of during the life of W. R. W. did not pass to him for life. Wills v. Wills, 1 Dr. & War. 439; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 531.

A testatrix, by her will, dated in 1854, gave as follows: "I commit to paper my wishes respecting the disposal of my property. . . . Everything I am possessed of I leave to my sister for her life, after her decease I give and devise as here annexed." Then followed a number of legacies, and the will proceeded: "My two nephews, H. H. M. and F. P. M., I leave my executors, and the latter residuary legatee after the demise of my sister." She also executed a codicil, but she had no real estate either at the date of the will or codicil. She afterwards purchased some freehold property, which she held at her death. F. P. M. contracted for the sale of part of the real estate as absolute owner, and an objection having been taken by the purchaser that he had not title :—Held, that there was not sufficient context in the will to enable the court to read the words "residuary legatee" as "residuary devisee," and that consequently the real estate did not pass to F. P. M. Hughes v. Pritchard (supra) distinguished. Methuen and Blore, In re, 50 L. J., Ch. 464 ; 16 Ch. D. 696 ; 44 L. T. 332 ; 29 W. R. 656. And see Monk v. Mawdsley, supra, col. 1229 ; Hamilton v. Foot, ante, col. 1205.

—— When Copyholds pass by.]—A testator, after having given legacies to his children, amongst whom were two of his younger sons, Ansley and Eric, gave all his freehold, leasehold and copyhold estates unto and to the use of his sons Thomas and Ansley equally, as tenants in common ; and he also gave all the rest, residue and remainder of his personal estate and effects, after payment of legacies, to his sons Thomas and Ansley equally, and he appointed them and a nephew executors of his will. Thomas died in the lifetime of the testator, and afterwards the testator made a codicil, by which, after noticing the death of Thomas, the testator, "in the place and stead of him," constituted and appointed his son Eric jointly with Ansley and his daughter as an executrix in the room of his nephew, and proceeded in these words : "I also revoke the legacies to my sons Ansley and Eric, and appoint them residuary legatees, share and share alike ":—Held, that Eric did not take any portion of the freehold or copyhold estates under this devise, but that the moiety given by the will to Thomas was undisposed of. Windus v. Windus, supra.

J. G., by his will, declared his daughter M. A. to be his sole residuary legatee. J. G. at his death was entitled to certain copyhold estates, which were not specifically mentioned in his will :—Held, that the copyholds did not pass under the will to M. A. Lea v. Grundy, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 951.

A testator by his will devised and bequeathed all his freehold and copyhold estates and his personal estate to trustees, upon trusts for sale and conversion into money, and directed them to pay certain legacies, but did not make any residuary bequest. The testator, by an unattested codicil, gave other legacies out of the mixed fund, and appointed A., B. and C. his residuary legatees :—Held, that A., B. and C. were entitled to the surplus produce of the copyhold estates. Wildes v. Davies, 1 Sm. & G. 475 ; 22 L. J., Ch. 495 ; 1 W. R. 253.

Estate held by copy of court roll, according to custom of manor, but in case of intestacy distributable as personal estate, and in other respects differing from copyhold :—Held, to pass under a residuary bequest of personal estate, and not with copyhold messuages, &c., with limitations in strict settlement, upon whole will and circumstances. Watkins v. Lea, 6 Ves. 633.

"All the Rest."]—A testatrix, after a gift of her house and garden (which were leasehold, though not so described) and several pecuniary legacies, directed that "all the rest" should be divided between the persons in her will named :—Held, that the word included realty as well as personalty. Attree v. Attree, 40 L. J., Ch. 192 ; L. R. 11 Eq. 280 ; 24 L. T. 121 ; 19 W. R. 464.

Whether by words "all the rest of my estate and fortune" in a will, copyhold estate as well as freehold passed, quære. Dod v. Dod, Ambl. 275.

A testator gave two pecuniary legacies, and then continued : "And lastly, I give my sheep and the rest, residue, and all moneys, chattels, and all other my effects, to be equally divided among my brothers," whom he appointed his executors :—Held, that all the freehold as well as personal estate of the testator passed under these words. Smyth v. Smyth, 8 Ch. D. 561 ; 38 L. T. 633 ; 26 W. R. 736.

A testatrix proceeded thus : "And in respect of my real and personal estate," I direct the tenant to be continued, "and as to the rest, residue, and remainder of my estate, including moneys and securities for money," I direct that it shall be divided, &c. :—Held, that the real estate passed. Meeds v. Wood, 19 Beav. 215.

A., having settled all his estates of inheritance upon his wife for life as a jointure, by will says : "All the rest and residue of my estate, chattels, real and personal, I give to my wife, whom I make sole executrix ":—Held, that the reversion of the jointure lands did not pass by this devise, but the personal estate only. Marchant v. Twisden, Gilb. Eq. R. 30. Lord Keeper said, that this case differed from Murray v. Wise, 2 Vern. 564 ; and that no resolution was ever carried so far as to construe these words to pass a fee.

"Temporal Effects."]—"Temporal effects" in a will were held to include real estate. Sheridan, In re, 17 L. R., Ir. 179.

"Trust Moneys"—Where Trust for Sale of Realty.]—A testator gave real estate and personal estate in trust to sell and invest in "stocks, funds and securities," and hold the residue thereof upon the trusts declared by any codicil. By a codicil he gave "the trust moneys, stocks, funds and securities," by the will bequeathed, to charitable purposes :—Held, that the residuary real estate passed. Whicher v. Hume, 14 Beav. 509. Affirmed, 1 De G. M. & G. 506 ; 21 L. J., Ch. 406 ; 16 Jur. 391.

"Worldly Estates."]—The words "worldly estates" :—Held, to pass real and personal estate. Muddle v. Fry, 6 Madd. 270.

"Worldly Goods."]—A testator made his will in part in the following words : "I give to (trustees) all my worldly goods of what nature and kind soever, and wheresoever they might be found, upon trust to perform the trusts and conditions under-mentioned ; my wife to have possession of all while she lives ; but if she marries, to quit possession ; all my debts and legacies to be paid out of my personal estate and Westwood Close. To my son J. W., his heirs and assigns for ever. 20*l.* and Honey Close ; to W. E. and T. my children, and to the child or children that my wife may be enceinte with at the time of my decease. the rest of my worldly goods ; all my debts to be paid at my decease " :—Held, that the words "all my worldly goods of what nature or kind soever and wheresoever they might be found" included the whole of the real and personal estate of the testator; and the words "the rest of all my worldly goods" carried the residuary real and personal estate, which passed to the children named in the will, and R. W. born in due time after the testator's decease. Wright v. Shelton, 18 Jur. 445.

"All I am Worth."]—Devise of "all I am worth" will pass real estate. Huxstep v. Brooman, 1 Bro. C. C. 437.

ii. Advowson and Next Presentation.

Lands, Tenements and Hereditaments.] — Devise of lands, tenements and hereditaments, subject to a term of eleven years, in trust, to receive the rents, issues and profits of the premises that from time to time should accrue and become due, and dispose, &c. An advowson in gross passes, and a sale of the next presentation within the term by direction, and for the benefit of the cestui que trust, was established. Albemarle (Earl) v. Rogers, 2 Ves. 477.

Living.]—The word living is sufficient to pass an advowson, but it may be restricted to the next presentation. The context must determine its meaning. Webb v. Byng, 2 K. & J. 669; 4 W. R. 657.

Devise to a minor of "the livings of Q. and C., should he like the profession and be qualified for them":—Held, to shew an intention to confer on the devisee a personal benefit; therefore, that the devise was confined to a single presentation, and did not extend to the advowson. Ib.

Rents, Dividends, Interest and Annual Income.]—A testator, who was both patron and incumbent of a living, devised the advowson and all his other real estates, and also his personal estate, to trustees in trust to pay the rents, dividends, interest and annual income of his real estates, until they should be sold as thereinafter directed, and also of his personal estate, to his sister, until she should have a child; and immediately after her having a child, in trust to stand seised and possessed of his real estates, if not then sold, and of his personal estate, and the rents, dividends, interest and annual income thereof, in trust for her children or child who should attain twenty-one, their heirs, &c.; and if she should have no such child, then in trust, after her death, for the trustees, their heirs, &c. The testator then directed his trustees to sell the advowson after his death. At the testator's death, his sister (who was his heir) had three infant children; and his living having become vacant by his death, the question was whether the children, their mother, or the trustees were entitled to present to it:—Held, that as the presentation to a living does not produce rents, dividends, interest or annual income, the dispositions of the will were not applicable to that species of property; and, consequently, that the testator's sister was entitled, as his heiress-at-law, to present to the living on the existing vacancy. Martin v. Martin, 12 Sim. 579; 11 L. J., Ch. 291; 6 Jur. 360.

Rents, Issues and Profits.]—A testator, who was entitled to various rectories, devised his manors, advowsons, messuages and hereditaments to trustees to make certain payments out of the rents, issues and profits, and subject thereto to accumulate the "residuary or surplus rents, issues and profits" of the property for twenty-one years on specified trusts. A claim by the heir-at-law to the proceeds of sale of a next presentation to one of the rectories, on the ground that the next presentations were not disposed of under the trust of "rents, issues and profits," was disallowed. Cust v. Middleton, 34 L. J., Ch. 185; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1227; 11 L. T. 552; 13 W. R. 249.

Semble, that the words "rents, issues and profits" were of themselves sufficient to include the proceeds of sale of the next presentation. Ib.

Rents and Profits.]—Devise of surplus rents and profits carries a right of presentation. Sherrard v. Harborough (Lord), Ambl. 167.

Testator devised inter alia all his estate, &c., to trustees on trust, out of the rents and profits during the lives of A. and B., and the survivor, to pay debts, legacies and repairs, subject thereto to pay 2,000*l.* a year to A. who was his heir-at-law, and subject thereto to B. for life:—Held, that advowsons passed, that the next presentations belonged neither to A. nor to B. till the trusts for payment of debts, &c., were satisfied, and must be sold for those purposes. Cooke v. Cholmondeley, 3 Drew. 1; 3 W. R. 1.

Tenement.]—An advowson does not pass by the word "tenement." Kensey v. Langham, Cas. t. Talb. 145, n.

Tenements and Hereditaments.]—An advowson in gross will pass by the words "tenements" and "hereditaments," but not by the words "lands," and it is assets by descent to satisfy bond creditors. Westfaling v. Westfaling, 3 Atk. 460, 465.

Next Presentation passing by Devise of Advowson.]—If A., seised of an advowson, be also incumbent and devises it, the devisee, after his death, shall nominate; for where the ownership and property of an advowson be in the devisee, they, and not the heir, shall nominate in consequence of such ownership, nor will it make any difference whether the devisee has the advowson in him as a personalty or as a realty. Hawkins v. Chappell, 1 Atk. 622.

"Next" Construed Next in Disposition of Testator.]—A., by will, directed trustees, upon the death of the present incumbent, to present A. to the living of S., in case he should take orders; and if he should not, or, taking orders, should die in the lifetime of B., then to present B., in case he should take orders; and after their several deceases, or of such of them as should take orders and be presented, or in the event of neither taking orders, A. devised the advowson to C. in fee:—Held, that the gifts in favour of A. and B. were in succession and not alternative, and that on the death of A., B. was entitled to be presented. Hatch v. Hatch, 20 Beav. 105; 3 W. R. 354.

A testator having the power of disposing of an advowson (subject to the existing incumbency of A., and a contingent right of B. to be afterwards presented), devised "the next avoidance thereof" in favour of C.:—Held, that "the next" meant the next the testator had power to dispose of, viz. that following the incumbency of A. and B. Ib.

iii. Tithes.

Land.]—One has no lands in A., but has tithes there, and devises all his land in A.; the tithes as they are issuing out of the land, and part of the land, and part of the profits thereof, shall pass. Ashton v. Ashton, 3 P. Wms. 386; Cas. t. Talb. 152.

Real Estates.]—Testator devised certain tithes to his nephews D. and W. for their lives successively, and, after the expiration thereof, to the several provision and uses therein expressed and contained of and concerning his real estates; and he devised all his real estates, of what nature or kind soever, and wheresoever situate, subject to the payment of his debts, &c., in aid of his personal estate, to his niece and her sons in strict settlement, with remainders to his nephew W. and his sons, and to two other persons and their sons, in like manner, with remainder to another person in fee. The niece married, and had a son after the date of the will; and the testator, by a codicil, devised all his real estates, of what nature or kind soever, to that son for life, with limitations, by way of remainder, to his first and other sons in tail male; and on failure of such issue, he devised all his said real estates in the manner mentioned in his will, and declared that the devises thereinbefore made should take effect in precedence to the devises of his real estates contained in his will:—Held, that the words "my real estates," in the will did not include the tithes; but that those words in the codicil did include them, and, consequently, that the estates for life in the tithes, limited to the testator's nephews, D. and W. by the will, were postponed to the limitations in the codicil to the son of the testator's niece and his sons. Evans v. Evans, 17 Sim. 86; 14 Jur. 383.

iv. Money to be Laid Out in Land.

Estates.]—Personal estate to be laid out in land, but lent on mortgage instead, considered as land, having been always out in trustees, and the uses never united with the possession, and passed by such general words in a will as would pass land, as "all my estates, &c., whatsoever and wheresoever." Rashleigh v. Master, 1 Ves. 201; 3 Bro. C. C. 99.

Land.]—Money agreed to be laid out in land:—Held, to pass under a devise of all freehold, leasehold, and copyhold lands lying in I. and in E. or elsewhere. Guidot v. Guidot, 3 Atk. 254. And see Harvey v. Aston, 1 Atk. 361; Green v. Stephens, 12 Ves. 419; 17 Ves. 64; Lingen v. Sowray, 1 P. Wms. 172; Pre. Ch. 400; Gilb. Exch. R. 91; 10 Mod. 39.

Money under a direction to be laid out in land considered as real estate, under a general disposition by the will of a person entitled absolutely in either shape of the "money and land," in the absence of intention, the word "money" being answered by another fund of stock. Biddulph v. Biddulph, 12 Ves. 161.

Lands, Tenements, and Hereditaments.]—A remote reversion in real estates and lands to be purchased and settled, will pass by general words in a will, as "all and every other my lands, tenements, and hereditaments," though the uses are immediate. But the purchase being postponed to the death of the devisor, the reversion in the estates to be purchased and settled to the same uses subsequent to his death, not being an interest vested in him, did not pass; and though, upon the settlement, a power of appointment was implied, the will, particularly executing express powers, did not amount to an execution of that implied power. Att.-Gen. v. Vigor, 8 Ves. 256.

Manors, &c.]—Money was to be laid out in land to be settled to the husband for life, remainder to raise portions for younger children; the money was afterwards invested by direction of the husband in S. S. annuities; afterwards, by will, he devised generally all his manors, &c., to certain uses; the money in the funds must be laid out in land. Hickman v. Bacon, 4 Bro. C. C. 333.

v. Residue and General Personal Estate.

a. Particular Words.

All Property.]—By will testator nominated wife his executrix, "thereby bequeathing to her all the property of whatever description or sort that I may die possessed," &c.:—Held, she is entitled, though not as executrix, to all his property that such a will could pass. Noel v. Hoy, 5 Madd. 38; 21 R. R. 271.

A., a British subject, domiciled at St. Petersburg, made a will in the Russian form and Russian language, by which he expressed a desire "to dispose of all my movable and immovable property." After giving legacies, and directing his household property and estates in Russia to be sold, he went on, "the money proceeds of all the above, as also the whole of my capital which shall remain with me after my death, in ready money and in bank billets" (bank debentures peculiar to Russia), "belonging to me, shall be divided into ten equal parts," two of which he devoted to debts and funeral expenses; and said, "of the remaining eight parts, I intend afterwards making a detailed proposal;" but if he did not (and he never did), they were to go to charitable purposes. He then named executors, and concluded thus: "and as all my movable and immovable property is mine own, honestly acquired by myself, nobody has a right to interfere with my dispositions, and contest the same, and no one has a right to interfere with or contest the dispositions and proceedings of my executors." The testator had large funds in English consols:—Held, that the executors did not take these consols under the general bequest in the will. Enohin v. Wylie, 8 H. L. Cas. 1; 31 L. J., Ch. 402; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 897; 6 L. T. 263; 10 W. R. 467. Affirming 1 De G. F. & J. 410.

Held, also, that as to these consols there was an intestacy. Ib.

Blank.]—A will, after gifts of legacies and direction for payment of funeral expenses, contained the words: "I leave —— to my sister":—Held, that there was a gift of residue. Perkins or Parkins v. Fladgate, Bassett, In re, 41 L. J., Ch. 681; L. R. 14 Eq. 54; 20 W. R. 589.

Debts.]—An unascertained residue held to pass under the will of the residuary legatee, by the words "debts due to me at my decease."

Bainbridge v. Bainbridge, 9 Sim. 16; 7 L. J., Ch. 4; 2 Jur. 63.

A. bequeathed "her household furniture, goods, ready money, and all debts and securities":—Held, that the residuary personal estate of A. passed thereunder. Avison v. Simpson, Johns. 43; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 594; 7 W. R. 277.

Effects.]—A testator gave various specific portions of personal estate to his wife, for and during her natural life, if she should so long continue his widow; but at her death, or in case she should marry again, then he gave all the things before given, adding the words "and effects, and also all my household furniture, which I hereby give to her for her sole use and benefit for and during the term of her natural life, if she shall so long continue my widow," to be equally divided among the children that he then had or might thereafter have by his said wife; but in case his wife should not marry again after his decease, he gave her "all and every his personal estate and effects whatsoever" for her life, and the same to be equally divided to and amongst such of his children as should be living at her decease, share and share alike. The testator died within three weeks after making his will:—Held, first, that the first gift was not merely specific, but passed the whole of his personal estate; secondly, that the two clauses were not repugnant, but the first was intended to apply to the case of the widow marrying again, and the second to the case of her not marrying again; and the latter event being that which happened, the children living at the death of the widow were alone entitled, to the exclusion of representatives of deceased children. Wiggins v. Wiggins, 2 Sim. (N.S.) 226; 21 L. J., Ch. 742.

"Else."]—A bequest of "my furniture, plate, books, and live stock, or what else I may be possessed of at the time of my decease," will pass the general residuary estate, though followed by specific bequests and devises to the same person, and by gifts of pecuniary legacies to various other persons. Fleming v. Burrows, 1 Russ. 276; 4 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 115; 25 R. R. 48.

"Elsewhere."]—See "Or Elsewhere," infra.

Goods.]—If a man gives a legacy and then says, "I give all my goods," it will pass the residue, though the word "goods" in common parlance means "goods only," and not the whole personal estate. Crichton v. Symes, 3 Atk. 61.

Goods and Chattels.]—A testator may make a residuary gift at the commencement of his will, if there be no other gift of that nature; and the words "goods and chattels" in such a clause may pass general personalty; but where there is a subsequent and clearly residuary clause, "goods and chattels" must be taken in the ordinary sense. Mullins v. Smith, 1 Dr. & Sm. 204; 8 W. R. 739.

"Left."]—A testatrix made the following indorsement on one of her testamentary papers: "I think there will be something left after my funeral expenses, &c., are paid, to give to W. B., now at school, towards equipping him to any profession." By another testamentary paper she bequeathed a sum of 500*l.* to W. B.:—Held, that under the first-mentioned paper W. B. was her residuary legatee. Leighton v. Bailie, 3 Myl. & K. 267; 3 L. J., Ch. 133.

Testator, reciting his intention to dispose of all his property, and that his daughter was likely to die (of a violent distemper), left his wife, if she died, the revenue and dividends of such property; but if his daughter lived, directed that his wife should only have her dower, giving the residue and dividends to that daughter; if she died without children, testator gave his brother "all that should be left": the daughter survived the testator, but died of the same illness without issue:—Held, that the mother was still entitled for life, and that the words "what should be left" constituted a good residuary bequest to the brother. Duhamel v. Ardovin, 2 Ves. Sen. 162.

Money.]—A mere gift of money may pass whatever is the representative of money. The expression "money" may represent the entire personal estate. Stratton v. Hillas, 2 Dr. & War. 51.

Sums of money in a will:—Held, to comprise personal estate generally. Whateley v. Spooner, 3 K. & J. 542.

"All the moneys which may hereafter revert to me":—Held, to be confined to money in its ordinary sense, and not to pass the general residue. Eaton v. Att.-Gen., 13 W. R. 424.

A testator made his will in the following words: "I give to my wife, during her natural life, the interest of all sums of money I may die possessed of, subject to such agreements, if any, which I may enter into in my lifetime; and after her decease, I give all such interest money unto my daughter Mary during her natural life, and after her decease then I give the principal and interest unto my daughter's child or children, equally between them, share and share alike; and I direct my executors to advance and allow any reasonable sum or sums of money, from time to time, for the promotion in life of all or any of the children of my daughter, by way of apprenticeship or otherwise. And in case my daughter should die without issue of her body, unmarried or under age, then I give the said money and interest equally between my brothers and sisters; and in case of their deaths, to their respective child or children, equally between them." There was no residuary gift. At his death he left 450*l.* cash, furniture, and leasehold farm, cattle and farming stock:—Held, that the language relating to "moneys" meant "money" strictly, and that there was intestacy as to the residuary property. Larner v. Larner, 3 Drew. 704; 5 W. R. 513.

A testatrix, two days before her death, made a holograph will in these words: "I leave one-half of the money of which I am possessed to my sister, H. F. C., and the remainder to be equally divided between my sisters O. G. P. and S. A. C., and after them to their children":—Held, a complete disposition of all her personal estate. Cadogan, In re, Cadogan v. Palagi, 49 L. T. 666; 32 W. R. 57.

A testator, after expressing his intention to make a settlement of his affairs, appointed A. B. and C. D., his executors, to take and receive all moneys that might be in his possession, or due to him at the time of his decease, and to prosecute, if necessary, for the recovery thereof, to be by them placed in the British funds, or otherwise laid out upon such security as they should deem sufficient. On a question whether a sum of stock was disposed of by will:—Held, that the will operated as a complete disposition of all the personal estate, even if the word "moneys" were to receive only the strict construction, but that on the context of this will the word "moneys" must be taken to include stock in the funds. Waite v. Combes, 5 De G. & Sm. 676; 21 L. J., Ch. 814; 17 Jur. 155.

A testator sold lands and left 900*l.*, the purchase-money, in the hands of his agent, a land surveyor, to be invested on security; the agent died, and was supposed insolvent, without having invested the money. The testator then, by his will, gave to his wife all his ready money and securities for money, money in the funds, and money in the bank or banks, if any, due or owing to him at the time of his decease:—Held, that the 900*l.* passed, and the rather because there was no gift of any residue, so that on the whole will there appeared an intention that all his property should pass, and that the words he had used should include everything, there being no other assets. Cooke v. Wagster, 2 Sm. & G. 296; 2 Eq. R. 789; 23 L. J., Ch. 496; 18 Jur. 849; 2 W. R. 434.

Principal Money.]—In a will the testator gave the income of his "principal money" to his wife, for the support of herself and the education of his children, and at her death, or on her marriage, to be divided between them, and made no other disposition of his property. He died entitled to some real estate, and of personal property worth 40,000*l.*, consisting chiefly of the value of his shares in two businesses, but including certain leaseholds:—Held, that the words "principal money" included his whole personal estate, including the leaseholds, but not the pure realty. Prichard v. Prichard, 40 L. J., Ch. 92; L. R. 11 Eq. 232; 24 L. T. 259; 19 W. R. 226.

Money remaining.] — A gift to A. of the remainder of money, goods, and debts due to the testator after payment of debts, constitutes A. residuary legatee. Bloomfield, In goods of, 31 L. J., P. 119.

A testatrix, having given directions respecting her funeral, after payment of her funeral expenses and just debts gives certain legacies and annuities, and after all the legacies are paid leaves whatever money remains or whatever money she may be entitled to, or have left her, to M. G. and F. G., and in case of the death of either of two annuitants an annuity of 60*l.* to go to the survivor, and then over to M. G. and F. G., with other provisions. The testatrix then left whatever money remained to O. and his four sisters, with specific gifts to her two sisters; and if they did not survive her to M. G. and F. G.; and if she had omitted naming anything she left it to her two sisters C. B. and J. V. The testatrix left funded property, some of which was set apart to answer the annuities; three annuitants, one being a legatee, survived the testatrix. M. G. died under age and unmarried, and one of the trustees was also dead. Upon bill filed to determine the meaning of the words "whatever money remains," and whether that clause or the clause where she referred to having "omitted naming anything" was residuary:—Held, that the latter was not, but that the former was residuary and included everything not before given. Barrett v. White, 24 L. J., Ch. 724; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 652; 3 W. R. 578.

A testator, after giving specific and pecuniary legacies, willed that A. and B. should divide equally any moneys which might remain to his account after payment of his debts and pecuniary legacies. The testator, at the date of his will and at his death, had money account subsisting between him and his bankers, and other persons:—Held, that the bequest did not pass his residuary estate, but only the balances due on those accounts, subject to the debts and legacies. Hastings v. Hane, 6 Sim. 67.

A testatrix gave "everything of which she died possessed" to her executors for certain specified purposes. She made several specific bequests of jewellery, and, if any money remained after paying these bequests, she left "the residue of money (if any)" to A.; she then made a specific bequest to B., and some small pecuniary legacies:—Held, that her general residuary personal estate (including railway stock) passed under the gift of "the residue of money." Montagu v. Sandwich (Earl), 3 N. R. 186; 33 Beav. 324; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 61; 9 L. T. 632; 12 W. R. 236.

The word "money" standing by itself is confined to the proper meaning of that word; yet, if money is given after a direction to pay debts, legacies, and funeral and testamentary expenses, or with any other words which denote an intention on the part of the testator to dispose of the whole of his estate, it will be construed as synonymous with property. Nevinson v. Lennard (Lady), 34 Beav. 487.

A testatrix, whose property consisted chiefly of stock in the public funds, after giving various legacies of sums of money, gave and bequeathed to the inhabitants of Tawleaven Row all which might remain of her money after her lawful debts and legacies were paid:—Held, that the persons found to be inhabitants of Tawleaven Row were entitled to the residue of the testatrix's general personal estate. Rogers v. Thomas, 2 Keen, 8.

A testatrix, whose personal property consisted chiefly of stock, after bequeathing a number of pecuniary and specific legacies, and giving certain directions as to her funeral, gave 200*l.* to each of her executors for their trouble, and bequeathed whatever remained of money to the five children of E. D.:—Held, that by the words "whatever remains of money" the testatrix referred to her general residuary personal estate. Dowson v. Gaskoin, 2 Keen, 14; 6 L. J., Ch. 295; 1 Jur. 669.

A bequest "of money which may remain after payment of the testator's debts," in the absence of any other gift of the residue, includes the general residue of the testator's personal estate not specifically bequeathed. Stocks v. Barré, Johns. 54; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 537; 7 W. R. 247.

A testatrix, by her will, after giving a pecuniary legacy and bequeathing furniture, leaseholds, and dock shares, gave "all the rest of her money, however invested," to her nephew R. J. F., "under deduction of 50*l.* to be paid to each of her executors." She then gave a number of specified articles, such as ornaments, plate, pictures, and house linen, to various other nephews and nieces, and appointed executors:—Held, that the gift to R. J. F. was a general residuary gift, and included the furniture, leaseholds, and dock shares, the bequest of which had lapsed. Pringle, In re, Walker v. Stewart, 50 L. J., Ch. 689; 17 Ch. D. 819; 45 L. T. 11; 30 W. R. 44.

Money in Bonds—Remainder of.]—A testatrix, after disposing of various portions of her property (other than Spanish bonds), bequeathed

"the remainder of her money in the Spanish bonds" to her nephews and nieces, and stated her intention to be to divide her property equally between her two sisters' children. The bulk of the residue consisted of Spanish bonds:—Held, that the general residue passed under the bequest; the words "in the Spanish bonds" being, under the circumstances, descriptive only of the nature of the investment of the bulk of the property comprised in the bequest. Patrick v. Yeatherd, 3 N. R. 367; 33 L. J., Ch. 286; 10 L. T. 92; 12 W. R. 304.

Other Effects or Property.]—Words of will were, "All my other effects I will to J., &c., to be sold for his benefit":—Held, all residue of testator's property, including money, passed thereby to J. Hearne v. Wigginton, 6 Madd. 119.

A will contained the following words: "I give, devise, and bequeath unto my dearly beloved wife, Mary Jupp, all my furniture, jewellery, pictures, wearing apparel, and other effects belonging to me at the time of my decease." The will went on to make certain specific bequests to the wife, and concluded by directing her to pay the testator's debts, and leaving it to her discretion whether or not she would provide for his sons and daughters by a previous marriage and for his nephews:—Held, that the words "other effects" constituted the wife a residuary legatee. Jupp, In goods of, 60 L. J., P. 92; [1891] P. 300; 65 L. T. 166; 40 W. R. 176; 55 J. P. 456.

D., by his will, gave all his property to his executor upon trust for the purposes of his will, and after gifts of 300*l.* to a daughter, and five shillings a week to his son, J. D., bequeathed the remainder of his property "and any other property of which I may die possessed, and I nominate and appoint my son, R. D." sole executor; but the testator omitted to say to whom he bequeathed the remainder:—Held, that he had failed to express his intention, and that there was an intestacy as to the residuary real and personal estate. Driver v. Driver, 43 L. J., Ch. 279.

"Or Elsewhere."]—The only disposition of property in the will of A. was as follows: "All the property that I have now, or may have at the time of my decease, in my apartments at 13, Plaistow Grove, or elsewhere, I give to my three nieces":—Held, that the words "or elsewhere" must be so construed as to pass the residuary estate of A. Scarborough, In goods of, 9 W. R. 149.

Overplus.]—It is a question, to be determined by the particular words of each will, whether a gift of "surplus" or "residue" means surplus or residue properly so called, or a mere proportional share of a particular fund. Where, after the gift of a fund charged with certain payments, the words were "and the overplus which the said, &c., do produce more than all these disbursements do amount to (which I do find and compute to be about 60*l.* per annum)" they were held to mean surplus, and not proportional share. Southmolton Corporation v. Att.-Gen., 5 H. L. Cas. 1; 23 L. J., Ch. 567; 18 Jur. 435.

Remain.]—A testator, after bequeathing several legacies to his relations, and for charitable purposes, says, "to meet these I have 200*l.* in the Bank of Ireland; the little matters of furniture will be sold. If anything shall remain after all being paid, the Rev. Mr. G. will divide it amongst the poor." At the time of his death the testator had no such sum as 200*l.* in the Bank of Ireland, but his property consisted of 12,462*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.* of 3½ per cent. stock and 52*l.* in cash:—Held, that the general residue of the testator's estate passed under the residuary clause. Gaffney v. Hevey, 1 Dr. & Wal. 12.

A testatrix, after directing her debts and funeral expenses to be paid, and giving certain legacies and annuities, gave to N. whatever money remained. She afterwards made some specific bequests, and concluded, "if I have omitted naming anything, I leave it to my two sisters":—Held, that there was a general residuary bequest to N., and that the corpus required for payment of the annuities passed by that bequest after the annuities were satisfied. Barrett v. White, 24 L. J., Ch. 724; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 652; 3 W. R. 578.

The words "what remains" at the close of a bequest of a specific fund:—Held, a general residuary disposition, the full sense not being necessarily confined; comprising, therefore, personal estate bequeathed upon a contingency too remote, not being to take place until thirty years after the testator's death. Crooke v. De Vandes, 11 Ves. 330.

Rest and Residue.]—A testator, after making various dispositions of parts of his estate, appointed S., his executor, to "execute the disposal of all his personal property and effects by sale at auction, the proceeds of which he gave to his two youngest nieces in London or elsewhere"; and the residuary clause was, "the rest of my property in consols, after all my just debts and funeral expenses are paid, and what is found on my person and in the house, I give and bequeath" to five charities (naming them) "free of legacy duty":—Held, that the bequest to the nieces was residuary. Foxen v. Foxen, 5 N. R. 1; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1061; 11 L. T. 292; 13 W. R. 33—L. C.

In a will made before 1838 a gift of "400*l.*" stock was obliterated, and the words "residue of my property" substituted, whereby the words admitted to probate were "residue of my property stock":—Held, that the will, by these words, passed to the legatee all the funded property belonging to the testatrix at the time of her death, although much of it was acquired after the date of the will and after 1838. Banks v. Thornton, 11 Hare, 176.

"Residue" is not a "legacy" in the ordinary sense of the term, though the person taking it is a residuary legatee. Ward v. Grey, 26 Beav. 485.

Testator says, as to the rest and residue of his lands, &c., his will is, that the annual profits should be equally divided between A. and C., and said nothing about the personal estate. By all the rules of grammar as well as law the words "rest and residue" must relate to something that went before; and, where testator calls it by the name of real estate, can never be said to affect his personal. Beauclerk v. Mead, 2 Atk. 168.

Residuary Legatee.]—A testator having in the commencement of his will appointed his daughter to act in concert with his son to be guardian and executrix, added, "I also appoint and desire in this my last will and testament, that my son to be my executor and residuary legatee, do jointly with my daughter, my executrix, who is to act independent of her husband, and be guardian to the children":—Held, that the son alone was entitled to the residue. Langley v. Thomas, 6 De G. M. & G. 645; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 345; 5 W. R. 219.

Rights and Credits.]—A testator, having by his will bequeathed certain legacies, proceeded as follows:—"To my son I give, devise, and bequeath all my lands, tenements, rights, and credits, subject to the legacies aforesaid, and my debts, the remainder of my property to be disposed of by him to and amongst his children in such shares and proportions as he shall think proper." The words in italics were interlined. By the last clause in the will, the interlineations, as well as the original text, were declared to be in the handwriting of the testator. In 1839 he added a codicil to his will, by which he merely made a declaration with reference to one of the legacies given by the will. Semble, the general personal estate of the testator would have passed under the words "rights and credits" alone, even if the interlineations had not been made. Hutchinson v. Hutchinson, 13 Ir. Eq. R. 382.

Surplus.]—Bequest of personal property held a general residuary disposition, although accompanied with expressions favouring a more limited construction, and pointing only to a surplus beyond the property specifically mentioned. Bland v. Lamb, 2 J. & W. 399. Affirming 5 Madd. 412.

Unappropriated.]—Testator, intending to dispose of all his personal estate, gives the residue in fifth shares, but appoints his brother "heir to whatever part of his estate should be unappropriated by his will"; one of the five shares lapsed in testator's lifetime:—Held, that the above was an ultimate general residuary clause, and comprised this as including not merely what was not mentioned, but everything not effectually given. Jackson v. Kelly, 2 Ves. Sen. 285.

Whatsoever and Wheresoever.]—A bequest of "all my household furniture, implements of trade, cattle, sheep, and all the rest and residue of my moneys, securities for money, and personal estate whatsoever and wheresoever, not hereinbefore disposed of," is a residuary bequest. Taylor v. Taylor, 6 Sim. 246.

A testatrix, after several small bequests, bequeathed "all my household goods, furniture, clothes, moneys, securities for money, whatsoever" to her sister:—Held, that these words constituted a residuary bequest, and the court granted administration with the will annexed to the sister. Garrett, In goods of, 26 L. T. 984.

b. Construction of Words "Ejusdem Generis."

Wide Words followed by Enumeration of Particulars.]—The word "effects" in a will restrained to articles ejusdem generis with those specified, though the consequence was a residue undisposed of. Rawlings v. Jennings, 13 Ves. 39; 9 R. R. 137.

As to the residue "of his estate and effects, whatsoever and wheresoever, canal shares, plate, linen, china, and furniture," the testator devised and bequeathed the same to his wife:—Held, that the residuary personal estate passed, and that the general words were not limited to things ejusdem generis with canal shares, &c. Fisher v. Hepburn, 14 Beav. 626.

A testator bequeathed to his mother "all and everything he died possessed of, namely, money, plate, books," and other enumerated articles, for her sole use; "and, lest there be any dispute, he declared again that he left her everything he died possessed of for her sole use, as stated above":—Held, that the whole residue passed, and that the bequest was not restricted to the enumerated articles and others ejusdem generis. Kendall's Trust, In re, 14 Beav. 608; 21 L. J., Ch. 278.

A sergeant in the East India service bequeathed as follows: "To my wife I bequeath my pay, clothing, balance of clothing money, and moneys that may be now due or may become due to me at my decease; also, the whole of my property and effects, that is to say, my box, clothes, bedding, &c., I bequeath to my wife":—Held, that the whole residue passed, including a reversionary interest in the produce of the sale and conversion of a residuary real and personal estate of another testator. Gover v. Davis, 29 Beav. 222; 30 L. J., Ch. 505; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 399; 9 W. R. 87.

A bequest in general words will not be restricted by the enumeration of articles forming part of a previous gift. Ib.

Testator gave his bank stock to trustees, in trust for T. B., for life, and his funded property to the same trustees, in trust for W. R. E., for life, and after his death in trust for his issue; and he directed the trustees, after the decease of T. B., to pay the dividends of his bank stock to W. R. E., for life, and after his decease to apply the dividends and capital for the benefit of the children or child of W. R. E., in such manner as he had directed respecting his funded property; and should W. R. E. die without issue, male or female, of his body lawfully begotten, then he directed the trustees to apply his funded property and bank stock for such charitable or other purposes as they should think fit, without being accountable to any person; and he gave the residue of his personal estate and effects, wines, pictures, plate, books, and furniture to W. R. E.:—Held, that the ultimate trust of the funded property and bank stock was not too remote, but was void for uncertainty, and that the residuary clause was general. Ellis v. Selby, 7 Sim. 352. Affirmed, 1 Myl. & Cr. 286; 5 L. J., Ch. 214.

A testatrix says, "I give to B., &c., all my goods, wearing apparel, of what nature and kind soever, except my gold watch":—Held, that all her wearing apparel and ornaments of her person passed to the legatee, and any other household goods and furniture, but no other part of her estate. The words "all my goods, wearing apparel" shall not be confined to wearing apparel only, but shall be construed "goods and wearing apparel." Crichton v. Symes, 3 Atk. 61.

When a testator gives his property generally by words such as "all my property," or "all that I have power over," and then proceeds to enumerate particulars, the subsequent enumeration of particulars does not cut down the effect of the general words, even when the particulars enumerated constitute only an insignificant portion, and not the principal part of the testator's property. King v. George, 46 L. J., Ch. 670; 5 Ch. D. 627; 36 L. T. 759; 25 W. R. 638—C. A.

Therefore, where a testatrix made a holograph will in these words: "I do bequeath to A. all that I have power over, namely, plate, linen, china, pictures, jewellery, lace, the half of all valued to be given to H. The servants in the house who have been a year with me to receive 10*l*., and the clothes divided between them. Also all kitchen utensils," and the articles enumerated formed an insignificant part of her property:—Held, that the bequest was not restricted to the articles specifically enumerated, but that it passed the whole of the real and personal estate of the testatrix. Ib.

A markswoman made a will, shortly before her death, in which the only bequest was a gift of her "personal property, consisting of money and clothes." She was possessed at her death of property, besides cash in hand and clothes, consisting of money out on mortgage, money secured on a promissory note, and a reversionary interest in a sum of cash:—Held, that the words "consisting of money and clothes" did not cut down the generality of the gift of personal property, being only an imperfect enumeration of the particulars of which the personal estate consisted; and that the whole of her personal estate passed by her will. Dean v. Gibson, 36 L. J., Ch. 657; L. R. 3 Eq. 713; 15 W. R. 809.

N. K. by his will, after bequeathing legacies and directing his debts to be paid, ordered all his effects to be sold by auction, and such money or valuables as he should die possessed of to be handed over to D., to be applied to the use of M. K. to a certain amount during her life, and, if after her demise any residue remained, such residue to be expended in masses for his son's sake; and directed a security in the hands of J. O. N. to be applied as above directed. "My Royal Canal stock is to be sold; also, my Grand Canal debentures, as necessity may require, at the discretion of my executors":—Held, that the whole of the residue, including the stock and debentures, was disposed of under the residuary clause, and passed to the executor on the death of M. K.:—Held, also, that the bequest for masses for the testator's son was valid, and not void as a superstitious use. Read v. Hodgens, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 17.

Bequest of "all my right and title to my property in the town of R., namely, my dwelling-house and household furniture, and all things now therein, in my possession, especially my car-horse and covered and side cars":—Held, that banknotes, known by the testator to be in the house at the time the will was made, passed to the legatee. Mahony v. Donovan, 14 Ir. Ch. R. 388—C. A.

A testatrix, having executed a will and three codicils, made a fourth codicil as follows: "I do hereby bequeath to J. B. (to whom I have willed my landed property) also all my personalty, such as cash, furniture, &c., to be applied as I have requested him to do." The wishes of the testatrix as communicated to J. B. appeared fully from his affidavit in the action, and in part from a memorandum drawn up by him (but not signed by the testatrix) immediately before the execution of the codicil, and it also appeared thereby that the testatrix did not intend to alter her previous dispositions, except for the purpose of giving effect to her wishes as stated to J. B.:—Held, that her words "cash, furniture, &c.," were not sufficient to cut down the general expression "all my personalty"; and that, therefore, the fourth codicil extended to and comprised the whole personal estate of the testatrix. Fleetwood, In re, Sidgreaves v. Brewer, 49 L. J., Ch. 514; 15 Ch. D. 594; 29 W. R. 45.

Wide Words followed by Et cætera.]—Whether stock will, or will not, pass under the word "moneys," or under the word "stock," or under the word "chattels," depends upon the whole context of the will. The word "goods," and equally the word "chattels," used simply and without qualification, will pass the whole personal estate, including stock. A bequest of all moneys, goods, chattels, clothing, &c., the testator's property, which may remain after paying his funeral charges and debts, will pass the testator's interest in stock and money. Kendall v. Kendall, 4 Russ. 360; 6 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 111; 28 R. R. 125.

Bequest of "all my household furniture and effects, plate, glass, books, wearing apparel, &c.":—Held, to pass the articles enumerated, and others, ejusdem generis, but not the general residue. Newman v. Newman, 26 Beav. 220.

The expression "&c." following the mention of specific chattels, is confined to things ejusdem generis, and does not include the residue of a testator's personal estate. Barnaby v. Tassell, L. R. 11 Eq. 363; 24 L. T. 221; 19 W. R. 323.

A husband directed that his freehold estate should be sold, and his debts paid by his widow and sole executrix, to whom he bequeathed "all my money, cattle, farming implements, &c., she paying my brother, J. C., the sum of ":—Held, that the widow was entitled to the general residue. Chapman v. Chapman, 46 L. J., Ch. 104; 4 Ch. D. 800.

A testator, after directing his debts, &c., to be paid, bequeathed to his wife his moneys, plate, &c. (enumerating several particular descriptions of personal property) and all the residue of his personal estate after payment of his debts, &c., and he directed his wife to give to his executors a bond for securing to them the payment of half the value of the said wines, plate, &c., enumerating several of the above-mentioned descriptions of personal property, but not mentioning the residue of his personal estate. The value was to be ascertained within three months from his death, and the plate was to be valued at a fixed price. The money payable on the bond was for the benefit of his nephews and nieces:—Held, that the bond was to be given for half the value of the property only which was specifically enumerated, and not for half the value of the general residuary estate. Martin v. Welstead, 18 L. J., Ch. 1.

Devise of the house in Camden Place and "all therein" to M. for life; "at her death I give and bequeath the house, &c. &c. to my nephew T., and his heirs." After the death of M., T. is entitled to all the chattels which were in the house at the testator's death, except the consumable articles. Twining v. Powell, 2 Coll. C. C. 262.

Generally, choses in action do not pass by a bequest of "goods and chattels" in a particular locality. Bequest "of all the goods and chattels, plate, linen, money at the bankers', or stock in the Monte de Milano, horses, carriages, &c., I may die possessed of at M.":—Held, also, that such Polish certificates and Neapolitan bordereaux (being government obligations) there situate, entitling the bearers to receive the interest and capital at a future time; held, also, that such securities could not be considered as money or cash; and thirdly, that not having their locality at M., they did not pass under the words et cætera at M. Hertford (Marquis) v. Lowther (Lord) (Countess Zichy's Case), 7 Beav. 1; 13 L. J., Ch. 41; 7 Jur. 1167.

Enumeration of particulars followed by a gift in the following terms: "and also the whole of my property and effects, that is to say, my box, clothing, bedding, &c." :—Held, that the whole residue passed. Gover v. Davis, 29 Beav. 222; 30 L. J., Ch. 505; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 399; 9 W. R. 87.

Bequest of "the remaining part of my whole property, both in stock, household furniture, cash, &c., &c." :—Held, that the chattels real (with which alone the suit was conversant) passed by the will. Mullally v. Walsh, 3 L. R., Ir. 244.

Enumeration of Particulars followed by more General Words.]—Semble, that the general word "things" in a will following particulars enumerated is confined to things ejusdem generis. Stuart v. Bute (Marquis), 1 Dow, 73; 14 R. R. 14.

"Goods and chattels" will pass all personal estate, but, after furniture, &c., are restrained to articles ejusdem generis. S. C., 11 Ves. 666; 8 R. R. 266.

Construction of a very inaccurate will, and the words "and all I am possessed of," were confined to a specific bequest of stock immediately preceding, meaning all interest in that fund, and did not comprise the general residue, which was by a subsequent clause expressly disposed of in a different manner. Wilde v. Holtzmeyer, 5 Ves. 811.

Testator, after giving at the commencement of his will various pecuniary legacies, and bequeathing all the rest and residue of his ready money, securities for money, and moneys in the funds to trustees upon certain trusts, concluded his will as follows: "And I do further give and bequeath to my said wife all my jewels, plate, linen, china, carriages, wines, and other goods, chattels, and effects whatsoever, as her own goods and chattels for ever; and I do hereby constitute and appoint her (my said wife) sole executrix of this my will" :—Held, that this clause carried the residue of the testator's property to the wife. Parker v. Marchant, 1 Y. & C., C. C. 290; 11 L. J., Ch. 223; 6 Jur. 292. And see S. C. on appeal, 1 Ph. 356; 2 Y. & C., C. C. 279; 12 L. J., Ch. 314; 7 Jur. 457.

Although the words "goods, chattels, and effects" may frequently be considered as having been used by a testator in a restrictive sense, yet primâ facie their import is general, and there are good grounds for considering them as used in a general sense either where they are not placed in connection with words or locality, or where they follow the enumeration of specific articles, or where there are no expressions in the will shewing a doubt in the testator's mind as to their comprehensiveness, or where the bequest in which they are contained is followed up by the appointment of an executor. Ib.

A bequest of "my wines and property in England" :—Held, to pass the testator's property in England of every description, including money in the funds and at his bankers', debts, and arrears of a pension due to him, and not confined to property ejusdem generis with wines. Arnold v. Arnold, 2 Myl. & K. 365; 4 L. J., Ch. 123.

General disposition by will not restrained by a defective specification. Chalmers v. Storil, 2 V. & B. 222.

A will restrained in point of extent to a partial disposition by a particular enumeration, and a reference to other instruments, notwithstanding the general words "personal estate"; specific disposition by will subsequent to annuities and legacies held auxiliary only, the general personal estate to be applied in the first instance. Holford v. Wood, 4 Ves. 76.

A testator bequeathed as follows: "As regards my worldly goods, I give and bequeath all my furniture, plate, books, and other personalty" to my wife :—Held, that the general words were not to be confined to things ejusdem generis, but that they included a share of the produce of real and personal estate to which the testator was entitled under the will of his father. Nugee v. Chapman, 29 Beav. 190.

A testator by his will gave the residue of his personal estate to A., B. and C., to be equally divided between them. By a codicil he gave A. the arrears of rent due to him for his real estate, and the amount of any salary due to him, and also bequeathed to A. all his clothes and any other property, goods, and articles belonging to him at the time of his death. By another codicil he revoked the bequest made to B. by his will :—Held, that the gift to A. by the first codicil was a general one, and that the words "property, goods, and articles" were not to be confined to articles ejusdem generis with clothes, and that consequently A. was entitled to two-thirds, and C. to one-third, of the residue. Everall v. Browne, 1 Sm. & G. 368; 22 L. J., Ch. 376; 1 W. R. 210, 226.

Bequest of household furniture, stock-in-trade, goods, chattels, and effects of every sort and kind, and also all moneys due on bond or simple contract :—Held, that the words "goods, chattels, and effects" ought not to be taken as ejusdem generis; but that the clause contained at once a general residuary bequest and a specific bequest of the furniture, stock-in-trade, and moneys. Harris v. James, 12 W. R. 509.

Diamonds and pearls made up for wear will not pass by a devise of a cabinet or collection of curiosities, consisting of coins, medals, gems, and Oriental stones, and other valuable things; valuable things must mean things ejusdem generis. Cavendish v. Cavendish, 1 Cox, 77.

A testator (tenant for life under a settlement of the B. H. estate and other lands, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail male with several limitations over) by his will gave certain specific things to be enjoyed by the person or the persons who for the time being should be entitled to the freehold or inheritance of the family estate at Stapleton, as and in the nature of heirlooms. He gave his furniture, plate, &c., to his brother A. He directed a sum of 1,000*l.* secured to him on the B. H. estate and other estates to sink into the freehold and inheritance of the said estates, that the same might merge them, and the rents and arrears of rent, with timber fallen, and other annual profits due to him at the time of his decease from the B. H. estate unto the person or persons who should be entitled to the freehold and inheritance of the same estate in possession on his decease. He gave his residue to his two brothers B. and C.; and he appointed his brother A. his sole executor. B. died in the testator's lifetime :—Held, that certain prepared brick earth, dug out of the estate by the tenant for life, and lying upon it at his death, and certain tiles so made and remaining on the estate, were comprised in and passed by the words "other annual profits"; and that certain apportionable parts of the rents which, under the apportionment act, went to the testator's executor as part of his assets, passed under the words "due to him at the time of his decease." Stapleton v. Stapleton, 2 Sim. (N.S.) 212; 21 L. J., Ch. 434.

A devise in express words is not extended by subsequent general ones. Roberts v. Kuffin, 2 Atk. 112.

Money will not pass by a devise of all goods and things of every kind when the devisee has a money legacy at the outset of the will. Ib.

Testator gave to his son all his plate, jewels, trinkets, and all his furniture and other articles of domestic use and ornament. By a codicil, he gave to his wife all his provisions, wines, carriages, horses, and all his musical instruments, and the use of all his books, and all his money in his dwelling-house and in his banker's and land-steward's hands, for her own sole use and benefit:—Held, that the books were given to the son absolutely, subject to a life interest in the wife. Cornewall v. Cornewall, 12 Sim. 303; 10 L. J., Ch. 364; 5 Jur. 744.

A bequest of "foreign bonds and other securities":—Held, to pass foreign securities only, notwithstanding that testator had a very large personal estate vested in the British funds. Ferguson v. Ogilby, 2 Dr. & War. 548; 1 Con. & L. 554.

Bequest of "household furniture, goods, ready money, debts, and securities":—Held, to comprise the whole residuary personal estate and effects of the testatrix. Avison v. Simpson, Johns. 43; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 594; 7 W. R. 277.

Testator gave all his freehold and leasehold messuages, lands, and hereditaments, ready money, securities for money, stock in the public funds, goods, chattels, and effects, and all other his real and personal estate and effects, to trustees, in trust to pay the rents of his freehold and leasehold estates, and the dividends, interest, and proceeds of his money in the funds, and other his said personal estate, to his daughter for life, and, after her death, to stand possessed of his said freehold and leasehold estates, money in the funds, and all other his real and personal estate for the children of his daughter; and in default of such children, in trust to pay the rents of his said freehold and leasehold estates, and the dividends, interest, and proceeds of his said stock in the funds, and other his said personal estate, to his nephews for their lives, and after their deaths in trust to stand possessed of his said freehold and leasehold estates, money in the funds, and other his said personal estate for their children; and in default of such children, he gave his freehold and leasehold estates, stock in the public funds, and all other his said real and personal estate, to the corporation of S. in trust, as soon as conveniently might be after they should come into possession thereof, to sell the said freehold and leasehold estates, and also to sell, call in, and convert into money his said stocks in the public funds, and all other his said personal estate, and to lend the same to certain persons upon the terms therein mentioned. The testator at the date of his will, and at his death, was possessed of leasehold estates, turnpike securities, bank stock, and other personal estate:—Held, that the bequest to the trustees was a general residuary bequest, and that the leasehold and bank stock ought to be sold, and the proceeds invested in the three per cents.; and an inquiry was directed whether the turnpike securities were real and permanent securities. Mills v Mills, 7 Sim. 501; 4 L. J., Ch. 266.

On construction of will:—Held, word "effects" coupled with context operated as a bequest of the whole personal estate. Michell v. Michell, 5 Madd. 69; 21 R. R. 280.

Bequest of all other unbequeathed goods and chattels is residuary, notwithstanding a subsequent bequest to the same person of debts due to testator. Bennet v. Batchelor, 1 Ves. 63; 3 Bro. C. C. 28.

A testator gave certain specific property, the lease of premises occupied by him in his trade, and effects, to his wife for life, to be accepted by her subject to payment of debts, &c., and gave certain real estate to his executors, on trust to sell, the proceeds to form part of his residuary estate; and as to all the rest and residue of his estate, of whatever nature, &c., to his next heirs therein equally. Upon the question whether the word "effects" included the residue:—Held, that it did not; that the word "lease" took in all comprised in the lease, and that the charge was a general one. Howse v. Seagoe, 2 W. R. 597.

Construction of the word "other" contained in a residuary bequest of "all other the rest and residue" of the testator s personal estate. Martin v. Glover, 1 Coll. C. C. 269; 8 Jur. 640.

The husband by his will bequeathed as follows: "And unto my wife (whom I make full and wholly executrix) I give my house, with all my household furniture, as also all my plate, china, books, linen, and every other article belonging to me, both in and out of my house, and which may not be herein mentioned, she being subject to the payment of all my just debts, funeral and testamentary expenses":—Held, that the beneficial interest in the settled stock, which formed part of his general estate, did not pass to the wife. Collier v. Squire, 3 Russ. 467; 5 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 186; 27 R. R. 112.

One being on shipboard, and entitled to part of a considerable leasehold estate by the death of his father, which he did not know he had a right to, makes his will at sea, and devises to his mother (if living) his rings, and makes A. his executor, and devises to A. his red box, and all things not before bequeathed. This shall not pass the leasehold interest, or what the testator did not know he was entitled to, but shall be restrained to things ejusdem generis. Cook v. Oakley, 1 P. Wms. 302.

A bequest in general words will not be restricted by the enumeration of articles forming part of a previous gift. Gover v. Davis, 29 Beav. 222; 30 L. J., Ch. 505; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 399; 9 W. R. 87.

A husband, after bequeathing a legacy of 1,060*l.* to his wife, gave her his writing-desk and "all the small coins, curiosities, and other articles" therein contained. At the time of his death the desk contained, besides the curiosities, a sum of gold, several bank-notes, and silver and copper, amounting in all to 32*l.*:—Held, that the gift did not include the 32*l.* Dutton v. Hockenhull, 22 W. R. 701.

Under a bequest "of all household furniture, stock, crop, movables, and other chattels," the legatee is entitled to scrip for shares, bank deposit receipts, and railway dividend warrants in the testator's house at the time of his death, although those securities bore a date subsequently to that of the will. M'Cormick v. Patten, Ir. R. 5 Eq. 295.

A testator bequeathed to his wife absolutely 100*l*., his household furniture, &c., and then bequeathed to her the interest of moneys invested by him in certain loan societies, and all his other property, during her life. He afterwards bequeathed all moneys belonging to him in a friendly society and in all other societies to his wife absolutely:—Held, that the expression "all other societies" meant societies ejusdem generis. Marks v. Solomons, 2 Hall & Tw. 323; 19 L. J., Ch. 555.

A., living in India, and possessed of a share of 10,000*l*. charged on lands in Ireland, made his will in India, and thereby, after making several bequests in the company's rupees, proceeded as follows: "I desire that my plate, clothes, horses, and books, with the exception of those which my wife shall select, together with all my other personal property, with the following exceptions, be sold to the best advantage, and the proceeds appropriated to the liquidation of my debts: the balance, if any, to be handed over to my wife, to assist in defraying her expenses to England." He then bequeathed his watch and chain, and mathematical instruments of every description, and his professional books, to his brother-in-law, and appointed executors for India and executors at home:—Held, that the share in the Irish charge passed as part of the testator's other personal property. Armstrong v. Armstrong, 9 Ir. Ch. R. 487.

After sundry specific and pecuniary gifts, a testatrix "directed her executor to sell by public auction all her household furniture and other effects, and apply the same in discharge of the debts, &c., and the surplus to sink into the residue of her property thereinbefore mentioned, subject to the legacies and payments in the will mentioned; and as concerning such residue, she gave the same" to the residuary legatees:—Held, a good residuary bequest of all the personal estate, and therefore sufficient to comprise and pass many particulars of considerable value, of the existence of which the testatrix was probably ignorant. Lloyd, In re, Baker v. Lloyd, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 539.

Under a bequest of lands, "stock, crop, farming implements, household furniture and effects, whatsoever and wheresoever," money in a bank, and debts due to the testator, will pass. Lowry v. Patterson, Ir. R. 8 Eq. 372.

A gift by will of "my household furniture and effects of all kinds" followed by a gift for another purpose of "all my other real and personal estate":—Held, to include only effects ejusdem generis. Hutchinson v. Rough, 40 L. T. 289.

The mere fact that words of general import in a gift are preceded by an enumeration of particulars is not sufficient ground for restricting the signification of the general words. Hodgson v. Jex, 45 L. J., Ch. 388; 2 Ch. D. 122; 24 W. R. 575.

A will contained a gift of all the testatrix's furniture, plate, linen, and other effects that might be in her possession at her death. There was no other residuary bequest. She died possessed of a considerable amount of money in savings banks, promissory notes, cash, and jewellery:—Held, that the general residue passed under the words "other effects." Ib.

See also Campbell v. Prescott, ante, col. 1212–13. Wiggins v. Wiggins, ante, col. 1239.

—— Where Chattels in or about Particular Place.]—Where testator devised all his goods, chattels, household furniture, stuffs, and other things which should be in his house at time of his death:—Held, a sum of money there did not pass. Trafford v. Berrige, 1 Eq. Abr. 201.

General words in a bequest following a specific enumeration of articles in a particular locality will be confined to articles ejusdem generis. Gibbs v. Lawrence, 30 L. J., Ch. 170; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 137; 3 L. T. 367; 9 W. R. 93.

Therefore a bequest of "all and singular my household furniture, plate, linen, china, pictures, and other the goods, chattels, and effects which shall be in, or upon, or about my dwelling-house and premises at the time of my decease":—Held, not to include money found in the house. Ib.

A testator bequeathed to A. "my plate, house linen, furniture, and all other effects in my house at the time of my death":—Held, that a horse, carriage, car, and some hay in yard and out-offices passed to A., but not a sum of cash in the house. Watson v. Arundel, Ir. R. 10 Eq. 299.

Testator gave all his waggon ways, rails, staiths, and all implements, utensils, and things at his death used or employed together with or in or for the working, management, or employment of his collieries, and which may be deemed as of the nature of personal estate, in trust to be held or enjoyed with the collieries. Decree by Lord Rosslyn (3 Ves. 212) that, under this bequest, and upon the circumstances, money due from the fitters and others and in the Tyne Bank, coals at the pits and staiths, corn, hay, horses, timber, oil, candles, fire-engines, and other articles of stock-in-trade, passed. The decree, affirmed upon a rehearing by Lord Eldon (11 Ves. 657; 8 R. R. 266), but with considerable doubt, was reversed by the house of lords. Stuart v. Bute (Marquis), 11 Ves. 666; 8 R. R. 266; 3 Dow, 73; 14 R. R. 14.

Where there is a bequest particularised by one word, followed by general words, the latter will not be restricted to things ejusdem generis. Swinfen v. Swinfen, 29 Beav. 207; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 89; 4 L. T. 194; 9 W. R. 175.

A testator devised to S. "all his estate at Swinfen, or thereto adjoining, also all furniture and other movable goods here":—Held, that the live stock and implements of husbandry which were in or about the lands and premises adjoining the mansion at Swinfen (at which the testator resided) passed by this bequest. Ib.

Held, also, that money in the house, at the testator's death, also passed to the legatee. Ib.

A testator devised his mansion-house and real estate to trustees for his son for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail male, with remainders over; and he gave to his son his horses, carriages, household furniture, and other effects (except securities for money) which should be at the time of his decease in or about the mansion-house absolutely, with a gift over, if his son died under twenty-one, to his daughters, with power to let the mansion or appropriate the same or any part for the benefit of a minor child, and to preserve the effects as the trustees thought proper. Part of the effects was sold, and accounted for to the son, and the remainder handed over to him:—Held, that the farming stock did not pass under the limitations over, but only such things as were convenient to be held with the mansion, such as carriages and horses. Bradish v. Ellames, 11 L. T. 470 ; 13 W. R. 128.

A bequest as follows :—"I give to my wife all my household furniture, plate, jewels, plated articles, linen, china, glass, books, pictures, musical instruments, and other effects of like nature, and all wines, liquors, fuel, housekeeping provisions, and other consumable stores which shall at my decease be in or about any dwelling-house then occupied by me," passes, first, all the plate and furniture which the testator had in possession, including plate at his banker's and in his father's house at the testator's death, and furniture at a warehouse : and, secondly, settled plate to which he was entitled in remainder, and the proceeds of a portion which his father wrongfully sold. Domville v. Taylor, 32 Beav. 604 ; 8 L. T. 624 ; 11 W. R. 796.

A. by his will bequeathed unto his wife absolutely all his or her jewels, trinkets, gold and silver plate, ornamental and other china, and all objects of vertu and taste ; and he directed that his said wife should be entitled during her life to his leasehold messuage with the appurtenances in Carlton House Terrace and the statuary, furniture, and other effects purchased by him therewith or which might be therein at the time of his decease. After his death the said leasehold premises, statuary, and effects were directed to be sold, and the produce was made part of his residuary estate. There were in the said house at the testator's death, but not purchased by him therewith, ten pictures valued at 15,000*l.* :—Held, that the words "objects of vertu and taste" were intended to include only things ejusdem generis with those enumerated, and did not include the pictures, but that these passed under the gift of the furniture, statuary, and effects in the said leasehold messuage. Londesborough (Lord), In re, Bridgman v. Fitzgerald (Lord Otho), 50 L. J., Ch. 9 ; 43 L. T. 408.

Where Contrary Intention Expressed or Inferred.]—Devise of "all my household goods and other goods, plate, &c., to A. ; the residue of my personal estate to B." The ready money and bonds do not pass by the word "goods," for then the bequest of the residue would be void. Woolcomb v. Woolcomb, 3 P. Wms. 112.

A gift of "household furniture, plate, house linen, and all other chattel property" is not a general bequest of the entire personal estate, but merely personal estate ejusdem generis. Lamphier v. Despard, 1 Con. & L. 200 ; 2 Dr. & War. 59 ; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 334.

A testator, after expressing an intention to dispose of his whole estate, and giving legacies of 100*l.* to each of five persons, desires all his goods and movable effects to be equally divided between them, and then bequeaths 20*l.* to a person whom he appoints executor ; afterwards, by a codicil, he directs the money to be paid to those five persons in twelve months, and his utensils and goods to be given to them in one month after his decease :—Held, that the words "goods and movable effects" are to be limited to utensils and articles ejusdem generis, and that the testator died intestate with respect to the beneficial interest in the general residue of the property. Sutton v. Sharp, 1 Russ. 146 ; 25 R. R. 19.

A testator bequeathed to A. his household furniture and other like things, "and all other goods of whatever kind," and he appointed that certain specified moneys should be divided as follows after all his debts should be paid off. He then specified certain legacies, and proceeded : "three or four thousand pounds or whatever remaining sum or sums to A." :—Held, that A. did not take the general residue. Wrench v. Jutting, 3 Beav. 521 ; 5 Jur. 145.

A residuary bequest in general terms. Revocation by a codicil as to "plate, linen, household goods, and other effects" (money excepted). The exception prevents the restrained construction in general of the words "other effects," viz. ejusdem generis. Stock, therefore, which does not pass under the word "money" was included with leasehold and all personal property, except money and bank-notes. Hotham v. Sutton, 15 Ves. 320 ; 10 R. R. 83.

A testator gave all his household furniture, money, goods, chattels, and effects to his wife absolutely. By a subsequent bequest in the same will he gave the residue of his personal estate to her for life, and on her death to two persons, in equal shares, absolutely :—Held, having regard to the use of terms applying to locality in the first bequest, that this bequest was limited in favour of the second bequest. Smith v. Davis, 35 L. J., Ch. 874 ; 14 W. R. 942.

A testator gave to his son all his furniture, plate, &c., and all other his goods and chattels whatsoever, not being money or securities for money, whereof he might be possessed at the time of his death, and in a subsequent part of the will he bequeathed to his trustees "all my property, as well as real and personal or mixed, not hereinbefore disposed of" :—Held, that although the words goods and chattels might, if unrestrained by the subsequent part of the will, have constituted a residuary bequest, yet that a residuary bequest being formed in the subsequent part of the will, the gift to the son was specific, and not residuary. Mullins v. Smith, 1 Dr. & Sm. 204 ; 8 W. R. 739.

Where there is a gift to one for life, with a direction not to sell the interest so given for a specific time, if the tenant for life dies within the time, the term expires by death. Ib.

A testator bequeathed all his estate and interest in his dwelling-house, together with all his household furniture, plate, linen, and all other effects therein, to M., and the residue of his property to two other persons :—Held, that a sum of money found in the house at the testator's death did not pass under the bequest to M. Campbell v. M'Grain, Ir. R. 9 Eq. 397.

An officer in the army, by his will, made on his way to England on sick-leave, after bequeathing two small legacies to a non-commissioned officer and private in his regiment, and directing his portmanteau, carpet-bag, and sea-chest to be sent to his father's residence in England, begged that, after those sums and other necessary expenses had been provided for, the remainder of his money and effects might be expended in purchasing a suitable present for his godson (then a child of a year old), son of the paymaster of the regiment :—Held, that the residue of the personal estate, consisting of reversionary interests in stock, did not pass to his godson. Borton v. Dunbar, 2 De G. F. & J. 338 ; 30 L. J., Ch. 8 ; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1128 ; 3 L. T. 519 ; 9 W. R. 41. Affirming 2 Giff. 221. See also Hodgkinson v. Barrow, 2 Ph. 578 ; 17 L. J., Ch. 131.

c. Time of Operation and After-acquired Property.

i. Time of Operation in General.

In General.]—Wills in general construed from the making, unless circumstances, or the tenor of it, show it should be from death of testator, but the intermediate time not regarded. Lomax v. Holmden, 1 Ves. Sen. 295.

Paper writing proved as a testamentary schedule, and held to have effect from the date to pass what was in the hands of M. at the time of the date, not what was at the death of testator. The general rule as to testaments is, that the time of the testament, and not the testator's death, is regarded. Downing v. Townsend, Ambl. 280.

The statute 1 Vict. c. 26 extends generally to wills made previously to the passing of the act, where alterations have been made affecting such wills subsequently to the 1st January 1838. Croker v. Hertford (Marquis), 4 Moore, P. C. 339.

The provision in the 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26. s. 24, that a will is to be construed as if made immediately before the testator's death, relates only to the property comprised in the will. Bullock v. Bennett, 3 Eq. R. 799; 7 De G. M. & G. 283; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 567; 3 W. R. 545.

A testator had a daughter who, at the date of his will, was a widow, having been twice married. By his will, dated after the 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 24, came into operation, he gave stock upon trust to pay the income to her for her life or until her marriage, and after her marriage or decease, which should first happen, upon trust for her children by both her husbands. After the date of the will the daughter married a third time, with the knowledge and approbation of the testator, who, however, died without republishing his will:—Held, that the daughter took no interest under it, and that the will spoke with relation to the state of circumstances at the date of the will, and not from the death of the testator, and therefore that the gift over had taken effect. Ib.

A. bequeathed to his sister an annuity, with a clause of revocation in case she should do any act or take any proceedings to alter, frustrate, or dispute the devises and bequests in the will of their deceased father. She, in pursuance of a power in the father's will, did take proceedings for altering the devises and bequests therein, and A. afterwards joined in an agreement, which was expressed to be for the purpose of preventing and terminating all doubts and controversies, to refer such devises and bequests to a valuer. The valuer awarded a sum of money to her for equality of partition, and all the parties interested under the father's will, including A., executed a deed of mutual confirmation and discharge, which recited that they were satisfied with the valuation, and was expressed to be made in order to carry into effect what they believed to be the wishes of the father. A. afterwards by codicil confirmed his will. Quære, whether the steps taken by his sister were within the proviso in the testator's will. But, held, that if so, he had by his subsequent acts dispensed with the prohibition. Violett v. Brookman, 26 L. J., Ch. 308; 5 W. R. 342.

As to Income Accruing.]—The apportionment act held to apply to a devise contained in a will dated before the act to which a codicil was made after the act. Hasluck v. Pedley, 44 L. J., Ch. 143; L. R. 19 Eq. 271; 23 W. R. 155.

Under a direction to pay to a legatee so much of the "income as would not, although the same were payable to him, be by his act or default or by operation or process of law so disposed of as to prevent his personal enjoyment thereof," followed by a gift over, each instalment of income vests in the legatee at the moment when it accrues due, or is in the hands of the trustees ready for application. If at that moment the legatee has not been deprived of the enjoyment of it he is entitled to receive it, so that it can be attached by a garnishee order, and the gift over does not take effect. Sampson, In re, Sampson v. Sampson, 65 L. J., Ch. 406; [1896] 1 Ch. 630; 74 L. T. 246; 44 W. R. 557.

ii. Where After-acquired Property.

Before the Wills Act—Principles.]—The rule, that after-purchased lands do not pass by a devise, does not arise from the word "having" in the statute of wills, but from the difference between the Roman testament or wills of personal estate, and a devise by the law of England, which is an appointment of the person to take the specific estate in nature of a conveyance, though fluctuating till death. Brydges v. Chandos (Duke), 2 Ves. 427.

Words primâ facie equivalent to pass future interests in personal estate, to have that effect unless controlled by the context. James v. Dean, 11 Ves. 389. Affirmed, 15 Ves. 236; 8 R. R. 178.

The words "all I am possessed of," in a will, in a legal construction, relate to the time of the death, not of the execution of the will unless explained. Wilde v. Holtzmeyer, 5 Ves. 811.

Reasons for the rules on which a residuary bequest of personal estate is extended to that which testator subsequently acquires. Bland v. Lamb, 2 J. & W. 405.

Very special words are required to confine a residuary bequest to property belonging to testator at date of his will. Ib.

Every gift of land, even a general residuary devise, is specific, and that only to which the party is entitled at the time can pass; in the case of personal property, what he has at his death will pass, and, if the description is specific, it may operate as a direction to purchase. Nunnock v. Horton, 7 Ves. 399.

Realty.]—A devise and bequest of "all my estate and effects, both real and personal, which I shall die possessed of," extends to lands purchased by the testator after the date of his will, and therefore the heir, taking benefits under the will, must elect. Churchman v. Ireland, 1 Russ. & M. 250.

A devise before 1838 of all my freehold hereditaments, and all my goods, chattels, "and generally all other my real and personal estates and effects whatsoever, whereof, I, or any person or persons in trust for me, am, is, or are, or shall or may be seised or posssessed":—Held, to put the heir to his election as to after-acquired lands. Hance v. Trawhitt, 2 J. & H. 216; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 430; 6 L. T. 19; 10 W. R. 191.

B. devised to his wife in these words:—"I do hereby give, devise, and bequeath unto my well-beloved wife Frances, all such sum and sums of money as now is or hereafter shall grow due to me from their majesties, for my own and servants' service, either by sea or land; as also, all such sum and sums of money, lands, tenements, goods, chattels, and estate, whatever, wherewith, at the time of my decease, I shall be possessed, or invested, or which shall then, or of right doth, appertain unto me. And I do hereby nominate and appoint her, the said Frances, to be the whole and sole executrix of this my last will and testament." The testator had no real estate at the time of making this will; but having about nine years afterwards received part of his wife's fortune, he therewith purchased lands of about 200*l.* per annum. There having been no republication of the will after this purchase:—Held, that the lands did not pass, but descended to the testator's brother as heir-at-law. Bunker v. Cook, 3 Bro P. C. 19.

One articles to buy certain lands; he thereby becomes seised thereof in equity; but where A. devised all his real and personal estate, and afterwards articled to purchase lands and then died, the heir-at-law was held to be entitled to this estate, as not passing by the will: secus, had the articles for the purchase been before the will; for then the estate would have passed. Langford v. Pitt, 2 P. Wms. 629.

A testator, by will, gives his moiety of an estate called H. to his sister and her children, and subsequently, by a codicil which purports to give them the whole of that estate if she shall possess it at her death, charges it with a sum of money to legatees: at the date of the will and codicil he was owner of only one moiety of H., but before his death he acquired the other: although the devise fails as to the after-purchased moiety, the charge is good for the whole sum, and equity will make no appointment. Lushington v. Sewell, 1 Russ. & M. 169.

There is no distinction between a residuary and a specific devise of real estate; every devise of land being in effect specific, inasmuch as a residuary devise will only pass such real estate as the testator had at the time of making his will, and will not pass a real estate subsequently acquired. Spong v. Spong, 1 Y. & J. 360. Reversed 3 Bligh (N.S.) 84; 1 Dow (N.S.) 165.

—— Mines Subsequently Opened.]—Devise (before the Statute of Wills, 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), of lands to certain persons, and of pits and veins of clay under the same lands to other persons; the latter devise passed only the pits and veins of clay open at the date of the will, semble. Brown v. Whiteway, 8 Hare, 150.

Whether since the statute such a devise would pass pits or veins open at the death of the testator, quære. Ib.

—— Personalty—Money and Securities.]—Quære, whether a bequest of "all the rest and residue of my ready money, securities for money, and moneys in the funds" will comprehend property of that description acquired after the date of the will. Parker v. Marchant, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 290; 11 L. J., Ch. 223; 6 Jur. 292.

A. B. bequeathed dividends of property in funds to C. D. for life, and directed, that after C. D.'s decease principal should be divided amongst his children, in manner after mentioned; she then gave children certain sums of money, which would have exhausted whole of funded property at date of will; between that time and A. B.'s death, that property greatly increased:—Held, executors entitled to surplus as undisposed of. Haynes v. Littlefear, 1 Sim. & S. 496; 2 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 13.

The testator gave to wife ready money, &c., which he should have in house at time of death; he gave specifically to others his exchequer bills, stock, &c. Becoming insane, 3,000*l.* paid into his house was laid out in stock and exchequer bills: specific legatees of exchequer bills, &c., entitled. Browne v. Groombridge, 4 Madd. 498; 20 R. R. 326.

In a will made before 1838, a gift of "400*l.*" stock was obliterated, and the words "residue of my property" substituted, whereby the words admitted to probate were, "residue of my property stock":—Held, that the will, by these words, passed to the legatee all the funded property belonging to the testatrix at the time of her death, although much of it was acquired after the date of the will and after 1838. Banks v. Thornton, 11 Hare, 176.

—— Proceeds of Sale.]—T., in 1815, by will, after directing his debts to be paid, gave his personal estate, and money at his bankers' at the time of his decease, and his real estate, to trustees, to convert the personalty, and thereout to pay debts and certain legacies to his son and his daughter, M., "and equally to divide the remainder of the proceeds of sale" between his daugnters E. and O. The real estate was directed to be sold, and after payment of expenses the proceeds were ordered to be divided between his daughters E. and O. In 1857, the testator was found by inquisition to be of unsound mind, and the master in lunacy made a report, and a committee was appointed, who, between the date of the report and the death of T. sold the personalty, and paid sums into court, which were invested. T. died, in 1858, leaving his son and three daughters his next of kin. The chief clerk certified that of the property converted during a testator's lifetime, a large sum was cash at his bankers. There were moneys received in respect of debts due, and of the proceeds of sale of personalty:—Held, first, that the will must be read as from the date. Wheeler v. Thomas, 7 Jur. (N.S.) 599; 4 L. T. 137.

Held, secondly, that the testator intended that all his property, together with the ready money, should form one common fund, out of which were to be paid the debts and legacies. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that the whole of the general fund remaining in the hands of the executor, and which was applicable for the payment of debts and legacies, belonged to E. and O. as residuary legatees. Ib.

—— Debts.]—Bequest of debt which shall be owing on a particular day, taken as it stood at that day, and not affected by consignments from Indies, on account since death of testator, which happened previous to day specified. Innes v. Mitchell, 6 Ves. 464; 5 R. R. 360.

Where arrears of debt are bequeathed, they are confined to those due at time of making will. Att.-Gen. v. Bury, 1 Eq. Abr. 201.

—— Interest in Partnership.]—One partner by will gives one-ninth of one-twelfth of the profits reserved to him, to his partners. He afterwards, on the expiration of the partnership, renews it with the same partners, giving them a greater interest than they had under the former articles:—Held, they were entitled to one-ninth of the testator's interest in the partnership at his death, and that the renewal of the articles was not an ademption or revocation of the devise. Backwell v. Child, Ambl. 260.

—— Household Chattels.]—Bequest of household goods extends to all household goods purchased afterwards, and that are in the house at the testator's death. Masters v. Masters, 1 P. Wms. 424.

A. devises to B. all his goods and furniture in his house, except his pictures, which he gives to C.: pictures in boxes, as well as what were hung up in the house, will pass to C.; and so will pictures bought after making the will. Gayre v. Gayre, 2 Vern. 538.

Bequest of all testator's pictures, &c., they being a good collection; after-purchased pictures shall pass. A bequest of any species of personal estate is considered as fluctuating till the death of testator, and the whole of that species he has at his death passes. Christchurch (Dean) v. Barrow, Ambl. 641.

A. devises his library of books, now in the custody of B., to a college, and afterwards buys more books, which he places in the same library, and gives 4,000*l.* more to increase their library; after-bought books shall pass. All Souls College v. Coddrington, 1 P. Wms. 597.

Under the Wills Act — General Devise.]—A will made after the Wills Act, 1 Vict. c. 26, whereby the testator gave, devised and bequeathed all his estate and effects whatsoever and wheresoever, and of what nature or kind soever, to A., to be paid, assigned or transferred to him, on his attaining twenty-one:—Held, to pass real estate (copyhold of inheritance) subsequently acquired, notwithstanding a direction in the will, that in the meantime, the executors should apply the interest, dividends and proceeds of such estate and effects, or so much thereof, or so much of the principal thereof, as they should think necessary, in the maintenance, education and putting forth of A. in the world, and should invest the said estate and effects on real or personal security at their discretion. Stokes v. Salomons, 9 Hare, 75; 20 L. J., Ch. 343; 15 Jur. 483.

The directions applicable only to personal estate may, in such a case, be construed as referring, not to the whole subject-matter of the gift, but to such portions of the estate as may consist of personalty, to which such directions may be fitly applied. Ib.

In 1840 a testator devised as follows: "I give and devise to my wife, all my part, share, estate, or interest of and in the dwelling-house or tenement, and likewise the several closes or parcels of land hereinafter mentioned (describing them). And I also give and bequeath all my goods and chattels, dwelling-house or tenement heretofore mentioned to my wife for her use and interest during the term of her natural life; and after her decease I give and devise all my property, real and personal, unto my heir or heirs, to be equally divided among them, and as joint heirs of this my above-mentioned property." Several years afterwards the testator became possessed of two other closes and two cottages, and died in 1850:—Held, that the after-acquired property passed under the will, and the wife took a life interest in it. Jepson v. Key, 2 H. & C. 873; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 392; 10 L. T. 68; 12 W. R. 621.

A testator, having no real estate, gives to trustees all his leaseholds and other his estate and effects, upon trust to sell and divide amongst parties named. After the date of the will the testator acquires a freehold house, and then by a codicil revokes the appointment of one of his executors, and confirms his will. Upon a suit to administer his estate and inquiries in chambers, no heir-at-law can be discovered; and on the questions whether the freehold house passed by the general devise in the will, under the 20th and 24th sections of the 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, or, if not, whether it went to the crown, there being no heir-at-law:—Held, that it went to the crown, as it was evidently the intention of the testator not to give it; and that not even the legal interest passed to the trustees, although the wording per se was sufficient to pass it. Pierce v. Att.-Gen., 3 W. R. 612.

—— Specific Devise.]—A testator by will, dated in 1835, devised all his freehold lands and hereditaments as follows: "Of or to which I, or any other person or persons in trust for me, am or is or are seised or entitled in fee-simple, in possession, reversion, or remainder, or which, by virtue of any special power, I am enabled to appoint or dispose of by this my will," upon certain trusts; and by a codicil, dated in 1845, he gave and devised all the lands and hereditaments comprised in and devised by his will, subject to the charges in the will mentioned, and also to certain limitations therein mentioned, to the uses mentioned in the codicil; and he thereby expressly ratified the will, except so far as it was altered or revoked by the codicil. After the date of the codicil, he purchased one estate in fee-simple, and acquired another estate by descent, as the heir-at-law of his sister:—Held, following the decision in Doe d. York v. Walker (12 M. & W. 591; 13 L. J., Ex. 153), that the after-acquired estates were subject to the trusts and limitations of the will and codicil. Langdale (Lady) v. Briggs, 3 Sm. & G. 246. Affirmed, 8 De G. M. & G. 391; 26 L. J., Ch. 27; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 982; 4 W. R. 783.

The true construction of the enactment in s. 24 of the 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, "that every will shall be construed, with reference to the real and the personal estate comprised in it, to speak and take effect as if it had been executed immediately before the death of the testator, unless a contrary intention shall appear by the will," is, that so far as regards the extent of the dispositions of real and personal estate contained in the will, it is to be construed as if executed immediately before the death; and a bequest of "all my leaseholds" will therefore include after-acquired leaseholds. Per Turner, L.J. Ib.

Real estate is left by T. M. to J. D., a married woman, her heirs and assigns, for ever, independent of H. D., for her separate use and benefit, with power by any deed or instrument in writing, or by her last will and testament, to give, devise, and dispose of the same to any person or persons she may think proper, either absolutely, conditionally, or otherwise, and in default of her making any such gift or disposition, then from and after her decease the said property or such part thereof as she shall not have disposed of shall go to her heirs for ever. There is likewise a gift to J. D. of personalty for her sole and separate use, independent of the said H. D. her husband, and not to be subject to his debts, control, or interference, and her receipt alone to be a sufficient discharge for the same. J. D. makes a will and leaves all her residue to D. M. and T. M. T. M. predeceases her, having made his will and left to her as above. On the question whether the clause for separate use extended beyond the coverture with H. D. :—Held, that it did not. On the question whether the property left to J. D. by T. M. passed by her will—dictum, that it did; and that a second husband surviving was entitled to dividends. Moore v. Morris, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 552; 5 W. R. 383.

A testator devised his mansion and estate, called Cleve Court, with the appurtenances, upon certain trusts, and gave the residue of his property of every description, other than those thereinbefore mentioned, upon other trusts. The testator had contracted, before the date of his will, to purchase an estate near and adjoining to the Cleve Court estate, which was conveyed to him subsequently. He also purchased, after the date of his will, several other small properties adjoining the Cleve Court estate :—Held, that evidence was admissible to show what property the testator designated by the particular description up to the time of his death, and that all the property acquired after the date of the will, and treated by the testator immediately before his death as additions to the Cleve Court estate, passed under the particular devise. Castle v. Fox, 40 L. J., Ch. 302; L. R. 11 Eq. 542; 24 L. T. 536; 19 W. R. 840.

K. being seised in fee simple of a several portion of the lands of C. devised them specifically to S. and his heirs. Subsequently to the date of her will, she purchased the other several portion of C., in fee. It appeared that both portions had originally formed one entire denomination, and, having come into the possession of tenants in common, had been apportioned between them in severalty; but both portions continued to be known as the lands of C., although commonly called, in addition thereto, for the sake of distinction, by the names of their respective owners at the time of partition. B. was the residuary devisee of K. :—Held, that under the 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, ss. 3 & 24, the lands subsequently purchased passed to S., the specific devisee of C., and not to the residuary devisee. Strevens v. Bayley, 8 Ir. C. L. R. 410.

Estates acquired by the testatrix after the date of her will, although she had contracted to purchase some of them before that time, and although they were chiefly small additions to what were clearly comprised in the devise, were held not to pass thereby. Webb v. Byng, 1 K. & J. 580; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 696.

—— Manor.]—Where a lord of a manor made his will before the 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, and devised a manor, and subsequently purchased freehold lands held of the manor :—Held, that the freeholds did not pass by the will. Delacherois v. Delacherois, 4 N. R. 501; 10 H. L. Cas. 62; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 886; 10 L. T. 884; 13 W. R. 24.

—— Leaseholds.]—A testator, by will, gave to his son leasehold premises, and his share and interest of and in the partnership stock in trade carried on at the premises. After the date of his will the testator obtained a lease of other premises, at which a portion of the partnership business was subsequently carried on, the rent, outgoings, &c., being paid out of the partnership assets :—Held, that the shares and interest of the testator, both in the houses and stock in trade belonging to him at the date of his will, and those obtained subsequently, passed to his son. Robson, In re, 4 L. T. 49; 9 W. R. 191. And see Langdale (Lady) v. Briggs, supra, col. 1262.

—— Specific Bequest—Stock.]—The 24th section of the Wills Act (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), that every will shall be construed with reference to the personal estate comprised in it, to speak and to take effect as if it had been executed immediately before the death of the testator, "unless a contrary intention shall appear by the will," illustrated: "If I refer to a particular thing, e.g. a ring or a horse, and bequeath it as 'my ring' or 'my horse,' semble the 'contrary intention,' to which s. 24 refers, appears by the will, and the will speaks from the date of its execution; but when a bequest is of that which is generic, of that which may be increased or diminished, the act requires something more on the face of the will, for the purpose of indicating such 'contrary intention,' than the mere circumstance that the subject of the bequest is designated by the pronoun 'my.'" Goodlad v. Burnett, 1 K. & J. 341.

Testatrix in 1850 bequeathed thus: "I give my new three-and-a-quarter per cent. annuities":—Held, that the bequest comprised all the new three-and-a-quarter per cents. which she had at her death. Ib.

Testatrix gave to trustees 1,500*l.* and certain Danish bonds, which she described thus: "My four Danish bonds, one of them for the sum of 485*l.*, and another of them for the sum of 1,004*l.*, another of them for the sum of 1,315*l.*, and the other of them for the sum of 716*l.*, making the whole, together with the said sum of 1,500*l.*, the sum of 5,020*l.*" She had not any Spanish bonds for the specified amounts, but she had a mass of Danish bonds which, before making her will, she had received in exchange for other Danish bonds bequeathed to her by her husband, comprising four lots purchased by him at four several periods for sums corresponding with those specified in the bequest :—Held, it appearing that none of such bonds had been sold by the testatrix, that the bequest was a specific bequest of so much of her Danish bonds as was received by her in exchange for the bonds purchased by her husband with the specified sums. Ib.

The 24th section of the 1 Vict. c. 26, which provides that a will shall speak and take effect as if executed immediately before the death of the testator, unless a contrary intention appears by the will, will probably give an extended effect to what would have been a a specific bequest of a class of personal property before the statute. Douglas v. Douglas, Kay, 400; 23 L. J., Ch. 732.

For instance, a bequest, since the act, of "all the stock," would probably pass all the stock of the testator at the time of his death; but a gift of "all my stock which I have purchased" must be confined to stock actually purchased at the date of the will. Ib.

A testator specifically bequeathed railway stock which he afterwards sold. At his death he was entitled to similar stock which the description in the will was probably sufficient to comprise:—Held, that as there had been a specific thing existing at the date of his will to which the description applied, this circumstance was sufficient to exclude the application of the general rule contained in 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 24, that a will shall be construed to speak from the time of the testator's decease. Gibson, In re,

Matthews v. Foulsham, 35 L. J., Ch. 596 ; L. R. 2 Eq. 669 ; 14 W. R. 818.

A gift of "all my shares and stock" in a will made since the wills act, 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, is a specific gift. Such a gift in a will made before the act would have been a specific gift of all the shares and stock possessed by the testator at the date of his will, and the effect of the act is to import into the gift all the stock and shares acquired by the testator before his death. Bothamley v. Sherson, 44 L. J., Ch. 589 ; L. R. 20 Eq. 304 ; 33 L. T. 150 ; 23 W. R. 848.

A testator having certain debentures at the date of his will, thereby gave "all my debentures" upon certain trusts. After the date of the will the testator exercised an option given him by the company who had issued the debentures, and converted them into debenture stock of the same company :—Held, that the debenture stock did not pass by the will. Lane, In re, Luard v. Lane, 49 L. J., Ch. 768 ; 14 Ch. D. 856 ; 43 L. T. 87 ; 28 W. R. 764.

A. bequeathed specifically all the money in the public funds "which he might be possessed of or entitled to at the time of his decease." He subsequently directed his country brokers to invest 5,000*l.* in consols. They debited his account with the amount, and sent instructions to their broker to make the purchase, but no contract was entered into by the broker until five hours after the testator's death :—Held, that the additional stock did not pass by the specific bequest, but fell into the residue. Thomas v. Thomas, 27 Beav. 537 ; 29 L. J., Ch. 281 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1237 ; 8 W. R. 71.

—— Debts.]—Semble, that a will must be construed, as to the property comprised in it, as if made immediately before the death of the testator, unless a contrary intention appears on the face of the instrument. Everett v. Everett, 47 L. J., Ch. 367 ; 7 Ch. D. 428 ; 38 L. T. 47, 580 ; 26 W. R. 333.

By his will, after reciting that certain debts were due to him from his son, a testator released those debts, and "all other moneys due from him to me." He subsequently made further advances to his son, and expressly released them by a codicil. After the date of the codicil he made still further advances to his son, but did not release them by a further codicil :—Held, that there was nothing to shew a contrary intention, and that the will therefore spoke from the death of the testator, and released the sums advanced after the date of the codicil. Ib.

—— Interest in Partnership.]—The testator, William Russell, by a will dated in 1857, after reciting that he was carrying on business as an iron manufacturer in partnership with his two brothers, bequeathed all his share and interest of and in the partnership business, and of and in the real and personal estate employed or invested therein, and of and in the partnership debts, securities, and moneys to which he might be entitled at his decease, to trustees, upon trust to continue the business during his wife's life, and to pay to her a sum equal to half the amount drawn out by the two other partners. The wife had a discretion to discontinue the business, and in case the business should be discontinued testator directed the trustees to get in the share then appertaining to his estate in "the said co-partnership trade or business," and, after making good to the wife "one full third share of the profits," invest the same, and pay the income to his wife for life. After the death of the wife, he directed the trustees, out of the profits of the said share and interest in the business, if continued, and out of the trust fund, if the business should have been discontinued, to pay certain pecuniary legacies, and subject thereto to hold the fund in trust for A. B. Testator died in 1881. After the date of the will he acquired the shares of his two brothers in the partnership, and carried on the business, still under the firm of "Russell Brothers," as sole owner, until his death. A. B. died in the testator's lifetime. The widow had not discontinued the business :—Held, that the will operated upon the whole of the testator's interest in the business at his death, and that the widow took the whole of the income for her life. Russell, In re, Russell v. Chell, 51 L. J., Ch. 401 ; 19 Ch. D. 432 ; 46 L. T. 236 ; 30 W. R. 454.

—— Where Present Tense Used.]—Testator, by his will subsequent to the act, exonerated A. "from all payments and claims in respect of money laid out by me in repairs of the estates in Scotland, of which I am in possession as heir of entail, and which money has, according to the laws of Scotland, been charged thereon" :—Held, that this exoneration applied to those moneys only which had been actually laid out and made chargeable at the date of the will, to the exclusion of money expended after the date of the will, and also of money expended at the date of the will, but of which the charge pursuant to the Scotch act had not been completed until after the will. Observations as to the effect of s. 24 of the wills act, how far controlled by intention. Douglas v. Douglas, Kay, 400 ; 23 L. J., Ch. 732.

—— Where Word "Now" Used.]—A testator, by his will, dated after the wills act had come into operation, expressed himself thus : "and as to all and singular the residue and remainder of my messuages, lands, and hereditaments, whatsoever and wheresoever, and of what tenure or nature soever, and generally all the freehold, copyhold, and leasehold estates, whereof I am now seised or possessed" ; and in a subsequent part of his will he used these words : "I give to my nephew all such manors, farms, &c., as well freehold as copyhold and leasehold, as are now vested in me, or as to the said leaschold premises as shall be vested in me at the time of my death, as a trustee, to hold unto and to the use of my said nephew, his heirs, executors, &c., upon the like trusts as the same are now or shall be vested in me." The testator purchased a freehold estate after the date of his will :—Held, that the testator had himself put a construction upon the word "now," and that the will could not be construed to speak and take effect, with reference to the estates to which the testator died beneficially entitled, as if it had been executed immediately before his death. Cole v. Scott, 16 Sim. 259. Affirmed, 1 Mac. & G. 518 ; 1 Hall & Tw. 477 ; 19 L. J., Ch. 63 ; 14 Jur. 25.

The fourth section of the act 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26 having laid down the rule that a will shall be construed to speak and take effect from the death of the testator, "unless a contrary intention shall appear by the will" :—Held, that it is not necessary that such contrary intention should be expressed in so many words, or in some way quite free from doubt, but that it is to be gathered by adopting, in reference to the expressions used by the testator, the ordinary rules of construction applicable to wills. Ib.

A testator devised a messuage or a dwelling-house, wherein C. "now resides, with the stables or appurtenances thereto belonging and therewith occupied." Between the date of his will and his death the testator purchased a garden, which he attached to the messuage, and the garden continued to be occupied with the house up to his death :—Held, notwithstanding Cole v. Scott (supra), that the garden passed under the devise. Otley and Ilkley Ry., In re, 34 Beav. 525; 6 N. R. 244; 34 L. J., Ch. 596; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 818; 12 L. T. 659; 13 W. R. 851.

H., in 1846, while encamped at P. and forming part of the army of the Sutlej, bequeathed as follows: "To my brother, G., all the shares which I now possess in the Union Bank in C., and also all the interest . . . and the money lodged there in deposit. . . . I leave and bequeath to W. S. all the money I possess in the company's funds, with whatever may be due thereon up to the day of my death, which is lodged with and under the management of the government agents and Major S. . . . I leave and bequeath the shares I am possessed of in the Agra Bank" to parties named, "and out of the money now in the Agra Bank in deposit." The testator died in 1851. After the date of the will, and before his death, his property in the company's funds was largely increased. On a bill filed by the next of kin :—Held, that the language of the 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 24, had not been controlled by any manifestation by the testator of a contrary intention, and consequently that the whole of the property passed under the will. Hepburn v. Skirving, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 651.

Under a gift of "all my ready money, bank and other shares, freehold property, . . . and any other property that I may now possess," personal estate acquired subsequently to the date of the will passes. Wagstaffe v. Wagstaffe, 38 L. J., Ch. 528; L. R. 8 Eq. 229.

A testator devised a freehold cottage and land "now in my own occupation"; he afterwards bought two fields adjoining and occupied them with the cottage; he subsequently by a codicil confirmed his will as to this devise :—Held, that the two fields together with the cottage and land passed by the devise. Champion, In re, Dudley v. Champion, 62 L. J., Ch. 372; [1893] 1 Ch. 101; 2 R. 162; 67 L. T. 694—C. A.

—— Where Time of Death referred to.]—A retroactive effect will not be given to an order for the purchase of stock, so as to include stock purchased after a testator's death, in a bequest of all stock "I may be possessed of or entitled to at the time of my decease." Thomas v. Thomas, 27 Beav. 537; 29 L. J., Ch. 281; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1237; 8 W. R. 71.

A., in 1841, devised all the freehold property "of or to which I am seised or entitled in fee simple" in strict settlement. He afterwards devised all the copyholds "I am or at the time of my death shall be possessed of" upon trusts corresponding with those of his freeholds. He died in 1861 :—Held, that freeholds acquired after the date of the will passed by the devise. Lilford (Lord) v. Keck, 30 Beav. 300; 10 W. R. 240.

O. gave all his freehold, leasehold, and personal estate of which he should be seised or possessed at the time of his decease upon trust for his wife during her life and widowhood, provided that if his son should attain twenty-one before he should become entitled in possession to the testator's estate at C. he should be paid, as his share of the income, 40*l.* annually from the period of his majority to the death or second marriage of the testator's wife, and after that event in trust to assign all the testator's leaseholds at C. unto his son, his executors, administrators, and assigns. The testator gave all his real and leasehold estates, except his leasehold property bequeathed to his said son, upon trust for all his other children. After the date of the will, the testator contracted to purchase other leaseholds at C., adjacent to those belonging to him at the date of his will, and paid a deposit. The balance of purchase-money was paid and assignment taken by his executors :—Held, that the subsequently acquired leaseholds passed under the specific bequest free from any burden in respect of the balance paid by the executors. Ord, In re, Dickinson v. Dickinson, 26 W. R. 880. Affirmed, 12 Ch. D. 22; 41 L. T. 13—C. A.

Held, also, that the annuity of 40*l.* was payable, after the death of the son, to his personal representative, until the death or marriage of the testator's widow. Ib.

—— Where Express Exception.]—A testatrix devised and bequeathed all the residue of her property "except such real and personal estate as might remain subject to the trusts of her marriage settlement, by reason of no specific disposition thereof having been made by her under the power therein contained." In 1854 M. purchased real estate out of the savings of her separate property, and it was conveyed to the same uses and trusts as those declared by the settlement of 1838, omitting only the uses in favour of children :—Held, that the exception in the will referred only to the property subject to the trusts of the marriage settlement at the date of the will, and that the real estate subsequently purchased by M. passed under her will. Hughes v. Jones, 1 H. & M. 765; 2 N. R. 427; 32 L. J., Ch. 487; 9 L. T. 143; 11 W. R. 898.

—— Bequest of Lease—Subsequent Renewal.]—One seised of a lease for lives devises it, and afterwards renews; the renewal is a revocation of the will. Marwood v. Turner, 3 P. Wms. 166.

One devises a lease to his daughter, and afterwards renews the lease, and afterwards adds a codicil to his will. Whether the renewal of the lease is a revocation, and whether the adding a codicil to his will is a republication, quære. Alford v. Earle, 2 Vern. 209; Nel. 162.

A. devised all his estates to widow for life, remainder to nephew, he paying 2,000*l.* to appointee of widow, and made her executrix and residuary legatee. The estates were held under church leases, which testator renewed after will; quære, if a revocation. The widow, by will, in "pursuance of power," appointed plaintiffs, and devised estates "so given by her said husband's will, and all her interest, &c., therein," to trustees for nephew on his paying the said 2,000*l.*, "according to the true intent, &c., of husband's will, but not before or otherwise." Supposing the renewal of leases a revocation, the widow shall be presumed to have designedly given effect to the real intent of husband. Penrice v. Garnons, 3 Anstr. 821.

A devise of a lease, and of the right of renewal carries both the lease and the right. Abney v. Miller, 2 Atk. 598.

Where testator says, "I give all my estate, right, and interest I shall have to come in a college lease at the time of my death," though renewed after the will, it passes notwithstanding. Id. 599.

B., after making his will, surrendered the college leases he had devised thereby, and accepted two new leases, for which he paid a larger fine; but the last lease was not sealed by the college till after the testator's death:—Held, that the first lease was a revocation; but the latter, which was not sealed, was not. S. C., 2 Atk. 593; 2 Ves. Sen. 418.

If testator, after devising an estate for lives, surrender it and take a new lease, it is a revocation. Id. 527.

Upon a bill filed to have an assignment of rents and profits of a leasehold estate vested in defendant, in trust for plaintiff, the court, under the circumstances:—Held, that a will in 1735 was sufficient to pass the trust of a lease then in being, and the subsequent renewals in 1739. Carte v. Carte, Ridgw. 210; 3 Atk. 174; Ambl. 28.

The word "advantages" is sufficient to take in all the benefits belonging to the trust of an estate for years, not the profits only, but the renewals, which are consequential. S. C., 3 Atk. 178.

Renewal of a lease for life, revocation of will as to those leases, but not as to lease for years. Digby v. Lingard, Dick. 500.

Bequest of a leasehold, without any words to pass the right of renewal, is revoked by taking new leases after the will. Att.-Gen. v. Downing, Ambl. 571.

Renewal of a prebendal lease is an ademption of a bequest of it, but a codicil to the will, though to pass after purchased property, is a republication of the will, and the lease shall pass by republication. Coppin v. Fernyhough, 2 Bro. C. C. 291.

Devise of a leasehold estate held under a college: after the will made, the lease is renewed; this new lease does not pass by the will. Hone v. Medcraft, 1 Bro. C. C. 266.

After a devise of tithes, together with a real estate, a surrender of the lease under which they were held, and acceptance of a new lease:—Held, to amount to a revocation, so that a republication was necessary. Rudstone v. Anderson, 2 Ves. Sen. 418.

A. held a church lease, of which nine months had remained unexpired. He made his will in sickness, and devised all his interest in such lease to B. A., recovering, renewed his lease, and republished his will. Resolved, the renewed lease passed by the republication. Anon., 2 Free. C. C. 116.

A testator, being under-lessee for a long term of years of two houses in Gower Street, numbered 63 and 64, and being possessed of two other houses in that street, numbered 67 and 76, for the residue of certain terms of years, bequeathed them to trustees in trust for D. C. for her life, remainder in trust, as to 63, 64, and 67, for his half-brothers and half-sisters (whom he named), and the survivors and survivor of them, for their, his, or her lives or life, remainder in trust to sell and divide the proceeds amongst their children living at the death of the survivor of them; and as to number 76, in trust, after the decease of D. C., for his niece S. C. for life, remainder in trust for her children who should survive her; and in default of such children, upon the same trusts as he had declared of the other houses after the death of D. C.; and he gave the residue of his effects to D. C., and appointed her his executrix. The testator, some years after the date of his will, took an assignment of the original lease, which comprised numbers 62 and 65, as well as 63 and 64; and a few months afterwards made a codicil, by which he confirmed his will. He subsequently made another codicil, which was in part as follows: "I also give, subject to her life estate, one moiety of the residue of my estate unto and amongst my nephews and nieces living at my decease, payable in like manner as by my will is directed concerning their shares and interests in the reversion of my houses in Gower Street, except that their shares and interests in the said moiety is to depend solely on the decease of my executrix." D. C. and all the testator's half-brothers and half-sisters died before the suit was commenced:—Held, that though the bequest in the will of numbers 63 and 64 was adeemed by the testator taking an assignment of the original lease, the effect of the last-mentioned codicil was to entitle the children of the testator's half-brothers and half-sisters who were living at the decease of the survivor of them to the testator's interest in numbers 63 and 64 as it existed at his death. Porter v. Smith, 16 Sim. 251; 12 Jur. 931.

Bequest of leaseholds for years determinable upon lives for life, with remainder over, for all the residue of the testator's term and interest to come therein at his decease: the term expired in the life of the testator, who continued to hold, and paid half a year's rent before his death as tenant by the year: upon the general words unrestrained, comprising the interest from year to year, and the intention upon the whole will, a subsequent lease obtained by the executrix, the widow and tenant for life under the will, was held subject to the uses of the will, as the residue of the term at his death, if any, however short, would have been. James v. Dean, 15 Ves. 236; 8 R. R. 178—C. A.

A renewed lease does not pass by a previous will bequeathing the lease or the premises held on lease. S. C., 11 Ves. 387; 8 R. R. 178.

Bequest of leasehold premises, and all testator's estate, term, and interest therein; the interest acquired under a subsequent renewal of the lease does not pass. Slatter v. Noton, 16 Ves. 197.

Whether a renewal of lease is an ademption of a previous bequest of lease depends on the intention apparent in will; generally it is. Colegrave v. Manby, 6 Madd. 72; 22 R. R. 245.

A., being possessed of a lease of manor lands and hereditaments for twenty-one years, granted by the warden of an hospital, assigned, by his marriage settlement, the premises and all the interest, benefit, and advantage of a renewal therein, &c., to trustees upon trust, out of the rents and profits, to pay the rents, perform the covenants, raise a competent sum for renewing the lease from time to time as should be customary, and renew the lease accordingly, and subject thereto to pay the rents to A. during his life, and after his death to stand possessed of the leasehold premises, on certain trusts, for the sons of the marriage, and on failure of those trusts for A. absolutely. A., by his will, devised his manor, hospital lands, and hereditaments, situate in, &c., held by lease from, &c., to the same persons who were trustees of his marriage settlement, with directions to perform the covenants in the new lease, or any leases hereafter to be procured, to collect out of the rents a competent sum for renewing the lease, and to renew the same from time to time. After the date of his will, A. surrendered the existing lease, and obtained a renewed lease:—Held, that this renewed lease passed by, and was subject to, the trusts of this will. S. C., 2 Russ. 238; 22 R. R. 245. Affirming 6 Madd. 84.

Testator bequeathed to his wife the interest and dividends of such stock as should be standing in his name at his decease during her life, and he directed that at her decease one moiety of such stock, "subject to and after deducting such premium or sum of money as should be necessary for the renewal of the crown lease of the leasehold messuages which he purchased of Sir H. T., in case he should not have renewed such lease in his lifetime," should go to his five children. In a subsequent part of the will he gave to his son G. all his leasehold houses which he purchased of Sir H. T., to hold to his said son and his executors, &c., for the then existing term or terms therein, and all benefit of renewal "aforesaid," for his and their own use and benefit. At the time of the widow's death the lease was subsisting unrenewed:—Held, that by the "renewal" of the lease was intended a grant at the widow's death of a reversionary lease, to commence at the expiration of the former lease, for the same term, at the same rent, and under the same covenants as were mentioned and comprised in the former lease, or as near thereto as the law by which the crown leases are regulated would allow. Rickards v. Rickards, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 419; 7 Jur. 715. Affirmed, 13 L. J., Ch. 344.

A renewal of a lease containing a covenant for perpetual renewal executed to the lessee after the date of her will, devising her interest in the lease, though it was (previous to the passing of the 1 Vict. c. 26) a revocation of the will at law, was held not to have such effect in equity. Poole v. Coates, 2 Dr. & War. 493; 1 Con. & L. 531; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 497.

—— Bequest of Lease—Subsequent Purchase of Reversion.]—Where a testator has given certain leaseholds for all the residue of the terms for which the same should be held by him at his death, and afterwards acquires the fee, such fee passes under the 24th section of the 1 Vict. c. 26. Where there is a revocation of a specific gift of a house charged with an annuity, and another house is given in substitution, a certain reason being assigned for such revocation, though that reason does not arise, the revocation of the gift and the annuity is complete, and the substituted house is taken free from the annuity. An annuity of like amount, subsequently given, is in substitution for the annuity charged on the revoked gift. Struthers v. Struthers, 5 W. R. 809.

A testator devised all his freehold estate at B., which he purchased of C., by a will dated before, and republished by a codicil dated after the wills act; but a small piece of land purchased with the estate by the testator of A., and always held and mixed with it, was leasehold. After making the codicil, the testator purchased the fee of that small piece of land, and the leasehold interest was merged:—Held, notwithstanding the 24th section of the wills act, that the codicil did not pass the after-acquired fee. Emuss v. Smith, 2 De G. & Sm. 722.

A testator gave all his "personal property, estate, and effects" to his widow, and died intestate as to real estate. Being possessed of a term in real property, he subsequently purchased the reversion, and had it conveyed to a trustee, to prevent the term from merging:—Held, that the reversion did not pass by the will, but that the term did so. Belaney v. Belaney, L. R. 2 Eq. 210; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 445.

A testator being entitled to a house, as to part in fee, and as to the residue for a term of years, gave the same, by the description of "all that my messuage, partly freehold and partly leasehold, No. 3, C. Street," together with other estates, to trustees, their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, upon certain trusts for his wife for her life, and then for his son H. and his issue, in strict settlement. The testator, after directing that the estates, hereditaments, and premises should not be sold, gave the residue of his estate and effects upon trust for sale and division among his wife and children. After the date of the will the testator purchased the reversion in fee of the leasehold portion of No. 3, C. Street, and took a conveyance thereof, whereby the term became merged:—Held, that the whole of the testator's interest in the house passed under the specific devise, the description being sufficient, and the will affording evidence that the testator did not intend that the freehold and leasehold portions of the house should be divided. Miles v. Miles, 35 Beav. 191; 35 L. J., Ch. 315; L. R. 1 Eq. 462; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 116; 13 L. T. 697; 14 W. R. 272.

A testator, by will, dated in 1865, bequeathed to trustees house property held by him on lease, and part of which he described as leasehold, for the benefit of his wife for life, and, after her death, as she should appoint generally. He also made a residuary devise and bequest of realty and personalty. After the date of the will he purchased the reversion of the above leaseholds, and took a conveyance of the same to himself in fee:—Held, that the freehold interest in the property passed to the trustees in trust for the wife. Cox v. Bennett, L. R. 6 Eq. 422.

A testator gave to his wife all his term and interest in the leasehold house at B., at which he then resided, for her absolute use and benefit, subject to the payment of the ground rent and performance of the covenants affecting the same. After the date of his will the testator purchased the freehold of the house at B., which was conveyed to him in fee simple:—Held, that the house passed to the testator's widow, under the specific devise contained in the will, for an estate in fee simple. Saxton v. Saxton, 49 L. J., Ch. 128; 13 Ch. D. 359; 41 L. T. 649; 28 W. R. 294.

2. What Interest passes.

a. Estates for Life, in Fee Simple, or in Tail.

i. What Words pass the Fee Simple.

In General—Words of Limitation Necessary.]—In a devise of real estate words of limitation are required to give more than an estate for life, as are words of qualification to restrain the extent and duration of the interest in personal property. Adamson v. Armitage, 19 Ves. 418.

If lands are devised to one generally, he takes but an estate for life, unless it appear plainly the testator intended him a greater, or that he is likely to be a loser, or his person chargeable. Fairfax v. Heron, Pre. Ch. 67.

Testator gives freehold and leasehold estates to his heir-at-law for life, remainder to R. for life, and to his first and other sons, remainder to S. and W. for their joint lives, and to the survivor of them; the survivor is only to take an estate for life in the freehold, though he takes the whole interest in the leaseholds. Awse v. Melhuish, 1 Bro. C. C. 519.

Devise in these terms: I give to A. my farm and my lands at R., to him, his heirs and assigns for ever; and I also give to A. my farm and manor of E. An estate for life only in the latter. Paice v. Canterbury (Archbishop), 14 Ves. 364.

A testator seised of property in fee devised it (by description), with all outbuildings, &c., "according to the tenor of the testator's deeds," without any superadded words of inheritance. The statute of wills being inapplicable:—Held, that the devisees took life estates only. There were two devises of the same property to children in two different events:—Held, that the terms of the second devise could not, by construction, be introduced into the first, so as to extend the estate thereby given. Sturgis v. Dunn, 19 Beav. 135.

A testator devised freeholds in terms which gave life estates to his children equally, and unto the children of such children as might be dead, who were to take their parents' share only:—Held, that the life estates of the children were not enlarged by the substituted gift. Ib.

The fee does not pass under a devise to two brothers, share and share alike, because one of them is the heir. Bowen v. Scowcroft, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 640; 7 L. J., Ex. Eq. 25.

Devise to A. for life, the reversion to B. and C., to be equally divided betwixt them. B. and C. are tenants in common for life only. Peiton v. Banks, 1 Vern. 65.

A testator gave and bequeathed to his son R. (who was his heir-at-law) his freehold land in D., and directed that the residue of the property which he might leave at his death should be divided between that son and his two sisters in equal proportions, with a direction that whatever portion might devolve to him should be placed in the names of trustees, and the interest paid to him during his life, and that after his death his share should be divided between his children and placed in the names of trustees, with a discretionary power to employ a portion of the capital for their advancement; and on the children respectively attaining twenty-five, their shares to be transferred to them. Should his son die without issue, the whole of his portion was to devolve to his two sisters during their lives in equal proportions, and after their deaths to their children:—Held, that under the terms of this devise the son took only a life estate in the freeehold land in D. Saumarez v. Saumarez, 4 Myl. & Cr. 331.

Where no Words of Limitation—Intention of Testator.]—A devise of all my lands, tenements, and hereditaments to A. will carry the fee, if that appears to be the general intent of the testator. Denn v. Moor, 3 Anstr. 781.

Whether the word "hereditament" alone will carry a fee, quære. Ib.

A legal fee will pass without the word "heirs" where a trust of land can be satisfied no other way. Villiers v. Villiers, 2 Atk. 72.

Devise to daughters to augment portions construed a devise of fee-simple. Carpenter v. Chapman, 9 Mod. 92.

Direction that all testator's children shall share equally in all his property, gives them the real estate in fee. Patton v. Randall, 1 J. & W. 189.

Bequest of land, and of five per cent. stock, and three per cent. stock, to trustees, to apply a sufficient part to the support and education of R., the stock to remain in the testator's name, and the surplus of the dividends and rents to accumulate; and when R. attained twenty-one, to transfer to her the lands, stock, and accumulations; but if R. died under twenty-one (as happened to be the case) testator gave his lands to E., without any words of limitation, and his five per cent. stock to M., provided they were living at the decease of R., not else. The plaintiffs were the residuary legatees. R. died under twenty-one:—Held, that E. took the lands in fee; that M. took the capital of the five per cent. stock; that the plaintiffs were entitled to the accumulations of the rents and dividends. Powles v. Jopling, 9 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 224.

Devise to the testator's three daughters of his property in dwelling-houses, land, &c., in T., to be equally divided between them, share and share alike; and the testator thereby further willed the several shares to his three daughters as before mentioned, to have the interest for their use during their natural life, and afterwards divided equally amongst their children; and, for want of child or children, to go to their husband if living:—Held, that the daughters took estates for life, and in default of children the husbands of the daughters took estates in fee-simple. Bentley v. Oldfield, 19 Beav. 225.

Gift to trustees in fee, and then to A. B. without any limitation, held to confer beneficial interest in fee on A. B. Smith v. Smith, 11 C. B. (N.S.) 121; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 459; 5 L. T. 447; 10 W. R. 18.

—— Where Executory Devise over after Gift in Fee.]—Under a devise in fee with an executory devise over, indefinite in terms, the devisee over takes a life estate only in the event of the executory devise taking effect. In such circumstances effect is not given to any presumed intention on the part of the testator that the devisee over should take the same estate as the prior devisee would have taken. Doe d. Brodhelt v. Thomson, 12 Moore, P. C. 116; 2 L. T. 65.

A testator devised a house at Spanish Town, Jamaica, to M., in fee. By a codicil made shortly afterwards he revoked this devise in the following terms: "I hereby revoke the devise of my house in Spanish Town from M. and leave it to L., also with the furniture of the said house." The supreme court of Jamaica held that the words of the codicil which revoked the demise to M. substituted L. in the place of M.; and though there were no words of limitation in the devise to L., the court was of opinion that the intention of the testator was to give the same estate to L. as he had by will given to M., and that the re-devise in the codicil carried the fee to L. But upon appeal:—Held (reversing such judgment), that L. took a life estate in the house only; for though it was probable that the testator meant to give to L. the same estate and interest that M. would have taken under will if the devise to him had not been revoked, yet, looking at the language of the codicil, which was all the court could do, there was no express declaration to be collected of an intention to give L. more than a life estate. Ib.

Indefinite Gift enlarged to Fee Simple by nature of Gift over.]—A. by his will, dated in 1819, devised his freehold estate as follows: "To my daughter Henrietta I bequeath the house I live in, being No. 11," &c.; "to my daughter Martha I bequeath my house No. 10," &c.; "but it is my will that the same be placed in trust, and that they shall only receive the rent during their life." "In case of Henrietta's death without leaving behind her more than one child, then the house No. 11 shall revert to my son David, son John, and daughter Martha in equal shares; but if she leaves more than one (be it one, two, or more), they shall all share alike the said property left to their mother; but suppose that none of them live to twenty-one, the property shall revert to David, John, and Martha, as before mentioned." Henrietta survived the testator, and died, leaving two children, of whom one lived to attain the age of twenty-one, and the other died under that age: —Held, that the two children of Henrietta took an estate in fee-simple in possession in the house No. 11. Burke v. Annis, 11 Hare, 232.

A testator, by a will made in 1806, devised all his real estate to his two brothers during their joint lives and the life of the survivor; and after the death of the survivor, unto and equally amongst all the children of his brothers who should be then living: and in case of the death of any of the children in the lifetime of his brothers or the survivor of them, leaving lawful issue, then he devised the part or share of such deceased parent or parents unto and equally amongst all his, her, or their children who should be then living; and he devised the residue of his real and personal estate to his widow, her heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns:—Held, that the children and grandchildren of the testator's brothers took estates in fee-simple in their respective shares. Harrison, In re, 39 L. J., Ch. 501; L. R. 5 Ch. 408; 23 L. T. 654; 18 W. R. 795.

In construing a will made before the wills act, the rule that an indefinite devise may be enlarged into a fee-simple by a gift over in a particular event is not confined to a devise of a vested interest, but is equally applicable to a contingent devise. Ib.

A testator, by a will dated in 1832, devised lands to T. during his natural life, and from and after his decease unto his eldest son, if he should have arrived at the age of twenty-one, and in default of his having a son then over. The legal estate in the lands was outstanding. T. died, leaving an eldest son, a minor:—Held, that on the death of T. the eldest son took an estate in fee, liable to be divested on his death under the age of twenty-one, with an executory devise over in that event to T. in tail. Andrew v. Andrew, 45 L. J., Ch. 232; 1 Ch. D. 410; 34 L. T. 82; 24 W. R. 349.

Devise to the testator's son A.; in case of A. dying before his brother B. and leaving no issue, then to B.; should both testator's children die without lawful issue, then over:—Held, that A. took an estate in fee, liable to be divested: (1) in the event of his dying in the lifetime of B. without leaving children living at his death; and (2) in the event of both A. and B. dying without leaving any children. Bate, Ex parte, Mid-Kent Ry., In re, 11 W. R. 417.

The testator gave all his lands, tenements, and hereditaments, and the residue of his personal estates, to trustees, &c., to the use of his grandson H. T. for life, and after his decease in trust for the child and children of H. T. at his or their ages of twenty-one as tenants in common; but in case H. T. should happen to die without leaving any lawful issue of his body living at the time of his decease, then over. H. T. had two children, a son who died in his infancy, and a daughter who attained twenty-one, but died intestate in the lifetime of H. T., leaving children: —Held, that in the events which happened the personal estate belonged to the personal representative of the daughter of H. T., and that the real estate vested in the heir-at-law. Hutchinson v. Stephens, 1 Keen, 240.

A testator had devised and bequeathed his real and personal estates to his wife during widowhood, and at her decease or marriage to his sons and daughters therein named in equal shares; and the will then proceeded as follows: "but if any of my children should die during my lifetime, or otherwise, leaving issue, such child or children, as the case may be, to have their father's or mother's share, to be equally divided between them absolutely." The testator's widow died in 1884, leaving all the sons and daughters named in the will her surviving, and all of them had attained twenty-one years. Such sons and daughters were the vendors of the property sold: —Held, that the children were entitled to their respective shares for an indefeasible estate in fee-simple, and that they could therefore make a good title. Thompson to Curzon, In re, 52 L. T. 498. See also Pollard, In re, post, col. 1429; and Cases sub DEATH WITHOUT ISSUE, ante, cols. 1012, et seq.

—— By charging Lands with Debts or Legacies.]—Whether a devise of lands to A., "after payment of my just debts and funeral expenses," will carry the fee, quære. Denn v. Moor, 3 Anstr. 781.

A., being seised of lands of 10*l.* per annum in possession, and 34*l.* per annum in reversion, gave certain legacies to be paid at certain different times, and then devised all his lands to his youngest son R., who did not pay the legacies within the time:—Held, that a fee passed to R., because it appeared that the sums to be paid were more than the profit of the lands in possession would amount to in that time. Reake v. Lea, 1 Free. C. C. 479.

A testator seised of lands under a lease for lives renewable for ever, gave his wife his dwelling-house for life, and certain benefits out of the farm, and gave his son John four acres of land, and his son Andrew the remainder of the farm, and directed his son Andrew to make good the benefits to his wife, and both Andrew and John to do all the labour belonging thereto:—Held, that John took the absolute interest in the four acres. Morrough v. Dufferin (Lord), 2 Jones, 719.

Devise of land to A., paying out of the rents or out of the land a certain sum, is no fee-simple, otherwise if the devise was paying a certain sum generally, without saying "out of the land." Hawker v. Buckland, 2 Vern. 106.

A. devises to his brother B. all his lands and hereditaments, and all his personal estate, desiring him to pay his debts and legacies. A fee passes. Ackland v. Ackland, 2 Vern. 687.

A. begins his will with disposing of all his worldly estate, and then wills that all his debts be first paid, and gives his wife a moiety of what is left after his debts paid. The real estate is charged with the debts, and a fee in a moiety of the surplus of the estate passes to the wife. Beacheroft v. Beacheroft, 2 Vern. 690.

Devise to testator's wife, she paying his debts, and 15*l.* to A. B., if so much can be spared, and the rest of the estate to go to A. B. after her death, gives her the fee and a power of sale. Dolton v. Hewen, 6 Madd. 9.

A devise of lands to A. "for paying his son 50*l.* when of the age of twenty-one years" gives A. the fee beneficially charged with the payment of 50*l.* Abrams v. Winshup, 3 Russ. 350.

A. gave B. all his lands, tenements, and messuages whatsoever, after debts and legacies and funeral expenses paid. The debts being charged only contingently on the real, if the personal estate should be deficient:—Held, that plaintiff took only a life estate. Merson v. Blackmore, 2 Atk. 341.

Testator, after expressing an intention to dispose of all his property, directed his just debts and funeral expenses to be paid by his executor thereinafter named, and then, after giving several pecuniary legacies, devised all copyholds, which were his only real estates, to his son J. without words of inheritance, and left all the rest and residue of his estate and effects to his said son, whom he appointed sole executor and residuary legatee, such son being also his heir:—Held, that the will was sufficient to pass the fee in the copyholds, and that it charged them with the debts. Dover v. Gregory, 10 Sim. 393; 9 L. J., Ch. 81.

Under a devise to R. and his heirs, and if he dies without issue then to W., he paying his two sisters 500*l.* apiece, and if R. and W. die without lawful issue then to testator's three daughters and their surviving issue:—Held, that R. took an estate in fee, which was not cut down to an estate in tail. Fisher v. Barry, 2 Hog. 153.

W. by will, dated before 1838, gave three parcels of land, A., B. and C., to his son J. in one gift, without any words of inheritance, and afterwards declared that J. should out of A. pay another son, D., an annuity of 10*l.* per annum during D.'s life:—Held, that this enlarged the previous indefinite devise to J. to an estate in fee-simple in the parcel of land A., but that he only took a life estate in the other parcels B. and C. Matthews v. Windross, 2 K. & J. 406; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 926.

A devise in 1822 of real estate to S., upon condition that she pay 50*l.* to B. by instalments of 10*l.* a year; but in case S. dies without issue the land to go to S. or his heirs, "in consideration that he pays to J. or his heirs the sum of 250*l.* twelve months after the death of S.":—Held, that the gift conferred upon S. a fee-simple by reason of the charge of 50*l.*; and that the gift over was to take effect upon her death without issue then living, from the direction that the executory devise over was to pay the 250*l.* twelve months after the death of S. Blinston v. Warburton, 2 K. & J. 400; 25 L. J., Ch. 468; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 858.

An indefinite devise of real estate by a will made before 1838 is enlarged into a fee-simple by annexing a direction that the devisee should pay a sum of money to another person, or by a declaration that the devise is "subject to his making" such payment, or by any other expression in the will, shewing that the payment is to be made by the devisee out of the interest devised to him, because if such interest were for life only it might determine before it enabled him to make such payment. Burton v. Powers, 3 K. & J. 170; 26 L. J., Ch. 330; 5 W. R. 242.

But an indefinite devise before 1838 of real estate to A., "after" or subject to the payment out of the premises "of a sum of money to another person," has not this effect, because the sum is then charged upon the whole fee-simple, and nothing is given to A. until that charge is satisfied; and consequently no implication can be derived from the charge of an intention to enlarge A.'s estate. Ib.

A testator by his will, made in 1822, devised a farm and premises to A. for life, and after her decease to J. W., subject to the payment out of the aforesaid premises of the sum of 50*l.*, and ordered that the rents and interest that were behind, due, and unpaid, should go and be paid to that person he had left the estates and property respectively to. The devise to J. W. contained no words of limitation, and the will contained a residuary devise:—Held, that J. W. took a life estate only. Ib.

A testator devised to his wife his lands. By a separate clause he gave her certain chattels, and then added, fourthly, "I order my wife to pay the following legacies," which he enumerated. He made her and another executors:—Held, the legacies were charged on the lands, and the wife took the fee. Johnson v. Brady, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 386.

Neither the word "thereout," nor "paying," is required to make the repayment of a legacy a condition, so as to give the devisee the fee in lands charged with it. Ib.

A testator, by will made in 1809, after giving all his "lands, tenements, chattels, and premises whatsoever" to his wife during her life, bequeathed at her death certain messuages "to his son W., he paying to certain legatees the sum of 50*l.* each, out of the aforesaid premises." By another devise he "gave to his son J. other messuages at the decease of his wife." The residuary clause was as follows: "All the rest and residue of my estate, of whatever nature, kind, and quality soever the same may be, and not herein disposed of, after payment of my debts, &c., first, I give to my grandson 5*l.*; lastly, I give and bequeath unto my four daughters equal share and share alike of the said residue and remainder, and to be paid to them one year after the death of my wife":—Held, that the devise to J. was not enlarged to a devise in fee by implication from the prior devise to W. (which was accompanied with a charge), and that J. took an estate for life only. Morris v. Lloyd, 33 L. J., Ex. 202; 10 L. T. 508.

Held, also, that the reversion in fee passed by the residuary devise, the words "to be paid, &c.," being satisfied by being applicable to some part if not to the whole of the residue. Ib.

A father who died in 1806 by his will gave two freehold houses to one of his sons without any words of limitation, subject to legacies and annuities, with a gift over, in case of alienation or of death without issue, to his brothers and sisters, nominatim, also subject to the legacies and annuities, and with a direction to pay sums of 4*l.* to each of certain grandchildren as they attained twenty-three :—Held, that on the death of the devisee without issue, and without barring any estate tail he might have had, the brothers and sisters took as joint tenants, and as the gift was coupled with a direction to pay several gross sums, their estates would in a case coming under the old law be enlarged to a fee-simple. Wilkinson v. Wilkinson, 20 L. T. 416.

A testator, by will made before 1837, devised lands to trustees to raise 4,000*l.*, and subject thereto he gave the lands to W. for his own special use :—Held, that W. took an estate for life only. Oakley v. Wood, 37 L. J., Ch. 28 ; 16 L. T. 450 ; 15 W. R. 862.

Effect of the Wills Act.]—A testator, subsequently to the 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, gave to A. the house she lived in, and grass for a cow, in Gill Field :—Held, that she took an estate in fee-simple in the house, and the right of pasture of a cow during her pleasure. Reay v. Rawlinson, 29 Beav. 88 ; 30 L. J., Ch. 330 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 118 ; 9 W. R. 131.

The 28th section of the Wills Act (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), which enacts that "where any real estate shall be devised to any person without any words of limitation such devise shall be construed to pass the fee-simple, or other the whole estate or interest which the testator had power to dispose of," applies to the devise of an existing estate or interest, and not to an estate or interest which the testator by his will creates de novo ; and therefore a gift by will, since the statute, of an annuity to A. without words of limitation, but which was by the same will charged upon real estate, is not a devise of a perpetual annuity or rent-charge, and is a gift of an annuity for life only, as it would have been before the statute. Nichols v. Hawkes, 10 Hare, 342 ; 22 L. J., Ch. 255 ; 1 W. R. 124. See also Lord v. Wightwick, 4 De G. M. & G. 803 ; 23 L. J., Ch. 235 ; 18 Jur. 253 ; 2 Eq. R. 349.

Devise by the testator by his last will, dated the 27th day of June, 1840, to his three daughters of real estate with the appurtenances, to hold the same in joint tenancy for their own sole use and benefit in succession, and not subject to the debts or control of their husbands ; the same not to be sold or disposed of, but held in succession by his three daughters, with right of survivorship :—Held, that the daughters took as joint tenants in fee. Wisden v. Wisden, 2 Sm. & G. 396 ; 18 Jur. 1090 ; 2 W. R. 616.

Effect of particular Words in passing the Fee—Word "Estate."]—The word "estate" in a will, without words to restrain the generality of the sense, will carry a fee. Macaree v. Tall, Ambl. 182.

The words "I devise all my temporal estate" the same as "I devise all my worldly estate" pass a fee, and this the plainer where it is afterwards said "all the rest of my real estate," the word "rest" being a term of relation. Tanner v. Wise, 3 P. Wms. 295 ; Cas. t. Talb. 284.

Devise of all that "estate" testator bought of M., held to pass the fee ; so held also as to another clause, which was a devise of "the reversion of that tenement his sister lived in," after her death :—Held, contra as to other devises, being first, "all those houses he bought of T. W., containing three dwellings with all their appurtenances," and next, as to a devise of the tenement in possession of M. B. presently after his death. Bailis v. Gale, 2 Ves. Sen. 48.

A. devises all the rest and residue of his real and personal estate whatsoever ; this will pass a fee. Murry v. Wyse, 2 Vern. 564.

The word "estate" does not of necessity pass the fee-simple. Rogers v. Waterhouse, 4 Drew. 329 ; 6 W. R. 823.

Testator gave to his heir one shilling, and devised to W. B. all his lands, and in the next sentence gave to him all his goods, chattels, personal and testamentary estate :—Held, that the fee-simple of the lands passed to W. B. Bradford v. Belfield, 2 Sim. 264 ; 29 R. R. 100.

A testator devised in the following words : "As to the rest of my estate, the two houses, one in St. John's Lane, and the other in Foggwell Court, in Charterhouse Lane, I give to my wife for her life, and after her decease, that in St. John's Lane to my daughter ; the other between my two sons, to be equally divided" :—Held, that the daughter took only an estate for life in the house in St. John's Lane. Esdaile v. Gall, 1 Russ. & M. 540 ; 8 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 133.

B. devised thus, "all my freehold estate, of any nature or kind whatsoever, which at present is in my power to dispose of, I give to my wife." The question whether the wife took an estate for life or in fee was sent to B. R. Snelson v. Corbet, 3 Atk. 369.

One devises a third of all his estate whatsoever to his wife, and two-thirds of all his real and personal estate to his son J., and his heirs ; the wife has but an estate for life in the third part of the real estate. Chester v. Painter, 2 P. Wms. 335. But this seems overruled in principle by Stewart v. Garnett, 3 Sim. 398, 406.

—— "Estate" coupled with Description by Locality or Occupation.]—A testator setting out in his will, to give and dispose of his worldly estate, is a strong proof that he intends to dispose of the inheritance of his lands, when there are sufficient words in the following parts of the will for that purpose ; the words, "estate at such a place," or "in such a place," may carry a fee. The whole complexion of a will ought to be considered. Ibbetson v. Beckwith, Cas. t. Talbot, 157. But see Denn v. Gaskin, Cowp. 657.

I devise all my land and estate in D. to J. ; decreed, a fee passes ; these words charging not only the lands, but also the testator's interest in the land. Barry v. Edgeworth, 2 P. Wms. 523.

A testator, after giving his wife an annuity for her life to be issuing out of "all his real estate, lands, and hereditaments in P.," devised "the said estate, lands, and hereditaments" to his daughter and her heirs ; but in case his daughter died under twenty-one and without issue, he devised "the said estate, lands, and hereditaments" to his wife for her life, and after his decease to the children of A., share and share alike :—Held, that subject to the previous interests given to the daughter, and to the wife, the children of A. living at the testator's death took an estate in fee in the lands in P. Wilkinson v. Chapman, 3 Russ. 145.

Devise of all my estate at H. to A. for life, remainder to B. and C., is a devise in fee to B. and C. Price v. Gibson, 2 Eden, 115.

Devise of "my copyhold estate at P., consisting of three tenements, and now under lease," &c., but not specifying for what interest. An estate for life only passes. Pettiward v. Prescott, 7 Ves. 541.

A testator, resident in Jamaica, devised the rents, issues, and profits of his estate, called Islington and Cove's Pen, in that island, to A. B. :—Held, that the estate and the slaves, mules, cattle, and machinery thereon passed under this devise. Stewart v. Garnett, 3 Sim. 398. See Rucker, Ex parte, 3 Deac. & C. 704.

One devised to J. all his freehold, leasehold, and copyhold estates in E., and gave the rest of his estates, both freehold and leasehold, to M. He had freehold and leasehold in M., but no copyhold out of E. :—Held, J. took the fee in the freehold and copyhold, and the absolute property in the leasehold in E. Macaree v. Tall, Ambl. 182.

A testator devised in the following words: "As to the rest of my estate, the two houses, one in St. John's Lane, and the other in Foggwell Court, in Charterhouse Lane, I give to my wife for her life, and, after her decease, that in St. John's Lane to my daughter; the other between my two sons, to be equally divided" :—Held, that the daughter took only an estate for life in the house in St. John's Lane. Esdaile v. Gall, 1 Russ. & M. 540; 8 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 133.

Devise to executors of all real and personal estates in trust, as to his real estate, to his wife for life, and after her death he gave his houses, lands, and estates in B. to J. B., "but at his death I will that the whole shall be for the use of the said J. B.'s wife and children, and which children, at the death of their mother, shall inherit the same jointly during their lives, and, if they shall die before twenty-one, I will that my houses and estates in B. go to H. S." :—Held, that the children took for their lives only, and that, upon their having attained twenty-one, the inheritance was undisposed of. Spry v. Bromfield, 9 Sim. 534. But the court of exchequer, on a case sent, decided otherwise. S. C., 7 M. & W. 546; 10 L. J., Ex. 457. And see S. C., 10 Sim. 94; 5 Jur. 864.

Construction of will passing fee without words of limitation. As to effect of description of lands as in the occupation, &c., of particular tenant to restrain the legal effect of the word "estate" in a devise to pass the fee, quære. Chorlton v. Taylor, 3 V. & B. 160.

A devise before 1838 of all my estates in the occupation of A., in the parish of B., to C., without words of limitation, conferred upon C. the fee-simple. White v. Coram, 3 K. & J. 658.

Devise of "all my estates in the parishes of P. and T., to J. B., if he is living at the time of my death; but if he is dead" then over :—Held, that the fee-simple passed to J. B. Ib.

A devise of testator's "estate at A.," without more, will comprehend his whole interest in the lands rather than be referable to the mere locality. If, however, words of limitation be added, they will determine the extent of the benefit. Southby v. Stonehouse, 2 Ves. Sen. 611.

Devise of land and houses in L. Street, with all outbuildings, &c., "according to the tenor of the title deeds of the said land and houses," without any words of limitation :—Held, to pass an estate for life only, although by the deeds the testator held the property in fee. And held also that, although in a certain event which did not happen, and in another event which might happen, words of a larger signification were used, the estate for life could not be extended or enlarged. Sturgis v. Dunn, 19 Beav. 135.

Devise of "my property in houses, &c., at G." :—Held (independently of Wills Act), to pass the fee. Bentley v. Oldfield, 19 Beav. 225.

A testator, before the Wills Act, devised his estate at A. to S. K. for life, charged with life annuities, but in case the annuitants or any of them survived S. K. he gave the aforesaid estate to S. K.'s eldest surviving son, charged with the annuities, but in default of issue male he gave the aforesaid estate to T. K., charged in like manner, and unto his eldest son upon the same conditions; but in default of issue male the premises were to descend to the testator's heirs as aforesaid :—Held, that the word "estate" was not sufficient to give the eldest surviving son of S. K. a fee-simple. Key v. Key, 4 De G. M. & G. 73; 1 Eq. R. 82; 22 L. J., Ch. 641; 17 Jur. 769.

—— "Executors or Administrators."]—A devise of a testator's "property to W. H., his executors or administrators," was held to pass the fee of the testator's real estates absolutely to W. H. Hunter v. Pugh, 9 L. J., Ch. 62; 4 Jur. 571.

—— "Interest."]—A testator in a will made before the Wills Act gave and bequeathed "all the interest of my houses and cottages situated as follows." He then proceeded to dispose of this property, which was copyhold, and, after giving life interests, concluded with a gift to T. S. :—Held, that the words "all my interest" at the commencement of the will ran through the whole will, and were not in the nature of a recital merely, and that T. S. took the fee. De la Hunt and Pennington, In re, 57 L. T. 874.

A messuage was settled upon A. for life, remainder to B. in tail, remainder to A. in fee. A. devises all his right, title, and interest in this messuage to B., who was his son, but without adding any words of inheritance :—Held, that by this devise the fee passes. Cole v. Rawlinson, 3 Bro. P. C. 7.

—— "Leaseholds"—Purchase of Reversion by Tenant for Life.]—Testatrix devised leaseholds, renewable by custom, to J. P. for the residue of the term, and after the death of J. P., during the residue of the term, to the children of J. P. in equal shares. J. P. renewed the leaseholds more than once, and finally purchased the reversion :—Held, that the fee-simple in the property passed by the devise in the will to the children of J. P., and became subject to the trusts of the will. Phillips v. Phillips, 54 L. J., Ch. 943; 29 Ch. D. 673; 53 L. T. 403; 33 W. R. 863—C. A.

"Moiety."]—Devise of "my moiety" of closes at L. is insufficient, prior to the 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, to pass the fee. Arnold, In re, 33 Beav. 163.

—— "Part."]—Testator devised to his son W. his (testator's) part of the lands of A., describing them as "being lately part of the estate of I. K., and purchased by me, and in which X. is jointly concerned with me," to hold same to W. and his assigns during his life and no longer, unless it should happen that W. should survive his then present wife and marry a second wife, by whom he should have issue living at the time of his death; and then and in that case he devised his said part of said lands upon the death of W., leaving issue male of such second marriage, to such issue male, share and share alike; and for want of issue male to the issue female of such second marriage, share and share alike; and in case it should so happen that W. should die without leaving any such issue of a second marriage, then and in that case he devised said lands to his two grandsons James and John and their heirs, and the survivor of them, share and share alike, to hold to their own use and benefit for ever; and in case James and John should die without leaving issue, then he devised said lands to his grandson M. M. and his heirs; and in case of his death without issue he devised said lands to his grandsons Robert and William, and their heirs, share and share alike, for ever. W. having married a second wife, died, leaving issue male by her, but no issue of his first marriage:—Held, first, that under a devise of the testator's "part" of the lands the fee will pass; secondly, that W. took an estate for his life only, with concurrent contingent remainders in fee; first to the sons, secondly to the daughters of W. by his second marriage living at his decease; and thirdly to the testator's grandson in tail, of which one remainder only was to start. Review of the cases upon the subject. Montgomery v. Montgomery, 3 Jo. & Lat. 47; 8 Ir. Eq. R. 740. See comments on this case in Woodhouse v. Herrick, post, cols. 1296–7.

—— "Freely to be Possessed," in Gift to Executors.]—A gift to A. and B., "whom I appoint my executors of all that I possess in any way belonging to me, by them freely to be possessed or enjoyed, of whatever nature or matter it may be," will pass the fee-simple of real estate. Thomas v. Phelps, 4 Russ. 348; 6 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 110.

The words, "I bequeath to my sons A. and B., and likewise constitute and ordain them my sole executors of this my will, all and singular my lands, messuages, and tenements, with all my goods and chattels, by them freely to be possessed and enjoyed":—Held, not to be a devise in fee. Bromitt v. Moor, 9 Hare, 378; 22 L. J., Ch. 129.

—— "Property."]—Before the Wills Act a devise of realty could not carry more than a life estate in the absence of words of limitation shewing an intention to give a larger estate. The word "property" is such a word of limitation only if it occurs in the operative part of the will. Hill v. Brown, 63 L. J., P. C. 46; [1894] A. C. 125; 6 R. 440; 70 L. T. 175—P. C.

A testator directed that all his just debts and funeral expenses be paid as soon as possible after his decease. He appointed three persons as joint executors of his "entire property, for the purpose of putting it to the best advantage of my sister, wife, and children":—Held, that fee-simple lands were devised by the will. Murphy v. Donnelly, Ir. R. 4 Eq. 111.

A testator gave specific real estate and his personal estate, property, and effects to his wife for life; and after her death he gave the aforesaid specific real estate, with all moneys, rights, credits, &c., "and all property whatsoever that should be remaining after his wife's decease," to his children:—Held, that the children took his real estate in fee. Footner v. Cooper, 2 Drew. 7; 23 L. J., Ch. 229; 2 W. R. 5.

—— "Rents and Profits."]—A sale directed on the words "rents and profits" alone, though generally contrary to testator's intention, in aid of a creditor, on the ground of law, that in a will those words meant and passed the land itself. Another construction, however, as to legatees, upon the addition of the words "as the rents and profits, &c., should advance the money." Baines v. Dixon, 1 Ves. Sen. 41.

Devise of profits is a devise of land. Johnson v. Arnold, 1 Ves. Sen. 171.

Under a devise to sons and daughters of an equal share in all the income of real property the fee passes. Mannox v. Greener, L. R. 14 Eq. 456; 27 L. T. 408.

Devise of "one moiety of the rents, issues, and profits of my estate named T., in the parish of M., to be divided equally amongst my grandchildren; the other moiety of the rents, issues, and profits of my said estate I give to R. and his heirs":—Held, that the grandchildren take the fee as tenants in common in a moiety of the estate. Stewart v. Garnett, 3 Sim 398.

Testator, by a codicil to his will, reciting that certain lands produced a clear yearly rent of 237*l.*, devised them to trustees in trust for charitable purposes; he then directed that, in the event of there being an increase of the rents of the said lands by any new letting, the surplus so to arise should go to the only use and behalf of the person or persons of the S. and C. families, who for the time being should be lords or ladies of the manor of D.; and in case the said families did not protect the said charities, or if the said families should become extinct, then, and in either of such cases, the trustees were to apply the said surplus rents, in addition to the provision already made, for the charity:—Held that the gift of the surplus rents to the members of the S. and C. families was a good equitable devise in fee, and that the gift over to the trustees of the charity was bad for remoteness. Charitable Donations Commissioners v. Clifford, 1 Dr. & War. 245.

A father, after giving all the residue of his estate, both real and personal, to trustees, gave, devised, and bequeathed the yearly produce of his estate unto his six children, naming them, and the issue of them (such issue taking only their parents' share), to and for her or their own use and benefit absolutely, share and share alike:—Held, that the children of the testator, who all survived him, took absolute interests in his realty as tenants in common in fee. Shacklock v. Jarvis, 26 L. T. 682.

A testator, in 1857, devised freeholds to trustees to pay the rents to his five children, "or their heirs":—Held, that the children took a fee. Adshead v. Willetts, 29 Beav. 358; 9 W. R. 405.

—— "Residue."]—A testator, by his will dated in 1795, gave certain pecuniary legacies, and then gave all the residue of his effects, real and personal, to A. and B., and then gave an annuity for the life of C., and then gave all his lands in the county of Kent and elsewhere with his personal estate to three trustees (naming them), their heirs and assigns, in trust for the purposes above mentioned:—Held, that A. and B. took an equitable estate in fee in the lands in the county of Kent. Torrington (Lord) v. Bowman, 22 L. J., Ch. 236.

—— Residuary Legatee.]—After directing payment of his funeral expenses and his just and lawful debts, a testator gave his residence, describing it "as well as all my lands, tenements and hereditaments, to my dear wife . . . for and during the term of her natural life wheresoever and whatsoever, real and personal"; then, after bequeathing some pecuniary legacies, the testator proceeded, "And to this my last will and testament I appoint and direct and make my dear wife . . . sole executrix. to this my will, and also at the same time I appoint and make her my residuary legatee" :—Held, that the widow took an estate for life only in the testator's real estate, which, subject to such life estate, passed to the testator's heir-at-law. Morris, In re, Morris v. Atherden, 71 L. T. 179.

ii. Limitations Creating an Estate Tail.

Principles.]—Construction of words of a devise as to giving an estate tail. Willcox v. Bellaers, Turn. & R. 491.

Where the intent of a testator, in creating an estate tail, is very doubtful, the court will lay hold of any circumstances, rather than put it in the power of a person on a remote contingency to bar all subsequent remainders. Lethieullier v. Tracey, 3 Atk. 797.

Where by plain words, in themselves liable to no doubt, an estate tail is given in a will, it cannot be cut down to a life estate, unless there are other words which plainly shew the testator to have used the former as words of purchase contrary to their ordinary sense, or unless in the other provisions of the will there should be a clearly expressed intention inconsistent with the giving an estate tail, and which intention can only be fulfilled by sacrificing the particular provision and regarding the expressions as words of purchase. Fetherstone v. Fetherstone, 3 Cl. & F. 67. S. C., nom. Jack v. Fetherstone, 9 Bligh (N.S.) 237.

Limitation to A. and his Heirs—Heir Construed Heir of the Body.]—Under a devise to trustees, in trust for A. for life, and "after her decease to descend to her female heir, and whether sister or daughter," A. takes an estate in tail female. Lewthwaite v. Thompson, 36 L. T. 910.

Devise of land to W. for life, remainder to his first son for life, remainder to the right heirs male of his body, remainder to the second, &c., sons of W., and the heirs male of their bodies, remainder to T. for life, and after to his first heir male of his body, and for want of such over: —Held, T. took an estate in tail male. Dubber v. Trollope, Ambl. 453.

A devise to a man for life, and if he die without heir male remainder over, makes an estate tail. The words "for want of such issue" make an estate tail by implication. Ib., 463.

—— Heirs Construed Heirs of the Body.]—A. devises lands to J., his wife, for life, then to his son H. for life, then to his son G. and his heirs for ever; if he died without heirs, then to his two daughters K. and L. This is an estate tail in G. Tyte v. Willis, Cas. t. Talb. 1.

One, having several children, devises land to one of them and his heirs, and for want of such, to the heirs of his other children :—Held, the first devise was an estate tail. Pickering v. Towers, Ambl. 363.

A. devised to B. and his heirs ; and said afterwards, "if he shall die without heirs of his body" : —This controls the devise to an estate tail. Lampley v. Blower, 3 Atk. 398. And see Lee v. Prieaux, 3 Bro. C. C. 381, where this case is stated from the register book.

Where A. devised to B. for life and to his heirs, and, for want of heirs to C. in like manner, and for want of heirs of him, to D. and his heirs for ever ; B. and C. were brothers, and D. was their cousin and heir :—Held, that B. and C. took an estate tail, and that the remainder over to D. was good. Parker v. Thacker, 3 Lev. 70.

Bequest to A. for life, remainder to his children ; but if he shall die without children living at his death, to B. for life ; remainder to her children ; and if she should die without children living at her death, then to her executors, administrators, and assigns. By a codicil, the same is given over "after the decease of the before-mentioned persons in my will, A. and his heirs for ever, and B. and her heirs for ever." The meaning of the word "heirs" in the codicil not to be confined to children from comparison with the will and the bequest over, therefore too remote. Griffiths v. Grieve, 1 J. & W. 31.

A devise by a father to a second son and his heirs for ever, and for want of such heirs, then to the right heirs of the testator, is an estate tail. But had the devise over been to a stranger, the second son would have taken a fee-simple, and consequently the devise over had been void. Nottingham v. Jennings, 1 P. Wms. 23.

A devise before 1838 of "my H. estate" to S., a grandson, with a gift over to the testator's other grandsons, should S. die without an heir, gives an estate tail in S., and not a devise in fee, for the persons to whom the limitation over was made were capable of being collateral heirs of S. Hancock v. Clavey, 25 L. T. 323 ; 19 W. R. 1044.

A. devised land to B. his son, and if C. his daughter survived B. and his heirs then she should have the land. Adjudged, that B. had but an estate tail : but if the will had said that S., a stranger, should have the land if he survived B., B. would have taken an estate in fee. Webb v. Hearing, Cro. Jac. 415.

A testator, having several children, directed the purchase of an estate for one of his daughters, "for her use and her lawful heirs," to be returned, "if she died without lawful heirs," to the other children that had heirs :—Held, upon the context, that "lawful heirs" must be construed "heirs of the body," that the daughter took an estate tail, and that the gift over was also an estate tail. Simpson v. Ashworth, 6 Beav. 412 ; 7 Jur. 410.

The word heirs, in a devise to first and other sons, construed heirs of the body, in order to give effect to the general intention, that the sons should take successively and in priority of birth.

Devise to A. for life, and afterwards to his "first and other sons successively, according to the priority of their respective births, and their respective heirs" (omitting "of their bodies"), to the extent that the elder should be preferred to the younger, and "for default of such son or sons," to the daughters as tenants in common in fee :—Held, that the sons of A. took successively as tenants in tail general. Hennessey v. Bray, 33 Beav. 96 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1065 ; 11 W. R. 1053.

A., owner in fee of several denominations of land, devised different portions of the same to several of his sons respectively, such portions being devised to each individual devisee "and his heirs for ever." One of the devises was in these words : "I leave my third son M. T. the lands of G. for ever ; but in case he should die unmarried, or without lawful issue, in that case he may will one half of it as he pleases, and the other half to go, share and share alike, between my surviving sons and their families." The concluding paragraph of the will ran thus: "All the bequests given to my son R. T., my son J. T., and my other three sons M. T., C. T. and H. T., of my property, no part of it shall or will be liable to pay any debts they may contract, nor sell or mortgage same, but always go in the male line free of any debt of theirs":—Held, that M. T. took an estate tail under A.'s will. Thompson, In re, 16 Ir. Ch. R. 228—C. A.

The general scope and object, as explained by the testator in his will, of a devise, sufficient in itself to pass the fee:—Held, to render it operative only to pass an estate tail.

A. had several great-nephews. His will was drawn up by himself while abroad. It contained the following passages: "I name and appoint my universal heir my great-nephew T., eldest son of my nephew W., to whom I give all my lands. The eldest son of my godson and great-nephew T., who may be living at his father's death, is always to be considered as heir to my estates." "If my godson and great-nephew T. should not leave any son at his death, I direct that his next brother and second son of my nephew succeed to my estate, and so on, in case of failure of male heirs to the third, fourth, &c." "The eldest great-nephew living always to be considered as my legitimate heir in case of failure of the other brothers, my express will and desire being that my estates do always descend in the male line":—Held, that the great-nephew T. should take an estate in tail male, and that that intent must prevail. Jenkins v. Hughes, 8 H. L. Cas. 571; 30 L. J., Ch. 870; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1043; 8 W. R. 667. And see Jenkins v. Clinton (Lord), 26 Beav. 108; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 887.

—— Where Gift over on Death of A. without Issue.]—A. having a son and two daughters, devised the estate in question to his son and his heirs, provided that, if the son should die before twenty-one, or without issue of his body, then it should go to the testator's two daughters. A. died, and the son lived to twenty-one, and made his will, and devised the estate to plaintiff. The court inclined that the son had but an estate tail, and so the devise to the daughters took effect, the son having died without issue. Helier v. Jennings, 1 Freem. 509; 1 Ld. Raym. 505. S. C., nom. Hilliard v. Jennings, Comyn. 90; 1 Free. C. C. 510; 12 Mod. 276; Carth. 514.

A. by will gives all his real and personal estate to trustees, in trust for the payment of his debts and legacies, and then to the use of his eldest son J. and his heirs for ever; and failing issue of that son, to his third son G. and his heirs for ever; and failing issue of that son, "then to the use of every other son that I shall or may have, and their heirs for ever; and failing issue male, then to the use of my issue female, and their heirs for ever":—Held, that according to the intention of the testator, his sons took successively an estate in tail male, and that upon the death of the eldest son, leaving only a daughter, the second took in the order of succession. Fitzgerald v. Leslie, 3 Bro. P. C. 154.

S. devised lands to his sons, to hold to them, their heirs and assigns, as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants, and he declared, that in case any of his sons should happen to die without any issue of his or their body or bodies lawfully begotten, the share of him or them so dying should go to, and be equally divided amongst the survivor or survivors of them in equal shares and proportions, to hold to them, their heirs and assigns, as tenants in common and not as joint tenants. S. charged a gross sum upon the lands in favour of his other children:—Held, that the words of the devise created an estate tail. Taylor v. Walker, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 723; 12 L. T. 793; 13 W. R. 986.

A father left and bequeathed his fee-simple estate at B. to his eldest son R., charged with 1,000*l.* each for his sons T. and J., subject to the restrictions mentioned in his will; he also left and bequeathed houses of a freehold tenure to each of his sons and daughters, and 1,000*l.* to each of his daughters on her marriage with consent, subject to the same conditions and restrictions which he had attached to any bequest in his will; he directed that none of his sons or daughters should alien or mortgage, or incumber any of the houses or lands to which they should become entitled under his will, but that on their death his or her portion of the property should go to his or her heirs, being issue lawfully begotten of him or her so dying, and so to continue in succession from father or mother to his or her heirs being issue lawfully begotten; and, in case any of his sons or daughters should die unmarried, and without issue, or on failure of lineal descendants of his or her lawful issue, he directed that his or her portion should go to and be equally divided among the survivors; by a codicil reciting the death of his youngest son J., since his will was made, and that his daughter P. had determined to become a nun, he charged 500*l.* on the lands of B. for his son T., in addition to the 1,000*l.* given by the will, and he left the residue of his estate at B. to R., and left both sons the full power he was invested with to enforce their claims, subject to the conditions and restrictions contained in his will:—Held, first, that the estates given by the will to the testator's children, whether in possession or in remainder, were estates tail. O'Hanlon v. Unthank, Ir. R. 7 Eq. 68.

Held, secondly, that under the codicil the eldest son, R., took an estate tail in B. Ib.

A testator by his will, dated in 1885, appointed executors, and continued as follows: "I give to my two sons . . . all my real and personal property . . . for their natural life, subject to the condition of paying" the legacies therein mentioned. "If my sons marry and have issue, I give to each of their heirs their father's share, and to their heirs for ever; if there is no male issue with either of my two sons, and there is female issue, then the father's share shall be divided between them share and share alike as tenants in common, and to their heirs for ever. Should either of my sons die without issue, then such son's share shall go to my other son and to his heirs for ever. Should both of my sons die without issue, then at the death of the last of them I give all my real property to the whole of my grandchildren share and share alike as tenants in common, and to their heirs for ever." He then directed that his two sons should pay out of his real property any payment due and owing thereon:—Held, that the two sons took the real estate in tail male. Score, In re, Tulman v. Score, 57 L. T. 40.

—— "Lawful Heirs."]—The words "lawful heirs":—Held, upon the context of a will, to mean "heirs of the body." Simpson v. Ashworth, 6 Beav. 412; 7 Jur. 410.

A devise to A. and his "lawful heirs" creates a fee, and not an estate tail. The addition "lawful" in no degree affects the word "heirs," for the qualification of being "lawful" is implied in the word "heirs."

Devise to testator's daughter "and her lawful heirs," "but in case she should not happen to leave any child," then to his nephew and his heirs:—Held, that the daughter took a fee simple with an executory devise over to the nephew. Mathews v. Gardiner, 17 Beav. 254.

—— "Right Heirs."]—Two testatrixes make mutual wills of property which they take as co-heiresses under the will of their uncle, and make devises in tail by apt words, with the ultimate gift as follows: "and for default of all such issue, to the right heirs of my grandfather Sir T. S., deceased (the father of my uncle Sir T. S.), by M. his second wife, also deceased, who was the daughter of Sir G. C., Knt., for ever," Upon the question whether by this clause a fee simple or an estate tail special passed:—Held, that an estate in special tail was created, and the plaintiff, by the disentailing deed executed by his wife, became seised in fee in the property in question. Wright v. Vernon, 2 Drew. 439; 2 W. R. 693.

—— "Heirs in Due Succession."] — The devise to J. W. and C., and their heirs in due succession as named, with usual limitations, gives an estate tail to the first taker, who, having a son born alive and since dead, is, as his personal representative, entitled to the personal estate absolutely. Stratford v. Powell, 1 Ball & B. 1.

"Son" Used with "Heir."]—Consideration of the meaning of the words "son" and "heir" used by a testator indiscriminately. Jenkins v. Hughes, 8 H. L. Cas. 571; 30 L. J., Ch. 870; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1043; 8 W. R. 667.

The word "son" in connection with the words "heir" and "issue":—Held, by force of context, to mean issue male.

The word "son" is quite as flexible as the word "heir," and can as easily be read "issue male" as the word "heir" can be turned into "son."

A testator appointed A. "his universal heir":—Held, that these words were sufficient, if uncontrolled, to give the fee simple. Jenkins v. Clinton (Lord), 26 Beav. 108; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 887.

Limitation to A. and his Issue.]—Devise of premises to A., and the issue of his body living at his death, and for want of such issue over, is an estate tail in A. Oxford (University) v. Clifton, 1 Eden, 473; Ambl. 385.

Testator gave real and personal estate to his wife for life, remainder "to and amongst his three children and their lawful issue, in such proportions, manner, and form, and subject to such charges, &c., as the wife should appoint":—Held, that the words gave estates tail to the three children in default of appointment, and that an appointment to a deceased child and the heirs of her body was invalid. Martin v. Swannell, 2 Beav. 249; 9 L. J., Ch. 174.

A testator devised real and personal estate to A. for life, with a direction to the executors, after A.'s death, to divide it amongst all her children and their lawful issue, share and share alike. There was a gift over of the leaseholds to other persons on a total failure of issue of the children:—Held, that the children took estates tail in the realty, and absolute interest in the personalty; and that cross-remainders were not to be implied in regard to the leaseholds. Beaver v. Nowell, 25 Beav. 551.

"Devise of real estate upon trust for my nephews and nieces and their respective lawful issue, and also the issue of F. (if any) and their several and respective heirs and assigns for ever as tenants in common":—Held, that the nephews and nieces took in tail. Campbell v. Bonskell, 27 Beav. 325.

E. by his will, made in 1872, devised all "right, title, and interest" in the lands of G. to his daughter M. "for her life and to her lawful-begotten issue; and in the event of her leaving none," he devised his "said property" to F., if living at the time of M.'s death; and if not, then to F.'s "eldest son lawfully begotten"; and in the event of F. "dying without leaving a son lawfully begotten," then he devised the "said property" to the second son of S., "late of India, if he has a second son; and if not, to his eldest son and to his heir." He also directed that whoever possessed his property should take the name of E., and that, in the event of M.'s "not leaving lawful issue," she might charge the "property" to a specified amount:—Held, that M. took an estate tail. Sandes v. Cooke, 21 L. R., Ir. 445—C. A.

—— A. and his Posterity.]—Devise to A. and his posterity. Lord Keeper thought this would create an estate tail only; but the Master of the Rolls being of opinion that such a devise would amount to a fee, Lord Keeper ordered precedents to be searched. Att.-Gen. v. Bamfield, 2 Freem. 268.

—— To A. for Life. Remainder to his Issue—Words of Explanation referring to "Issue."]—It is a rule of construction, particularly in wills, that where words are of an ambiguous signification, or are of such a nature as that they may be sometimes considered as words of purchase, and sometimes as words of limitation, the intent of the devisor must fix the meaning of those words. The word "issue" is of this nature. In deeds it is a word of purchase, and technically speaking it is so. The case of King v. Melling (2 Lev. 58) was the first case where it was taken and considered as a word of limitation. Where the issue cannot take but through the father, there, though the father has only an estate for life given him by express words, yet he must, by necessary implication to effectuate the intention of the devisor, take an estate tail to convey the estate to his issue. Devise to E. during his life only, and after the determination of that estate to the said E.'s lawful issue male, and the lawful issue male of such heirs, the eldest always of such sons of the said E. to be preferred before the youngest, according to seniority in age, and for want of such issue in E., remainder over. This gives E. an estate for life only. Mandeville v. Carrick, 3 Ridgw. P. C. 365.

By a will coming into operation prior to the Wills Act, the testator devised all the freehold estate, right, title, and interest, in certain lands to his wife for life subject to legacies; remainder to his son J. for life; remainder, after the decease of J., "to his first and every other son lawfully to be begotten according to seniority of age and priority of birth"; remainder to T. for life; remainder to his first and every other son and their heirs.

In a subsequent part of the will the testator bequeathed a sum of money, charged on the said lands, to his daughter M., and desired that, in case she should die unmarried, it should go and enure to J., if then living, or the heirs male of his body. In action brought by J. B., who was J.'s younger son, to recover possession of the lands on the title :—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to an immediate estate for his life, and accordingly to recover possession of the lands. Palmer v. Palmer, 18 L. R., Ir. 192—C. A.

A., by his will, left a certain leasehold for lives renewable for ever, and a leasehold for years, and his stock-in-trade, &c., to trustees, upon trust, for his daughter for life, and after her decease "to and amongst the issue of his said daughter, lawfully to be begotten, in such shares and proportions as his said daughter should by her last will and testament appoint, provided such child or children should arrive at the age of twenty-one years; and for want of such issue, or in case of the death of such issue, and of the death of his wife," then over :—Held, that the daughter took an estate for life only, and that the limitation over was good. Ryan v. Cowley, Ll. & G. t. Sugd. 7.

Devise of real and leasehold estates together to A. for life, and after his death to the male issue of the body of A., in equal shares and proportions, the leaseholds being the bulk of the property :—Held, that A. took an estate tail in the freeholds, and an estate for life only in the leaseholds. Jackson v. Calvert, 1 J. & H. 235.

Devise of "all my said manors, lands, tenements, and effects, real and personal," to one for life, and after his decease to his issue male, and the heirs male of such sons successively, one after another, with remainder to A., "and in default of his issue male, as before," then over to B., "and in default of his issue male, as before," then to the plaintiff :—A. held entitled for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail male; B. to take in remainder in the same manner, and that the plaintiff was entitled to the ultimate remainder in fee. Macnamara v. Wentworth (Lord), G. Cooper, 241.

A will contained a direction to trustees to convey to the testator's son in strict settlement if he should marry, followed by a declaration that if the son should die unmarried, or without lawful issue, the property should be limited and devolve upon A. for life, remainder to A.'s eldest son for life, remainder to his issue male, and in failure of such issue to A.'s other sons in succession, the eldest of such sons and his heirs male always to be preferred :—Held, that the trusts in favour of A. and her sons were not executory; and that, the testator's son having died unmarried, and A. having died subsequently, her eldest son was entitled in tail male. Nelley, In re, 26 W. R. 88.

A testator, who died in 1844, by his will dated in that year, devised his freehold and copyhold estates to trustees upon trust during the life of his son J. B. to receive the rents and profits thereof, and to pay the same unto J. B. and his assigns "during his life, or otherwise to permit him or them to receive the same"; and from and after the decease of J. B., the testator devised "the same to the sole use and behoof of the heirs of his body lawfully begotten"; and in case J. B. should die without leaving any issue of his body lawfully begotten, the testator devised the same unto his daughter E. G., her heirs and assigns for ever. By a disentailing assurance dated in 1845, J. B. granted all the freehold estates comprised in the residuary devise to R. H., discharged from all estates tail, to the use of J. B. in fee. In November, 1888, J. A., who claimed under J. B., agreed to sell certain freeholds which were included in and passed under the devise of freeholds contained in the will. Upon the investigation of the title by the purchaser's solicitors, a requisition was made that J. B. was equitable tenant for life only of the property, and that the persons entitled at J. B.'s death should concur in that conveyance. Upon a summons under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874 :—Held, that, under the will, J. B. took a legal estate tail in the freeholds, and that therefore a good title had been shewn. Allsop and Joy, In re, 61 L. T. 213.

A will made in 1820 contained the following clause : "I give and devise unto my eldest son Thomas all my real and freehold estate and all leases and leasehold premises now in my possession (subject to the payment of the rents and the performance of the covenants mentioned in the said indentures of leases) during the term of his natural life, and after his decease to his legitimate child or children (if there be any); but if he dies without issue, my will is, it may go unto my other son William during the term of his natural life, and afterwards to his legitimate child or children (if any); but if he should likewise die without issue, my will is, it may go to my daughter Mary and to her heirs and assigns for ever." The will then gave legacies to the second son and the daughters, with provisions for the daughters, to be paid in the first instance by Thomas, but to be repaid in part or in whole to him in certain events by his successor in the estate. Thomas died without issue :—Held, by Earl Cairns and Lords Blackburn and Fitzgerald, that, reading the whole will together, Thomas took an estate tail in the realty; contra, by the Earl of Selborne, L.C., and Lord Bramwell, that Thomas took an estate for life, with remainder to his children (if any) in fee as purchasers. Bowen v. Lewis, 54 L. J., Q. B. 55; 9 App. Cas. 890; 52 L. T. 189—H. L. (E.)

—— Words of Distribution added to "Issue."] —A testator devised all his freeholds to trustees, and he subsequently devised some freehold houses to A., to have and enjoy the same to the exclusion of her husband for life, and at her decease the same to go to her lawful issue, share and share alike; but if A. should depart this life without leaving lawful issue, then the said houses to go to the issue of W. :—Held, that A. took an estate tail. Heather v. Winder, 5 L. J., Ch. 41.

Gift of lands to "the issue of A., as three persons shall affix the same," does not of itself give to the issue anything beyond a life estate, but points only to a power of partition and distribution.

A testator, by will dated 1789, gave to his wife and granddaughter A., during their natural lives, all his freehold and leasehold lands, except the leaseholds therein mentioned. The testator then gave his mansion-house at Moat House to his wife for life, and declared that if A. should die leaving issue, he gave unto her said issue (after the decease of his said wife and issue) all his said freehold lands, to be distributed among them, share and share alike, as three gentlemen learned in the law, or a major part of them, should affix the same; but in case A. should die leaving no issue, and after the decease of his said wife, the testator gave the same lands to trustees to sell, and distribute the purchase-money among certain grandchildren therein mentioned:—Held, that A. took an estate tail in the premises at Moat House. Kavanagh v. Morland, Kay, 16; 2 Eq. R. 771; 23 L. J., Ch. 41; 18 Jur. 185; 2 W. R. 8.

Where in a devise there is a gift over on general failure of "issue," it is presumed that the word "issue" has been used by the testator as meaning "heirs of the body."

When the word "issue" is so employed, it is for the party seeking to give it a meaning other than that which it frequently bears, to shew clearly from the context of the will that the testator intended to give it a different meaning.

Devise in 1817 of a freehold estate for lives, renewable for ever, "to my son W. during his life, and after his death to his lawful issue, in such manner, shares, and proportions as he by deed or will shall appoint, and for want of such appointment then to his issue equally if more than one, and if only one child to said child, and on failure of issue of W." to J. Another estate, consisting of fee-simple lands, was devised in the same terms to another son, J.; and on failure of issue of J. it was to go to W. J. and W., before the birth of any child to W. (J. himself never married), joined in a recovery as to the lands devised to J., and to which W. afterwards succeeded in possession on J.'s death without issue. W. died leaving four children; he had not executed any appointment, but during his life disposed of both descriptions of lands to creditors for value:—Held, that under these devises each of the first devisees took an estate tail by implication.

The remainders were contingent, and therefore the recovery suffered as to the fee-simple lands operated as a bar to them, whether the first devisee did or did not take an estate tail. Roddy v. Fitzgerald, 6 H. L. Cas. 823.

Lands were devised to A., the testator's widow, for life, with remainder to trustees upon trusts "to pay and divide the rents unto and among all the brothers and sisters of the testator who should be living at the time of A.'s death, and to their issue male and female after the respective deceases of his said brothers and sisters for ever to be equally divided between them":—Held, that the words "issue male and female" were words of limitation, and that the children of a sister who died in the lifetime of A. took no interest. Tute v. Clarke, 1 Beav. 100; 8 L. J., Ch. 60.

Testator devised as follows: "I give and devise unto J. C. the lands of D., to hold to him during his natural life; and from and after his decease I give and devise the same unto the issue male and female of the said J. C., begotten or to be begotten upon the body of his present wife, C. C., to be divided between and amongst them in such manner, shares, and proportions as the said J. C. shall by his last will and testament limit and appoint:—Held, that J. C. took an estate for life only. Crozier v. Crozier, 2 Con. & L. 309; 3 Dr. & War. 353; 5 Ir. Eq. R. 415.

A testator, after reciting that he wished to dispose of all his worldly substance, and to settle and assure his several estates in the counties of C. and L. to the several uses and purposes therein set forth, devised the same unto his sister A. L. for life; and, on her death, he declared it to be his will and intention to settle and assure his said estates amongst certain families named, in the following "parts or proportions"; and he then gave to six persons one-sixth "part" each, and declared that the several six parts should remain to each of the said devisees for life, with remainder to the first and every other son of each of the said devisees, severally and successively in tail male, and in default of such issue, then with remainder to the issue female of each or any of the said devisees, to take as tenants in common and not as joint tenants; and that, in case of the decease of any of the said six devisees without issue male or female, either in the testator's lifetime or after his decease, then the one-sixth part or parts of those who should happen to die without issue should go to and augment the shares of such survivors, "so long as the entail intended to be thereby created should continue to subsist," and in case all his said estates should, under such limitations as aforesaid, vest in any one of his said devisees, or their heirs male, his will and intention was, that such person should take the name and arms of the testator:—Held, that under the above will, the six devisees took estates for life only, with remainder (after the express estates in tail male limited to their first and other sons) to their issue female in fee as purchasers. Shannon (Earl) v. Good, 15 L. R., Ir. 284—C. A.

Devise of a freehold estate to the testator's illegitimate son W., "to have and to hold during the term of his natural life, and in case he has issue then it is my will they should jointly inherit the same after his decease." In a subsequent part of the will the testator devised and bequeathed the rest and residue of his effects, real and personal, not thereinbefore disposed of, to his said son; but "in case my son W. dies without issue, then it is my will that the whole of my property be ascertained, and after bequeathing certain legacies and annuities, the rest and residue of my property, together with the before-mentioned annuities as they drop off, I give in equal proportions to A. and B.":—Held, that the illegitimate son took an estate tail in the real estate, and an absolute interest in the personalty. Ward v. Bevil, 1 Y. & J. 512; 30 R. R. 840.

—— Words of Limitation added to "Issue."]—Lands were devised in trust for A. for life, remainder in trust for her issue male and their issue male, in such manner as A. should appoint, and in default of such issue male then in trust for B. for life, remainder in trust for such of his issue male and their issue as he should appoint; and in default of such issue, then over:—Held, that B. took an estate tail. Irwin v. Cuff, Hayes, 30.

Devise to J. for life; remainder to his issue male, and to his and their heirs, share and share alike; and for want of such issue, to his issue female, and her and their heirs; remainder to J. K., his heirs and assigns, with a proviso that if J. K. or his issue, or any of them, shall alienate, mortgage, or incumber, or do any act to defeat the bequests, he or they shall pay, and he charges the premises with 2,000*l.* to such persons who should or ought to take next under the above limitations. J. had two daughters and no son, and he and his daughter suffered a recovery. Bill to be paid the 2,000*l.*:—Held, J. K. took an estate tail, and that the proviso was repugnant to the estate. King v. Burchell, Ambl. 379; 1 Eden, 424; 4 Term Rep. 296, n. See comments on this case in Woodhouse v. Herrick, infra, col. 1297.

A. devised to B. an estate during the life of herself and her husband, and after their decease to the lawful issue of B.'s body for ever :—Held, that B. took an estate tail. Griffiths v. Evan, 5 Beav. 241; 11 L. J., Ch. 219.

A testator, by a will made in 1838, devised his lands and all his estate and interest therein to trustees, to permit and suffer his four sons to receive the rents during their lives in equal shares, and after the decease of them, or either of them, leaving issue male lawfully begotten, then for such issue male, according to priority of birth and seniority of age; but in case of their decease without issue, or there being such, in case such male issue should die before attaining the age of twenty-one, then upon trust as to the share or shares of the one so dying, original as well as accruing share, for the survivor or survivors and their issue male, it being his intention that, in case of the decease of his sons without male issue, or there being such issue male, and they should die before attaining the age of twenty-one, then the share of the one so dying should go to the survivors and their issue :—Held, that the sons took estates tail in their respective shares. Warren v. Travers, Ir. R. 2 Eq. 455.

"Issue" may primâ facie be taken as equivalent to "heirs of the body"; but the court will lean more to cut down this effect of the former word, by applying it to other portions of the will, than the effect of the latter. If there be a gift to A. for life, with another gift over to his issue, with words of limitation superadded, the issue take as purchasers in fee, fee tail, &c., as the case may be; and therefore, where there has been a preceding gift to the issue of A. and their heirs, a subsequent gift over, upon A. dying without issue, operates nothing. Kavanagh v. Morland, supra. See also Hamilton v. West, ante, col. 1048; and Macnamara v. Wentworth (Lord), supra, col. 1291.

—— Words of Distribution and of Limitation added to "Issue."]—Testator devised as follows: "I give and devise all that my freehold lease in P., and all and every my chief rents in the town of M., and also my two warehouses in the said town, unto my two sons, H. I. and O., in moieties, as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants, in such manner and subject to such charges as hereinafter mentioned, that is to say, as to one moiety or equal half part thereof to my son H. I. for life, with remainders to his lawful issue, and their respective heirs, in such shares and proportions, and subject to such charges, as he the said H. I. shall by deed or will appoint; but in case my said son H. I. shall not marry and have issue who shall attain the age of twenty-one years, then to my son O. in fee :—Held, that H. I. took an estate for life in the moiety, with remainder to his children as tenants in common in fee. Lees v. Mosley, 1 Y. & C. 589.

Devise to A. for his life, and from and after his decease "unto all and every the issue of the body of the said A., share and share alike as tenants in common, and the heirs of such issue" :—Held, that A. took an estate for life only. Greenwood v. Rothwell, 6 Beav. 492. And see S. C. at law, 6 Scott (N.R.) 670; 5 Man. & G. 628; 12 L. J., C. P. 259.

G. G. devised his house in G—— Street, of which he was seised in fee, to his wife for life, with power for her to sell the same; and directed the purchase-money, or so much thereof as might be necessary, to be applied by his executors in payment of his debts, and the surplus thereof he gave to his wife for her own benefit. He also devised the lands of B., of which he was seised under a lease for lives renewable for ever, to his wife for life, subject to the payment of his debts, and after her decease he devised the house in G—— Street, in case the same should not be sold by his wife, and also his lands of B., to his son C. G. for life, subject to the payment of his debts, with power to sell the house in G—— Street, the purchase-money thereof to be applied as aforesaid, and the surplus thereof he gave to him for his own benefit; and after the death of his said son he gave all the premises to the use of the issue of his said son, with power by deed or will to appoint same to all or any of his children or issue, male or female; and in default of such appointment, then to the first and other sons in tail male, remainder to the issue female of his son, as tenants in common, and to their issue; and in default of such issue, to his two grand-daughters C. G. and A. G. as tenants in common for their lives with several limitations over. The testator declared his intention to be that every person who should come into possession of his estates, by virtue of the devises aforesaid, should hold the same as tenants for life only, and he gave them power of leasing and jointuring, and appointed his son and his daughter executor and executrix. C. G., the son, entered after the death of the testator's wife, was discharged as an insolvent, and died without issue :—Held, that C. G. took an estate for life only. Flood v. Digby, 1 Jones, 520.

A testator devised a house and premises to M. for life, and immediately after her decease he gave and devised the same unto the issue of her body, to hold to them and their heirs for ever, as tenants in common; but in case M. should die without leaving such issue, then over: —Held, that M. took as tenant for life, and not as tenant in tail, with remainder to her children as tenants in common in fee. Golder v. Cropp, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 562.

In wills of real estate "issue," unless there be something to shew a contrary intention, means "heirs of the body," and includes all descendants to all time. Woodhouse v. Herrick, 1 K. & J. 352; 3 Eq. R. 817; 24 L. J., Ch. 649; 3 W. R. 303.

Devise in 1806 of lands to F., and M., his wife, for their joint lives, and the life of the survivor; remainder to all their children "already or hereafter to be born for their joint lives, and the life of the survivor"; but all the sons to take testator's name and arms; "remainder to trustees to preserve contingent remainders"; but nevertheless upon trust to permit all the said children to receive the rents during their lives; "and from and after their several deceases unto and equally between all their issue male and female," and "for want of such issue" a devise over to another family :—Held, first, that the name and arms clause was not a condition precedent; secondly, that "already or hereafter to be born," like "born or to be born," denoted children living at testator's death; thirdly, that such children took as tenants in common in tail, with cross-remainders between them in tail, notwithstanding the limitation to the issue was in terms to them as tenants in common, and the limitation over was "in default of such issue," and not of issue absolutely. Ib.

King v. Burchell (supra, cols. 1294–5) remarked on, and Montgomery v. Montgomery (supra, col. 1283) explained. In the latter Lord St. Leonards did not disapprove of the rejection in a devise like the present of creating a tenancy in common, but of the cases where, although words of limitation were superadded to the word "issue," as in a devise to one for life, with the remainder to his issue and their heirs, it has still been held that the issue took not as purchasers, but by descent through the first taker. Ib.

Devise to trustees "upon trust for the children of her niece during their lives, and after the decease of the survivor then for all and every the lawful issue, male and female, of such of the children of her niece as should be living at her decease as tenants in common, and the heirs of the body of all and every of the issue of the said children; and on the death and failure of heirs of the body of any one or more of the issue of the said children, as well the original as the accrued share of him so dying, and of whom there shall be such, shall be in trust for the survivors or survivor of them as tenants in common, and for the heirs of the body of such surviving issue": — Held, that the rule in Shelley's Case did not apply, and that the children of the testatrix's niece took estates for life only, with remainder to their "issue" as purchasers.

Superadded words following "issue," or other words having no technically defined meaning, tend more strongly to shew an intention that they should take as purchasers than when superadded to words having a technically defined meaning, such as the words "heirs" or "heirs of the body." Parker v. Clark, 3 Sm. & G. 161; 3 W. R. 471. Affirmed, 6 De G. M. & G. 104; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 335. And see Colclough v. Colclough, 4 Ir. R. Eq. 263.

A testator by his will, dated 1860, disposed of all his real estate, subject to an interest therein to his wife for life, in favour of his six nephews, "and all my right, title, and interest to and in the same and every part thereof, to be equally divided amongst my six nephews, share and share alike, and their issue after them, to and for their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns." The question arose whether the word "issue," with the words of limitation superadded, operated to give an estate tail, or whether the issue took as purchasers: — Held, that the words in question created an estate tail in the six nephews; that the addition of a limitation to the heirs general of the issue would not prevent the word "issue" from operating to give an estate tail as a word of limitation; that in this case the words "equally divided" made the estate divisible into six shares, and there were no words to subdivide those shares, and consequently that the subsequent words "heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns," must be rejected. Williams v. Williams, 51 L. T. 779; 33 W. R. 118.

A testator who held under a lease for lives renewable for ever, by his will made before the Wills Act, 1837, devised all his estate in the lands to trustees upon trust for the maintenance of his son G. S. R. during his minority. He directed that the residue of the rents should accumulate for G. S. R. till he married or attained twenty-one, when the accumulations should be handed over to him; and as to the said lands, the testator declared that they were given to the trustees on trust for accumulation of the rents as aforesaid, and, in the next place, to suffer G. S. R. to take the rents of the said lands for life, and after his death then to the issue of G. S. R. lawfully begotten, in such shares and proportions as G. S. R. should appoint, and, for want of appointment, the said lands to go to and among all the lawful issue of G. S. R. living at the time of his death, share and share alike, and if but one child living, then the whole of the lands to go to such only child, his or her heirs or assigns, for ever. If G. S. R. should die without leaving issue, the testator devised the lands over to E. R. and T. R. in fee. G. S. R. attained twenty-one and obtained a fee-farm grant of the said lands in which it was recited that G. S. R. was tenant for life:—Held, that G. S. R. took an estate for life only in the lands, with remainder to his issue living at his death in quasi-fee, and that on his death without issue E. R. and T. R. became entitled to the lands. Rotherham v. Rotherham, 13 L. R., Ir. 429—C. A.

—— To A. for Life, and then to his Children in Priority—Gift over on Death of A. unmarried.]—A testatrix left and bequeathed "all the property, whether in lands or otherwise," which she might die possessed of, to trustees, their heirs and assigns, in trust, "to the use of my nephew W. S. for his life use, and then to his children in priority in case he marries, the sons to inherit before the daughters; but in case the said W. S., my nephew, should die unmarried, I leave and bequeath for the use of my cousin M., her heirs and assigns, for ever." The will was made in 1856. W. S. married in 1865, and had a son J. S. and a daughter B. The testatrix died in 1894, M. having predeceased her. The testatrix died possessed of real and personal estate:—Held, that W. S. took an estate for life in the real and personal estate of the testatrix, and that J. S. took an estate tail in the realty and an absolute interest in the personalty subject to the life estate of his father W. S.; and that B. was entitled to an estate tail in remainder in the real estate after the estate tail of J. S., with an ultimate remainder to the right heirs of the testatrix. Savile v. Savile, [1896] 1 Ir. R. 249.

Quasi-Estate Tail—Personalty in Trust for A. for her Separate Use for Ninety-nine Years, with Remainder for her and Heirs of her Body.]—Testator having devised residue of his real and personal estate to trustees, upon trust, within six months after his decease, to raise 34,000*l.*, and having out of this sum made a provision for maintenance of his two daughters, E. and S., during their minorities, directed that a moiety of interest arising from it should be paid to each daughter on her attaining twenty-one or marrying, for her separate use, during the term of ninety-nine years, if she so long lived; and in case either of them died leaving no child or issue of a child, the whole of interest should be paid to survivor for her separate use, during remainder of term, if she so long lived; and subject to these and some contingent gifts, which never took effect, he bequeathed the 34,000*l.* to his trustees, upon trust, after decease of his daughters, for such person or persons as should, under subsequent limitations, be entitled to residue of his real and personal estate. In these subsequent limitations, trustees were directed, upon each of his daughters attaining twenty-one or marriage, to yield up to her a moiety of residue of his real and personal estates, to hold same to her and heirs of her body, with remainder to other daughter and heirs of her body, remainder to his own right heirs. In suit instituted on behalf of the infant daughters for administration of testator's estate, a decree was made for raising 34,000*l.*, and personal estate proving insufficient, part of it was raised by sale of portions of real estate; afterwards S., with concurrence of the heir of surviving trustee, suffered a recovery of her moiety of lands to use of herself in fee, tenant to præcipe being made, and uses of recovery declared by bargain and sale, in which both S. and heir of surviving trustee were conveying parties, but which was not enrolled within due time. Subsequently E. suffered a recovery of her moiety of lands. S. died, leaving children, having received out of court moiety of principal of that part of charge which had been raised, but without having taken any steps to have remainder of it raised. Semble, that E. and S. did not take quasi-estates tail in sum of 34,000*l.*:—Held, that if E. and S. took quasi-estates tail in 34,000*l.* so as to be entitled to it absolutely, yet, under circumstances of case, unraised portion of S.'s moiety of charge was extinguished, and unsold estates entirely exonerated; that an equitable recovery is valid, though tenant to præcipe is made by bargain and sale not enrolled within due time. Effect, as to extinguishment of a charge, of conduct of parties who are interested both in money and in lands out of which money is to be raised. Smith v. Frederick, 1 Russ. 174.

Devise to Several in Succession—Successive Estates Tail.]—When there is a devise to several in succession in words sufficient to pass the fee, or the whole interest of the testator in freeholds, the court will, in order to give effect to the general intent, construe the gift as of successive estates in tail. This general intent must be ascertained from the whole will, and a name clause must be taken as an important element in ascertaining this intent. Studdert v. Von Steiglitz, 23 L. R., Ir. 564.

W. B., being seised in fee of lands, called the C. estate, and seised as of freehold of other lands, called the S. estate, by his will, dated the 24th May, 1854, left his C. estate to his nephew, S. B., and after him to his heirs male; and in failure of such heirs male, to his nephew J. B., with remainder to his heirs male, and in failure of heirs male on the part of his nephews aforesaid, he left the estate to the sons in succession of his eldest sister, L. S. He left his property in S. to his wife, A. B., for her life, and at her decease to his nephew, S. B., aforesaid, and should he (the said S.) die without male issue, the testator left the property to the sons of his sister L. S., as above mentioned, they taking in both these cases the name of B. The testator bequeathed certain chattels as heirlooms to the said S. B. and his heirs, as above mentioned, and certain other chattels to him as heirlooms, to be handed down in like manner. There was, as the court held, no residuary devise. L. S. had four sons, two of whom died in the lifetime of the testator, without having been married:—Held, that the two surviving sons of L. S. took successive estates in tail, or quasi-tail, in the S. estate as purchasers. Ib.

c. Absolute Interests in Personalty.

i. By Gift of Income.

General Rule.]—Indefinite bequest of the dividends gives the absolute property of stock. Page v. Leapingwell, 18 Ves. 463; 11 R. R. 234.

An unlimited gift of the produce of anything, as the interest of stock, gives the principal also. Stretch v. Watkins, 1 Madd. 253.

On construction of will:—Held, that the capital of the residue passed by implication, though the interest and dividends only were expressly given. Phillips v. Chamberlaine, 4 Ves. 51.

General gift of income, arising from personal property, is equivalent to general gift of property itself, and it makes no difference whether it be given through trustee, or to legatee direct. Haig v. Swiney, 1 Sim. & S. 487; 2 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 26.

Construction of an obscure will, first, that the income only, not the capital, was disposed of; secondly, that the disposition was in favour of the younger children, excluding the eldest. A legacy, not as an independent bequest, with a time for payment or distribution, appointed afterwards, but the time annexed to the substance of the bequest; the interests do not vest before that period. Sansbury v. Read, 12 Ves. 75.

State of circumstances under which the capital of a legacy, the interest of which was given to one for life, was held, on his death, not to devolve as on an intestacy of the testator, but to form part of the personal estate of the legatee for life. Johnson v. Johnson, 11 Jur. 862.

Testator, after various directions, embracing almost every particular of his property (except cash in the house and at his banker's), directed certain leaseholds to be sold, and the produce to be invested in stock; the interest and dividends to be paid to his wife for life. He then directed the sale of other property, to be invested in like manner, and the interest and dividends thereof, and also of all such stock as should, at the time of his decease, be standing in his name, to be paid to his wife for life; and at her decease "all interest and dividends" were to be accumulated and added to such stock, which stock, together with all accumulations, he gave to his nephew, J. C. There was no residuary bequest:—Held, as between J. C. and the next of kin, that the gift to J. C. carried the whole proceeds of the leasehold estates. Curtois, In re, 22 L. J., Ch. 1045; 17 Jur. 852.

Testator bequeathed the dividends, &c., of all stocks he should be entitled to, at the time of his decease, in the public funds. He had 10,000*l.* consols at his death:—Held, that this was a specific bequest of that sum. Stephenson v. Dowson, 3 Beav. 342; 10 L. J., Ch. 93; 4 Jur. 1152.

Bequest to Lady C., a widow of Sir N. C., considered valid, although at the date of the will she had married a second husband, R., and the fact of that marriage was unknown to the testator, and she continued to call herself Lady C. The bequest was the bequest of a fund to trustees to pay to her the dividends so long as she should continue single and unmarried; and if she should anticipate such dividends, then the fund to become part of the testator's residue:—Held, that she took an absolute interest in the fund. Rishton v. Cobb, 9 Sim. 615; 5 Myl. & Cr. 145; 9 L. J., Ch. 110; 4 Jur. 261.

—— Rents of Leaseholds.]—A testatrix gave all her leasehold and personal estate to trustees, upon trust, to pay the rents and profits of two specified houses to A., and she gave the sum of 100*l.* bank stock to B. when he attained the age of twenty-one years, and in case of his death to C. At her death the testatrix had bank annuities, but no bank stock:—Held, that A. took an absolute interest in the leaseholds. Bignall v. Rose, 24 L. J., Ch. 27; 3 W. R. 77.

Testator by his will gave a legacy of 100*l.* to his wife "for her present wants" and appointed her sole executrix. And he gave, devised, and bequeathed the rents and income of all his freehold, copyhold, and leasehold properties at B., and all the rents and profits of his leasehold houses in P., to his wife. He also directed that she should be entitled to all other the income of his estate and effects, real or personal, and that any moneys which might be in his house or in the hands of his said wife might be invested in her name in consols, and the interest to arise therefrom might be retained or received by his said wife as part of his said income. He desired that his wife "should be at liberty out of the proceeds of the surplus residuary estate to erect any monument to my memory which she may please, not exceeding the sum of 300*l.*" He also gave and bequeathed to his wife all his household furniture, goods and effects in his house at E., and desired that she should "have the free use and occupation of his dwelling-house at E.," and directed that an inventory of such furniture and effects should be made. The court held, that there was no indication sufficiently clear to shew that the widow took only a life interest, and therefore that she took an absolute interest in all the property:—Held, on appeal, (1) that there is a well-settled rule that a gift of income carries the corpus unless there are in the will sufficient words to cut down the gift to a life interest only; (2) that the rule is merely one of construction, to be read only with reference to other parts of the will, and applicable only when the testator has himself given no rule for reading his will; (3) that there being nothing to cut down the gift of the property at B. and P. and the furniture, the widow was absolutely entitled to those properties; (4) that there was sufficient in the will to cut down the gift of the E. property and the residuary real and personal property to a life interest only. Coward, In re, Coward v. Larkman, 60 L. T. 1—H. L. (E.)

—— Where Income Given for separate Use.]—Testator gave the produce of his share and interest in his co-partnership business to his wife, and also the interest of the capital sum of 1,000*l.*, for her sole use and benefit, and free from the debts or control of any husband she might marry, and her receipt to be a sufficient discharge to his executors; and he gave all his furniture, plate, &c., to her absolutely:—Held, that the gift of the interest of the 1,000*l.* passed the principal. Humphrey v. Humphrey, 1 Sim. (N.S.) 536; 20 L. J., Ch. 425.

Bequest to a woman of a fund, with the interest thereon, to be vested in trustees, the income arising therefrom to be for her sole use and benefit, vests the capital for her separate use. Adamson v. Armitage, 19 Ves. 416; G. Cooper, 283.

Bequest of the produce of a fund is a gift of that produce in perpetuity, and consequently of the fund itself, unless not the intention on the face of the will. Ib., 418.

Bequest to the testator's wife of "200*l.* per year, being part of the moneys I now have in bank security, entirely for her own use and disposal," together with all his household furniture and effects, interests for life being expressly given to other persons, an absolute interest to the wife in bank stock sufficient to produce 200*l.* a year, not a mere annuity for her life. Rawlings v. Jennings, 13 Ves. 39; 9 R. R. 137.

A testator bequeathed leaseholds, upon trust to pay the rents to his daughter, a married woman, for her separate use; but if she should die before the expiration of the lease, then upon trust to invest the rents and to allow the same to accumulate for the benefit of the children of the daughter living at her death. Other leaseholds were bequeathed in favour of the testator's two sons and their respective children in the same terms, except that the limitation as to separate use was omitted. The daughter survived the testator, but she died before the expiration of the lease without ever having had a child:—Held, that upon the true construction of the will the daughter took an absolute interest in the first-mentioned leaseholds. Watkins v. Weston, 3 De G. J. & S. 434; 32 L. J., Ch. 609; 8 L. T. 406; 11 W. R. 408. Affirming 32 Beav. 238.

A testator, after bequeathing certain stock and other property for the benefit of his children, directed the trustee of his will to pay to his daughter the income of her share; and directed that neither the principal nor interest should be subject to the control or debts of any husband she married, but should stand under the direction of the court of chancery, subject to her will only. There was no gift over, and the daughter was unmarried at the testator's death:—Held, that the words of the will constituted an absolute bequest to the daughter for her separate use. Tawney v. Ward, 1 Beav. 563; 8 L. J., Ch. 319.

—— Where Prior Life Interest Given.]—T., by will, gave to his wife the dividends which might become due and payable in her lifetime in certain stock standing in her name, the name of D., and the testator, to which the latter would be entitled on D.'s death; with a gift of all subsequent dividends after the wife's death to certain charities, "for ever." There were other gifts in like words, with an ultimate bequest to trustees on certain trusts. The testator survived D., and transferred the stock into his own name; the wife died; and on the questions—first, whether that was an ademption; secondly, whether the gift of the dividends carried the stock; and, thirdly, whether there was an apportionment of the dividends up to the day of the wife's death:—Held, that there was no ademption; that there was a gift of the stock; and that there was an apportionment, inasmuch as under the Apportionment Act there was no express stipulation to the contrary. Tyrrell v. Clarke, 2 Eq. R. 333; 2 Drew. 86; 23 L. J., Ch. 283; 18 Jur. 323; 2 W. R. 152.

Bequest of interest of residue of personal estate, after payment of debts, &c., to A. for life, and after her decease to C.; passes an absolute interest to C., subject to prior life interest of A. Clough v. Wynne. 2 Madd. 188.

—— Where Subsequent Legacies made Payable on Death of Person entitled to Income.]—A testatrix by her will directed her executors to pay to M. S. or her assigns, or permit her to receive the income of her residuary personal estate, after payment of debts, and she then bequeathed certain legacies payable after the death of M. S. By a second codicil she gave a legacy payable after the death of M. S.:—Held, that M. S. took an absolute interest in the residuary personal estate. Jenings v. Baily, 17 Beav. 118; 22 L. J., Ch. 977; 17 Jur. 433.

—— Where Gift Over.] — Testatrix, being possessed of 3½ per cents. and long annuities, bequeathed to S. B., "if living, the interest of my property in the 3½ per cents.; if not living at my decease," the testatrix bequeathed the interest to E. S. for life, and, in case of her leaving children, directed the property to be divided between them at her decease; and subsequently directed that if E. S. left no child the capital should return to the children of J. B. As to her long annuities, the testatrix bequeathed the interest thereof to S. F. and M. S. jointly for their natural lives, and in case of "one or both their deaths before mine" the testatrix bequeathed the interest of the long annuities to J. B. for life, and after his death to A. E. B. and S. J. B. equally. S. B., S. F. and M. S. survived the testatrix. On the question as to who were entitled to the 3½ per cents. and the long annuities:—Held, that S. B. took the 3½ per cents. absolutely, and that the gift over only took effect in case he died in the lifetime of the testatrix:—Held, also, by the M.R., that S. F. and M. S. having survived the testatrix, she died intestate as to the long annuities, subject to the life estates to S. F. and M. S., and that her next of kin were entitled to them. But held, on appeal, that A. E. B. and S. J. B. were entitled to the long annuities from the death of J. B. Boosey v. Gardner, 18 Beav. 471.

Exception where Contrary Intention Shown.]—Where there are words in a gift of interest which clearly shows the testator intended to make a distinction between the capital and interest, and the disposition of them separate and distinct, a gift of interest will not pass the capital. Baker v. Smith, 1 W. R. 490.

Indefinite bequest of the income of personalty:—Held, not to carry the corpus. Buchanan v. Harrison, 1 J. & H. 662; 31 L. J., Ch. 74; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 965; 10 W. R. 118.

A testator gave the interest of his residuary estate to his widow for her life, and directed that in case it should not be sufficient she should be at liberty to go to the principal. The residue only produced 30*l.* a year, and the widow claimed the whole fund, but stated that 60*l.* a year was the least she required for her maintenance. She died before her claim was disposed of. Upon a petition by her administrator:—Held, that she was entitled to have 60*l.* a year made up to her out of the principal, and that if in her ordinary expenditure she left any debts they must also be satisfied. Pedrotti's Will, In re, 27 Beav. 583; 29 L. J., Ch. 92; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 187; 1 L. T. 390.

—— By Gift until Bankruptcy or Alienation.]—A bequest of the income of a fund until bankruptcy or alienation does not carry the corpus of the fund, but gives only a life interest, determinable on bankruptcy or alienation. Banks v. Braithwaite, 1 N. R. 306; 32 L. J., Ch. 198; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 294; 8 L. T. 80; 11 W. R. 298.

—— By Gift of Income followed by Settlement of Residue.]—Testator gave the residue of his real and personal estate to trustees, upon trust to pay the dividends of 1,500*l.* consols to S. T. for life, and after her death to divide the dividends of the said sum between his wife E. B. and his niece F. R., and the survivor of them. He then gave all the residue of his freehold, copyhold, and leasehold estates, and all other his estate and effects, upon trust to pay the dividends, interest, rents, profits, and annual produce to his wife for life, with remainder to his niece F. R. for life, with remainders over. The testator died, being at the time possessed of leaseholds, shares in canal and insurance companies, and Dutch bonds; and F. R., after surviving the testator, died in the lifetime of S. T.:—Held, that, on the death of S. T., E. B., the testator's widow, became entitled, not to the capital of the 1,500*l.* consols, but to a life interest only in the dividends thereof. Blann v. Bell, 2 De G. M. & G. 775; 22 L. J., Ch. 236; 16 Jur. 1103.

ii. By Words which would give Fee Simple or Fee Tail in Realty.

Principles.]—A limitation of personal property, after a disposition that would raise an entail express or implied in real estate, is void; and the person who would be tenant in tail takes the absolute interest. Chandless v. Price, 3 Ves. 99.

Words in a will which, in the case of a freehold estate, would have given to devisee either a fee tail or a fee simple, will, in the case of legatees of leasehold, give to them an absolute interest. Harrison, Ex parte, Commercial Ry., In re, 3 Y. & C. 275; 8 L. J., Ex. Eq. 28; 2 Jur. 1038.

By Limitation to A. and his Heirs.]—A testator, by will made in 1820, devised and bequeathed freeholds and leaseholds together to his daughter S. for life, remainder to her first and other sons successively in tail, remainder to her daughters as tenants in common in tail, and "in case of default of issue" of S., to "the right heirs" of S. "for ever." S. having married and died a widow, without having had a child:—Held, that she took an absolute interest in the leaseholds. Comfort v. Brown, 48 L. J., Ch. 318; 10 Ch. D. 146; 27 W. R. 226.

A testator gives all his property to his daughter and her heirs, directing, at their decease, their debts, &c., to be paid; he then gives various legacies, and bequeaths the residue to his nephew:—Held, that the daughter takes the personal property absolutely, and an estate tail in the real property, and that the legacies were meant to be given only upon the failure of heirs of the body of that daughter. Widdison v. Hodgkin, 2 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 9.

Devise of 100*l.*, and 50*l.* per annum to A. and his heirs, and if A. die without heirs then to a charity; A. dies without issue, living the testator: the will void as to the whole, and the charity cannot take. Att.-Gen. v. Gill, 2 P. Wms. 369.

Bequest of 2,000*l.* to A., and in the event of her death without children to her heirs, the nearest relations of her great-aunt A. :—Held, that A. took an absolute interest. Yearwood v. Yearwood, 9 Beav. 276; 10 Jur. 151.

—— To A. and his Heirs Male.]—Bequest to A., and his heirs male, equally to be divided among them, share and share alike, construed to A. for life, remainder to his children equally. Wilson v. Vansittart, Ambl. 562.

—— To A. or his Heirs or Assigns.]—A testator devised and bequeathed real and personal estate to trustees, upon trust for his wife for life, and after her decease to sell and divide the proceeds among his five children (whom he named), or their heirs or assigns. One of the children died in the lifetime of the testator's widow, leaving her husband and a son and a daughter surviving. The husband took out letters of administration to her estate, and on the death of the testator's widow claimed one-fifth of the produce of part of the real estate, which had been paid into court :—Held, that the gift to the five children was absolute, and that the share of the deceased daughter belonged to her husband as her administrator. Walton, In re, 8 De G. M. & G. 173; 25 L. J., Ch. 569; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 363; 4 W. R. 416.

A testator by his will devises all his real estate to his executors for the purposes thereinafter stated; and after empowering them either to continue his business or to dispose of it, he gives the profits of it in the one case, and the interest of the moneys arising from the sale in the other, and also the interest of the securities on which the rest of his capital should be invested, to his daughter for life, her receipt to be a discharge. He then gives her the rents and profits of all his real estates during her life; and at her decease he devises and bequeaths to her heirs all his estates real and personal as tenants in common; if his daughter has but one child, such child is to possess the whole; but if she should die without issue, then at her decease he gives certain legacies. He next directs all his goods and effects to be sold, his said legacies to be paid, and a sum invested sufficient to purchase 150*l.* a year, which is to be paid to the husband of the daughter. He then orders his real estates to be sold at the decease of his daughter, or at the decease of his brothers and sisters, according as a particular event may turn out; and he gives over to certain persons all the residue of his personal estate, including the proceeds of the sale of the real estates when sold, and the rents of them until they are sold. The daughter died without having had issue :—Held, the daughter took an estate tail in the freeholds; that the real and personal estate being given over together, she took the personal estate absolutely; that the annuity of 150*l.* was charged both on the real and personal estate. Dunk v. Fenner, 2 Russ. & M. 557.

—— To A. and the Heirs of his Body.]—Devise of personalty to B., and the lawful heirs of his body, if he should have any; but if he should die without lawful heirs, 1,000*l.* to S., and 500*l.* to C., the contingencies are too remote. Att.-Gen. v. Hird, 1 Bro. C. C. 170.

On a bequest of a sum of money to each of four persons named, with a proviso, "should it so happen that the whole should die without heirs, the sum is ultimately to revert to the estate of the family, but should all or any of them die with heirs of their body, the sum of which they severally died possessed is to be continued to their heirs for ever, and not to revert to the estate" :—Held, that the legatees took absolutely. Brooks v. Lake (Lord), 10 Jur. 485.

Devise of a personal estate to a trustee in trust for testator's only son, and the heirs of his body, and if his son die during his minority, and without issue, then to A., and makes his son executor, and B. executor in trust for his son during the son's minority. The son lives to eighteen, and then dies without issue; the personal estate shall go to the executor of the son, and not to A. Whitmore v. Weld, 1 Vern. 326; 2 Ch. Rep. 383; 3 Ch. Cas. 167.

Testator having devised residue of his real and personal estate to trustees, upon trust, within six months after his decease, to raise 34,000*l.*, and having out of this sum made a provision for maintenance of his two daughters, E. and S., during their minorities, directed that a moiety of interest arising from it should be paid to each daughter on her attaining twenty-one, or marrying, for her separate use, during the term of ninety-nine years, if she so long lived; and in case either of them died, leaving no child or issue of a child, the whole of interest should be paid to survivor for her separate use, during remainder of term, if she so long lived; and subject to these and some contingent gifts, which never took effect, he bequeathed the 34,000*l.* to his trustees, upon trust, after decease of his daughters, for such person or persons as should, under subsequent limitations, be entitled to residue of his real and personal estate. In these subsequent limitations, trustees were directed, upon each of his daughters attaining twenty-one or marriage, to yield up to her a moiety of residue of his real and personal estates, to hold same to her and heirs of her body, with remainder to other daughter and heirs of her body, remainder to his own right heirs. In suit instituted on behalf of the infant daughters, for administration of testator's estate, a decree was made for raising 34,000*l.*, and personal estate proving insufficient, part of it was raised by sale of portions of real estate; afterwards S., with concurrence of the heir of surviving trustee, suffered a recovery of her moiety of lands to use of herself in fee, tenant to præcipe being made, and uses of recovery declared by bargain and sale, in which both S. and heir of surviving trustee were conveying parties, but which was not inrolled within due time. Subsequently E. suffered a recovery of her moiety of lands. S. died, leaving children, having received out of court moiety of principal of that part of charge which had been raised, but without having taken any steps to have remainder of it raised. Semble, that E. and S. did not take quasi estates tail in sum of 34,000*l.*: —Held, that if E. and S. took quasi estates tail in 34,000*l.* so as to entitle to it absolutely, yet under circumstances of case, unraised portion of S.'s moiety of charge was extinguished, and unsold estates entirely exonerated; that an equitable recovery is valid, though tenant to præcipe is made by bargain and sale not inrolled within due time. Effect, as to extinguishment of a charge, of conduct of parties who are interested both in money and in lands out of which money is to be raised. Smith v. Frederick, 1 Russ. 174.

Devise and bequest to A. and the heirs of his body, with limitations over in case of no such heirs :—Held, an estate in tail in real estates, and an absolute interest in personal, the limitations over being void ; but if expressed, if he leaves no such heirs, it would be good as confined to the time of the death, and not after an indefinite failure of issue. Crooke v. De Vandes, 9 Ves. 197.

A testator bequeathed the interest of his residuary personalty to William and the heirs of his body in equal proportions, subject to a life annuity in favour of Sarah ; and in the event of William dying during the life of Sarah, without leaving heirs of his body, the testator desired that Sarah should receive the whole interest of such residue for her life, and at the decease of the aforesaid Sarah, William, and the heirs of his body, he desired that such residue might be allowed to accumulate until the interest thereof might be sufficient to support two persons for ever in a certain hospital :—Held, that the testator's intention was to give the property successive, i.e. not to give it to Sarah or the hospital so long as the heirs of the body of William should be unexhausted, and that, as a bequest in such terms was unlawful, the gift must be construed as a gift to William absolutely. Barker's Trusts, In re, 52 L. J., Ch. 565 ; 48 L. T. 573.

—— To A. and his Children.]—A testator left all his property to his "brother B. and his children in succession" :—Held, that this gave to B. an estate tail in the realty, and an absolute interest in the personalty. Tyrone (Earl) v. Waterford (Marquis), 1 De G. F. & J. 613 ; 29 L. J., Ch. 486 ; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 567 ; 8 W. R. 454.

The mortgagee for a term of years, being in possession, devises the premises as an estate of inheritance to three several persons for life successively, with remainder to their first and other sons, remainders over ; the remainders over are void as tending to a perpetuity. Brett v. Sawbridge, 3 Bro. P. C. 141.

Testator bequeathed two leasehold houses to his sisters A. and B. during their natural lives, they keeping them in good repair, and at their death to be disposed of as follows : One house to descend to his sister A.'s eldest son or daughter, and the next heirs male or female, until the expiration of the lease, and the other house in like manner to B.'s eldest son or daughter, &c. :—Held, that A. and B. took an absolute interest in the leaseholds. Quære, whether, if it had been a devise of freehold, the words would have conferred a fee. Harrison, Ex parte, Commercial Ry. Act, In re, 3 Y. & C. 275 ; 8 L. J., Ex. Eq. 28 ; 2 Jur. 1038.

A testator gave all his real and personal estate to trustees in trust, as to one moiety for A. for life, remainder to her children, and as to the other moiety for B. and her children, in like manner. By a codicil, he declared that his estates should not be divided equally between A. and B. but in proportion to the number of their children, and he left A. and B. jointly his residuary legatees. By another codicil, in order to prevent disputes, he gave one of his estates to A. and her heirs, and the other to B. and her heirs ; the number of their children nearly equalising the value of the two estates. In a subsequent codicil, he mentioned that he had bequeathed the first estate to A. and her children, and the second to B. and her children :—Held, that A. and B. were entitled to these estates for their lives only, with remainders to their children, and that they were not entitled to the personal estate absolutely, but for their lives only, with remainders to their children, and in shares proportioned to the number of their children. Lushington v. Sewell, 1 Sim. 435.

—— To A., and B., and C., and their Children.]—A testator bequeathed the interest of certain personal property to his wife for life ; "at her death one half of the said property I give to my son G. M., the remaining half to be equally divided between my two daughters, and at their deaths such shares to be equally divided among their children respectively" :—Held, that the son took an absolute interest in the moiety. Scrivener v. Smith, 2 De G. M. & G. 399.

—— To A. and his Offspring.]—A bequest of personalty to his offspring confers upon A. an absolute interest. Young v. Davies, 32 L. J., Ch. 372 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 399 ; 11 W. R. 452.

—— To A. for Life, Remainder to his Heirs.]—A testator, as to all his real and personal estate, directed that after his wife's death his son J. and daughter A. should "receive its income, and after their decease their heirs" :—Held, that they took a joint estate in fee in the realty, and a joint interest for their lives in the personalty. Herrick v. Franklin, 37 L. J., Ch. 908 ; L. R. 6 Eq. 593.

A testator by his will, dated in 1885, appointed executors, and continued as follows : "I give to my two sons . . . all my real and personal property . . . for their natural life, subject to the condition of paying" the legacies therein mentioned. "If my sons marry and have issue, I give to each of their heirs their father's share, and to their heirs for ever ; if there is no male issue with either of my two sons and there is female issue, then the father's share shall be divided between them, share and share alike as tenants in common, and to their heirs for ever. Should either of my sons die without issue, then such son's share shall go to my other son and to his heirs for ever. Should both of my sons die without issue, then at the death of the last of them, I give all my real property to the whole of my grandchildren, share and share alike as tenants in common, and to their heirs for ever." He then directed that his two sons should pay out of his real property any payment due and owing thereon :—Held, that the two sons took the personalty absolutely, subject to the conditions mentioned in the will. Score, In re, Tolman v. Score, 57 L. T. 40.

A testatrix bequeathed a sum of money to "M. for the term of her life and to her heirs after her" ; and in case M. should not survive her, the testatrix bequeathed the said sum to E. for her life ; and at the death of E. to certain other persons :—Held, that the legacy did not upon the death of M., who survived the testatrix, pass to her heir-at-law as a persona designata, but that M. took the bequest absolutely. Atkinson v. L'Estrange, 15 L. R., Ir. 340.

—— Remainder to his Heirs Male.]—A testator gave leasehold estate to trustees, on trust for his son Benjamin, to take the rents until he should attain twenty-one, remainder on trust to support contingent remainders ; and subject thereto on trust for such son for life, remainder for the heirs male of such son ; remainder to the second and other sons of Benjamin, and the heirs male of their bodies, with remainder over of a like nature in favour of other children of the testator and their sons:—Held, that this would have been an estate tail in the son of Benjamin, and, being personalty, he would have taken an absolute estate. Williams v. Lewis, 6 H. L. Cas. 1013; 28 L. J., Ch. 505; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 323; 7 W. R. 349.

—— Remainder to the Heirs of his Body—Where Corpus Given.] — Devise of real and personal estate in trust for A., for life, afterwards for B. for life, and afterwards for the heirs of his body, afterwards for the other sons of A., successively in tail, taking testator's name; then to the daughters in tail, for want of such issue to convey to C. in fee: B. is entitled to a conveyance in tail of the real, and to the absolute property of the personal; the intent being at least doubtful, the legal operation of the words cannot be taken away, and as to the personal, it vested absolutely by such limitation, whether so intended or not. Garth v. Baldwin, 2 Ves. Sen. 646.

A. devises real and personal estate to B., for life, with remainder to the heirs of her body; this limitation over is void as to the personal estate, and B. shall take it absolutely. Stratton v. Payne, 3 Bro. P. C. 99.

Devise to the use of the devisor's second son A. for life, without impeachment of waste, and from and after his decease to the heirs of his body, to take as tenants in common, and not as joint-tenants; and in case of his decease without issue, to the devisor's eldest son B., his heirs, &c.; and in case both sons should die before twenty-one, over:—Held, an estate tail in the land, and absolute interest in personalty bequeathed with it. Bennet v. Tankerville (Earl), 19 Ves. 170.

A., by will, gives bank stock, exchequer-orders, and other personal estate to B. for life, and after his death to B.'s heir, and, for want of issue, to C. for life, &c.; B. takes absolutely, and devise over to C. void. Chatham (Earl) v. Tothill, 7 Bro. P. C. 453.

Bequest of personalty to A. for life, and after A.'s death to heirs male of A.'s body for ever, and for want of such issue, to B. for life, &c.; A. takes absolute interest, and gift over to B. is void. Semble, S. C., nom. Tothill v. Pitt, 1 Madd. 488.

Real and personal estate was devised to a feme covert for life, for her independent use and benefit, with remainder to her husband for life, with "remainder to the heirs of her body in tail," with remainders over; and then followed a declaration in the will that "all the aforesaid limitations were intended by the testator to be in strict settlement":—Held, in accordance with the certificate of the court of C. P., that, subject to her husband's life estate, the wife took an estate tail in the realty and an absolute interest in the personalty. Douglas v. Congreve, 1 Beav. 59; 8 L. J., Ch. 53; 3 Jur. 120. And see S. C., 4 Bing. (N.C.) 1; 5 Scott, 223; 7 L. J., C. P. 43; 1 Keen, 410; 6 L. J., Ch. 51.

Testatrix bequeathed a leasehold house and 3,000*l.* stock to trustees, in trust to permit her daughter to receive the rents and interest for life for her separate use; and from and immediately after her daughter's decease, she gave the rents and interest to the heirs of the body of her daughter lawfully begotten; but in case her daughter should happen to die without leaving any lawful issue living at the time of her decease, she gave the house and the stock over:—Held, that the daughter took the property absolutely. Verulam (Earl) v. Bathurst, 13 Sim. 374; 12 L. J., Ch. 359; 7 Jur. 295.

A testator bequeathed to his grand-daughter the interest arising out of 1,500*l.* consols during her life, and at her decease to descend to her heirs, male or female, by paying to her uncle 10*l.* per annum during his life, but the said 1,500*l.* stock to be by no means sold whatsoever, except on failure of issue, and then to descend to the testator's son and his heirs for ever:—Held, that this was an absolute bequest of the 1,500*l.* stock to the testator's grand-daughter. Ousby v. Harrey, 17 L. J., Ch. 160.

Residuary trust by will to apply the rents and profits for A. during his life, and afterwards for the heirs of his body if any, and in default of such issue over, is an estate tail in the real estate, and the absolute interest in the personal. Elton v. Eason, 19 Ves. 73; 12 R. R. 142.

N. T. devised an annuity of 300*l.* per annum to his wife for life, then to accumulate, to make a portion for his first daughter who should marry, then in order to raise portions for other daughters, then to remain to his eldest son, and on his decease, to the heirs male of his body, and in case of his having no issue, remainder to the next eldest son and his heir male. The daughters married in the life of the wife; the eldest and two other sons of testator died, leaving the wife without issue. This is not personal estate vesting absolutely in the eldest son (on the principle that it would be an estate tail in hand), neither does it vest as an executory devise on the fourth son of testator, who survived; but it is an annuity, and being exhausted by the events, there being nobody to take it, as such, sinks into the residuary estate of the testator. Turner v. Turner, 1 Bro. C. C. 317; Ambl. 776.

A testator gave a leasehold estate to trustees during the term of thirty years, upon trust to receive the rents and profits and pay debts, and, subject thereto, "to lay out and continue the same at interest, upon the best security that they could get for the same, and shall accumulate the same yearly, by making the interest thereof principal, and to bear interest until the legacies hereinafter given and bequeathed, and hereby made chargeable thereon, shall be satisfied and paid; and immediately afterwards the legacies shall be satisfied and discharged, or immediately after a sufficient sum or sums of money shall be had and received for that purpose by and out of the rents and profits of the premises"; then he bequeathed the leasehold estate to the trustees and their heirs for the term in him vested, upon trust for his son B., until the son of his son B., if he had one, should attain twenty-one, and then to the trustees to preserve contingent remainders, but to permit such son to receive the rents and profits during his life; and after his decease, to the heirs male of such son; and for want of such issue, to the second and other sons of the body of B., lawfully to be begotten, and the several and respective heirs male of the body and bodies of all and every such son and sons lawfully issuing; and in default of such issue, a similar limitation in remainder to L.; "and then for default of such issue, upon trust to receive the rents and profits for the use and benefit of the son of the testator's daughter A. until he should attain twenty-one," with similar limitations as those in favour of B. B. and L. died without issue:—Held, that B.'s son took the term absolutely. Williams v. Lewis, 6 H. L.

Cas. 1013; 28 L. J., Ch. 505; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 323; 7 W. R. 349.

Held, also, that the trust for accumulation was not void for remoteness. Ib.

Devise of freehold and leasehold to A. for life, and after his death to the heirs of his body, their heirs, executors, &c.:—Held, this gives A. an estate tail in freehold, and absolute interest in the leasehold. Kinch v. Ward, 2 Sim. & S. 409; 4 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 28.

Devise of all the rest, residue, and remainder of estate, both real and personal, unto A., to be placed at interest, until her age of twenty-one years or day of marriage, and then the whole thereof, together with the interest accumulated thereon, to be paid to her, to and for her use during natural life, and from and immediately after her decease unto the heirs of her body lawfully begotten, equally to be divided between them, share and share alike, and in default of such issue, or the death of A. before her age of twenty-one, or day of marriage, then unto her (the testatrix's) brother, is an estate for life in A. Jacobs v. Amyatt, 4 Bro. C. C. 542.

Devise to A. for life, remainder to trustees, to preserve contingent remainders, remainder to the heirs of his body, with remainder over for life and in tail male, declaring that the respective devises to A., &c., and their respective heirs male, are on condition of taking the testator's name; the residue of the personal property bequeathed to A., on attaining the age of twenty-four, to go over if he died under twenty-four, without leaving any child or children living at or born in due time after his death. Codicil giving an after-purchased leasehold for years for such estate and estates, and in such manner and form as the real estates are devised by the will, and with, under, and subject to the like limitations, trusts, conditions, &c. A. takes an estate tail in the freehold, and the absolute interest in the leasehold estates. Brouncker v. Bagot, 19 Ves. 574; 1 Mer. 271.

—— Where Interest Given.]—Remote limitation: devise of 400*l.* to be put out on good security for T. B., that he may have the interest for his life and for the heirs of his body; if he dies without issue, then over. The whole property vests in the first taker, and the limitation too remote. Butterfield v. Butterfield, 1 Ves. Sen. 133.

Interest of a sum given to A. for life, at his death to devolve to the heir of his body with remainder over, vests the principal sum absolutely in A. Robinson v. Fitzherbert, 2 Bro. C. C. 127.

Testator directs 20,000*l.* which he has in the three per cents. to be firmly fixed there, to remain during the life of his wife for her to receive the interest, and after her death to be in the same manner firmly fixed on the infant W. C. "to be so secured that he may only receive the interest during his life, and after his decease to the heir male of his body, and so on in succession to the heir-at-law, male or female"; with a direction that the principal sum is never to be broken into, but the interest only to be received; "his intent being that there should always be the interest to support the name of Cobb as a private gentleman." Though the intention be manifest to give only a life interest to W. C., yet there being nothing to shew that the word "heir male" was not used in a strictly technical sense:—Held, that W. C. took an absolute interest, the words being such as would create an estate tail of freehold property; secus, if the words "for life" had been added to the words "heir male," in which case the latter words might have been construed to be a mere "designatio personæ":—Held, the declaration that the principal stock should not be broken into, not sufficient to turn the heir into a tenant for life, being like an attempt at perpetual restraint of alienation, which in the case of land would not prevent the creation of an estate tail. Britton v. Twining, 3 Mer. 176; 17 R. R. 53.

—— Remainder to the Heir of his Body.]—A house, together with the furniture thereof, is limited to a feme, and such heir of her body as should be living at her death, and in default of such remainder, over:—The female has an estate tail in the house, and absolute property in the furniture.

Devise to A. for life, remainder to the heir of his body (though in the singular number), is an estate tail. Richards v. Bergavenny, 2 Vern. 324.

—— Remainder to his Issue.]—Construction of will, whether issue take by way of purchase or limitation.

A residue of personal estate was directed by will to be divided equally amongst the testator's sons (named), share and share alike, as tenants in common, and to the issue of their several and respective bodies lawfully begotten; but in case of the death of any or either of them without issue, lawfully begotten, living at the time of his or their respective deaths, then the part or share of him or them so dying to go to the survivors and survivor equally, share and share alike, and to the issue of their several and respective bodies lawfully begotten:—Held, that the bequests to the four sons passed absolute interest, but that on the death of one of such sons without issue, the shares survived to his brother. Lyon v. Mitchell, 1 Madd. 467; 16 R. R. 248.

Devise to devisor's wife of all his real and personal estates for her life, "after her" to A. and his male issue; "for want of male issue after him," to B. and his male issue; for want of male issue, to two others and their male issue. An absolute interest in A. as to the personal estate. Donn v. Penny, 19 Ves. 545; 1 Mer. 20; 13 R. R. 255.

Bequest of personal property to a man and his issue is an absolute interest, but a limitation over for want of issue living at his death is good. Ib., 547.

A bequest to all the children of A. and their issue, share and share alike, and to be paid twelve months after the testator's death, is an absolute gift to such children of A. as are living at the testator's death. Butter v. Ommaney, 4 Russ. 70; 6 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 54; 28 R. R. 6.

A testator bequeathed the residue of his estate to his widow, in trust to apply the proceeds for her own use, and at her death he gave what should then be remaining of such residuary moneys equally among all the daughters of A. and their issue, with benefit of survivorship and accruer (which latter clause was not set forth in the bill):—Held, that a daughter of A., who died in the lifetime of the widow, took no share, and that two surviving daughters took the whole residue absolutely. Gibbs v. Tait, 8 Sim. 132; 5 L. J., Ch. 344.

A testator bequeathed ten Pelican shares to his son, and his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns for ever, "he paying the profits of eight to the testator's daughters for life"; and after their decease the daughters' shares were to "return to his son and his issue"; and "in default of such issue" there was a gift over to the daughters and their issue":—Held, that subject to the life interest of the daughters the son was absolutely entitled to the shares. Hedges v. Harpur, 9 Beav. 479; 10 Jur. 578.

A testator appointed his executors guardians of his children until they should attain the age of twenty-five, and he desired that all his estate (which consisted of personalty only) should be equally divided among his four children, share and share alike. He then gave certain powers to his executors, and at the end of the will came this passage: "And I hereby direct that all moneys inherited by my daughters under this will shall be placed in the hands of trustees appointed by their guardians, to be settled on them for the sole use of themselves and their lawful issue":—Held, upon the petition of a daughter who attained her age of twenty-five and was unmarried, that she was entitled to her share absolutely. Samuel v. Samuel, 14 L. J., Ch. 222; 9 Jur. 222.

A testator by his will gave 4,000*l.* to be invested in stock in trust to pay the dividends to his daughter S. during her coverture, and upon the death of G., her husband, to transfer the capital to her for her sole use; but in case G. should survive his daughter, then in trust for H., F., E., A., and W., his five sons, and their respective issue (if any), to be divided among them in equal shares and proportions, such issue to take per stirpes, and not per capita; he also gave the residue of his personal estate to his sons, H. F., E., A., and W., "and their respective issue (if any), such issue to take per stirpes, and not per capita, to be divided among them in equal shares and proportions; the shares of such of them as shall have attained the age of twenty-one years to be paid to them respectively forthwith after the testator's decease; the shares of such of them as should be under that age to be paid to them when and as they should respectively attain such age":—Declared, that, S. dying in the lifetime of G., the sons of the testator living at such event would be absolutely entitled to the stock in equal shares, but if any of the sons should die in the lifetime of S. leaving issue, such issue, if living at the death of S., would be entitled to the share or shares of the fund which their parents would have been entitled to if living, such issue to take such shares equally among them, and adjudged, that the sons living at the death of the testator took an absolute interest in the residue. Dictum, that if any of the sons had died in the lifetime of the testator, his children, living at the death of the testator, would have taken, by substitution, the share of the parent. Whether grandchildren or more remote descendants would take as issue, and in what proportions, quære. Pearson v. Stephen, 5 Bligh (N.S.) 203; 2 Dow & Cl. 328.

Bequest of personalty to four daughters "and their issue":—Held, that they took absolutely. Stanhope, In re, 27 Beav. 201.

A testator devised real and personal estate to A. for life, with a direction to the executors, after A.'s death, to divide it amongst all her children and their lawful issue, share and share alike. There was a gift over of the leaseholds to other persons on a total failure of issue of the children:—Held, that the children took estates tail in the realty, and absolute interest in the personalty; and that cross remainders were not to be implied in regard to the leaseholds. Beaver v. Nowell, 25 Beav. 551.

A testator gave a share of his estate to L., subject to the condition that L. should receive for professional services 150*l.* in some one year, and the executors were to invest the principal, and pay L. the interest; "and in the event of his death, he being at the time unmarried, or not leaving legal issue, or not having fulfilled the above condition," then there was a gift over. L. never fulfilled the condition, but died leaving lawful issue:—Held, that his representatives took the share. Law v. Thorp, 25 L. J., Ch. 75; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1082; 4 W. R. 69.

A testator gave the interest of all his money in the funds to his daughter, and he desired his outstanding money to be put into the funds. He then desired the interest of the moneys directed to be put into the funds to be paid to his daughter, "as and for her own and issue's proper moneys." But in the event of her dying without issue, he desired the whole of his funded property to be divided between his brothers and sisters and their children. The daughter died without issue:—Held, that she took the funds absolutely, and that the gift was inoperative. Andrews' Will, In re, 26 Beav. 608; 29 L. J., Ch. 291; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 114; 1 L. T. 319.

Devise of a freehold estate to the testator's illegitimate son W., "to have and to hold during the term of his natural life, and, in case he have issue, then it is my will they should jointly inherit the same after his decease." In a subsequent part of the will the testator devised and bequeathed the rest and residue of his effects real and personal, not thereinbefore disposed of, to his said son, "but in case my son W. dies without issue, then it is my will that the whole of my property be ascertained; and after bequeathing certain legacies and annuities, the rest and residue of my property, together with the before-mentioned annuities as they drop off, I give in equal proportions to A. and B.":—Held, that the illegitimate son took an estate tail in the real estate, and an absolute interest in the personalty. Ward v. Bevil, 1 Y. & J. 512; 30 R. R. 840.

The testator gave the sum of 500*l.* stock to S. T., to receive the interest during life, and then to her issue; but in case of her death without issue, the said 500*l.* stock to be divided between her father's children by his second wife; and in default of any children by his second wife being living at the testator's death, over:—Held, that S. T. took an absolute interest in the sum of 500*l.* stock. Att.-Gen. v. Bright, 2 Keen, 57; 5 L. J., Ch. 325.

Gift of stock in the public funds upon trust to pay the dividends to the four brothers and two sisters of the testator in equal shares for their respective lives, and after their respective deceases, to pay the dividends unto and amongst the eldest sons or son of his said brothers, and the survivors or survivor of them, for their lives or life, in equal shares and proportions, upon their attaining twenty-one, with a provision for maintenance in the meantime; and after the decease of such eldest sons or son, to pay the said dividends unto and amongst the eldest male issue only for the time being of their bodies ad infinitum for ever:—Held, that the bequests to the brothers and sisters of the testator were valid; that the bequests in remainder to the four eldest sons of the four brothers, each of whom had a son living at the death of the testator, were valid, but that such eldest sons took absolute interests in their several shares of such stock; that, according to the language of the will, the issue of the nephews would take, if at all, as purchasers; but if the limitations to their issue male should be construed as words of limitation, the nephews would have taken a life estate only. Harvey v. Towell, 7 Hare, 231; 17 L. J., Ch. 217; 12 Jur. 241.

Testator gives the accumulation of rents till A. should attain twenty-one, to be laid out, and to permit A. to receive the interest during life; after his death, he gives the said moneys to the issue male of A., and in default to the plaintiffs; A. died without issue; the issue would have taken as purchasers, and therefore the limitation to the plaintiffs takes place. Knight v. Ellis, 2 Bro. C. C. 570.

Devise of leaseholds on trust for A. for life, and afterwards to his issue male severally and respectively, according to their seniorities; and in default to his heirs, according to their seniorities; and in default over:—Held, that A. took an absolute interest. Jordan v. Lowe, 6 Beav. 350.

The word "issue" is construed differently in limitations by will of real and personal property, because of the different order of succession to such property on the death of the owner intestate. Wynch's Trusts, In re, 1 Sm. & G. 427. Affirmed 5 De G. M. & G. 188; 2 Eq. R. 1025; 23 L. J., Ch. 930; 18 Jur. 659; 2 W. R. 570.

J. W. bequeathed to A. M., the wife of R., "an annuity for her life and the issue from her body lawfully begotten, in failure of which to revert to my heirs; and I request that K. and T. will act as trustees for the said A. M., so that the said annuity may be secured for her sole use and benefit":—Held, that the word "issue," in this gift, must be construed a word of purchase—that A. M. took an equitable interest only for her life, and that upon her death the children and other issue took the annuity as a class in equal shares as joint tenants. The authority of Lord Thurlow's decision in Knight v. Ellis (supra) upheld. Ib.

In construing bequests of personal estate it is not correct to apply rules which, with reference to real estate, have been derived from laws of tenure, such as that "issue" or "heirs of the body" shall be primâ facie words of limitation; but the intention must decide the construction. Per the Lord Chancellor and Sir G. J. Turner, L.J. Ib.

The authorities do not bear out the general proposition sometimes found in the report, namely, that the same words in a will which would create an estate tail in realty will give the absolute interest in personalty. Per Sir G. J. Turner, L.J. Ib.

A deed was executed in 1797 putting a particular construction upon the will. A. M., not being a party to the deed of 1797, executed a deed in 1808, previously to her marriage, which deed recited the former deed:—Held, by Knight-Bruce, L.J., that, as against the issue of the marriage, A. M. was bound by that recital, and could not put an opposite construction upon the will. Ib.

A testator gave certain leasehold houses to his wife for her life; and after her decease, to the niece A. for life for her separate use, and after her decease, to the issue of the body of A. lawfully begotten; and if A. should die leaving no issue, then to B. A. died, leaving three children:—Held, in conformity with Wynch's Trusts, In re (supra), that A. took only an estate for life. Goldney v. Crabb, 19 Beav. 338; 2 W. R. 579.

Devise of real and leasehold estates together to A. for life, and after his death to the male issue of the body of A., in equal shares and proportions, the leaseholds being the bulk of the property:—Held, that A. took an estate tail in the freeholds, and an estate for life only in the leaseholds. Jackson v. Calvert, 1 J. & H. 235.

A testatrix gave real and personal estate upon trust for all her children after they should attain twenty-one, share and share alike for their respective lives, and after the death of any of them before attaining twenty-one, upon trust as to the share of the child so dying for the issue of such child in equal shares and proportions, and their respective heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, but if there should be but one such child who should attain the age of twenty-one (which event happened), upon trust as to the whole property for such child for life, with the remainder in trust for the issue of such child, and their respective heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns as tenants in common:—Held, that the word issue was to be construed as a word of purchase, and that the testatrix's only child took an estate for life with remainder to her issue as tenants in common in fee as to the realty, and absolutely as to the personalty. Bannister v. Lang, 17 L. T. 137.

Bequest of chattel interest in houses to E. (who afterwards married, but died without issue) for life, and to his issue in case he shall marry:—Held, to give a life estate only to E. Foster v. Wybrants, Ir. R. 11 Eq. 40.

d. Gifts Over of Undisposed-of Interests in Personalty.

After Life Interest.]—One devises that such part of his personal estate as his wife should leave of her subsistence shall go to his sister; devise over good. Upwell v. Halsey, 1 P. Wms. 651; 10 Mod. 441. But see 2 Ves. Sen. 532; 1 Ll. & G. 298.

Testator gave his whole property to his wife, making no express provision for his daughter; "but in case of death happening to his wife, desired his executors to take care of the whole for his daughter." The wife shall have the whole for life only, with remainder absolutely to his daughter. Wall v. Bushby, 1 Bro. C. C. 489.

A testator directed his debts and funeral expenses to be paid, and gave to his wife all his estate, effects, goods, chattels, houses, lands, moneys, securities for money due or growing due, every matter and thing whatsoever and wheresoever the same might be at the time of his decease, for her sole separate use and benefit; and he further directed that at her decease whatever remained of his estate and effects should go to and be equally divided, share and share alike, among certain specified persons, or such of them as should be then living:—Held, that there was a substantial gift after the widow's death. Constable v. Bull, 3 De G. & Sm. 411; 18 L. J., Ch. 302; 13 Jur. 619.

Held, that the widow was entitled to an estate for life only in the residuary personal estate of the testator after payment of his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses. Constable v. Bull, 22 L. J., Ch. 182.

Gift by will to A., and in the event of her death, over. By codicil the testator left all he possessed to A., as stated in his will, wishing her to pay certain legacies; "and at A.'s death I wish all remaining to be for the benefit of B. and her children":—Held, that A. took a life interest only, with remainder to B. and her children as joint tenants. Adam, In re, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 961; 13 L. T. 347; 14 W. R. 18.

F. W. by will gave certain freehold and leasehold estates to trustees in trust for his wife for her life, and after her death he gave the same unto, amongst, and between a class of persons, naming them, share and share alike; and after their decease, to three children, share and share alike. The will contained a residuary gift. After the death of the testator and his wife one of the class died without issue:—Held, that he was not entitled absolutely to the share given to him, but that on his death without children, as the will contained no express words to shew that an absolute interest was intended, the share fell into the residue. Waters v. Waters, 26 L. J., Ch. 624; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 654.

E. and A., sisters, were tenants in common of freehold and leasehold property. E. by her will gave all her estates and effects, both real and personal, to A. absolutely, and by a codicil which she directed to be taken as part of her will she gave, after the death of A., "all property of mine which may then be remaining" (except a house and furniture) "to my brother W. B." and three other persons in certain proportions, "my brother W. B. to have one-half of the property for his whole and sole disposal." A., who survived E. a year and eight months, remained in possession of the whole of the property, and by her will gave a portion of it to W. B. for life only, and after his death to other persons. On bill filed by W. B. for administration of both estates:—Held, that the intention of E. was, construing the two instruments together, that A. should have a life interest only in her property. Bibbens v. Potter, 10 Ch. D. 733; 27 W. R. 304.

A testator possessed of personal property gave a beneficial and apparently absolute interest in it to his wife, whom he made his sole executrix, but with a direction that, in case his property should be more than she wanted to live on for her lifetime, she was to give weekly the remainder to the testator's two daughters so long as she lived; and he directed the whole of his property to be sold, and the money to be put into the Bank of England in trust as might be thought best for her and those in trust:—Held, that the wife took beneficially an interest for life only; that the gift to the daughters was invalid; and that there was an intestacy as to the beneficial interest in the capital after the widow's death. Hudson v. Bryant, 1 Coll. C. C. 681.

Bequest of residuary personal estate after decease of testator's widow, or her marriage in his daughter's lifetime, to his "daughter, the same to be always considered as vested in her upon her attaining her age of twenty-one years, and to be subject to her disposition thereof"; and in case his daughter should die "without attaining twenty-one, or without disposing by her will of the property," then over:—Held, upon the context, that the daughter took for life, with a testamentary power of disposition. Borton v. Borton, 16 Sim. 552; 18 L. J., Ch. 219; 13 Jur. 247.

A testator bequeathed the residue of his personal estate to his widow in trust, to apply the interest and proceeds for her own use, and after her decease he gave what should be remaining of such residuary moneys unto and equally amongst all the daughters of T. D. and their issue, with benefit of survivorship and accruer. T. D. had three daughters living at the testator's death. One of them died without issue in the lifetime of the testator's widow. The two others survived the widow, and had issue living at her death:—Held, that the two surviving daughters were entitled to the whole of the residue absolutely. Gibbs v. Tait, 8 Sim. 132; 5 L. J., Ch. 344.

A. by his will gave all his real and personal estate to his wife, with full power to sell his landed property in her lifetime, or to retain the same during her lifetime, and to dispose of one moiety of such real and personal estate as she might be possessed of at her decease by her will; and he gave the other moiety of such realty and personalty as might remain in his wife's possession at her death to C. (but not until after his wife's decease). C. predeceased the testator's widow, who sold the whole real estate and died; but the purchaser only paid half the purchase-money, on the doubt whether one moiety was not undisposed of. On bill filed by C.'s representative:—Held, he was entitled to one moiety of the purchase-money with 4 per cent. interest from the widow's death. Costs of the plaintiff out of the moiety of the purchase-money, the purchaser and widow's executor paying their own costs. Phillips v. Powell, 3 W. R. 2.

Testator, reciting his intention to dispose of all his property, and that his daughter was likely to die (of a violent distemper), left his wife, if she died, the revenue and dividends of such property; but if his daughter lived, directed that his wife should only have her dower, giving the residue and dividends to that daughter; if she died without children, testator gave his brother "all that should be left"; the daughter survived the testator, but died of the same illness without issue:—Held, that the mother was still entitled for life, and that the words "what should be left" constituted a good residuary bequest to the brother. Duhamel v. Ardovin, 2 Ves. Sen. 162.

After Life Interest with Power of Disposition.]—Testator gave the residue of his personal estate to his wife, desiring her to provide for his daughter, A., out of the same, as long as she (his wife) should live, and, at her decease, to dispose of what should be left among his children, in such manner as she should judge most proper. This is not an absolute trust for the children after the death of the wife. Pushman v. Filliter, 3 Ves. 7.

Bequest to A. and B. of a fund, upon trust to invest on security, and to apply the interest on the principal for the benefit of C., in such way as A. and B. should think fit, during the life of C., and so that A. and B. should have entire power over the fund, to dispose of the principal and interest or any part thereof or to withhold the same, as they should think fit, without being accountable to C. or any other person; and on the death of C., in case the said sum or any part thereof should be undisposed of, to stand possessed thereof on the trust therein mentioned. A. and B. paid the income to C. during their lives, and died, leaving C. surviving:—Held, that C. was absolutely entitled to the capital. Gude v. Worthington, 18 L. J., Ch. 303; 13 Jur. 847.

A devise of all the testator's property in trust for his niece, subject to a discretionary power in the trustees, on her attaining twenty-one or marriage, to settle the whole, or such part as they should think fit, upon her and her children, if she should have any, with remainder, in default of children, to her mother absolutely. The niece attained twenty-one, but before any settlement was made under the power she died without having been married:—Held, that the power could not then be exercised, and that her heir was entitled to the whole of the real estate. Lancashire v. Lancashire, 2 Ph. 657; 17 L. J., Ch. 270; 12 Jur. 363.

Bequest of household goods, &c., after payment of debts, &c., to testator's wife for life or widowhood, with power to her to sell same as she should think fit for her own benefit and the maintenance of testator's nephew, &c., during their minority, with a bequest over on death or second marriage of wife of the same, or so much as should then remain, to such nephew, &c.:—Held, that widow was entitled to residue for her life or widowhood, with power to apply any part of the capital for her own benefit, proper maintenance of nephew, &c., during minorities, and that, on death or marriage of widow, remainder of capital unapplied was well limited over. Surman v. Surman, 5 Madd. 123; 21 R. R. 286.

A bequest of residue to trustees, upon trust to permit the testator's wife to receive the annual produce for her life, with power to apply to her own use such parts of the capital as she should think proper; and after her decease, upon trust, as to such portions as should remain after such application of any part thereof by his wife, for such persons as she should by will appoint; and in default of and subject to any such appointment, in trust for certain persons named:—Held, that the widow took a life interest only in the residue, with power of disposition of the capital, and of appointment by will. Scott v. Josselyn, 26 Beav. 174; 28 L. J., Ch. 297; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 560.

A wife by will appointed real estate to her husband upon trust for his own use for life, "with power to take and apply the whole or any part of the capital arising therefrom to and for his own benefit," after his death, "subject as aforesaid," over to other persons. The husband died without exercising the power:—Held, that he had only a life estate, and that the property went to the persons to whom it was given in remainder after his death. Pennock v. Pennock, 41 L. J., Ch. 141; L. R. 13 Eq. 144; 25 L. T. 691.

A testator gave his personal estate "for the use of his wife, not doubting but she would exercise due discretion and economy in expending the same, the whole to be under the care of his wife and the other executor, who were likewise requested to pay out of the same all just debts; and after the decease of his wife he gave the residue to be equally divided in five shares":—Held, that the word "residue" meant "residue after payment of debts," and that the wife took a life interest followed by a gift over. Brooks, In re, 2 Dr. & Sm. 362; 34 L. J., Ch. 616; 12 L. T. 172; 13 W. R. 573.

A testator left to M., E., and R. the entirety of his property during their joint and several lives, subject to legacies and annuities, and added, "In leaving my property to my three nieces, as co-heirs, it is my wish that if my grand-nephew, J. W. C., conducts himself to their satisfaction, that the (sic) should leave him the property I now leave to them." J. W. C. died in the lifetime of M., E., and R. There was no evidence that J. W. C. did not conduct himself to their satisfaction. E. having died:—Held, that M. and R. were entitled to the testator's real estate for their lives only. Moore v. ffolliott, 11 L. R., Ir. 206.

A testator by his will gave all his property to his widow "for the term of her natural life, to be disposed of as she may think proper for her own use and benefit according to the nature and quality thereof," and "in the event of her decease, should there be anything remaining of the said property or any part thereof," he gave "said part or parts thereof" to certain persons:—Held, that the widow had no power to dispose of the property by will, and that on her death it went to the ulterior takers named in the husband's will. Thomson's Estate, In re, Herring v. Barrow, 49 L. J., Ch. 622; 14 Ch. D. 263; 43 L. T. 35; 28 W. R. 802—C. A.

Whether she took anything more than a life estate, with a right to enjoy the property in specie, quære. Ib.

A testator, by his will, gave his residue to his wife absolutely. By a codicil he revoked this gift, and after making a specific gift, gave his residue to his wife "for her own absolute use and benefit and disposal"; but, without prejudice to the absolute power of disposal by his wife of all the said residue, in case at her decease any part thereof should "remain undisposed of" by her, he gave the same to two other persons equally as tenants in common, subject to the payment by them of his wife's debts and funeral expenses:—Held, that the testator's wife took a life interest, with a power of disposition by act inter vivos, but not by will. Pounder, In re, Williams v. Pounder, 56 L. J., Ch. 113; 56 L. T. 104.

After Gift of Absolute Interest.]—Wife, having a power to dispose, by will signed and sealed by her, of 300*l.* in the hands of trustees, having made a will, agreeably to the power, afterwards makes a testamentary paper, by which she gives it to her husband, but so much as shall be remaining at his death, &c., to her brother and sisters. This paper is not sealed, found annexed to the will by a wafer, and is on a stamp:—Held, that it vested absolutely in her husband, and it was decreed to be paid to him, the property not being sufficiently certain to raise a trust. Sprange v. Barnard, 2 Bro. C. C. 585.

Gift by will to A. to be paid to him at twenty-one, with a bequest over, in the event of dying under that age, or afterwards without heirs, and intestate:—Held, an absolute interest in A. on his attaining twenty-one. Cuthbert v. Purrier, Jac. 415; 23 R. R. 104.

J. gives the residue of his estate to his daughter C., to dispose of as she shall think fit; but if she should die unmarried, or intestate, then what was left to her should go to his brother's children. C. possessed this residue, and disposed of it in making purchases, and taking securities in her own name. She afterwards died intestate and unmarried:—Held, that all her personal estate belonged to her next of kin; and that no part of it could be considered as the specific personal estate of her father, or go to his brother's children. Lightburne v. Gill, 3 Bro. P. C. 250.

A testator bequeathed his residuary estate to his wife, "her executors, administrators, and assigns"; but if she died intestate, then his will was that it should be bequeathed to A. and B. The wife predeceased the testator:—Held, independently of that circumstance, that the gift over, after an absolute interest, was void. Hughes v. Ellis, 20 Beav. 193; 24 L. J., Ch. 351; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 316; 3 W. R. 310.

A testator gave real and personal estate upon trust for the benefit of his son to vest in him on his attaining twenty-one. He then directed that in case his son should die under twenty-one, or having attained twenty-one, should not have made a will, then the property should go over. The son attained twenty-one, and died intestate:—Held, that the real and personal estate vested in him absolutely at twenty-one, and that, therefore, the devise over was repugnant and void. Holmes v. Godson, 20 Beav. 193; 25 L. J., Ch. 317; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 383; 4 W. R. 415.

A. devised real estate to his second son in fee if he attained twenty-one, charged with a legacy to a daughter, and if the second son died under twenty-one, then to the eldest son when he attained twenty-one, charged with the legacy; and in case it should happen that all the testator's three children should die without issue, and without appointing the disposal of the estate, then over:—Held, that the devise over was repugnant and void. Gulliver v. Vaux, 8 De G. M. & G. 167.

A testator gave all his property, consisting of realty and personalty, to his three children, A., B., and C., share and share alike, the share of A. to be for her during her life, and then to be divided among her children at twenty-one; and if she leave no children, or all her children die under twenty-one, then the one-third share to be divided between B. and C.; but in case B. and C., or either of them, should die intestate, his or their share or shares was or were to be divided between their children respectively, share and share alike:—Held, that the gift over in case B. and C., or either of them, should die intestate, was void, as being annexed to a condition repugnant. Barton v. Barton, 3 K. & J. 512; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 808.

The rule that such a condition is repugnant when annexed to an absolute interest previously given in the same will is the same whether the subject-matter be real or personal estate. Ib.

A testator made an indefinite bequest of the interest of his residue to a class of children equally, with a declaration that they should have the right to will away their shares on their deaths. There was a gift over, if they should omit to make their wills:—Held, that they took absolute vested interest, and not a life interest, with a power to bequeath, and that the gift over was void for repugnancy. Weale v. Ollive, 32 Beav. 421.

The testator bequeathed a leasehold house and premises, with the furniture and plate, to his son, and added, "and should he die without heir or will, the profits of the said house to be equally divided between all my grandchildren, by the consent of his mother":—Held, that the son took an absolute interest in the house. Green v. Harvey, 1 Hare, 428; 11 L. J., Ch. 290; 6 Jur. 704.

A testator devised to his four sons, in trust, to pay an annuity to his widow, and on her death, or second marriage, to divide equally between his said sons and his two daughters; and on the decease of either of his sons or daughters, or the children of his sons or daughters, then to their children; and in case any person becoming entitled to his property should attempt to sell it, then he should forfeit his share:—Held, that the first takers, the children of the testator, each took his share absolutely, subject to the annuity. Bartlett v. Bartlett, 11 L. J., Ch. 11.

A testator bequeathed his residuary personal estate (after a life interest) to his grandson to and for his own use: but if he should die under twenty-one without leaving lawful issue, or if he should attain twenty-one and die without leaving lawful issue, and without having disposed of the same by his will or otherwise, then over:—Held, upon the construction of the whole will, that in the event (which happened) of the grandson attaining twenty-one, he took an absolute interest. Yalden, In re, 1 De G. M. & G. 53.

Bequest of a legacy to A. to be paid at twenty-five, or between twenty-one and twenty-five, if the executors should think proper, and maintenance in the meantime, with a limitation over, in case A. should not receive or dispose of it by will or otherwise in his lifetime. The limitation over held void. Ross v. Ross, 1 J. & W. 154; 20 R. R. 263.

Where a money fund is given to a person absolutely, a condition cannot be annexed to the gift that so much as he shall not dispose of shall go over to another person. Watkins v. Williams, Harverd v. Church, 3 Mac. & G. 622; 21 L. J., Ch. 601; 16 Jur. 181.

W. D. devised certain estates to R. D., with a power to sell and dispose of the premises, or to raise any sum or sums of money by way of mortgage or otherwise, as he should think proper, with a proviso that such portion of all and every sum and sums of money so raised, "either by sale or mortgage, as shall be unexpended at my decease," &c., should be charged by him on certain property of his own, in favour of other parties:—Held, establishing the validity of mortgages executed by R. D., that this proviso did not operate as a condition precedent, but was a limitation over of so much of the money to be raised by R. D. as should be unexpended. Ib.

A testator gave to his wife the residue of his personal property, with a proviso that, if not disposed of by her in her life or by her will, it should go over. It passed as part of her property by her will, although not specifically noticed. Bourn v. Gibbs, 1 Russ. & M. 614; Tam. 414; 8 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 151.

Bequest of personal property in trust for A. (a married woman) for her separate use; with a power of disposing by will (except to particular persons); "and in case she dies without a will, I give all that may remain at her decease to B.," followed by a gift of "all the rest and residue" to A., who is appointed executrix: A. takes the absolute interest in the property, not a power of disposing merely; and the gift to B. of "all that may remain at her decease" is void for uncertainty. Bull v. Kingston, 1 Mer. 314.

A bequest to M. E., testator's wife, of "the legal interest on bonds, debentures, and funded property, together with household furniture, &c., to be disposed of as he shall think proper"; and in case F. E. should survive the said M. E., that he should have "the interest of money, and whatever does belong to her that she does not dispose of":—Held, that M. E. having survived

F. E., the absolute gift to her was not cut down by the subsequent bequest over, and that that bequest was void for uncertainty. Phillips v. Eastwood, Ll. & G. t. Sudg. 270.

Bequest of residue to A. for life "and whatever she can transfer to go to her daughters," B. and C.:—Held, that the gift to B. and C. was void for uncertainty. Flint v. Hughes, 6 Beav. 342; 7 Jur. 523.

Bequest of a residue to the testator's father, "to spend both principal and interest, or any part of it, during his lifetime"; should he "not spend the property," then in trust for the testator's sisters:—Held, that the bequest to the father was absolute, and that the gift over was inconsistent with it, and inoperative. Henderson v. Cross, 29 Beav. 216; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 177; 9 W. R. 263.

A testator, by his will, bequeathed unto his wife all his leasehold property wheresoever situate, for her sole use and benefit, except a house therein described; and in a subsequent part of his will he directed that as soon after the decease of his wife as might be practicable, all his leasehold property not already disposed of by her (save and except the house) should be sold, and the produce thereof distributed by his executors (of whom the wife was named one) among certain persons, in the proportions therein stated:—Held, that, upon the death of the testator, his widow became absolutely entitled under his will to the leasehold property bequeathed to her by such will, and that the direction to sell contained in such will and the expressed disposition of the proceeds of sale were repugnant to the preceding absolute gift to the wife, and void. Bowes v. Goslett, 27 L. J., Ch. 249; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 17; 6 W. R. 8.

A father directed the residue of his property to be divided into equal portions, and to be paid to as many of his children as should be living at the time of his death, to be for ever at their disposal, with the following reservation only: the equal share or portion which should fall to his eldest daughter should remain in certain investments, and the proceeds or interest of such her equal portion should be applied for her support and maintenance during her life, and at her death the property thus bequeathed to her should be divided into equal portions among as many of his other children as might be living at the time of her decease. She survived all the other children of the testator:—Held, that she took an absolute interest in her equal portion of the residue. Bishop v. Wise, 26 L. T. 530.

A devise of lands for ever conveys an estate in fee, and is not affected by subsequent words requesting the devisee, "in case of failure of issue of his said body," to give the estate to another. Bland v. Bland, 9 Mod. 478.

A husband gave all his real and personal estate to trustees upon trust, after paying his debts, to pay the residue of his personal estate to his wife for her own absolute use and benefit, and the rents and annual income of his real and leasehold estates to her during her life; and after making provision for certain legatees and annuitants, he gave his freehold estate, after the death of his wife, to his grandson, and all the money (if any) that should be remaining, after payment of his wife's just debts, he gave to legatees named as tenants in common equally. The widow died shortly after the testator intestate:—Held, that she took an absolute interest in the residuary personal estate, and that it belonged to her next of kin. Perry v. Merritt, 43 L. J., Ch. 608; L. R. 18 Eq. 152; 22 W. R. 600.

A fund was settled in trust for W., the illegitimate daughter of the settlor, for life, and in the event, which happened, of her not at her death being under coverture, for her absolutely; with a proviso that if any estate, interest, or benefit should, under the powers and provisions of the settlement, be undisposed of, or in the events which should happen, would but for the proviso be held in trust for the crown or belong beneficially to the crown, then and in every such case the estate, interest, or benefit should belong to and be held in trust for her father for life, and after his death for her mother. W. having died intestate, the crown claimed the fund:—Held, that the fund vested absolutely in W. at her death, and that the gift over was repugnant and void; and consequently that the crown was entitled to the fund. Wilcocks, In re, 1 Ch. D. 229.

—— Death of First Donee in Life of Testator.]—See sub tit. LAPSE, post, cols. 1596, et seq.

e. Gifts to benefit in Particular Manner.

i. To benefit Legatee alone.

Gift in Trust to do certain Acts.]—The words "I appoint A. B. trustee of my real estate," to do such and such acts, constitute him in equity the taker of the estate. Fingal (Earl) v. Blake, 2 Moll. 50.

A testator left a certain sum to A. during his natural life, and his assigns, in trust to defray the expenses of a certain chapel:—Held, that this constituted a permanent gift, and not terminable at A.'s death. Wall, In re, 12 Jur. (N.S.) 995.

A bequest of terms for years upon trust to permit S. M. to receive all rents and profits, and to dispose of the same as she might think proper, and upon further trust that S. M. should pay out of the rents, issues, and profits certain debts and legacies, and that the premises should revert for the residue of their different periods to T. H.:—Held, that S. M. took an estate for life only. Egan v. Morris, Ll. & G. t. Plunk. 297.

Life Interest in Furniture.]—A testator directed his widow "to be in possession of all his furniture, plate, glass, and books, and for the time of her natural life to receive the yearly interest and profits of all his property that he was in possession of at his death":—Held, that the widow took a life interest only in the furniture, &c. Low v. Carter, 1 Beav. 426.

—— With Power of Disposition.]—"I bequeath to my wife all the household furniture and movable goods and chattels in and belonging to my dwelling-house, except my books; I bequeath to her the use of my plate, with power to dispose of such portion thereof as she shall think proper":—Held, that the wife took a life interest only in the plate, and that, as she had not disposed of it during her life, it fell into the residue. Espinasse v. Luffingham, 3 Jo. & Lat. 186; 9 Ir. Eq. R. 129.

Gift for Maintenance of Adult.]—Devise of real estate in trust to raise an annual sum for the support and maintenance of an adult, held to create a trust for his benefit generally, and to pass to his assignees under the Insolvent Act, notwithstanding a clause in the will against anticipating or charging, &c. Younghusband v. Gisborne, 1 Colly. 400. S. C., 8 Jur. 750. Affirmed 15 L. J., Ch. 355 ; 10 Jur. 419.

—— Without Power of Disposition.]—The testator gave all his real and personal estate to his wife and J. H., "upon trust to allow my said wife to have the full and entire use and enjoyment thereof for her maintenance during her lifetime" ; and he declared that she might, "at any time during her lifetime, sell, lease, mortgage, or otherwise absolutely dispose of all or any part of the said estate for her maintenance, but not by way of testamentary disposition." And he declared that after her death J. H. should call in and convert all his said estate, or the residue then remaining thereof, and stand possessed thereof upon certain trusts mentioned in his will :—Held, that the wife was not absolutely entitled to the capital of the estate, but only to a life interest, with power to resort to the capital during her life for maintenance, but not for any other purpose. Fox, In re, Fox v. Fox, 62 L. T. 762.

Gift to clear Mortgaged Estate.]—An estate was mortgaged to A., who sub-mortgaged it to B. A. devised the estate to C., and bequeathed to B., the sub-mortgagee, through his executors, 1,000*l.* to clear in part the estate. The sub-mortgagee, after the death of the testator, foreclosed the estate :—Held, that the devisee of the estate was entitled to the 1,000*l.* Lockhart v. Hardy, 9 Beav. 379 ; 10 Jur. 728.

Where Purpose of Gift fails—Principles.]—Where a benefit is conferred by will for a specific purpose, although that purpose cannot be achieved modo et formâ as intended by the testator, still, if there is a clear intention on the part of the testator that the benefit should be conferred, if the testator has accepted from the general property bequeathed to the residuary legatee the property the subject of the specific bequest, for the benefit of the specific legatee, the latter is entitled to the benefit of the bequest, and to enjoy it in manner he may think fit. Lonsdale (Earl) v. Berchtoldt (Countess), 3 K. & J. 185 ; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 328. And see S. C., Kay, 646 ; 23 L. J., Ch. 816 ; 18 Jur. 811.

Where the purpose for which one of two bequests, given by will to the same parties, is expressed in the will to be for the better enjoying of the other, the mere circumstance that the legatees cannot enjoy the latter shall not deprive them of the benefit of the former. Therefore, where the interest of a fund was directed to be laid out in payment of the rent and charges of leaseholds specifically bequeathed, and the leaseholds prove damnosa hæreditas, and could not be specifically enjoyed, and were therefore sold by order of the court :—Held, that the legatees were entitled not only to the proceeds of the sale, but also to the interest of the fund set apart for the enjoyment of the leaseholds in specie. Ib.

If a legacy is given for the benefit of an infant in one way, and it cannot be so applied, it may be applied for his benefit in another way ; as if it were to put him into orders, and he became a lunatic. Barton v. Cooke, 5 Ves. 461.

Where Purpose impracticable.]—A sum of money was paid by A. to B. for the purpose of purchasing C. a promotion in the army, and it remained unapplied in the hands of B. at the death of A. C. having been compelled from the bad state of his health to quit the army, and having no prospect of being able to enter into the service again, filed a bill for the money, and it was decreed to be paid to him. Leche v. Kilmorey (Lord), Turn. & R. 207 ; 24 R. R. 19.

A testator bequeathed manuscripts to trustees "for my grandson, that they may provide for the books being published to the best advantage for the interests of the child, so as to contribute towards raising a fund to assist him when he goes to college," and bequeathed 1,000*l.* towards the printing :—Held, that the grandson was entitled to elect to take the 1,000*l.*, it appearing to be impossible to publish the book at a profit. Skinner, In re, 1 J. & H. 102 ; 8 W. R. 605.

A devise that if cestui que vie of a church lease which the testator had should die, the testator's executors should purchase the premises for the life of J., the testator's kinsman ; but if such purchase could not be made, then the surplus of his personal estate to go to another : whether J. takes any interest by the will, quære. Stephens v. Stephens, 2 P. Wms. 323.

A testator gave his residuary estate to his executors "upon trust out of the rent or produce of my said real estate, and other moneys on loan or otherwise, to form a fund, the same to be applied in establishing my three sons in their several professions in such proportions as my executors deem fit. One of the sons had been entered in a profession by his father, but neither of the other two sons had adopted a profession or expressed an intention of doing so :—Held, that, notwithstanding the testator's purpose had failed, the sons were entitled to the whole residue in equal shares for their own benefit. Hutchinson v. Rough, 40 L. T. 289.

Legacy left to procure a dukedom, void. Kingston (Earl) v. Pierepont, 1 Vern. 5.

Where Purpose defeated by Legatee.]—Bequest of 8,000*l.* to testatrix's daughter, a married lady, towards purchasing a country residence :—Held, to be an absolute bequest. Knox v. Hotham (Lord), 15 Sim. 82.

Testator, by his will, gave an annuity of 1,000*l.* a year to his wife for her life, and directed his plate and furniture, and H., his family mansion, to be sold. By codicil, he desired that his wife should be accommodated with any plate she might choose for her own use, and that an inventory should be made of it, and that it should be returned at her death : "I give to her absolutely any one of my silver inkstands which she may select : I also give to my dear wife any part of the beds, bedding, linen, carpets, or other household furniture at H., which she may require for her own use, as likewise any wardrobes or glass cases at H., according to her wish ; and I give to her in addition to all other provisions, 400*l.* per annum during her life, to be applied to the rent of any residence she may choose to live at, and to be raised and paid in like manner as the annuity bequeathed to her by my will" :—Held, that the wife was entitled, absolutely, to such parts of the furniture as she might select ; and that she was entitled to be paid 400*l.* a year, although she had fixed her residence with her son, at the family mansion. Amherst (Lord) v. Leeds (Duchess), 12 Sim. 476 ; 6 Jur. 141.

A legacy being given to A. to bind her apprentice :—Held, that she was not entitled to the legacy while she refused to be apprenticed. Woolridge v. Stone, 4 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 56.

A legacy of 500*l.* is given to the eldest son of A., to be begotten, to place him out apprentice. A. has a son born after the testator's death, who brings a bill for the legacy; and it is decreed to be paid him forthwith, though not born in the testator's lifetime, and though the 500*l.* was given for a particular purpose. Nevill v. Nevill, 2 Vern. 431.

A testator bequeathed a sum of stock to trustees, upon trust, during sixty years from his death, if the law should allow, or, if not, then during the lives of his two sons and of the survivor, and twenty-one years after his death, to lay out the dividends in repairing and insuring the houses, &c., on his farms called H. and S. (it being his desire that upon no account should the timber of such farms be cut down during the said term of sixty years, on pain that the person so cutting such timber should lose all interest in the said estates, as if he were dead), and upon trust to pay the surplus, if any, of the said dividends equally among the persons for the time being in possession of the estates under his will, during the continuance of the said trust; and immediately after the expiration thereof, to transfer one moiety of the said stock to the person then in possession of the H. farm, such person being one of his sons, or a descendant of a son; but if not, then to the descendants of the testator's brothers and sisters, and to pay the other moiety in like manner to the person in possession of the S. farm. And the testator devised the H. farm to the same trustees in fee, upon trust for his son John, for ninety-nine years, if he should so long live, remainder to the use of his first and other sons in tail, with divers remainders over. And the testator devised the S. farm in like manner for the benefit of his son James and his issue. John and James, and their eldest sons, barred the entail in remainder in the said farms, and re-settled the same, and the stock, having been transferred into court under the Trustee Relief Act (10 & 11 Vict. c. 96), petitioned for the payment out of the fund to them:—Held, that the fund being intended for the benefit of the sons and their issue, the period for the enjoyment of the capital had been accelerated by barring the entail, which had determined the restriction against cutting down timber. Colson's Trusts, In re, Kay, 133; 2 Eq. R. 257; 23 L. J., Ch. 155; 2 W. R. 111.

—— By Negligence.]—A direction by a testator to his executors "to take a suitable house for three daughters to reside in with their governess":—Held, to entitle the daughters to the sums which ought to have been expended in taking a house for such a purpose during their minorities. Hutchinson v. Rough, 40 L. T. 289.

Testator authorised his executors, at any time before T. L. should attain the age of twenty-six years, to raise by sale of a sufficient part of certain bank annuities, any sum of money not exceeding 600*l.*, and pay and apply the same towards the preferment or advancement in life, or other the occasions of T. L., as the said executors should think proper; and at the age of twenty-six, he gave the said 600*l.* to T. L. absolutely. The executors declining to act, the court will not give this 600*l.* to T. L. before twenty-six, without referring it to the master to inquire whether T. L.'s situation requires the 600*l.*, or any part thereof, to be advanced. Lewis v. Lewis, 1 Cox, 162. S. C. cited also 15 Ves. 527.

—— By Lapse of Time.]—Legacy for the board and education of an infant until he shall be fit to be put out apprentice, and then a farther sum with him as an apprentice fee; the infant having attained nineteen, and not having been put out, was held entitled to the legacies. Barton v. Cooke, 5 Ves. 461.

B. made his will in 1830, directing, after payment of debts and legacies, "all my remaining property to be placed in proper securities, and appropriated to the education of my sister C.'s children, as shall seem most meet and beneficial to them, by the executors of this my will, recommending to them that the boys receive a classical education, to fit them for the learned professions, and the girls to fit them for the purpose of teaching in respectable private families, or in schools of the first respectability." B. died in 1859, having survived his executors, leaving a brother and three sisters his only next of kin, and children of his sister C., all grown up, surviving him. On a question as to administration with the will annexed:—Held, that C.'s children were entitled as beneficial residuary legatees. Presant v. Goodwin, 1 Sw. & Tr. 544; 29 L. J., P. 115.

A testatrix devised lands to trustees, in trust, in the first place, at their discretion, to pay an annuity to her son A.; and next to apply the rents to the maintenance, education, and bringing up of the three children of A. during A.'s life; the sole survivor of the three children attained twenty-one in the lifetime of A.:—Held, that the interest of such surviving child in the surplus rents and profits did not cease on his attaining twenty-one, but that he continued entitled to them during the life of his father. Badham v. Mee, 1 Russ. & M. 631.

—— By Death.]—Legacy given to an infant to put him out apprentice, and he dies before he is of competent age to be put out. It shall go to his executor or administrators. Barlow v. Grant, 1 Vern. 225.

Testator ordered and empowered the trustees of his will, at their free will and pleasure, to sell part of the trust property, and out of the proceeds to pay not exceeding 2,000*l.* to his son, for setting him up in business, or for such other purposes as the testator's wife should think proper and most beneficial to him. The son survived the testator, and afterwards died without having entered into business, and without the 2,000*l.*, or any part of it, having been raised. A general demurrer to a bill filed by his personal representatives to have the 2,000*l.* raised was overruled. Gough v. Bult, 16 Sim. 45. Affirmed 17 L. J., Ch. 401; 12 Jur. 859.

Trustees of a will were empowered to raise 600*l.* for church preferment for B. B. died before the money was raised:—Held, that the gift failed. Cowper v. Mantell, 22 Beav. 231; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 745; 4 W. R. 500.

A., seised of an estate of 600*l.* per annum, devises 300*l.* per annum to an infant, whose father was his heir-at-law, and the other 300*l.* per annum he devises to the father for his care in looking after the son's estate till he should come to the age of twenty-one. The father dies, leaving the son six years of age, having by his will devised this 300*l.* to his wife, and desired her to save what she could out of it for a portion for his daughter, and appointed her guardian for his son. This 300*l.* per annum does not determine by the father's death, but the wife shall have it till the son arrives at the age of twenty-one. Anon., Pre. Ch. 597.

Bequest for maintenance of a child held not to cease on his death, but to pass to his representative. Bayne v. Crowther, infra.

One devises that his executors shall sell his lands and invest the money in purchasing an annuity for J. S., and gives her the residue of his personal estate; the testator dies, and the annuitant dies three months after the testator; yet the administrator of the annuitant shall compel a sale, and shall have the money arising therefrom, and also the rents and profits till sale. Yates v. Compton, 2 P. Wms. 308.

A testatrix by her will gave an annuity to M. for her life, chargeable on the real estate mentioned in the will, and, subject to and charged with such annuity and other annuities, the testatrix devised the real estate to trustees upon trust to sell; and by a codicil she declared that her trustees might purchase government annuities for the annuitants, to be in place of the annuities given by the will, the purchase-money to be the first charge upon the proceeds of sale of the estates charged, which, upon such purchase being made, were to be thereupon discharged from the annuities. The estates charged were sold by the trustees on the 7th of August, 1890, and the contract fixed the 29th of September, 1890, for completion of the purchase. M. died before the 21st of September. The sale was completed on the 29th of September, and, in pursuance of the contract, the purchase-moneys were deposited at a bank for the purchase of the government annuities; but no such purchase was actually made. It was contended that M.'s representatives were entitled to the value of her annuity:—Held (distinguishing Yates v. Compton, supra), that the claim to the value of the annuity failed by M. having died before the actual completion of the sale, inasmuch as by the act of God the annuitant was not there to receive the money when it was paid to the trustees, and there was no enforceable trust and no vested right in her to receive the money. Secus as to the annuitants who survived completion. Mabbett, In re, Pitman v. Holborrow, 60 L. J., Ch. 279; [1891] 1 Ch. 707; 64 L. T. 447; 39 W. R. 537.

—— Of Trustees with Discretion.]—A testator gave 3,000*l.* to his executors for the benefit of M. during her life, and from and immediately after her death "in trust for the benefit of her children, to do that which they (my executors) may think most to their advantage." The executors died in the lifetime of M.:—Held, that the children of M. who were living at the time of her death were entitled to the fund in equal shares as tenants in common. Phene's Trust, In re, L. R. 5 Eq. 346.

—— Where Gift to B. during Life of A.]—A gift of income to arise from a fund during the life of A. to B. for his maintenance is an absolute gift to B., his executors and administrators, during the life of A., and is not confined to the joint lives of A. and B. Attwood v. Alford, L. R. 2 Eq. 479; 14 W. R. 956.

A gift for the maintenance and education of a legatee during the life of a third party is an absolute gift, so as to entitle the representatives of the legatee to the income accruing after his death.

Testator directed his trustees to apply the rents of his freehold estates during the life of his wife for the maintenance and education of his two great-nieces, and after his wife's death to sell the estates, of which he gave the proceeds equally between both his great-nieces, or, if there should be but one of them then living, to her only. One of the great-nieces died an infant in the lifetime of the widow:—Held, that a moiety of the rents from her death to the death of the widow did not go to the surviving great-niece, or result to testator's heir, but belonged to the deceased great-niece's representatives. Webb v. Kelly, 9 Sim. 469.

Bequest of leaseholds, in trust to pay half of the rents to A. for life, and the other half to B. for life, and in case of the death of either, his share of the rents "to be paid and applied for the maintenance of his children" until the decease of the survivor of A. and B., and then to sell and divide equally between the children of A. and B. After the death of A., one of his children died:—Held, that his representative was entitled to a share in the rents until the death of B. Bayne v. Crowther, 20 Beav. 400; 3 W. R. 395.

Where Discretion given to Legatee.]—Bequest to A. for such purposes as he shall think fit is for his own benefit. Paice v. Canterbury (Archbishop), 14 Ves. 370.

The testator having given his wife the option to occupy his house at a certain rent, and if she should choose to do so declared she should have the use of the furniture, by codicil revoking the bequest of an annuity to her, gave her a legacy to provide furniture in case she should not choose to occupy his house, or for any other purpose she should think proper. She occupied the house and furniture till her death, and her executor was held entitled to her legacy. Isherwood v. Payne, 5 Ves. 877.

—— To Legatee's Father.]—A testatrix directed her trustees to pay and apply the sum of 800*l.* in and upon the education of her grandson, it being her desire that her trustees should follow all the reasonable suggestions of the infant's father as to the school and mode of learning in which he should desire to have his son educated:—Held, that this was an absolute legacy vesting immediately, and fell within the general rule of legacies upon which interest was payable from a year after the death of the testatrix. Noel v. Jones, 16 Sim. 309; 17 L. J., Ch. 470; 12 Jur. 906.

—— To Trustees.]—Trust by will as to the residue of real and personal estate for a nephew and his heirs, to pay him the interest for life, with power to the trustees, in case they should see it would be for his benefit, to advance him, when it may be in their power, any part of the principal for his advancement in life, that they will not withhold such assistance as they may deem necessary; but in case no part should be advanced, the residue to be divided among the nephew's issue, with a limitation over if he should have no issue: the nephew is entitled, not to the absolute property, but for life only; and no advancement having been made, an inquiry was directed whether his circumstances required advancement. Robinson v. Cleator, 15 Ves. 526; 10 R. R. 118.

A testator bequeathed the residue of his personal estate to three trustees in trust to pay, apply, and dispose of all the interest thereof for the maintenance, support, and benefit of his three children, and the survivors and survivor of them, in such shares and proportions, and in such manner, as the trustees should think most proper and advisable; and if all the children should die without leaving issue, then to two of the trustees upon another trust:—Held, that the whole income of the residue was given for the children's benefit, and, part only having been so applied, the surplus devolved to the personal representative of the survivor. Beevor v. Partridge, 11 Sim. 229; 10 L. J., Ch. 89.

Testator authorised his executors, at any time before T. L. should attain the age of twenty-six years, to raise, by sale of a sufficient part of certain bank annuities, any sum of money not exceeding 600*l.*, and pay and apply the same towards the preferment or advancement in life, or other the occasions of T. L., as the said executors should think proper; and at the age of twenty-six he gave the said 600*l.* to T. L. absolutely. The executors declining to act, the court will not give this 600*l.* to T. L. before twenty-six without referring it to the master to inquire whether T. L.'s situation requires the 600*l.*, or any part thereof, to be advanced. Lewis v. Lewis, 1 Cox, 162. S. C. cited also 15 Ves. 527.

A testatrix gave a fund to A. and B., who were her executors, in trust to place out the same at interest, and to apply the interest thereof, or the principal, for the benefit of Mary Ann S., in such way as they might in their discretion think fit, during her life, it being the wish of the testatrix that they should dispose of the principal and interest, or any part, or should withhold the whole, and let the interest accumulate; and, upon the decease of Mary Ann S., in case the trust fund, or any part thereof, or interest, should then remain undisposed of, upon trust for other persons. A. and B. paid the interest of the trust fund, and 100*l.*, part of the capital, to Mary Ann S., and died without any other exercise of their discretionary power:—Held, that Mary Ann S. was entitled to the whole of the trust funds. Gude v. Worthington, 3 De G. & Sm. 389; 18 L. J., Ch. 303; 13 Jur. 847.

A testator empowered his trustees to raise a sum of money to be applied in the purchase of church preferment for his nephew. The nephew died before the money was raised:—Held, that a discretion was vested in the trustees, which not having been exercised by them, the gift failed. Cowper v. Mantell, 22 Beav. 231; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 745; 4 W. R. 500.

Gift of a share of residue to trustees, at their discretion, to apply the whole or part of the capital or income for the benefit of J., or, at the option of the trustees, to apply the whole to the augmentation of the other shares. J. died, and the trustees refused to exercise their option:—Held, that the share was undisposed of. Eddowes, In re, 1 Dr. & Sm. 395; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 354; 5 L. T. 389.

Devise of real estate and personal, to be laid out and settled, with directions to the trustees out of the rents of residue of testator's personal estate to raise and pay any money they should think proper and convenient, not exceeding 3,000*l.*, for the advancement of the plaintiff in any business, art, or profession, or in any civil or military employment:—Held, to be a gift of the money. Metcalfe v. Wilmot, Ambl. 704. And see Phene's Trust, In re, supra, col. 1329.

A legacy was given to trustees to be expended by them for the benefit and advancement of an infant as they in their absolute discretion should think fit. There was also a gift by the will of the income of a share of the residue to the infant for life on his attaining twenty-one, with a power to the trustees to apply the income during his minority for his maintenance and education. A suit for administration was instituted by the trustees immediately after the testator's death, and orders were from time to time made in it for the advancement, and also the maintenance and education, of the infant out of the legacy. On his attaining twenty-one:—Held, that he was absolutely entitled to the unapplied residue of the legacy. Held, also, that, inasmuch as maintenance would have been ordered out of the income of the contingent share of the infant, he was entitled to be recouped out of the past income of the residuary estate which had been expended out of the legacy for his maintenance and education. Furley v. Hyder, 41 L. J., Ch. 583; 26 L. T. 864.

A., by will, gave all his real and personal estate to trustees, upon trust, during the life of J. (a person non compos), to apply the whole or any part of the income of the real and personal estate for his maintenance, attendance, and comfort. The testator directed a sale of his real estate after the decease of J., the moneys to be deemed part of his personal estate, and the rents and profits of his real estate until a sale to be deemed part of the income of his personal estate, and then made a disposition of all his personal estate to residuary legatees. During the life of J. the trustees maintained him out of the income of the real and personal estate, without trenching on his private property, and accumulated the savings. After the decease of J. the trustees sold the real estate, and then, doubts arising as to the rights of parties to the savings, and also to the produce of the real estate, paid the whole into court:—Held, first, that the expression "comfort" in the trust for J. was so wide as to justify the application by the trustees of all the income devoted to that purpose, however large; but held, secondly, that, the whole not having been so applied, the gift was not such a gift for the benefit of J. as that the savings belonged to J. or his personal representative as part of his personal estate. Sanderson, In re, 3 K. & J. 497; 26 L. J., Ch. 804; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 658; 5 W. R. 864.

Bequest of consols in trust to purchase a life annuity for a lady, to be held for her separate use without power of anticipation; and in case of her illness or incapacity, the testator gave the trustees a discretionary power as to the application of the annuity for her maintenance, support, or otherwise for her personal benefit. The legatee being unmarried:—Held, that she was entitled to a transfer of the consols. Brown, In re, 27 Beav. 324.

A testator, after giving a life annuity, from and after the death or marriage of his sister-in-law, in trust for his nephew, her son, bequeathed the residue of his mixed real and personal estate specifically in favour of his nieces, their husbands and children. He then declared that, for making a further provision for the maintenance of his nephew, it should be lawful for his trustees, during the life of his sister-in-law, upon her request in writing, to expend any sums not exceeding 6,500*l.* in the purchase of a commission for, or in obtaining the promotion of, his nephew in the army. After the testator's death the nephew, being in the army, exchanged from one regiment into another, and in so doing paid 600*l.* for the exchange and 550*l.* for horses and outfit, after which, in May, 1868, his mother signed and sent a formal request to the trustees desiring that the whole of the 6,500*l.*, with interest from the day of the date of the request, should be raised out of the residuary estate, and paid to her son. From the 1st November, 1871, purchase of commissions in the army was by royal warrant abolished:—Held, that the nephew was entitled to the full sum of 6,500*l.*, with interest at 4 per cent. from the date of the request, subject to the payment of legacy duty. Palmer v. Flower, 41 L. J., Ch. 193; L. R. 13 Eq. 250; 25 L. T. 816; 20 W. R. 174.

When by a separation deed a sum of money was directed to be held by trustees for the wife for life, and after her death, as to four-sixth parts, for W., one of the children of the marriage, who was then an officer in the army, during his life, and after his death for his children, and it was declared that it should be lawful for the trustees, if in their discretion they should think fit, to apply any portion of the fund, not exceeding 2,000*l.*, in or towards effecting the promotion of W. in the army, and the trustees applied 850*l.* in the way pointed out by the deed, but in consequence of the abolition of purchase of commissions in the army no further sum could be applied for the same purpose:—Held, that, the purpose for which the power was given to the trustees having failed, the residue of the 2,000*l.* could not be raised and applied in any manner for the benefit of W. Ward, In re, 42 L. J., Ch. 4; L. R. 7 Ch. 727; 27 L. T. 668; 20 W. R. 1024.

In the event of the object failing for which money has been advanced by trustees, under a power of advancement, the money belongs to the person for whose benefit it was advanced, and cannot be recalled into the original fund. Therefore where, under such a power, the trustees purchased a commission in the army, and the person for whom the commission was purchased sold out shortly after joining his regiment, there being no fund:—Held, that he was, and not the trustees were, entitled to the purchase-money. Lawrie v. Bankes, 4 K. & J. 142; 27 L. J., Ch. 265; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 299; 6 W. R. 244.

A direction in a will to invest a sum of money "for the benefit and advantage of . . . J. A. . . . , such sum to be applied to his professional or other advancement, at the discretion and judgment" of the executor and trustee, is an absolute gift of the money, and the discretionary power is inoperative. Johnston, In re, Mills v. Johnston, 63 L. J., Ch. 753; [1894] 3 Ch. 204; 8 R. 563; 71 L. T. 392; 42 W. R. 616.

ii. To benefit Legatee and Others.

Gift to Parent and Children—When Parent takes absolutely.]—Legacy given to A., to be divided between himself and his family, is well paid to A. Cooper v. Thornton, 3 Bro. C. C. 96, 186.

A testator, by his will, gave to his sister J. C., a married woman, 1,000*l.* for her or for her children's sole use, benefit, and behoof for ever, and desired his executors to pay the same to her as soon as practicable. By a codicil, reciting that he was desirous of making further bequests in relation to his sister J. C. and her family, he desired his executors to invest a sum of 1,000*l.* upon certain trusts, for the benefit of J. C. and her children. J. C. survived the testator:—Held, upon a bill filed by J. C. and her husband against their children and the executors of the will, that J. C. was absolutely entitled to the 1,000*l.* legacy given by the will, and that it was not given to her separate use. Chipchase v. Simpson, 16 Sim. 485; 18 L. J., Ch. 145; 13 Jur. 90.

Bequest to testator's daughter for life, and on her death to the testator's son and his children. The son had no child at his father's death, but had children living at the death of the daughter:—Held, that his children were neither joint tenants with him, nor entitled in remainder after his death, but that the fund belonged to him absolutely. Scott v. Scott, 15 Sim. 47; 14 L. J., Ch. 439; 9 Jur. 580.

Testator devised a freehold estate to his wife for her life, and then directed that she should dispose of the same amongst the testator's children by her at her decease as she should think proper. The wife made no disposition of the estate. The children took no interest in the estate under the will. Crossling v. Crossling, 2 Cox, 396; 2 R. R. 88.

Bequest to A. for her and her children's use; a transfer decreed to A. Robinson v. Tickell, 8 Ves. 142; 7 R. R. 5.

Under a residuary devise and bequest to a wife, "to be used by her in such ways and means as she may consider best for her own benefit and that of my three children," the wife takes the testator's residuary estate absolutely, unaffected by any trust in favour of the children. M'Alinden v. M'Alinden, Ir. R. 11 Eq. 219.

A. devised his estate to his wife, she maintaining his four younger children; but if she married, she was to enjoy but one-half, and the younger children were to have the remainder. The wife did maintain the children, and did not marry:—Held, that she was entitled to the whole estate so devised. Seagrave v. Eustace, 3 Bro. P. C. 11.

A testator devised all the rest, residue, and remainder of his real and personal estate to a married woman, her heirs and assigns, for ever, but upon trust, "as to all the freehold," as he proceeded to declare; "and as to the personal property so given as aforesaid to her to and for her own proper use and benefit for ever," separately from her husband, "and the proceeds to be applied by her in the bringing up and maintenance of" all her children. She died, leaving several infant children:—Held, that she took an absolute interest in the personalty, unaffected by any trust. Mackett v. Mackett, 41 L. J., Ch. 704; L. R. 14 Eq. 49; 20 W. R. 860.

Where there is a gift by will to a person "for the maintenance or support of himself and his family," such gift is not clothed with any trust; but the legacy having been paid into court under the Trustee Relief Act, the court will order payment to the legatee in the words of the bequest. Costs out of the fund. Robertson's Trust, In re, 6 W. R. 405. S. P., Bond v. Dickinson, 33 L. T. 221.

The testator, by his will, desired that everything, during the life of his wife, should remain as it was for her use and benefit; and after her decease he gave his real estate to his male heir, and his personal estate to his children; adding, that he gave the above devise to his wife that she might support herself and her children according to her discretion, and for that purpose :—Held, that the widow took an absolute interest for her life in the real and personal estate. Thorp v. Owen, 2 Hare, 607 ; 12 L. J., Ch. 417 ; 7 Jur. 894.

A gift of income of residue to wife during widowhood not cut down by its being a gift for bringing up, maintenance, and education of, or by subsequent gift to, children. Leigh v. Leigh, 12 Jur. 907.

Construction of a will as to whether a bequest was to operate as a gift absolutely, or only for life. Woodbridge v. Mears, 6 L. J., Ch. 149.

A testator gave the residue of his estate to trustees upon trust to permit his wife to receive the rents, issues, and profits, and carry on his trade for her own benefit, and to enable her to bring up, maintain, and educate his children, durante viduitate :—Held, that the wife was absolutely entitled to the business. Jones v. Greatwood, 16 Beav. 527.

—— When Children take Entire Interest.]—A testatrix, under a power given by her marriage settlement, bequeathed a sum of stock to trustees, in trust to pay the interest to her husband, in order the better to enable him to maintain the children of the marriage until their shares should become assignable to them ; and if no children, or none that should live till their shares became assignable, she gave the interest of the fund to her husband for his life, and after his decease the principal to such person or persons as should be her next of kin. There was only one child of the marriage :—Held, that this bequest was a trust for the benefit of the child until the principal should become assignable to the child, and gave no beneficial interest, so as to entitle trustees for creditors, to whom the husband had assigned all his personal property, to claim the income, or any part of it. Wetherell v. Wilson, 1 Keen, 80 ; 5 L. J., Ch. 235.

A testator gave 50*l.* and certain houses to K., he paying the rent, and performing the covenants in the lease, to be solely applied for the benefit of his children :—Held, that the children took the whole beneficial interest, with a discretionary trust to K. as to the application during their minority. Kennett v. Gadbury, 11 L. T. 17 ; 12 W. R. 1072.

Testator bequeathed the remainder of his property to his sister, A. B., to dispose of amongst her children as she might think proper : —Held, that A. B. took no interest in the residue. Blakeney v. Blakeney, 6 Sim. 52.

—— When Parent takes subject to Maintenance of Children.]—Under a bequest of residue to wife of testator to the intent that she might dispose of the same for the benefit of herself and their children in such manner as she might deem most advantageous, the wife does not take an absolute interest. Raikes v. Ward, 1 Hare, 445 ; 11 L. J., Ch. 276 ; 6 Jur. 530.

Testator gave all his property in trust to pay the income to his wife for the support and education of his children, and after her death to be divided among them :—Held, that the wife was entitled for life, she maintaining the children. Gilbert v. Bennett, 10 Sim. 371.

Direction for payment of residue to E., to be applied by her at her discretion for or towards the education of her sons, and that she should not be liable to account to him or any other person for the disposal or application of it, the residue being considerable :—Held, that E. was entitled to it, subject to the application of so much as the court might think fit to the education of the son during his minority. Hamley v. Gilbert, Jac. 354.

A testator by his will directed that all his property should be "at the disposal of his wife for herself and children" : — Held, reversing the decision below, that there was no joint tenancy between the widow and children ; but that the widow, though not entitled to the property absolutely, had a personal interest in it, and, as between herself and her children, was either a trustee of the fund, with a large discretion as to the application of it, or had a power in favour of the children, subject to a life interest in herself. Crockett v. Crockett, 2 Ph. 553 ; 17 L. J., Ch. 230 ; 12 Jur. 234—L. C. Reversing 1 Hare, 451 ; 5 id. 326.

A testator gave his residuary estate to trustees in trust for his sister's younger children equally, and to vest in them at the usual periods ; and he directed his trustees, during the minorities of the children, to pay the interest of their shares to his sister, or to the guardians of the children, to be applied for their maintenance and education : —Held, that the sisters were entitled to receive the interest of their children's shares during the minorities of their children. Berkeley v. Swinburne, 6 Sim. 613 ; 3 L. J., Ch. 165.

Testator gave one-third of his residue to his wife, the other two-thirds to trustees in trust for his two sons, to be paid them at twenty-one, in equal shares, with benefit of survivorship, the income, until the shares should be payable, to be paid to the wife, to be applied by her, or, in case of her death, by the trustees, for the maintenance and education of the two sons :—Held, that the wife was entitled to the income of the children's shares during their respective minorities, and one son having died, to the income of the whole during the minority of the survivor. Hadow v. Hadow, 9 Sim. 438.

—— When Parents and Children take jointly.]—Held, that a bequest of 30*l.* a year to A., together with her children, B., C., and D., and for their joint maintenance, was a bequest of that annual sum to the mother and her children, as joint tenants, for the life of the longest liver of them. Wilson v. Maddison, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 372 ; 12 L. J., Ch. 420 ; 7 Jur. 572.

Bequest to a widow "to be applied by her for the payment of my lawful debts, and the residue for her own use and benefit and that of our infant daughter" :—Held, that this was not a discretionary trust, but that they were equally entitled. Bibby v. Thompson, 32 Beav. 646.

A bequest of a fund to trustees, in trust to pay the dividends to A., the wife of B., for the benefit of B., herself, and children, during B.'s life, and at B.'s death the fund to remain in trust for the benefit of A. and children for her life, and at her death to be equally divided among the children :—Held, that A. was a trustee of the interest for herself, her husband and children, in equal shares during her life. Taylor v. Bacon, 8 Sim. 100.

—— When Parent takes for Life—Children in Remainder.]—Legacy to a father the better to enable him to provide for his younger children ; he consented to secure the capital, but was held entitled to the interest. Brown v. Casamajor, 4 Ves. 498.

A testator thus expressed himself: "It is my wish that 10,000*l.* be given to my dear brother, knowing that he is not so well off pecuniarily as he ought to be with his large family, and the kind obligations which he imposes on himself in aiding poor relations, and I should wish the 10,000*l.* held by trustees for the benefit of his family, the interest paid half-yearly, and the principal divided among them according to the discretion of the trustees or their executors after the children shall have come of age":—Held, that the brother took a life interest in the legacy, with remainder to his children as tenants in common. Gladstone v. Gladstone, 18 L. T. 49; 16 W. R. 537.

A testator gave his property to trustees for the benefit of his daughter "for her use and the use of" certain of her children for their education, &c., adding a direction that his daughter should only use the income until the youngest child attained twenty-one or married. Six of the children specified attained twenty-one, and survived their mother:—Held, that there was a gift of the income to the daughter for life, subject to the trust for the education, &c., of her children, and a gift of the capital at her death to the six children as joint tenants. Whitty, In re, Evans v. Evans, 43 L. T. 692.

—— Interest of Children on Sale.]—A testator devised his real and personal estate to his wife "absolutely, and at her own disposal, for the maintenance of herself and bringing up of my children":—Held, that she could sell the real estate. Wood v. Richardson, 4 Beav. 174; 5 Jur. 603. S. P., Pratt v. Church, 4 Beav. 177, n.

A testator devised certain estates by name, together with his farming stock and furniture, to his beloved wife to sell, to discharge all his creditors; and he constituted his wife and T. W. his executors, whom he appointed to sell and dispose of all his estates and chattels in such manner as they should jointly agree upon, or not to sell if it seemed most advisable to keep them, or in any way they should think proper, so that every creditor had his money, and if sold, all overplus to his wife, towards her support and her family:—Held, upon demurrer, that the testator's children had such an interest in the devised estates as enabled them to sustain a bill against the widow and her co-executor, impeaching a sale on the ground of a fraud, and praying an account of the rents and profits. Woods v. Woods, 1 Myl. & Cr. 401.

—— Separate Use of Mother.]—Bequest of residuary estate to trustees in trust to pay income to testator's wife for her life, to be by her applied for the maintenance of herself and children by the testator:—Held, not to be a gift to the separate use. Wardle v. Claxton, 9 Sim. 524; 8 L. J., Ch. 119; 3 Jur. 145. And see Chipchase v. Simpson, supra, col. 1334.

Where Power of Disposition given.]—A testator by his will, having enumerated the particulars of his property, gave certain portions to his daughter A., and other portions to his daughter B., subject to legacies charged thereon respectively. By a codicil he cancelled that part of his will, and said that his sons-in-law, C. and D. might "dispose of the property which he had left for the good of their families," subject to legacies:—Held, that C. and D. respectively took absolute interests in the portion given by the will to their respective wives. Alexander v. Alexander, 6 De G. M. & G. 593; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 28; 5 W. R. 28—C. A.

S. G. granted and devised to trustees certain freehold property for the term of ninety-nine years, at a peppercorn rent, upon trust, to permit his wife and such persons as she should by will bequeath the same, to take to his, her, or their own use and benefit the rents, &c., of the said lands for the said term of ninety-nine years, exclusively of any husband of his said wife. The wife, after her husband's death, conveyed her interest in the property to certain persons represented by the defendant, and subsequently made her will, giving the property to the plaintiff:—Held, that the wife of S. G. took the property for the whole term of ninety-nine years, and not merely a life estate, with remainder to such persons as she should appoint by will; and that she had conveyed away all her interest to the defendant. Glover v. Hall, 16 Sim. 568; 18 L. J., Ch. 305.

Gift of residuary real and personal estate to the testator's wife, with power to her to dispose of the same unto and amongst all the testator's children, or to any one or more of them, for such estate, either in fee-simple or in tail, term of life, or other interest, temporary or lasting, or in such other shares, proportions, or interest, as his wife should, in her discretion, see most fitting and proper:—Held, to be an absolute gift to the wife. Howarth v. Dewell, 29 Beav. 18; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1360; 9 W. R. 27.

Where Trust created.]—Bequest to A., his heirs and assigns, "for his and their own use and benefit, and for the maintenance and education of his children":—Held that A. took no beneficial interest under this gift, which constituted him a trustee for the children. Steadman v. Rodwell, 1 W. R. 464.

A testatrix, by her will, directed her trustee to pay 1,000*l.* into the hands of C. H., to be laid out by him in the education of his two eldest sons, who should be alive at testatrix's death; if only one son, then 500*l.*, for the like purpose; if no son of C. H. living at her death, she directed the legacy in his favour to fall into the residue. C. H. died before the testatrix, leaving two sons living at her death:—Held, that the legacy was not an absolute gift to C. H., but a trust to some extent for the sons, and therefore the limitation over did not take effect by the predecease of C. H. Hodgson v. Green, 11 L. J., Ch. 312; 6 Jur. 819.

A testator bequeathed a house, &c., to his wife for the use of herself and his daughter, subject to the following trust: "that his wife and daughter should live together, and that his wife should take charge and see to the maintenance and support of his daughter during her minority, with the instructions of H. C." He also gave 100*l.* to his wife, in addition to the house, &c., for the further support of herself and his daughter:—Held, that the widow took absolutely, subject to a trust for the maintenance and support of the daughter during minority, and which did not cease upon her marriage under age. Conolly v. Farrell, 8 Beav. 347; 14 L. J., Ch. 189; 9 Jur. 242.

A testator devised his property as follows: "I give and bequeath all my property, real and personal, of whatever nature or kind, wheresoever to be found in possession, reversion, or expectancy, to which I am legally or equitably entitled, unto my dear wife, absolutely, and to be by her willed to any or either of my children in any manner suitable to her wishes, to hold to her for ever; and I appoint her executrix of this my will, revoking all other wills":—Held, that the wife took the property absolutely, but that a trust was engrafted on it for the benefit of the children who might survive her, with a power for her to appoint it among them by will, as she might think fit. Evans v. Evans, 33 L. J., Ch. 662; 10 L. T. 59; 12 W. R. 508.

The widow made a will, by which she devised part of his real estate to a son of his, in liquidation of a debt due to him from the testator; and she afterwards made an agreement with that son and another, that the latter should have the property on the terms of his paying the debt due to the former, and also stipulating for certain benefits for herself:—Held, that neither the will of the widow, nor the agreement, was an exercise of the power of the testator's will. Ib.

A testator constituted his widow guardian of his two children then living with him (one, a boy, being the child of another woman), and he gave her 4,000*l.* "to be used for her own and the children's benefit, as she should, in her judgment and conscience, think fit":—Held, that the fund must be invested, and that she was entitled to the income for her life, and that the children had an interest in the capital, and that the wife had a discretion as to the application of the income between the three objects, which the court would not control if bonâ fide exercised. Hart v. Tribe, 19 Beav. 149: 2 W. R. 289.

A testator bequeathed to his wife all his right, title, and interest in certain real and personal property to be disposed of as she thought fit amongst his children during her life, or by her will, provided she did not marry, but should she marry, then he ordered his executors to enter into possession of his property, and divide it amongst his children, or dispose of it as they thought proper for their benefit, paying to his wife 20*l.*, and she should have no further claim. The widow died without having married again, and without having made any disposition of the property:—Held, that the widow had taken an interest for her life in the property, with a trust to dispose of same during her life, or by will, amongst the children, and that as she had failed to make any such disposition, it was divisible amongst the children in equal shares. Rorke v. Abraham, [1895] 1 Ir. R. 334.

Bequest of "everything to my trustees under my marriage settlement, adding the name of J. P. to the same, for the benefit of my wife and children":—Held, that the testator's estate was held subject to the trusts of his marriage settlement. Pybus v. Cottrell, 30 Beav. 106.

Gift to A. and the Children of B.]—Testator gave annuities out of any money arising from whatever dividends he might die possessed of in the Bank of England, and the residue of the said dividends to his brother A., to enable him to assist such of the children of his brother F. as he should find deserving of encouragement, and, upon the demise of the annuitants, or any of them, the testator gave each annuitant's proportion of the before mentioned dividends to his brother A., to be at his disposal, but the principal to remain in the bank:—Held, that no trust was created for the children of F., but that A. took absolutely the capital of the testator's stock, subject to the annuities. Benson v. Whittam, 5 Sim. 22.

A gift of dividends to A., to be by him used and applied for the maintenance of the children of his late wife during their minorities:—Held, to confer a life interest in A. for his own benefit after the youngest child had attained twenty-one. Walker's Trusts, In re, 16 Jur. 1154; 1 W. R. 408.

—— Conditional Payment to A.]—A testator gave the income of his residuary estate to his children in equal shares, and made provisions for a home to be maintained under the charge of M. for such of his unmarried children as chose to take advantage of it, and directed that while any child resided with M. a sum of 50*l.* a year should be deducted from his or her share of the income and paid to M. A., an unmarried son of the testator, ceased to reside with M., and assigned all his interest under his father's will to B. for a valuable consideration. He afterwards returned to reside with M.:—Held, that notwithstanding the assignment, M. was entitled to be paid the 50*l.* a year out of A.'s share of the income while he resided with her. Greenwood, In re, Priestley v. Griffith, 66 L. T. 101; 40 W. R. 357—C. A.

Gift to A. for Child of B.]—Testatrix gave 1,000*l.* to her nephew to maintain and bring up her natural son F. B.; and she directed the interest of one-fourth of her residue to be applied to the maintenance and education of F. B. during his infancy, and the capital to be paid to him on his attaining twenty-one:—Held, that the nephew was not a trustee of the 1,000*l.* for F. B., but was entitled to it for his own benefit. Biddles v. Biddles, 15 Sim. 1. S. C., nom. Ward v. Biddles, 16 L. J., Ch. 455; 11 Jur. 624.

—— To A.'s Husband and Child.]—A testator gave a sum of money to trustees to pay the income to his then unmarried daughter for life, and after her decease to permit her husband to receive the income for his life, nevertheless to be by him applied for the maintenance and education or benefit of the children of his daughter. The daughter afterwards married, and her husband subsequently took the benefit of the Insolvent Debtors Act; his wife afterwards died, leaving her husband and two children surviving:—Held, that he took beneficially a life interest in the legacy. Byne v. Blackburn, 26 Beav. 41; 27 L. J., Ch. 788; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 803; 6 W. R. 681.

—— To A. and a Charity.]—Bequest to trustees to be divided between the testator's wife and six poor members of a chapel, share and share alike:—Held, that the wife was entitled to one-seventh absolutely, and that the other six-sevenths formed a permanent charitable fund, the interest alone of which was from time to time payable to the poor. Gregory v. Att.-Gen., 2 Beav. 366.

—— Of what Property.]—Testatrix concluded her will as follows: "My house in Trevor square I give to my brother as residuary legatee of my remaining property for the benefit of his children":—Held, that the brother took the residue as well as the house in trust for his children. Inderwick v. Inderwick, 13 Sim. 653; 8 Jur. 53.

Where Purpose of Gift fails—Gift to Parent and Children—No Children.]—If estate be given to father for the benefit of his children at twenty-one, and he has no children, the father takes absolutely. Salt v. Chambers, 9 Mod. 260.

Under a bequest of stock in trust to pay the dividends to M., the niece of the testator, "for and towards the maintenance, education, and bringing up of all and every the child and children of the said M., until he, she, or they shall attain twenty-one," then to transfer the principal equally among the children, with a bequest over of principal, in default of such issue, to the nephews and nieces of the testator living at the death of M.; the dividends are payable to M. although she has no child. Hammond v. Neame, 1 Swan. 35; 1 Wils. Ch. 9; 18 R. R. 15.

Testator directed his trustees to apply a fund to the support and maintenance of his son's wife, and for the support and education of his children born in wedlock. The son had no children living at the testator's death:—Held, that the wife took the fund absolutely for her separate use. Cape v. Cape, 2 Y. & C. 543; 1 Jur. 307.

A testatrix bequeathed 500*l.* to A. absolutely, but revoked the gift by codicil, whereby she gave a like sum to A. for life, with a direction to the trustee to sell the same for the benefit of A.'s children, or to purchase an annuity for A. A. died a spinster, and no settlement was made or annuity purchased:—Held, that the legacy formed part of A.'s estate, and did not sink into the residue. Traill, In re, 18 L. T. 176.

—— Maintenance becoming impracticable.]—One devises a house to his cousin, directing that an annuity of 1,200*l.* per annum shall be paid her, and that she should maintain her son there; the son chooses to go from her; still the cousin shall have her annuity in the same manner as if the son had died. Blackborn v. Edgley, 1 P. Wms. 604.

A gift for the "present expenses of a wife and the children":—Held, that she was absolutely entitled, though one of the children was an adopted child, and was taken away from her. Hart v. Tribe, 18 Beav. 215; 23 L. J., Ch. 462; 2 W. R. 289.

—— By Misconduct of Widow.]—A hotel-keeper by his will bequeathed his property to trustees, upon trust, to permit his widow to carry on the business so long as it could be carried on with advantage to his estate, and to permit her to receive the profit so that she might maintain herself and her family, and educate the testator's children. He also directed that if the profits were insufficient for this purpose, the deficiency should be supplied out of the income of the general estate, which, subject to this direction, was to be accumulated, and, with the principal, to be divided among the testator's children on their attaining twenty-one. There was a proviso that if from any cause it should be advisable to discontinue the business (which the trustees were to have power to do), the stock-in-trade should be sold, and the proceeds form part of the general estate, and that the income of the whole, or so much of the income as should be required, should be applied in the maintenance of the testator's wife and family, and the education of the children:—Held, that on the widow, by misconduct, becoming unfit to maintain and educate the children, she was not entitled to the surplus profits, after setting apart sufficient for their maintenance and education, but could only claim maintenance for herself. Castle v. Castle, 1 De G. & J. 352; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 723; 5 W. R. 643.

—— Gift to A. and B.—Death of A.]—"I devise 100*l.* per annum to my son A. and his wife for their respective lives, 60*l.* whereof is to be paid to the wife for the support of herself and daughter, the remaining 40*l.* to my son." The son dies; the wife shall have the whole 100*l.* per annum. Cowper v. Scott, 3 P. Wms. 121.

R. 286. Jubber v. Jubber, 9 Sim. 503. Webb v. Wools, 2 Sim. (N.S.) 267; 21 L. J., Ch. 625. And cases sub PRECATORY TRUSTS, post, cols. 1467, et seq.

f. Absolute Gifts when Cut Down.

i. By Repugnant Words.

General Rules.]—It is a rule of the courts, in construing written instruments, that when an interest was given, or an estate conveyed in one clause of the instrument in clear decisive terms, such interest or estate cannot be taken away or cut down by raising a doubt upon the extent and meaning and application of a subsequent clause, nor by inference therefrom, nor by any subsequent words that are not as clear and decisive as the words of the clause giving that interest or estate. Thornhill v. Hall, 2 Cl. & F. 22; 8 Bligh (N.S.) 88.

A testator recites, seriatim, in his will, the interests he had in several leaseholds for lives, and after each recital he devises the rents and profits of each leasehold to his wife and a married daughter, and to each of his sons and unmarried daughters, severally and respectively, devising to his son R. part of the profit-rent of Blackacre during the term of the lease, which was for the lives of the testator, and of R. and another, and devising to his unmarried daughters nominatim different parts of the rents of Whiteacre, in addition to equal shares given to them by the preceding clause in the rents of another estate; "and, further, if any of the above legatees should die, or die unmarried," he left the property bequeathed to them to be divided equally among the survivors of them:—Held, that the devise to R. in Blackacre was for the whole term of the lives of the cestuis que vient, and was not, on R.'s dying unmarried, cut down to an estate for his life only, by the clause of survivorship, but that the words of the clause applied to the last-mentioned unmarried daughters only. Ib.

A testator gave the income of all the residue of his property, subject to two annuities, to his wife for life, and after her death to his son for life, and then bequeathed (a second time) the residue of his property to his son, excepting all money in the funds, which he gave to the children of his son:—Held, that after the death of the wife, the son took the income of all money in the funds for his life, as well as all the residuary property, since a preceding unambiguous gift cannot be cut down by subsequent implication. Bell v. Bell, 3 Jur. 554.

Where an absolute interest is given by a will, it will not be cut down except by distinct words. Adshead v. Willetts, 29 Beav. 358; 9 W. R. 405.

An absolute gift in clear language, in a will, is not taken away unless by language equally clear. Kiver v. Oldfield, 4 De G. & J. 30.

Where, therefore, a testator having made a provision in his will for his eldest grandson by a bequest of leasehold property, directed that his residuary real and personal estate should be equally divided between his four other grandchildren in common, and declared that the share of each should remain vested in the trustees of the will, upon trust, to permit him and her to receive the income for life, and after the decease of each, his or her share to be in trust for his or her children; provided, that if the share of any one or more of the four grandchildren should not vest in any children or child of his or her body, or in case the term in the leasehold given to the eldest grandson should expire in his lifetime, then and in either of such cases the eldest grandson should be let into and take an equal share in the residuary estate intended for the other four grandchildren and their issue equally with such other grandchildren, or their respective issue:—Held, that on the death of one of the four younger grandchildren, without issue, the residue remained divided into four, and was not redistributable into five parts. Ib.

A., by will dated in October, 1837, but not executed until 1844, gave his real and personal estate to his son when he should have attained twenty-one, subject to an annuity to his widow. He then proceeded thus: "But should the hand of death fall on my widow and son, and my having no children, or my son any issue, my will is, that, should he leave a widow, she shall receive the annual sum of 50*l.*, during her widowhood, out of my real estates; the residue then to be equally divided, after paying such legacies as I may hereafter name, the division of property to be between my late brother's surviving children, and my sister C. D.'s children, my sister E. F.'s children, and my nieces G. H. and I. J., they paying all my son's just debts, funeral expenses, and demands, or my wife's should she be the longest liver." At the date of the testator's will his son was an infant, but when it was executed he had attained the age of twenty-six:—Held, that the gift over of the real estate took effect on the son dying without issue; but that in respect of the personalty the son was absolutely entitled. The proposition that where there is a clear gift in a will it is not to be cut down by anything subsequent, unless it is equally clear, not approved. The subsequent clause may have that effect, if it indicates, with reasonable certainty, the intention of the testator. Randfield v. Randfield, 8 H. L. Cas. 225; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 901; 9 W. R. 1.

Express bequest or power not controlled by the reason assigned; which, though it may aid the construction if doubtful, cannot warrant the rejection of clear words. Cole v. Wade, 16 Ves. 46; 10 R. R. 126.

When there is an express gift in a will, and there is a subsequent clause inconsistent with the first, but with only an implied revocation, the prior gift takes effect. Kerr v. Clinton (Baroness), L. R. 8 Eq. 462; 17 W. R. 980.

A testator having real estates subject to mortgages, for which he was not personally liable, devised his personal estate for payment of his debts, and the surplus to his wife absolutely, and in a subsequent devise of his real estate directed that his trustees should raise by sale thereof so much as his personal estate should prove insufficient for payment of the existing mortgages and charges upon the estate, and subject thereto he devised the estate to his sons:—Held, that this was not a revocation of the prior gift, and that the mortgage debts were not payable out of the personal estate. Ib.

Where in a will there are successive limitations of personal estate in favour of several persons absolutely, the effect of the failure of an earlier gift is to accelerate, and not to destroy, a later gift. Therefore, if one or more of such persons die in the testator's lifetime, the first in order who survives the testator takes absolutely, although he would have taken nothing if a prior legatee had survived. The doctrine of repugnancy between an absolute gift and any ulterior disposition of the same property does not come into operation until some legatee actually takes. Lowman, In re, Devenish v. Pester, 64 L. J., Ch. 567; [1895] 2 Ch. 348; 12 R. 362; 72 L. T. 816—C. A.

See also Goodwin v. Finlayson, 25 Beav. 65; Walmsley v. Foxall, 1 De G. J. & S. 605. And cases sub tit. INCONSISTENCY, ante, col. 695.

Where General Words followed by Limited Gift.]—A. bequeathed to his wife all his property whatsoever and wheresoever of which he should be possessed at the time of his death, and "as to all the rest, residue, and remainder of my estate and effects whatsoever and wheresoever, both real and personal, whether in possession, reversion, remainder or expectancy," to trustees, to permit his wife to have the use and enjoyment of all such parts as should yield income during her life, with a gift over to his children:—Held, that the bequests were not inconsistent, and that the wife was entitled to a life interest in the whole of the estate. Hare v. Westropp, 4 L. T. 578; 9 W. R. 689.

A testator gave a share of his residuary estate upon trust for his sister absolutely. The will contained a subsequent proviso and declaration by which the whole interest in the share previously disposed of was settled, and under which the sister was given merely a life interest:—Held, that the first trust was only for the purpose of division, and that the sister took a life interest in the settled share which did not lapse on her death in the testator's lifetime. Stewart v. Jones (3 De G. & J. 532) and Roberts, In re (30 Ch. D. 234), distinguished. Pinhorne, In re, Moreton v. Hughes, 63 L. J., Ch. 607; [1894] 2 Ch. 276; 8 R. 264; 70 L. T. 901; 42 W. R. 438.

By his will, dated in 1870, a testator gave all his household furniture, and all his real and personal estate, and sums of money in the house, and all sums of money in the savings bank, and all other his estate and effects with the exception of two 5*l.* shares in a certain company, unto his wife, and he gave to his sons the two 5*l.* shares; and he also desired that, at the decease of his wife, what might remain of his property should be equally divided amongst his surviving children. The question was whether this was an absolute gift of the property to the testator's widow, or whether there was a trust in favour of the testator's children :—Held, that the testator's widow took only a life interest in the property. Sheldon and Kemble, In re, 53 L. T. 527.

A father gave all his personal estate upon trust for his two sons "to be disposed of" as follows : Income to accumulate until sons respectively attained twenty-five, when each was to take half of the accumulations or the survivor the whole ; between twenty-five and thirty the sons or their widows were to receive the income. Sons on attaining thirty, and having children, the whole to be paid to "them" ; if either or both should be without children, then they should only be entitled to the income. One son died unmarried in the testator's lifetime ; the other son attained the age of thirty and had a child :—Held, that he was only entitled to a life interest. Allen v. Allen, 21 W. R. 747.

Devise to A., "unto him and his heirs for ever," forbidding any mortgage, "but to be free from all charge unto the respective heirs for ever" :—Held, a gift of fee simple to A. Pye v. Bradbury, 3 L. T. 327.

The putting limiting words in the first or last part of a sentence makes no difference as to the construction.

A testator may give one thing to a person for life, together with an absolute property in another, unless the latter should be appurtenant to the thing before given.

Where testator bequeathed to his wife all his household goods, furniture, plate, linen, and china in his house to E., or to the said house belonging, and also the said house, gardens, field, and land thereto belonging, so long as she continued his widow and no longer, and he likewise gave her his jewels, &c. :—Held, that the household goods, furniture, plate, linen, and china were put under the same restriction as the house itself ; but that the jewels were the wife's absolute property. Richards v. Baker, 2 Atk. 321 ; 9 Mod. 325. And see Coward v. Larkman, 60 L. T. 1 —H. L. (E.)

Limited followed by Unlimited Gift.]—Bequest of 140*l.* to A., the interest to be paid to her during her life, and, at her death, to be paid to her children, followed by the appointment of a trustee and by a direction (not limited to her life) to pay her the interest :—Held, that A. took a life interest only, and not an absolute interest, subject to the gift to her children. Graham, In re, 33 Beav. 470.

Where General Gift to A. followed by Gift of Residue to B.]—A testator gave to his wife, F. H., the interest of all his property in the public funds during her life, the principal being placed in the names of the undermentioned trustees for that purpose, and he also gave to his wife all his other property which he might be possessed of at his decease, after paying his funeral expenses and debts, part of his funded property being applied for that purpose, if necessary. On the death of his wife he gave to his daughter, J. H., 200*l.* stock 3 per cent. reduced annuities, and to two other persons 50*l.* 3 per cent. reduced annuities, respectively, and to his son the residue of his property, after paying those legacies. And he appointed two persons his executors and trustees. At the date of his will the testator had 700*l.* 3 per cent. reduced annuities, but he afterwards sold out that stock, and invested part of the produce on mortgage : —Held, that the gift to F. H. of the interest of the testator's property in the funds was specific, and consequently adeemed by the sale of the stock, but that the other legacies were general, and that F. H. took only a life interest in the testator's residuary estate. Hayes v. Hayes, 1 Keen, 97 ; 5 L. J., Ch. 243.

A husband bequeathed certain specified goods and all other his personal estate to his wife absolutely for her sole and separate use, and after devising his real estate to his wife for life, with divers limitations over, he bequeathed the residue of his personal estate in trust for his children or their issue, and in default for his brothers and sisters and their issue as therein mentioned :—Held, having regard also to the general scope of the will, that the wife took only a life interest in the personal estate. Bagshaw, In re, 46 L. J., Ch. 567 ; 36 L. T. 749 : 25 W. R. 659—C. A.

Life Estate to A. followed by General Devise to B.]—A testator having given a life estate in remainder expectant upon a prior life estate to R., by a codicil made twenty-five years afterwards, devised all his estates and property of every description to B., which latter clause would, taken by itself, have carried the estate devised by the will to R. :—Held, that R. was entitled to the life estate devised to him by the will. Robertson v. Powell, 10 Jur. (N.S.) 442 ; 12 W. R. 623.

Life Estate to A., Remainder to B., Remainder to C.] — Testator bequeaths certain leasehold hereditaments to A. for life, remainder to B., remainder to C. :—Held, that B. takes a life interest only in the leaseholds. Lonsdale (Earl) v. Berchtoldt (Countess), Kay, 640 ; 23 L. J., Ch. 816 ; 18 Jur. 811.

A testatrix bequeathed the "interest of a sum of money to her eldest child for life," and afterwards to devolve in succession on her (the testatrix's) remaining children :—Held, on the death of the eldest, that the others were entitled for life in succession, according to their priority of age. Young v. Shepherd, 10 Beav. 207 ; 16 L. J., Ch. 247.

Absolute Gift subject to Interim Term.]—The testator devised a freehold estate (which he declared should be considered as personalty) to his executors and trustees, upon trust "for the second surviving son of my brother James W., on his arriving at the age of twenty-five, the annual rental in the meanwhile (after all just and necessary expenses for the benefit and maintenance of the estate being deducted) to be annually divided between my surviving brothers. In failure of such second surviving son of James W., I leave the estate to my brother Daniel W., and his heirs male. Failing such heirs male, I leave and bequeath the estate to the heirs of the W. family." Daniel died in the lifetime of the testator. E. was the second son of James W. :—Held, that E. was entitled in fee-simple absolute to the estate, subject to a term from the death of the testator until such day as E. should attain, or but for death would attain, his age of twenty-five, which term was vested in the testator's three brothers as tenants in common. Blount v. Wheble, 21 L. T. 259.

—— Followed by Gift over of Property undisposed of.]—B., who was possessed of a house in Stephen's Green, Dublin, held under a lease for three lives, by his will dated May 27th, 1833, devised to his eldest son J. R. B. his house in Stephen's Green, with all the furniture therein (except certain articles), his pictures, books, &c., except plate and linen, he paying the rent thereof, and in case J. R. B. should not think proper to occupy or keep his said house, he might be at liberty to sell the same together with (if he though fit) the pictures, &c.; but it was the testator's wish that his books should not be sold, but remain in his family; the amount of the sale to be applied to his own use and benefit; and in case J. R. B. should die without having a family before he should have sold the said house, the testator devised the house in the same manner to his second son W. B.; and in case he should so die, the house was to be sold and the proceeds divided among his daughters. The testator died in 1836, and J. R. B. entered into possession. He died in 1890, having by his will devised all his property to the defendant, who entered into possession of all the property except the house in Stephen's Green. By deed poll, dated March 16th, 1895, the defendant disclaimed the interest in this house. In an action against the defendant for arrears of rent of the house:—Held, that J. R. B. took the house absolutely under the will of the original testator, and not for life only, and that it was not competent for the defendant to disclaim one portion of the property devised to him by J. R. B., while accepting the rest. Parnell v. Boyd, [1896] 2 Ir. R. 571—C. A.

—— Followed by Proviso for Substitution.]—G. left the residue of his property to trustees in trust (after the death of his wife) for his children, who, being sons, should attain the age of twenty-one or leave issue, or being daughters, should attain twenty-one or marry; and if only one child then for him or her absolutely. The will went on to provide that the children of the testator's children should stand in the place of their respective parents, which provision was followed by clauses of survivorship, accruer, maintenance, and accumulation. In the accumulation clause reference was made to "the parties entitled for life":—Held, that the testator's children took life interests only in the residue. Green, In re, 17 W. R. 1081.

A testator gave all his property to his wife during her life, and at her death to his brothers and sister, share and share alike, at their death to their surviving children, share and share alike:—Held, that subject to the life interest of his widow, the testator's brothers and sister took absolute interests. Hyndman v. Hyndman, [1895] 1 Ir. R. 179.

—— Of Residue to A., followed by Gifts to B. and C. on A.'s death.]—A testatrix gave her residuary personal estate to A. absolutely. She then gave legacies to several persons after the death of A.:—Held, that this did not cut down A.'s interest in the residue to a life interest. Jennings v. Sparrow, 17 Jur. 433; 1 W. R. 297.

—— Followed by Precatory Words.]—Testator gave his house, his stock in the public funds, and residuary personal estate to trustees upon trust, to let the house and convert the furniture and other effects into money, and pay the income, &c., to his wife for her life, and after her death upon trust to assign the house and pay and transfer the said stocks, funds, and premises to his nephew R., for his own use and benefit absolutely. An undated letter from the testator to R. was found amongst his papers after his death, by which the testator purported to explain the intentions of his will. This letter contained expressions of wish that R. should be considerate and liberal to his relations, should have some one of his nephews educated as a physician, and bequeath to such nephew the greater part of the property, the interest of which "I now bequeath to your dear aunt, and after her to yourself (R.)." This letter was admitted to probate:—Held, that the absolute gift to R. contained in the will was not cut down by the expressions in the letter, which were too ambiguous to create any trust capable of being enforced in equity. Pinckard's Trust, In re, 27 L. J., Ch. 422; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1041—L.JJ.

A devise of lands for ever conveys an estate in fee, and is not affected by subsequent words requesting the devisee, "in case of failure of issue of his said body," to give the estate to another. Bland v. Bland, 9 Mod. 478.

An appointment of a person as residuary legatee, with a desire that the testator's residuary estate be afterwards left in the residuary legatee's and his own name to charitable purposes, is not sufficient to create a charitable trust, and to cut down the beneficial interest of the legatee. McCulloch v. McCulloch, 1 N. R. 535; 11 W. R. 504.

—— With Power of Appointment Ceasing on Re-marriage.]—A testator left all his property to his wife, in trust for the uses thereafter mentioned. He then bequeathed certain pecuniary legacies, and stated that it was his will that his youngest son P. should live and reside with his mother, and be attentive to her, and directed by her in order that she might by deed or by her last will and testament provide for him in such manner as to her might seem most expedient and proper; and he appointed and nominated his said wife his residuary legatee and trustee of his will, in order that she might direct and govern his said children and assist to arrange all matters between them; and previous to her death, provided that she did not marry again, that she might dispose of the residue of his property to and amongst his said children and provide for his son P. as she might think expedient; and he directed that if she married again she should cease to be trustee, and receive the sum of 100*l.* only; and that in such case his son E. should act as trustee in her stead. He nominated his son E. and his wife executor and executrix:—Held, that the testator's wife took the residue absolutely, and that there was not an estate for life merely in the wife, with power of appointment. Morrin v. Morrin, 19 L. R., Ir. 37.

Where Gift Over on Death.]—Residuary devise and bequest, after the death of testator's brother and sister, J. C. and S. C., to his sister M. K., to be held by her, and in the event of her decease, by her trustee or trustees for the benefit of her daughter A. K., and in the event of the death of A. K. to go among her brothers and sisters:—Held, to give the absolute interest to A. K. Kerr v. Cusac, 1 Jur. 792.

When an absolute gift is followed by words importing a contingency, it is not thereby cut down to a life estate, without these words being accompanied by other circumstances than the mere fact that there is a gift over on the death of the legatee. Bourke's Trusts, In re, 27 L. R., Ir. 574.

Testator directed his debts to be paid, and subject thereto gave his personal estate to his widow for her own use as long as she might live, and on her death directed the remainder of his personal estate and effects which might then exist to be made into money, and bequeathed the same to his brothers and sisters, and appointed his widow co-executrix of his will. The estate included a sum of cash at the bank :—Held, that the widow had no absolute power of disposal over the personal estate, but took only a like estate, with a right to enjoy the property in specie, and that the cash at the bank must be invested. Holden, In re. Holden v. Smith, 57 L. J., Ch. 648 ; 59 L. T. 358.

Under a gift by A. to his wife of 10,000*l*., "afterwards to go to the understated residuary legatee E." :—Held, that the legacy of 10,000*l*. was given to the wife absolutely, but that interest upon such legacy did not begin to run until after one year from the testator's death. Percy v. Percy, Percy, In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 143 ; 24 Ch. D. 616 ; 49 L. T. 554.

A testator bequeathed leaseholds to a trustee upon trust to give yearly equal portions of the rents to the two brothers and three sisters of the testator ; that was to say, each to receive one-fifth part of the net proceeds of rent ; and he directed that, on the decease of any or all of his brothers and sisters, "the same should go to their children" :—Held, that the brothers and sisters of the testator took life interests only. Houghton, In re, Houghton v. Brown, 53 L. J., Ch. 1018 ; 50 L. T. 529.

Where leaseholds were bequeathed to three for life, subject to certain annuities, and after the death of the three, "to A. B. if then living, her executors, administrators, and assigns, subject to the said annuities during her life," and in the event of her death living either of the three, the property was given to her issue : the court :—Held, with some hesitation, that A. B. took only for life. Morrall v. Sutton, 4 Beav. 478 ; 5 Beav. 100. And see S. C., 1 Ph. 533 ; 14 L. J., Ch. 266.

J. C. by his will, dated 19 March, 1877, gave and bequeathed his leasehold messuage in W. road, and also all the plant, stock-in-trade, fixtures, and utensils of trade, and the goodwill of the trade or business of tyresmith carried on on the said premises, but not including the book-debts owing at the testator's decease, unto his three sons, J. C., W. C. and T. C. in equal shares, provided that upon the death of either of them the said J. C., W. C. and T. C. (whether in the testator's lifetime or after his decease), the share or shares of him or them so dying of and in the said leasehold messuage, plant, stock-in-trade, &c., should go to his or their next-of-kin according to the statutes of distribution. The testator died on the 21st of March, 1877. The three sons purchased the book-debts from the testator's estate, and carried on the business in partnership until the year 1886, during which time they had largely increased the value of the stock-in-trade, and had purchased additional leasehold premises for the business. In 1886 T. C. agreed to purchase the share of W. C. in the business for 4,500*l*. :—Held, that W. C. had a right to receive the whole of the purchase-money, and it was not necessary to set apart any part thereof for the persons who might be ultimately entitled under the gift to the next-of-kin. Connolly v. Connolly, 56 L. T. 304.

—— On Death under Age.]—Testator, first giving all his estates real and personal to his executors in trust to be disposed of as after mentioned, then gave all his real estates to his wife for life, and after her decease he gave his lands and estates to J. B. ; but at his decease the whole to be for the use of J. B.'s wife and children, and which children, at the death of their mother, should inherit the same jointly during their lives ; and if they should die before twenty-one, he gave the houses and estates to H. S., to the use of himself and his children :—Held, on demurrer, that the children of J. B. took only joint estates for life. Spry v. Bromfield, 9 Sim. 534. But a case having been sent to law :—Held, by the court of exchequer, that the children of J. B. took an estate in fee as tenants in common. S. C., 10 Sim. 94 ; 5 Jur. 864. And see the argument at law, 7 M. & W. 546 ; 10 L. J., Ex. 457.

—— On Death without Issue.]—Devise to E. for ever, that is if he leaves a son or sons who shall attain twenty-one, "but if E. should chance to die without son or sons to inherit, my will is, that the son of my son W. shall inherit." This is a fee simple to E., with executory devise to the son of W. Heath v. Heath, 1 Bro. C. C. 147.

Bequest of residue to be divided equally between A., B., C. and D., with benefit of survivorship between them in case of the death of any or either of them without issue :—Held, that the gift was absolute, and the clause of survivorship void. Wells v. Maling, 3 Jur. 36.

Testator set out a schedule of his property, calling it 5,000*l*. He then directed 1,000*l*. to be invested in each child's name, and 1,000*l*. in his wife's ; interest to them, for their life, and afterwards to their descendants, except his wife's, which was, at his death, to be sold and divided amongst them, except 200*l*. to M. L.'s child by him. Then followed in the same paper : "The above is increased by the working up of stock, to 5,000*l*. I wish the same division and appropriation, except that if any share falls in, it may be added to the others, in case the original holder shall have no children." The testator died, leaving four daughters :—Held, that by the will alone, the daughters would have taken absolute interest ; but that by the will and codicil together, they took interests which, if absolute in the first instance, were defeasible. Bird v. Webster, 1 Drew. 338 ; 22 L. J., Ch. 483 ; 1 W. R. 121.

—— On Death leaving Issue.]—Bequest to A., his executors, administrators, and assigns, but in case he shall die leaving lawful issue, then in trust for his children :—Held, that the subsequent gift cut down the former to a life estate. Johnston v. Antrobus, 21 Beav. 556.

A testator gave a fund to M. for life, and if she should die without issue (which happened), then to C. and S. equally between them, or to the survivor, unless either of them should have departed this life leaving lawful issue, "in which case I give the share of him or her so dying unto his or her children, if more than one, in equal proportions." The testator died in 1813. C. died without issue in 1825 ; S. died, leaving issue, in 1851 ; and in 1855 M. died without issue :—Held, that words introducing the gift over were too ambiguous to cut down the preceding clear gift to C. and S., and that the children of S. took nothing. Larkin, In re, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 229.

Testator directed trustees to invest 5,000*l*. on government or real securities, and to pay the interest, &c., to his wife for life, and after her decease to divide the same, and pay one moiety to his son, W. W. C., and the other to be invested, and held, subject to the trusts declared concerning such share of his residuary estate as thereinafter bequeathed, for the use of his daughter, C. C. One part of the residuary estate the testator directed to be paid to his son, and the other he directed to be invested on government or real securities, and the interest, &c., paid to the separate use of his daughter for life; "but in case either of them, W. W. C. or C. C., should be then dead, leaving lawful issue him or her surviving," the testator directed that his or her share "of or in the trust moneys and securities should be paid unto and amongst the issue of such deceased child or children in equal shares, &c. . . . Provided always, that in case either W. W. C. or C. C. should die in his lifetime, or in the lifetime of his wife, without leaving lawful issue," then the testator "directed that the share of him or her so dying of and in the trust moneys and securities respectively" should be paid to the survivor of his children absolutely. The testator died in 1850, leaving his wife, and his son and daughter, W. W. C. and C. C. (each of whom had issue one child). On claim as to whether W. W. C. took an absolute interest in the gift of the residue:—Held, that the direction, "in case W. W. C. should be then dead," meant his death in the lifetime of the testator; and that as W. W. C. survived the testator, he took an absolute interest in the gift of the residue. Cooper v. Cooper, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 105; 3 W. R. 80.

—— On Remarriage.]—Testator gave a freehold house to his wife for her sole use and benefit, and another freehold house to her for her life; and he also gave to her all his household goods, plate, &c.; but if she married again, the whole of the above property was to become the property of his daughter; and in case his wife should remain unmarried, then he gave the second-mentioned house to his daughter for her life, and to her children after his wife's death:—"I also appoint my wife, provided she remains unmarried, sole executrix and residuary legatee to all other property I may possess at my decease":—Held, that the fee-simple in the first-mentioned house passed to the wife. Day v. Daveron, 12 Sim. 200; 10 L. J., Ch. 349.

—— On Daughter marrying beneath her.]—A gift over of real estate in the event of the devisee marrying "a man beneath her in life, that is to say, below her in social position," is good. Greene v. Kirkwood, [1895] 1 Ir. R. 130—C. A.

Gift Cut down by Condition Subsequent.]—Testator gave a sum of money for the separate use of his daughter, a feme sole, and declared that she should not be at liberty to sell or dispose of it, and if she attempted so to do, that such sale should be void. The daughter afterwards married:—Held, that the restraint on alienation was void, there being no gift over. Newton v. Reid, 4 Sim. 141.

A testator gave all his property, real and personal, to trustees for division among his children, their shares to be paid when they respectively attained twenty-eight. The will further contained a clause cutting down the children's share to 1,000*l*. each in the case of sons and to 500*l*. in the case of daughters, if any of them should embrace a religious life:—Held, (following Saunders v. Vautier, Cr. & Ph. 240), that there was an absolute gift to the children vesting on the testator's death, and the provision as to payment at twenty-eight was nugatory; and that the clause as to embracing a religious life was a condition repugnant to the former gift, and must be disregarded. Thompson, In re, Griffith v. Thompson, 44 W. R. 582. And see CONDITION.

Gift out of Proceeds "on any Sale"—Repugnancy.]—An absolute gift of property in a will was followed by a direction that, on any sale by the beneficiary, sums were to be paid to other persons out of the proceeds of such sale:—Held, that the direction was repugnant and void. Elliott, In re, Kelly v. Elliott, 65 L. J., Ch. 753; [1896] 2 Ch. 353; 75 L. T. 138; 44 W. R. 632.

ii. By Trusts Qualifying Enjoyment.

Principles.]—Illustration of the distinction between a direction in a will which goes to cut down or qualify a prior absolute gift, and one which only goes to regulate the mode in which such gift shall be dealt with and enjoyed. Gompertz v. Gompertz, 2 Ph. 107; 16 L. J., Ch. 23; 10 Jur. 937.

If a testator leaves a legacy absolutely as regards his estate, but restrains the mode of enjoyment adapted to secure certain objects for the benefit of the legatee, on failure of such objects the absolute gift prevails; but if there be no absolute gift as between the legatee and the estate, but modes of enjoyment are prescribed which fail, the legacy forms part of the testator's estate. Quære, the effect, on an absolute gift which is ambiguous, of pointing out the mode of enjoyment in every possible event to which the testator's mind was turned. Lassence v. Tierney, 1 Mac. & G. 551; 2 Hall & Tw. 115; 14 Jur. 182.

Bequest to a daughter of 1,000*l*. stock, and 70*l*. a-year for life, which two sums were to be under the trust of the executors, and not to permit her to assign "her said annuities," and pay the interest from the 1,000*l*. to her for her life, and at her decease to divide it between her children:—Held, that the daughter took for life only, and not an absolute interest subject to be defeated by the interests given to her children. Distinction between an absolute bequest with a subsequent gift in derogation, and a limited bequest followed by a subsequent restricted gift over. In the former case, the absolute gift remains upon failure of the subsequent gift, but in the latter the limited bequest is not enlarged by such an event. Seawin v. Watson, 10 Beav. 200; 16 L. J., Ch. 404; 11 Jur. 576.

Bequest to the children of A. B. for life; but in case of death before marriage, his share to go to the survivors. In the margin was written, "What is to become of the principal? The share of the parent to be divided amongst the children, if any. Quære, to be put in afterwards in a proper manner." The children of A. B. all died unmarried:—Held that the gift was for life only, and not an absolute gift cut down merely to admit their children. Kay v. Winder, 12 Beav. 610.

If a testator leaves a legacy absolutely as regards his estate, but restricts the mode of the legatee's enjoyment of it to secure certain objects for the benefit of the legatee, upon failure of such objects the absolute gift prevails. Kellett v. Kellett, L. R. 3 H. L. 160.

A testator directed his trustees holding his real estate to levy and raise for his five daughters, naming them, 1,000*l.* each :—Held, that this was in itself an absolute provision for each. Ib.

The will directed that the sum of 1,000*l.* each should be raised "subject to the provisoes thereinafter expressed"; i.e., the trustees were to permit each daughter to take the interest for life —in case she should marry, her husband was to take the interest for life—and after the decease of any daughter unmarried or without issue, the principal was to be applied amongst all or any of his other children, in such shares as the daughter dying should appoint, and, in default of appointment, amongst the surviving children or their issue in equal shares. By a codicil he revoked his will "so far as the said sum to each of my daughters is given absolutely, and I declare that, in the event of any of my daughters remaining unmarried, she shall only be entitled to an interest for her natural life," and he then confirmed the gift, "subject to the restriction aforesaid":—Held, that these provisions did not qualify the gift, except so far as the restriction as to remaining unmarried was concerned. Ib.

Held, also, that, notwithstanding the revocation, by the codicil, of the absolute gift, the court had properly declared the survivor entitled for her life to a distributive share of her deceased sisters' interests in the sums given to them. Ib.

When an absolute gift or an appointment in a will is attempted to be cut down by a subsequent inoperative modification or restriction, the original gift remains unaffected by the intended restriction. Churchill v. Churchill, L. R. 5 Eq. 44; 16 W. R. 182.

When either in a settlement or a will there is an absolute gift to children followed by a direction that the daughters' shares shall be settled on themselves for life, with remainder to their children, the daughters' interests are only cut down for the sake of the children, and any daughter who dies without issue takes her share absolutely. Sidway Hall Estate, In re, 37 L. T. 457.

Where in a will there is an absolute gift followed by a qualification of the mode of its enjoyment to secure certain objects for the benefit of the legatee, then, if the object fails, the absolute gift remains. But if there is an absolute gift, followed by a clause diminishing the estate so given to the first taker, the absolute gift has, in effect, been cut down, and the court can only give effect to it as so diminished. Richards, In re, Williams v. Gorvin, 50 L. T. 22.

Where in a will there is a general absolute devise of real and personal estate, and in a subsequent clause the testator uses language plainly restrictive of the absolute gift in one species of property, but not in words confining it to that one, the restriction will be held applicable to both, in order to carry out the clear intention of the testator, unless there exists a clear necessity for excluding the other from its operation. Ridgeway v. Munkittrick, 1 Dr. & War. 84.

Where Absolute Gift followed by Remainder which Fails.]—Gift by a testator of all the residue of his estate and effects, real and personal, whatsoever and wheresoever, to his wife, and after her death to be equally divided to the children, should there be any; he also appointed his wife sole executrix. There were no children :—Held, that the wife was absolutely entitled. Crozier v. Crozier, L. R. 15 Eq. 282; 21 W. R. 398.

Testator gave 4,000*l.* to his grand-daughter, and directed his executors to pay it to her on her attaining twenty-one, and to apply the interest of it for her maintenance during her minority. By a codicil, he directed that his grand-daughter should have only the interest of 2,000*l.* for her maintenance until she attained twenty-three, and that the interest of the other 2,000*l.* should be accumulated, and that, on her attaining twenty-three, his executors should have the whole settled upon her for her life, and, after her death, to her child or children, in equal proportions, so that no husband of hers might spend it. The grand-daughter attained twenty-three, and died without having had a child, and without the executors having made any settlement of the legacy :—Held, that the gift in the will was an absolute gift, and that, in the events that had happened, it was not affected by the codicil. Bell v. Jackson, 1 Sim. (N.S.) 547.

Where the bequest of residuary estate gave absolute interests to children in their respective shares, but afterwards, by a direction as to those of the daughters, that a moiety of their shares should be settled on them for life, with remainder to their children :—Held, that, on the death of a daughter unmarried, the purpose of such limitation in favour of her children failing, her representatives were entitled absolutely to her interest in the moiety directed to be so settled. Winchworth v. Winchworth, 8 Beav. 576; 9 Jur. 793.

A testator directed his trustees "to raise 5,000*l.* for his daughter," his said daughter's legacy to be invested, and the interest paid to her for her separate use for life, with remainder to her children absolutely, but with power to her to appoint a life interest to her husband. The daughter died unmarried :—Held, that she took an absolute interest in the legacy. Mayor v. Townsend, 3 Beav. 443; 10 L. J., Ch. 216; 5 Jur. 91.

A testatrix bequeathed her residuary estate to trustees upon trust for her daughter for life, with remainder to the "younger children" of her said daughter, the shares of sons to be paid at twenty-one, and those of daughters at twenty-one or marriage; with a direction to invest the shares of daughters, and pay them the income for their separate use from the time of marriage or upon their attaining twenty-one, so that the capital of each daughter's share should pass to the children of such daughters; with such trusts or remainders, in the event of there being no such issue, as the trustees should think proper :—Held, that the absolute interest given to daughters by the first part of the will was cut down only in the event of their having issue; and that an unmarried daughter, aged fifty-six, was entitled to receive her share upon entering into personal recognisances. Lyddon v. Ellison, 19 Beav. 565; 18 Jur. 1066.

Where the testator directed his trustees to apply the interest arising from his residuary estate for the maintenance of all his children, and the surplus to accumulate until the youngest should attain twenty-one, and then the capital to be divided into as many shares as there should be children then living, one to be allotted to each, and the issue of such as should be then dead to take their parents' shares, the shares of sons to be payable at twenty-one, and of daughters to remain in the hands of his trustees, upon trust to pay the interest for their lives for their separate use, and on the decease of such daughters leaving issue on the youngest attaining twenty-one :—Held, that a daughter living at the time when the youngest child attained twenty-one who died single took an absolute interest in a share of the residue, the gift which was absolute in the first instance not being affected by the direction as to settling the shares of the daughters having issue. Hulme v. Hulme, 9 Sim. 644.

A testatrix directed her fortune to be divided between A. and R. K., appointing trustees for R. K. to pay him half-yearly his share. By codicil, reciting that A. was dead, she desired that her fortune should be divided between R. K. and T. K., for the use of their children, and when they came of age to be settled upon them, share and share alike. R. K. survived the testatrix, and died without ever having had a child :—Held, that the gift to him by the will of a moiety was absolute, and that the modification introduced by the codicil affected it so far only as was necessary to give effect to the disposition in favour of his children, and that, this disposition having failed, the absolute gift remained, so that his personal representatives were entitled to his moiety. Norman v. Kynaston, 3 De G. F. & J. 29 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 129 ; 3 L. T. 826 ; 9 W. R. 259. Affirming, 30 L. J., Ch. 189.

By will, dated in 1829, a testator gave to A. 800*l*., "to enable him to take his father's farm after his decease, if the landlord will consent, or to place him in any other situation which the trustees may think fit," and if not, then the interest was to be paid to A. for life, with remainder to his son, if he should have any. A. died intestate and unmarried. No part of the legacy was ever paid to A. or applied for his benefit :—Held, that the first gift to A. was never taken away, except in the event of his leaving a son as above mentioned ; and that, he having died without a son, his administrator was entitled to the legacy. Lord v. Lord, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 485.

Gift of residue to be equally divided between the testator's wife, sons, and daughters, subject, nevertheless, as to the shares of the daughters, which were to be placed in funds in the names of trustees ; the interest to be paid to them for their lives for their separate use, and after their deaths the testator gave the shares, to the interest of which his daughters should have been entitled for life, to their children equally, with benefit of survivorship. Two of the daughters having survived the testator, died without children :—Held, that their representatives were entitled to their shares. Whittell v. Dudin, 2 J. & W. 279 ; 22 R. R. 124.

Under a gift of a sum of money "to my daughter J. H., to be employed for her use in the following manner," accompanied by a direction that the fund should be invested, and the interest only paid to the daughter during her life, and, in case she should marry and have children, then the principal to be divided amongst such children :—Held, upon the construction of the whole will, the daughter having died without children, that her personal representative, and not the residuary legatee, was entitled to the fund. Campbell v. Brownrigg, 1 Ph. 301 ; 13 L. J., Ch. 7.

A testatrix bequeathed personalty in trust for A. B. for life, and after his decease for his issue, and on failure of his issue to F. H. S. and R. S., share and share alike, "and after the decease of the said F. H. S. and R. S. to their children, share and share alike, and to their heirs for ever." F. H. S. died without having had issue, R. S. survived him and died leaving children, and A. B., who survived them both, died without issue. Upon a petition by the children of R. S. for payment out of a portion of the trust fund which was in court : — Held, that, upon the authorities, the bequest must be construed as a gift after the respective deaths of F. H. S. and R. S. to their respective children, and that, there having been an absolute gift to each of them in the first instance only cut down in favour of his children, in the events which happened the fund was divisible in moieties between the representatives of F. H. S. and the children of R. S. Hutchinson's Trusts, In re, 51 L. J., Ch. 924 ; 21 Ch. D. 811 ; 47 L. T. 573.

A testator bequeathed his residue to his nieces A. and B., and he then confined the gift to A. and B. and their children, without comprehending their husbands, unless his nieces should die without issue :—Held, that A. and B. took for their separate use for life, with remainder to their children ; and that in default the nieces took absolutely. Dawson v. Bourne, 16 Beav. 29.

—— Followed by Contingent Executory Devise to Children.]—A testator by will, dated in 1853, gave the residue of his property to his three brothers and nephew for their lives, as tenants in common ; and after the decease of his brothers and nephew, then in trust for their heirs and assigns, as tenants in common ; provided always, that in case any or either of their children should die under twenty-one, without leaving issue, the share of each child so dying should be in trust for the survivors or survivor ; but in case any or either of such children should die leaving lawful issue, then the share of each such child to go to his or her child or children ; and if there should be only one such child of his brothers or nephew who should attain twenty-one or be married, then in trust for such child, his or her heirs and assigns, for ever. Upon a bill for the construction of the will :—Held, that it must be assumed that there was an omission of a gift to the children of the testator's brothers and nephew after the gift to them, and that the will must be read as giving the brothers a fee in the first clause of the devise, which was cut down to a life estate in the event of their having children, with a devise in fee to the children. Spence v. Handford, 27 L. J., Ch. 767 ; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 987.

—— Followed by Gift for Life with Power of Appointment among Children.] — A testator gave all his property, real and personal, to trustees, and directed that they should sell his freehold estate, and make up an account of his estate, so that they might be able to make a division among his nine children, to whom he left the same in equal shares. After other directions, he declared that he left the shares of his daughters to them, for their lives, free from the control of their husbands, with power to appoint among their children, notwithstanding coverture. In a subsequent clause he directed that the shares of his sons who should have attained twenty-one at the time of his death should forthwith vest in them, and that the shares of the other sons should vest as they should afterwards attain twenty-one, and the shares of daughters on marriage; and that the shares of sons who should die under twenty-one, and of daughters who should die unmarried, should go amongst the survivors as therein mentioned. A., one of the daughters, married, and died without having exercised her power of appointment, leaving one child:—Held, that A. took an absolute interest in her share of the fund. M'Tear v. M'Dowell, 11 Ir. Ch. R. 338.

—— Followed by Void Remainder.]—Where there was a bequest of personalty in terms giving an absolute interest in the first instance to the legatees, followed by a direction to invest in trust for them for life, with a remainder to their children, that was too remote, it was:—Held, that the absolute gift was not cut down by the subsequent direction. Ring v. Hardwick, 2 Beav. 352; 4 Jur. 242.

—— By Void Gift Over.]—A bequest to M. E., testator's wife, of "the legal interest on bonds, debentures, and funded property, together with household furniture, &c., to be disposed of as she shall think proper"; and in case F. E. should survive the said M. E., that he should have "the interest of money, and whatever does belong to her that she does not dispose of":—Held, that, M. E. having survived F. E., the absolute gift to her was not cut down by the subsequent bequest over, and that that bequest was void for uncertainty. Phillips v. Eastwood, Ll. & G. t. Sugd. 270.

—— By Direction to Settle on Marriage.]—A testator gave shares of his property to his two infant daughters "to be settled on themselves at their marriage." Upon the daughters attaining twenty-one without having married:—Held, they were entitled to have their shares paid and transferred to them absolutely. Magrath v. Morehead, 41 L. J., Ch. 120; L. R. 12 Eq. 491.

A testator bequeathed one-third of his residue to his daughter, her executors, &c., to be vested at twenty-one, but not to be payable until twenty-five. He declared it should not be subject to the control of any husband, but should devolve and be settled by deed upon her as a feme sole, and that the income should not be anticipated, and that until her marriage she should only be entitled to receive the dividends, and retain the power to bequeath the capital by will. The daughter being unmarried:—Held, that she took absolutely, and was entitled to payment of the fund out of court on attaining twenty-one. Young's Settlement, In re, 18 Beav. 199.

Where Condition Attached.]—There is no doctrine that if there is a limitation in a will which by itself gives a vested estate, and a condition is afterwards added on a breach of which the estate is to go over, the limitation and the condition will be construed into a contingent devise. Clavering v. Ellison, 7 H. L. Cas. 707; 29 L. J., Ch. 761. Affirming, 8 De G. M. & G. 662; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 201; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 276.

A condition which is to defeat a vested estate must depend on an event ascertainable from the beginning. Ib.

Bequest of residue after decease of testator's widow, to be divided equally amongst children, the son's shares to be paid immediately, and as to the daughters' to be invested for them for life, with remainder between all their children, to become vested at twenty-five, remainder over; in case of either of his daughters having no child attaining twenty-five, to the children of the others who should attain that age:—Held, that such gift over was too remote and void, and that, the bequest to the daughters in the first instance being absolute, and the conditional limitation not being such as would legally take effect, the absolute interest remained according to the original gift. Ring v. Hardwick, 2 Beav. 352; 4 Jur. 2.

A. bequeathed 1,000*l.* to his solicitor by a payment of 50*l.* per annum for twenty years after his death, with a condition to attend meetings of his executors and assist in auditing the accounts of the estate:—Held, to be an absolute bequest of 1,000*l.* Wells v. Wood, 4 L. T. 768; 9 W. R. 780.

Devise upon condition to pay certain legacies within twelve months. See Wright v. Wilkin, 9 Jur. (N.S.) 715; 10 W. R. 403—Ex. Ch.

And see CONDITION.

Where Prohibition against Alienation.]—Bequest of money and leaseholds to a feme sole "for her own absolute use, without liberty to sell or assign during her natural life":—Held, to confer an absolute interest without power of alienation during life. Baker v. Newton, 2 Beav. 112; 8 L. J., Ch. 306; 3 Jur. 649.

By an instrument in the form of a settlement but proved as a will, real and personal estate was given to trustees upon trust for the sole use and benefit of the respondent (son of the settlor), his heirs, executors, and administrators, to be assigned and transferred to him as soon as conveniently might be after the settlor's death, subject to a proviso that if the respondent should die unmarried and without issue his share should go over, and also that the property assigned in trust for the respondent was to be held by the trustees upon the express condition that he should not during his life have power to mortgage, sell, alien, charge, or incumber any part of the property, and in that event the trustees should stand possessed of such property in trust for other persons:—Held, that the respondent took an absolute interest in fee simple under the instrument, and that the condition of forfeiture in case of charge or alienation was therefore void as repugnant; and accordingly that he could be ordered to secure to his divorced wife an annual sum for maintenance by a charge on his interest under the instrument. And semble (per Bowen, L.J.), that the condition was limited to alienation during the lifetime of the settlor, in which case there would be no repugnancy. Corbett v. Corbett, 58 L. J., P. 17; 14 P. D. 7; 60 L. T. 74; 37 W. R. 114—C. A.

A testator who died in 1871, after reciting in his will that he was seised of certain lands, devised the same to his son, T. M., without words of limitation, and directed that his said son should not have power to sell, assign, transfer, or make over the said therein before-mentioned lands, or part with the possession of any part thereof to any person or persons whomsoever, except by will to his wife, child, or children lawfully begotten, or next of kin, in such shares and proportions as, by his last will and testament, he should direct or appoint; and in case the testator's said son should happen to die intestate and without lawful issue, then the testator declared that his executor should have power to dispose of the lands, but always to the testator's next heir or heirs, or next of kin, it being the testator's will that said lands should not pass out of his family. And it was also the testator's will that any lawful issue of his said son, T. M., should not sell, assign, transfer, or make over the said lands or any part thereof, except in like manner as his (the testator's) said son, T., by will to his or their child or children, or next of kin. T. M. died without issue, but made a will, whereby he devised and bequeathed all his property to his wife, H. M. T. M. died seised and possessed of other property besides that devised and bequeathed to him by his father:—Held, that neither the restraint on alienation, nor the gift over, were indicative of an intention contrary to the devise to T. M. passing the fee simple or absolute estate and interest of the testator in the lands devised. Martin v. Martin, 19 L. R., Ir. 72.

Where Restriction to Separate Use.]—Bequest of 1,000*l.* to a married woman for her own use, nevertheless, during her life, to pay the dividends for her separate use, independent of any husband:—Held, an absolute interest. Gurney v. Goggs, 25 Beav. 334.

Gift of Interest at Discretion of Trustees with no Gift over.]—Testator gave all his property to trustees, in trust to invest it in securities at interest, for the use of his nephew, to be paid in such manner as the trustees should think fit; and when the nephew should attain twenty-one, that the trustees should pay him the amount of the interest or proceeds of the money come to their hands, as they might think most for his advantage, in weekly or quarterly payments for his life:—Held, that the nephew took an absolute interest in the property. Billing v. Billing, 5 Sim. 232.

Absolute Interest cut down by Subsequent Gifts thereout.]—A. directed his executors to raise a legacy "to or in trust for his son." It was to be invested in the names of trustees, and life annuities were given to the son and his wife out of the income, and interests were given to the children of the son and to their issue, with gifts over:—Held, that there was an absolute gift to the son cut down to the limited extent of the subsequent gifts. Salmon v. Salmon, 29 Beav. 27.

—— By Direction to pay Interest "as long as she lives."]—An absolute gift of residue to the testator's widow:—Held, to be reduced to a life interest only by subsequent directions as to the payment of interest on money lent, to be made to her "as long as she lives." Flinn v. Jenkins, 1 Coll. C. C. 365; 8 Jur. 661.

—— By Direction to Pay Interest for Life with Remainder to Next of Kin.]—A husband bequeathed property to his wife for life, with remainder to his sons and daughters, the share of the daughters "to be vested in the bank in their own names, and the interest for life to be received by them to remain as a jointure for their use in case of their marrying, untouchable by their husbands, but to descend to their legal or nearest of kin":—Held, that a daughter, whether marrying or not, took only a life interest, with remainder to her next of kin. Harris v. Newton, 46 L. J., Ch. 268; 36 L. T. 173; 25 W. R. 228.

Devise to A. for Life, Remainder to B. in Trust—Whether Trust includes A.]—Testatrix by her will devised all her fee simple, freehold, and leasehold estate, to R. E. for life, remainder to J. E. for life, with remainder, save a certain rent-charge, to the commissioners of charitable donations, in trust to pay the head-rents and to apply the annual profits to certain charities:—Held, that R. E. and J. E. took beneficial interests for their lives. Charitable Donations Commissioners v. Espinasse, Fl. & K. 164; 3 Ir. Eq. R. 324.

Property to be enjoyed with and go with Title.]—A testatrix by a codicil to her will bequeathed to C. A., sixth Earl of E., and to his successors, all her plate, and also gave, devised, and bequeathed a leasehold house to him and "to his successors, and to be enjoyed with and to go with the title":—Held, that the plate and leasehold house passed to the sixth earl absolutely; the words "to be enjoyed with and to go with the title" not being sufficient in themselves to create an executory trust or to cut down the interest to a life estate. Montagu v. Inchiquin (Lord) (23 W. R. 592) discussed. Johnson, In re, Cockerell v. Essex (Earl), 53 L. J., Ch. 645; 26 Ch. D. 538; 52 L. T. 44; 32 W. R. 634.

g. Successive and Concurrent Interests—Joint Tenancy and Tenancy in Common.

Distinct Gifts of Same Property to Two Persons.]—It has been held, where there has been a devise of an estate to A. at the beginning and to B. at the end of a will, they shall take as joint tenants. Ulrich v. Litchfield, 2 Atk. 373.

Where a man gives a farm in Dale to A. and his heirs in one part of his will, and in another to B. and his heirs, it is now construed either as a joint tenancy or a tenancy in common, according to the limitation. Ridout v. Pain, 3 Atk. 492.

Gift to Two Persons with Maintenance for One of them.]—Bequest to A. and B., with direction that B. shall be maintained, &c., during minority out of fund, and power to place B. out apprentice:—Held, to create a tenancy in common. Gant v. Lawrence, Wightw. 395.

Gift to Two Persons for One Object.]—A testator, in 1641, devised lands to two colleges, one at Cambridge and one at Oxford, for educating ten of the descendants of certain persons named in his will in piety and learning:—Held, that this was a gift to the two colleges as tenants in common, subject to the trusts of educating the persons specified in the will in piety and learning, according to the course and usage of education in the colleges respectively, and according to the regulations and discipline thereof. Att-Gen. v. Sidney Sussex College, 38 L. J., Ch. 656.

Lands Purchased by A. and B. under Option in Will.]—A. by will directed that his sons should have the option of purchasing certain premises at a given sum. They agreed to do so, and signified their intention by a note in writing to the trustees, and they were let into possession of the premises. No conveyance had, however, been made of the premises to the sons, but a draft conveyance had been prepared, in which they were treated as tenants in common. They both subsequently executed marriage settlements, in which the shares which they took under the will were treated as separate shares. They both died. After the death of the sons their representatives received the rents and profits of the premises in moieties:—Held, that the sons took as tenants in common. Harrison v. Barton, 1 J. & H. 287; 30 L. J., Ch. 213; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 19; 3 L. T. 614; 9 W. R. 177.

Devise to several Persons in Tail.]—If the devise of real estate be "to the sons of A. in tail," simpliciter, the court will not supply any words denoting that the sons are to take successively in order of priority of birth. De Windt v. De Windt, 4 N. R. 184; 10 L. T. 568; 12 W. R. 776.

A testator gave, devised, and bequeathed his freehold property in N. to his nephew J., and after his death to his sons lawfully begotten, and in the event of his or their death without sons lawfully begotten, then he left the estates to his cousin H., and after his death to his sons lawfully begotten, beginning with the elder. The residuary clause was as follows: "Whatever is left after what I now give or bequeath of my personal property, I leave to my nephew J., and to his sons in tail lawfully begotten." At the testator's death J. had one son, and subsequently another son was born to him:—Held, that these sons took estates tail male in remainder. S. C., 35 L. J., Ch. 332; L. R. 1 H. L. 1; 14 L. T. 529; 14 W. R. 545.

A testator directed his trustees to purchase lands in certain counties, to be settled, on the death of the eldest son of S. without issue (which happened), to the use of every son of S. then living or who should be born in the testator's lifetime, and the assigns of such son during his life, with remainder to trustees to preserve contingent remainders; but to permit such son and his assigns to receive the rents during his life, and after his death to the use of such son's first and every other son successively in tail male, and on failure of such issue to the use of the testator's right heirs:—Held, that the younger sons of S. took as tenants in common for life, with remainder as to each son's share to his first and other sons in tail male, with cross-remainders over. Surtees v. Surtees, L. R. 12 Eq. 400; 25 L. T. 288; 19 W. R. 1043.

C., after devising an estate for life to A. and B. in succession, with remainder in each case to trustees, devised the estate to the first son of the body of B. in tail male; and in default of such issue, to the second, third, and all and every other the son and sons of B. severally and successively in tail male; and in default of such issue, to the third and all and every other the son and sons of the body of A., and the heirs male of such son and sons; and in default of such issue, to his own (the testator's) right heirs in fee. A. died in 1820, leaving six sons. B. died in 1845 without leaving issue male. Upon the death of B., J., the third son of A., entered into possession and continued in possession to the time of his death in 1856, and thereupon his eldest son entered into possession. On a bill filed by the three youngest sons of A.:—Held, that the devise to the third and all and every other the son and sons of the body of A. did not give them an estate in joint tenancy, or a tenancy in common, but an estate in succession in tail male, and that J. took the entirety; and he having executed a disentailing deed, his heir-at-law was entitled to the estate in fee. Cradock v. Cradock, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 626; 6 W. R. 710.

Semble, a devise to the children of A. and "the heirs of their bodies respectively" would give them estates tail as tenants in common. Tanner, Ex parte, 20 Beav. 374. S. C., nom. Tiverton Market Act, In re, 24 L. J., Ch. 657; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 487; 3 W. R. 118.

Gift to Two, with Gift over of Estate of One of them.]—A testator devised certain real property to A., B. and C., to possess and enjoy the same jointly during their lifetime, and on the death of any or some of them he devised their shares to be possessed and enjoyed by D., together with E., during their lifetime; provided that in the event (which happened) of E.'s marrying her share was to be lost immediately, and was to be possessed and enjoyed by the other mentioned parties, share and share alike:—Held, that the estate created in D. and E. was a tenancy in common, and not a joint tenancy; and that the heir-at-law was entitled, on the death of D., to her share in the property. Jones v. Jones, 44 L. T. 642; 29 W. R. 786.

A devise to two persons in terms importing a joint tenancy is not changed into a tenancy in common by a subsequent gift over of the estate of one of them upon a certain contingency. A testator devised his real estate to his wife and his son Daniel, and he then proceeded thus: "If my son Daniel shall happen to die without issue living, my will is that all his estate is to be divided between all my children in equal shares"; and, "If my wife will intermarry, she is to enjoy none of my property":—Held, that the wife and Daniel took as joint tenants. Held, secondly, the wife having died in the life of the testator, and Daniel having survived the testator, and died a bachelor, that the whole estate was divisible between the testator's children, and that Daniel's representatives took his share of it. Edwardes v. Jones, 33 Beav. 341.

Indefinite Gift, with several Inheritances.]—When testator devised to trustees in fee, in trust for his three sisters and their assignees, and as his said sisters should severally die he gave the premises to their several heirs:—Held, that the sisters should take as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants. Sheppard v. Gibbons, 2 Atk. 441.

Joint Life Estates, with several Inheritances.]—A devise to two, and the heirs of their bodies; it is a joint estate for life, and several inheritances; and so it is if there is a devise over; but if there is a devise over, and one of them dies without issue, a moiety shall go over to the remainderman. Cook v. Cook, 2 Vern. 545.

J. devised lands to be sold for payment of his debts and legacies, and the surplus to be laid out in the purchase of other lands to be settled on A. and B., and the survivor of them and their heirs, equally to be divided between them, share and share alike. A. died in the lifetime of the testator, and the question was, whether his moiety should descend to the testator's heir-at-law as a lapsed devise, or should go to B., the surviving devisee:—Held, that the first part of the devise made A. and B. plainly joint tenants, and therefore B., by survivorship, became entitled to the whole for life, but that the inheritance being devised to them as tenants in common, one moiety having lapsed by A.'s death in the lifetime of the testator, shall descend to the testator's heir-at-law, expectant on the death of B., and the other moiety shall go to the heir of B. Barker v. Gyles, 3 Bro. P. C. 104. S. C., 2 P. Wms. 280; Select Ca. Ch. 17; 9 Mod. 157; 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 536, pl. 4.

A devise of lands to B. and C., and the survivor of them and their heirs, equally to be divided between them, share and share alike; B. and C. are joint tenants for life, with several inheritances. Id. 107.

Joint tenancy for life, the words of severance being confined to the subsequent limitations. Folkes v. Western, 9 Ves. 456; 7 R. R. 271.

Y., by his will dated in 1815, gave a copyhold estate held upon lives to his wife as long as she should remain a widow, and if his wife should marry, then to his daughters J. and S., and their heirs; and for want of such issue, then, &c.:—Held, that J. and S. took as joint tenants for life, with several inheritances in tail, and cross-remainder in tail. Edwards v. Champion, 1 Eq. R. 419; 3 De G. M. & G. 202; 1 W. R. 497.

A devise to A. and B. and their "respective heirs" gives to them a joint tenancy for life with several inheritances in fee. N. M., by his will dated in 1776, devised certain lands to his daughter S. M. for life, and after her decease "unto the child and children of her body, if more than one, lawfully to be begotten, and the heirs of their respective bodies." N. M. died in the lifetime of S. M., who died leaving six children. One of these six children died a bachelor, two others died leaving issue. On the question what interest the children of S. M. took under the will:—Held, that they took joint estates for life with several inheritances in tail. Semble, that, if the devise had been "to the children of my daughter, and the heirs of their bodies respectively," the children would have taken estates as tenants in common in tail. Tanner, Ex parte, 20 Beav. 374. S. C., nom. Tiverton Market Act, In re, 24 L. J., Ch. 657; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 487; 3 W. R. 118.

A testator gave the residue of his real and personal estate to trustees, in trust for his nephews A., B. and C., and for their respective heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns. A. died before the testator; C. died after the testator:—Held, that the nephews were joint tenants for their lives, and the life of the survivor, with several remainders to them as tenants in common in fee; and that B. took the income of the whole for his life. Atkinson, In re, Wilson v. Atkinson, 61 L. J., Ch. 504; [1892] 3 Ch. 52; 66 L. T. 717; 40 W. R. 666.

A testator devised an estate to trustees and their heirs, upon trust to permit the rents and profits to be received by A. and his wife for life; and after the death of the survivor he devised the estate unto and amongst his four grand-daughters, to hold to them as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants, during their natural lives, with benefit of survivorship; the remainder to the trustees and their heirs, upon trust to support the contingent remainders thereinafter limited; the remainder to the issue male of his grand-daughters successively lawfully to be begotten; with remainder, in default, to his own right heirs:—Held, that the four grand-daughters took estates for life as tenants in common, with benefit of survivorship, with several inheritances in tail male limited to their respective issue upon the death of the survivor. Haddelsey v. Adams, 22 Beav. 266; 25 L. J., Ch. 826; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 724.

Joint Power of Disposition.]—A testator by his will gave "my landed estates in W., of whatever description, with their appurtenances, and all allotments of common now inclosed or hereafter to be granted to my daughters, J., M. and S., to be jointly and equally enjoyed or divided in the case of the marriage of any of them; and they or the survivor, in case of death, are by this my will fully authorised to dispose of the same by will or assignment, as they shall think proper, giving preference to those of my name and relations, according to behaviour"; and he gave them also all his personal property, "to be by them equally divided and shared among them," and he recommended them to live together. The three daughters died unmarried. M. and J. survived S., and executed wills respectively devising all their real estate to each other for life, but with different remainders over. J. survived M. After the death of J., the plaintiffs claimed a moiety of the real estates under the will of M. The defendant claimed the entirety under the will of J.:—Held, that though the power of disposition by deed might have been exercised by J., M. and S., or by J. and M., in their lifetime, yet that J., as the survivor, had alone the power of disposing of the estates by will, and that the defendant, as her devisee, was entitled to the entirety; and semble, that the will of the testator created a joint tenancy in fee. Cookson v. Bingham, 17 Beav. 262; 3 De G. M. & G. 668; 23 L. J., Ch. 127; 17 Jur. 1039; 2 W. R. 45.

Several Powers of Disposition.]—D. by his will settled real and personal estate upon trusts in favour of two of his daughters and their children. By a codicil he revoked this portion of his will, and empowered the husbands of his two said daughters to dispose of the property in question "for the good of their families":—Held, that the husbands took absolutely as tenants in common. Alexander v. Alexander, 6 De G. M. & G. 593; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 28; 5 W. R. 28—C. A.

Gift of Realty and Personalty "for Life to E. and to any lawful Issue she may have."]—A testator devised and bequeathed all his real and personal estate to B. for life, and after her decease to P. for life, subject to a forfeiture in a certain event, and the will proceeded: "And from and after the decease of" P., "I give and bequeath the property so given and belonging to" P. "for life to my ward" E. "and to any lawful issue she may have, such issue to take a vested interest in my said property upon attaining the age of twenty-one years." The testator died possessed of real and personal estate. E. survived the testator, and died intestate without having been married:—Held, first, that the direction that the issue should take vested interests was inconsistent with the use of the word "issue" as a term of limitation, and that consequently E.'s issue took as purchasers, and that her heir-at-law was entitled to the real estate; and, secondly, that as to the personal estate E. and her issue (had she had any) would have taken concurrently as joint tenants, and that consequently her legal personal representative was entitled to the personalty. Wilmot, In re, Wilmot v. Betterton, 76 L. T. 415; 45 W. R. 492.

Gift of Chattels to several without Words of Distribution.] — Surplus of a personal estate bequeathed to A. and B.; it is a joint devise, and shall survive. There are two executors, and one dies; his executor or administrator shall not have an account against the survivor. Shore v. Billingsly, 1 Vern. 482.

Devise of a residue of a personal estate to three is a joint devise, and shall survive. Webster v. Webster, 2 P. Wms. 347.

"I give to my two sisters A. and B. the residue of my personal estate":—Held, joint tenancy. Keys v. Luffkins. Dick. 392.

Devise of the residue of personal estate to the wife for life; if she die without issue living at her death, to testator's two brothers, or if one of them shall be dead to the survivor. They both died in the life of the wife; the legacy was vested in both as joint tenants, and therefore goes to the representative of the survivor. Barnes v. Allen, 1 Bro. C. C. 181.

A legacy given to two or more persons without words of severance makes a joint tenancy; therefore his honour determined that where in a will as to a residue two-thirds were given to and amongst the children of A. and B., they took as tenants in common; but the remaining third being given to the children of C., they took as joint tenants. Campbell v. Campbell, 3 Bro. C. C. 15.

Notwithstanding the leaning of late to a tenancy in common, an interest given to two or more, either by way of legacy or otherwise, is joint unless there are words of severance as "equally among," &c., or an inference of that sort arises in equity from the nature of the transaction, as in partnership, a joint mortgage, &c. Morley v. Bird, 3 Ves. 628; 4 R. R. 106.

Bequest to two without words of severance; they take jointly. Ib.

Residue bequeathed to two; they take a joint interest. Agreement for severance as to the whole may be inferred from their conduct, dividing as the property was received. Crooke v. De Vandes, 11 Ves. 330.

Legacy and residue bequeathed to two, without words of severance, is a joint interest, and cannot be taken in common, under effect of previous disposition of the interest, with words of severance, viz. to be equally divided. S. C., 9 Ves. 197.

Construction of will giving a vested interest, though subject to contingent charge, and creating a tenancy in common as to part of the property, and as to the residue a joint tenancy, there being nothing to control the legal effect of the words. Jackson v. Jackson, 7 Ves. 535. But on appeal it was held that, though by residuary disposition to testator's two sons "and the survivor, their or his heirs, executors," &c., they took as joint tenants the leasehold and personal estate embarked in trade, upon all the circumstances, the transactions for twelve years, as between themselves a severance was to be implied both as to the profits and the capital. S. C., nom. Crooke v. De Vandes, 9 Ves. 591.

Joint tenancy under a bequest of personal property to more than one, without words of severance. Swaine v. Burton, 15 Ves. 371.

Devise and bequest of leasehold, freehold, and copyhold estates to trustees, their heirs, executors, &c., upon trust to sell and pay debts, &c., and after payment thereof to pay and apply the rents, &c., to A. for life, and after his decease devising and bequeathing to the heir- or heirs-at-law of B., and the heirs, executors, &c., of such heir or heirs, to whom the trustees were directed to convey and assign accordingly; co-heiresses of B. being also co-heiresses of the devisor, take, not as coparceners by descent, but as joint tenants by purchase, and therefore subject to survivorship. Id. 365.

Testator bequeathed several legacies, and among others to S. W. 14,000*l.*, "and to the latter gentleman's family 6,000*l.*" S. W. had six children, all living at the date of the testamentary instrument and at the death of the testator, and no other issue:—Held, that such six children were, as joint tenants, exclusively entitled to the legacy of 6,000*l.* Wood v. Wood, 3 Hare, 65. And see Gregory v. Smith, 9 Hare, 708.

A testatrix, having three daughters, gave one-third of a fund to each for life, with remainder to their children respectively, with cross-remainders between them, with an ultimate limitation to her own "next of kin and legal personal representatives":—Held, that the class of next of kin was to be ascertained at the death of the testatrix, and that they took as joint tenants. Baker v. Gibson, 12 Beav. 101.

A direction in a will that the testator's wife and brother should be his residuary legatees, and enjoy all the benefits arising from that appointment, creates a joint tenancy in the residue. M'Donnell v. Jebb, 16 Ir. Ch. R. 359.

Where words of Distribution used—Intention of Testator.] — Survivorship by words creating a joint tenancy, the intention of severance not being sufficiently clear. Whitmore v. Trelawney, 6 Ves. 129. And see Booth v. Alington, infra, col. 1367.

—— Where Option given.]—A testator by his will gave his residuary estate to W. and S., "to be held jointly or divided equally at their pleasure":— Held, that W. and S. held as tenants in common. Oakley v. Wood, 37 L. J., Ch. 28; 16 L. T. 450; 15 W. R. 862.

"All and Every."]—Where the court, in construing a will, can find words implying an intention to sever a gift to several persons, it will favour a tenancy in common rather than a joint tenancy. The words, "all and every" the children of a certain individual do not import any intention to sever. Morgan v. Britten, infra, col. 1373, followed. Binning v. Binning, 13 R. 654.

"Between them."]—A money legacy to two (not executors), "jointly and between them," is not a joint legacy, but is a tenancy in common, the words meaning the same as to be equally divided between them. Perkins v. Baynton, 1 Bro. C. C. 118.

Devise to A. and B. "between them." These words constitute a tenancy in common. Lashbrook v. Cock, 2 Mer. 70; 16 R. R. 144.

A direction in a will that a class should take "between them" creates a tenancy in common. Under a gift in a will to such of the nephews and nieces of A. and the children of A.'s deceased niece B. thereinafter named (then followed the names of the nephews and nieces and children of the deceased niece), as should be living at the time of the decease of the testatrix, to be divided between and among them per stirpes equally, and not per capita, the children of B. taking between them only the equal share to which B. would have been entitled if named in that bequest instead of her children, and living at the time of the decease of the testatrix:—Held, that the children of B. took as tenants in common. Att.-Gen. v. Fletcher, 41 L. J., Ch. 167; L. R. 13 Eq. 128; 25 L. T. 892.

"To be Divided."]—Bequest of legacies to R. and M. if they survive the testatrix; but if not, then R.'s legacy to be divided among his children, and M.'s legacy among hers; and gift of residue to all the children of R. and M. equally:—Held, that the children of R. and M. took the residuary estate in equal shares as tenants in common. Lloyd's Estate, In re, Baker v. Mason, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 539.

The effect of the words "joint tenants" in a will:—Held, to be controlled by the context, and effect given to the bequest as a gift to tenants in common. Booth v. Alington, 27 L. J., Ch. 117; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 835; 5 W. R. 811.

W. bequeathed unto trustees a large sum, upon trust to pay the interest and dividends as his daughter should direct; and in default into her hands during her coverture, for her separate use. He gave his daughter a power of appointment over the principal; but in default of appointment then upon trust "to pay, assign, and divide the principal, . . . and the stocks, funds, and securities upon which the same should be invested, unto and equally between all the children of his daughter, if more than one, as joint tenants; and if but one, then to such one child." The testator gave all the residue of his money unto and equally between his grandchildren as tenants in common. The daughter appointed only one-fourth part of the principal, and died intestate, leaving three sons surviving, one of whom received from the trustees a third of the remaining fund:—Held, that the bequest was a tenancy in common, and not a joint tenancy, and that the residue of the fund must be carried to the separate accounts of the two surviving children. Ib.

Bequest in the form of a letter to the testator's mother and sisters, expressed thus: "To be divided among you." A tenancy in common among those living at that time, and the shares of those who died in the testator's lifetime lapsed. Ackerman v. Burrows, 3 Ves. & B. 54.

"To be Distributed."]—Devise of the profits of land in trust for his six younger children, to be distributed in joint and equal proportions:—Held, a tenancy in common. Ettricke v. Ettricke, Ambl. 656.

"Each."]—A devise of a term to A. and B., paying 25*l.* a year, out of the rents to one during his life, "viz., 12*l.* 10*s.* by each of them," is a tenancy in common. Kew v. Rouse, 1 Vern. 353.

"Equally amongst them."]—A devise of a leasehold interest to A. and her three sons equally amongst them creates a tenancy in common, though there is no mention of any division to be made. Warner v. Hone, Pre. Ch. 491; Gilb. Eq. R. 146.

"Equally to be Divided."]—Devise to A. for life of messuage and other freehold estate at ——; and after her decease "I give the same estate to all and every the child and children of A., equally to be divided amongst them; and for want of such issue" over:—Held, that the children of A. took as tenants in common in fee-simple. Esdaile v. Wilshere, 9 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 71.

G., being seised of a gavelkind estate by deed poll, in consideration of natural love to his wife and children, granted to his daughters, M. and H., the rents of his lands, equally to be divided between them, paying 5*l.* to their mother for life, and after her decease to hold to his said two daughters and their heirs, equally to be divided between them. This creates a tenancy in common, whether the instrument be considered as a deed or a will. Rigden v. Vallier, 3 Atk. 731; 2 Ves. Sen. 252.

Testator devised residue of his estate to A. and B., and then added, "My will is, that my estate be equally divided between A. and B., whom I appoint executors." The devise is not a joint tenancy; for the words "equally divided," though not annexed to the clause which gives the residue, can relate to that only. Owen v. Owen, 1 Atk. 494.

Though the words "equally to be divided" in a strict settlement at common law have never been determined barely of themselves to make a tenancy in common, yet it has been stated that they do so in a will, both with regard to real and personal estate. S. C., 1 Atk. 495.

Devise to trustees by sale or mortgage to pay debts, the remainder to go and be equally divided among three children, and the survivor of them and their heirs for ever. A tenancy in common. Stones v. Heurtly, 1 Ves. Sen. 165.

Bequests to several to be equally divided, share and share alike. They take in common, and no survivorship. Bolyer v. Mackell, 5 Ves. 510.

One assigns a term to trustees, in trust to permit himself to receive the profits during his life, and after his death in trust to permit his two daughters B. and C., the executors and administrators to receive the profits during the residue of the term, equally to be divided between them, they paying so much within two years to his other two daughters. B. dies; C. mortgages to D.:—Held, that B. and C. were tenants in common, and not joint tenants, by the intention of the father, which was to make distinct provisions for them. Hamell v. Hunt, Pre. Ch. 164.

A. by will devises lands to trustees and their heirs, in trust, that the profits should be equally divided between his wife and daughter during the wife's life, and after her death he devised the same to the use of his daughter in tail, with remainders over. The daughter died during the mother's life:—Decreed, this to be a tenancy in common between the mother and daughter; and that during the mother's life the daughter's moiety did not descend or result to the heir, but was an interest undisposed of, and in nature of a tenancy pur autre vie; and should go to the administrator of the daughter. Phillips v. Phillips, 2 Vern. 430; Pre. Ch. 167; 1 P. Wms. 34.

Devise to A. for life, the reversion to B. and

C., to be equally divided betwixt them. B. and C. tenants in common for life only. Peiton v. Banks, 1 Vern. 65.

A devise to two persons to be equally divided between them makes it a tenancy in common. Thickness v. Vernon, 1 Vern. 32.

The words "equally divided between them" make a tenancy in common in a will, but not in a deed. Thrustout v. Peak, 8 Vin. Abr. tit. Devise, pl. 11.

A testator gave a fund to the children of A. C., equally to be divided amongst them, share and share alike, during their lives, and after their decease to G. W. and J. W.:—Held, that the children of A. C. took as tenants in common for life, with an implied clause of accruer, both of original and accruing shares, to the survivors and survivor. Draycott v. Wood, 8 L. T. 304; 2 N. R. 55.

A testator (under a power to that effect contained in a settlement) appointed a rent-charge to a person for her life, with powers of distress, and directed that after her death the rent-charge should be continued to her three daughters, and equally divided during their lives, and the life of the longest liver, with powers of distress during their lives and the life of the longest liver of them:—Held, to create a tenancy in common between the three daughters, with interests transmissible to their respective representatives during the life of the longest liver of them, notwithstanding that one of them predeceased the tenant for life. Chatfield v. Berchtoldt, 18 W. R. 887. And see Fletcher v. Rogers, 10 Hare (App.) xiii.; 1 W. R. 125.

Legacy of 10,000*l.* to two sisters, to be equally divided when they should arrive at twenty-one, is a tenancy in common; and one dying under twenty-one, her share shall go to her representative. Jolliffe v. East, 3 Bro. C. C. 25.

"In Equal Moieties."]—Bequest to A. for life, and after her decease to B. and C. in equal moieties, and in case of the decease of either in the life of A., the whole to the survivor of them living at her decease. B. and C. have vested interests as tenants in common, subject to be divested only upon the contingency expressed. Harrison v. Foreman, 5 Ves. 207; 5 R. R. 28.

"In Equal Proportions."]—A testator had two sisters, M. and E., and property of three classes: first, "his property," in possession; secondly, property which had been left to him by his late wife, also in possession; and, thirdly, an absolute reversionary interest in two-thirds of the capital of a sum of 10,000*l.* consols standing in the names of trustees, his two sisters M. and E. being entitled to the dividends on the whole of that sum for their lives and the life of the survivor, and being also entitled in reversion to one-third of the capital. By his will he left the whole of his property in trust to A., B. and C., the interest of his own to be paid to his sisters in equal moieties during their lives, with benefit of survivorship, the interest of property that had been left to him by his late wife to be paid to H. (a woman); in case of the death of the above three females, the interest to be divided amongst his (the testator's) four cousins, A., B., C. and X., for their lives; and the property, including the 10,000*l.* 3*l.* per cent. trust money, to devolve to the children of three of the said cousins: viz., A., B. and C., in equal proportions:—Held, first, that on the death of the survivor of the two sisters, H. living, there was no gift over of the testator's own property to H.; secondly, that the property let loose on the respective deaths of the sisters and of H. was then to be divided amongst the four cousins for their lives; thirdly, that the four cousins took as tenants in common, and as they respectively died their respective shares of the property were to devolve on the children of A., B. and C., as tenants in common; fourthly, that the sisters were not entitled to retain both their rights under the will and in the reversionary one-third of the 10,000*l.* consols. Swan v. Holmes, 19 Beav. 471.

"In Equal Shares."]—A testator devised real estates to trustees for five hundred years, in trust to pay life annuities and the residue of the rents to his two sons, "in equal shares," and subject thereto he devised them to his two sons in fee as joint tenants:—Held, first, that during the term they were tenants in common; and, secondly, that the employment by the two sons of the estates in their partnership trade had not the effect of making them tenants in common of the fee. Brown v. Oakshot, 24 Beav. 254.

Testator devised to A. and B. generally, and then added, "My meaning is that the rents of my houses should be equally shared between A. and B.":—Held, that they take as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants. Prince v. Heylin, 1 Atk. 493.

—— Effect of, where Gift Over on Death of Survivor.]—See infra, col. 1382.

"Every"]—See "All and Every," supra, col. 1366.

"Participate."—A testator, after giving his residuary estate to J. and F., in terms which would create a joint tenancy, by codicil directed that W. should participate in the bequest with J. and F.:—Held, that the residuary legatees took as tenants in common. Robertson v. Fraser, 40 L. J., Ch. 776; L. R. 6 Ch. 696; 19 W. R. 989.

"Respective."]—H. devises three-fourths of his personal estate to his three sons, equally to be divided between them; and the other fourth to them, in trust for his two daughters; the interest to be paid them respectively during their natural lives, and afterwards to their or either of their child or children; and for default of such issue to his three sons, equally to be divided between them. One of his daughters leaves a son, under whom the plaintiff claims, and the other dies without issue. The moiety of the sister who died without issue shall not go to the three brothers, but to the representative of the nephew. Stephens v. Hide, Cas. t. Talbot, 37.

Devise to A., the daughter of the testator, for life, and after her decease to all and every the child or children of A., male or female, begotten or to be begotten, and their assigns, for their respective lives, and after the decease and respective deceases of such child or children of A., to all and every the child or children of A., male or every such child or children of A., male or female, to be begotten, and the heirs of his, her, and their respective body and bodies, as tenants in common; and in case of the death of any of the said children of such child or children of A.,

and failure of issue of his, her, or their body or bodies respectively, then as well the original as the accrued share of such of them so dying without issue to go to the survivors or survivor, others or other of them, as tenants in common, if more than one; and for default of such issue over. A. had three children born in the lifetime of the testator and living at his decease, and another was born after the testator's death; one of the three born in his lifetime died during the life of A., without issue:—Held, that the children of A. took as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants; that, inasmuch as the children of the after-born child of A. could not take as purchasers, the devise would be supported according to the rule of cy près or approximation, by giving an estate tail to the after-born child of A.; that the rule of cy près, being an arbitrary principle of construction, introduced to effect the intention of a testator in the exigency of a particular case, was not to be applied, except when the necessity of the case required it, and that therefore, although the devise was to the children of A., as a class, the children of A., born in the testator's lifetime, would take estates for life, and the estates devised to the children of the after-born child would alone be altered; that cross-remainders were to be implied between the children of A., and therefore that the three children of A. who survived or left issue took according to their respective estates the share of the child of A. who died without issue, and that the inequality among the devisees, some of them being tenants in tail, and others tenants for life with remainder to their issue in tail, was no objection to the implication of cross-remainders among them. Vanderplank v. King, 3 Hare, 1; 12 L. J., Ch. 497; 7 Jur. 548.

Testator, after desiring his trustees to divide a principal sum into and equally between his nephew and four nieces, share and share alike, directed, in case any of them should die leaving issue of his, her, or their body or bodies before their shares of the trust fund should become payable under his will, that the share or proportion of each of them his said nephew and nieces so dying, of and in the said trust fund, should be paid to his or her children respectively, the children to stand in the place or stead of their respective deceased parents, and to be entitled to receive their respective parents' shares of his trust funds accordingly:—Held, a gift to such children as joint tenants, the effect of the word "respectively" being to allot the several families of children each to its respective parent. Hodgson's Trust, In re, 1 K. & J. 178.

A gift to several persons "during their respective lives, and, subject thereto, in trust for their respective children," creates a joint tenancy for life, and the children take their parents' shares per stirpes as tenants in common. Sutcliffe v. Howard, 38 L. J., Ch. 472; 17 W. R. 819.

Bequest of personal estate upon trust to assign the same to four persons "and to each of their respective heirs, executors, and assigns":—Held, to create a tenancy in common. Gordon v. Atkinson, 1 De G. & Sm. 478.

Gift of a personal estate for the benefit of testator's brothers and sisters, their executors and administrators, respectively for ever:—Held, to create a tenancy in common, and not a joint tenancy. Moore, In re, 31 L. J., Ch. 368; 6 L. T. 43; 10 W. R. 315.

Bequest to A. for life, with remainder to B., C. and D., with a substantial gift of their "respective shares," in case of the death of any of them:—Held, that B., C. and D. took as tenants in common. Ive v. King, 16 Beav. 46; 21 L. J., Ch. 560; 16 Jur. 489.

Courts of equity are far from favouring joint tenants. The word "respectively" will separate an estate, and make it a tenancy in common. Heathe v. Heathe, 2 Atk. 122.

"For Sole and Separate Use."]—A testator who was the proprietor of three hotels, after reciting that he was part proprietor with another of the S. hotel owned by them in equal shares and proportions, share and share alike, directed that the entire of his interest therein "shall be vested and become the property of my present wife M. J., for her own benefit, and for the benefit of my two sons by her, viz. C. and E.; and my further wish in this respect is, that said M. J. shall, in the event of my decease, continue to carry on the business of the said S. hotel until my sons C. and E. shall attain the respective ages of twenty-one years; at which periods respectively it is my wish and desire that my said wife M. J. shall make over one-third of such interest in said S. hotel to my said sons C. and E. for their own sole and separate use and benefit." He bequeathed another hotel to two other sons "in equal shares and proportions share and share alike." E. died a minor. In an action by E.'s administrator, claiming his share in the S. hotel:—Held, that on E.'s death under twenty-one the testator's widow and C. became entitled to E.'s share by survivorship. Jury v. Jury, 9 L. R., Ir. 207.

"Share and Share Alike."]—Though the words "share and share alike" in a will generally create a tenancy in common, they cannot do so where there is an express joint tenancy. Armstrong v. Eldridge, 3 Bro. C. C. 215. But see Jones v. Randall, 1 J. & W. 100; 20 R. R. 237.

The words "share and share alike" have been held for two hundred years to be a tenancy in common. Heathe v. Heathe, 2 Atk. 122.

Legacy to A. for life, and after her decease to her children; if she should leave none, to B. and C., share and share alike, or to the survivor, is a vested interest in B. and C. upon the death of the testator, as tenants in common; A., though she survived them, dying without children. Perry v. Wood, 3 Ves. 204.

Gift of a share over to the children of testator's late cousins, W. U. and J. U., share and share alike, at their respective ages of twenty-one; that is a tenancy in common among those then living, and one of them dying in the lifetime of the testator, that share is lapsed. Martin v. Wilson, 3 Bro. C. C. 324.

Gift to Children after Prior Life Estate.]—Under the following bequest: "All my lawful debts to be paid, and the remainder for my daughter; and at her decease to be left to her children":—Held, that the children took as joint tenants. Mence v. Bagster, 4 De G. & Sm. 162.

A bequest of residuary personal estate to A. for life, and should she have a child or children, then to it or them for ever. After the death of the testatrix A. married, and had issue:—Held, that pursuing the intent of the gift, and by analogy to estates created by way of use or devise, as distinguished from estates raised by conveyance at common law, the children of A., notwithstanding their interests vested necessarily at different times as they came into esse, took as joint tenants. Woodgate v. Unwin (infra) commented on. Kenworthy v. Ward, 11 Hare, 196; 1 Eq. R. 389; 17 Jur. 1047; 1 W. R. 493.

Under a gift to A., with a direction that upon her death the property is to be left to her children, the children take as joint tenants. Noble v. Stow, 29 Beav. 409; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1115; 7 W. R. 709.

Devise to a daughter for life, and afterwards to her children or heirs for ever:—Held, that the surviving children took as joint tenants. Ruck v. Barwise, 2 Dr. & Sm. 510; 35 L. J., Ch. 16; 12 L. T. 841; 13 W. R. 1016; 6 N. R. 375.

A fund was bequeathed to be invested in stock, to pay an annuity to A., "the principal to go to her children at her death":—Held, a joint tenancy. There were eight children, who, in the life of the tenant for life, concurred in signing an authority to the trustee, which was acted on, to invest the fund or mortgage, three of the children being minors at the time:—Held, that the shares of the five were thereby severed from the three, though not from one another. The trustee advanced to one of the children the estimated amount of his share, the tenant for life providing for the interest on the amount, and all the other children jointly and severally covenanted not to call upon the trustee to make up any deficiency in case the share should fall short of the advance, and also to indemnify the trustee against all claim, damage, and expenses by reason of the advance:—Held, that this severed all the shares. Where joint tenants, by their conduct, treat their interests as several, the effect of this, in severing the joint tenancy, is not prevented by the circumstance that they were not aware that their interests were originally joint. Williams v. Hensman, 1 J. & H. 546; 30 L. J., Ch. 878; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 771; 5 L. T. 203.

A testator gave a moiety of his residuary estate, as well real as personal, upon trust to pay the income equally amongst all his children who should be living when his youngest child attained twenty-one for their lives, and after the death of any of them, as to an equal portion of the moiety proportionate to the number of his children then living for the use of the issue of such child or children so dying, absolutely for ever:—Held, that, pursuant to the intent of the gift, and by analogy to dispositions operating under the statute of uses, or of dispositions operating under wills as distinguished from conveyances operating at common law, the children of a child who died after the youngest child of the testator attained twenty-one took as joint tenants the proportionate share of the deceased child, although their respective interest in the proportionate part vested in them at different times as they respectively came into esse. M'Gregor v. M'Gregor, 1 De G. F. & J. 63.

A gift in trust for all and every the child and children of A. and his, her, and their executors, administrators, and assigns, for his, her, and their own absolute use and benefit, creates a joint tenancy. Morgan v. Britten, 41 L. J., Ch. 70; L. R. 13 Eq. 28.

Personal property was bequeathed to trustees in trust for A. for life, and if she should have children that survived her then at her death for her children equally; but if she should have no heirs the trust fund was then bequeathed to B., who was A.'s mother, and her heirs:—Held, that upon the death of A., without having ever had any issue, the gift over took effect, and that B. and all her children, other than A., became entitled to the fund as joint tenants. Dakin v. Nicholson, 6 L. J., Ch. 329.

Bequest of leaseholds in trust for F. for life, and after his decease for the issue of the body of F., if any such there should then be. If F. died before twenty-one, or afterwards without issue, gift over:—Held, to confer a life interest upon F., with a gift over to his issue, meaning descendants who should be living at his death, as joint tenants. Hall v. Nalder, 22 L. J., Ch. 242; 17 Jur. 224.

Gift of personal estate to C. during her life; and after her decease among all her children and their issue, such children and their issue to be entitled, as amongst themselves, to the benefit of survivorship, and accruer of surviving shares:—Held, that the children and grandchildren of C. took as tenants in common. Law v. Thorp, 27 L. J., Ch. 649; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 447; 6 W. R. 480.

A testator left property on trust for his widow for life, and after her death on trust for his brothers and sisters A., B., C., D. and E.; but in case any of them should die leaving lawful issue, he directed that the share or shares of him, her, or them so dying should go to his, her, and their respective issue. A. and B. died before the testator, leaving issue. D. and E. died after the testator, but before his widow, and left issue:—Held, that the persons taking as issue in each case took as joint tenants. Hobgen v. Neale, 40 L. J., Ch. 36; L. R. 11 Eq. 48; 25 L. T. 680; 19 W. R. 144. And see Pollard, In re, post, col. 1429.

Gift to Several in Remainder or Quasi-remainder at Twenty-one.]—Bequest to A. for life, and after her decease to her children when they arrived at twenty-one. A. had two children, both of whom attained twenty-one:—Held, that they were tenants in common. Woodgate v. Unwin, 4 Sim. 129. See comments on the case in Kenworthy v. Ward, 11 Hare, 196; 1 Eq. Rep. 389; 17 Jur. 1047; 1 W. R. 493.

Devise to trustees, as soon as testator's three daughters attained their respective ages of twenty-one, to convey to them and the heirs of their bodies as joint tenants; this not a joint estate, but to be construed, as it may be, so that the conveyance must be at twenty-one respectively, with cross-remainders. Marryat v. Townly, 1 Ves. Sen. 102.

A will, after giving a life interest to A. in stock, continued, "and after her decease I give and devise the said stock to her children when they attain the age of twenty-one years":—Held, that the children who attained twenty-one took vested interests as tenants in common. Only two children attained twenty-one, one of whom died in the lifetime of the tenant for life; and on a bill filed by the survivor for the whole stock, a general demurrer by the representatives of the other was allowed. Woodgate v. Atkins, 9 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 166.

A devise or bequest to the children of A., as they should become of age, constitutes a tenancy in common. A gift to the children of A., as they shall come into esse, does not, by reason of its taking effect at different periods, prevent its being a joint tenancy; but a gift to the children of A. as they shall become twenty-one is a tenancy in common; these words being operative as words of severance, the children taking vested interests at different periods. Hund v. North, 3 N. R. 239; 33 L. J., Ch. 556; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 7; 9 L. T. 634; 12 W. R. 229.

If testator devises lands in trust for his nephew A. and niece B., and the children of the said B. by her husband, to receive the profits when they come of age, and also bequeaths them money at their age of twenty-one, B. having but one child at the time, and afterwards makes a codicil confirming those bequests, all the children of B. take as tenants in common, and have an immediate vested right in the money. Bateman v. Roach, 9 Mod. 104.

A testator devised freehold estates to trustees in trust to settle and convey them to the use of G. R. for life, with remainder to his issue in tail male in strict settlement, and in default of such issue the estates to go over. G. R. had no son, but had several daughters, all born after the testator's death:—Held, that the words "in tail male" were descriptive, not of the issue, but of the interest they were to take, and that the daughters were entitled to take under the limitation in remainder as tenants in common. Trevor v. Trevor, 1 H. L. Cas. 239. Affirming, 13 Sim. 108; 11 L. J., Ch. 417; 6 Jur. 863.

A. devised his real estate to trustees to pay the rents and profits to his wife for life, she continuing his widow; and after her decease or second marriage, upon trust to pay the same rents and profits to "all and every the child and children" of his late sister T. until the youngest of them should have attained twenty-one; and when and so soon as the youngest should have attained twenty-one, then to sell the real estate and divide the moneys equally between and among "the said" children, share and share alike. A testator also bequeathed his personalty upon precisely similar trusts, as to the interest and capital, as he had previously declared with regard to the rents and corpus, of his real estate:—Held, that the children of T. took interest as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants, in the rents of the realty and the interests of the personalty, and also in the corpus of either fund. Groves' Trust, In re, 3 Giff. 575; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 38; 6 L. T. 376.

A testator bequeathed property to a tenant for life, and after her death to her children:—Held, that the children took as joint tenants. Semble, had the gift been made contingent on their attaining twenty-one, they would have taken as tenants in common. Buck v. Barwise, 6 N. R. 375. S. C., nom. Ruck v. Barwise, 2 Dr. & Sm. 510; 35 L. J., Ch. 16; 12 L. T. 841; 13 W. R. 1016.

Issue Substituted for Parents who took as Tenants in Common.]—Upon a gift of part of the residue to testator's wife for life, and after amongst such children as should be then living, equally to be divided, and the issue of such as should be dead to take their parent's share:—Held, that the latter took as between themselves as joint tenants, and not as tenants in common. Bridge v. Yates, 12 Sim. 645.

G. by will gave the residue of his real and personal estate to trustees, upon trust to pay the interest and dividends to L. for life; and as to the principal, from and after her decease, he gave that as follows: "in trust for all the children of L. who shall be living at her decease, and the issue of such of them as shall be then dead leaving issue, as tenants in common; but the issue, if more than one, of any deceased child shall take as a class, as if by representation, and not as individuals." One of the daughters of L. married P., and died in the lifetime of L., leaving two children, W. and J. J. died in the lifetime of L., an infant and unmarried:—Held, that upon the death of L. the fund became divisible between the surviving children of L. and the issue of deceased children, according to the stirpes; but that the issue of deceased children, in the shares they took, took as joint tenants. Penny v. Clarke, 1 De G. F. & J. 424; 29 L. J., Ch. 370; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 307; 8 W. R. 286. And see S. C., Johns. 619.

Where a testator gave a reversionary interest in a fund to his three sons, or such of them as should be then living, or the issue of such of them as should be then dead, share and share alike, the issue of each son taking only the share which he would have been entitled to if then living:—Held, that the issue took in joint tenancy. Coe v. Bigg, 1 N. R. 536.

Where a testator gave property, after the death of a previous tenant for life, to several of his nieces for life, and after their deaths to their children respectively; "but in case all the children of his nieces or of any or either of them should die (either in their respective lifetimes or after their decease) under age or without having issue, then upon trust that his trustees should pay the same unto and equally amongst all and every his nephews and nieces, and the issue of such of them as should be then dead":—Held, first, that the issue of the testator's deceased nephews and nieces to take under this last gift were to be restricted to their children; held, secondly, that the gift to such issue was an original gift, and not one by substitution; held, thirdly, that, whether the gift were original or by substitution, it was not necessary for such issue to survive the tenant for life in order to take under it; held, fourthly, that, the gift being original, it was not necessary for such issue to survive their own parents in order to take under it, but that it would have been necessary for them to do so had the gift been one by substitution; held, fifthly, that such issue took as joint tenants. Lamphier v. Buck, 6 N. R. 196; 2 Dr. & Sm. 484; 34 L. J., Ch. 650; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 837; 12 L. T. 660; 13 W. R. 767.

A testator gave the residue of his real and personal estate to his nephews and nieces living at his death; but if any should be then dead, their offspring was to be considered to stand in the place of their parents, and to take the same benefit:—Held, that, though the nephews and nieces took as tenants in common, their offspring took as joint tenants. Leak v. M'Dowall, 32 Beav. 28.

In a gift among children and issue of children, but so that children should take in substitution for parents, the children and issue take as tenants in common, but children substituted for the parents take as joint tenants inter se. Heasman v. Pearse, 40 L. J., Ch. 258; L. R. 11 Eq. 522.

A father gave property to the children of A. living at a prescribed period, and the issue of deceased children, so as such issue should have no greater share than their parents would have taken if living, and he afterwards provided that if any one or more of such issue should be then dead, having left lawful issue, then the issue of such issue as should be so dead should receive the share which their, his, or her parent would have taken if living:—

Held, that the effect was to create a joint tenancy amongst the members of the various families, subject to this, that if any one died leaving issue it must be considered for the purpose of determining the share which such issue were to take as if he had survived the period of distribution, but had severed the joint tenancy at the date of his death. S. C. 41 L. J., Ch. 705; L. R. 7 Ch. 275; 26 L. T. 299; 20 W. R. 271.

By a codicil to his will A. desired his son to insure his life for 5,000*l.*, and to bequeath that sum to his wife for life, and at her death, or at the death of the son, to bequeath the 5,000*l.* to A.'s daughters or their "descendants" in equal proportions:—Held, that although the daughters were to take as tenants in common, the words "in equal proportions" did not apply as between the descendants themselves, such descendants taking as joint tenants. Flower, In re, Matheson v. Goodwyn, 62 L. T. 216.

Gift among all and every the testator's "brothers and sisters who should be then living, and the children of such of them as should be then dead, such children to take their respective parent's share only":—Held, that the children of the testator's brothers and sisters took their parent's share as tenants in common inter se. Shepherdson v. Dale, 12 Jur. (N.S.) 156; 13 L. T. 699. And see Lyon v. Coward, 15 Sim. 287; 15 L. J., Ch. 460; 10 Jur. 486.

A testator devised real estate to trustees in fee, upon certain trusts during the lives of his sons and daughters and the survivors and survivor of them, and from and after the death of the survivor of his sons and daughters, or during the lives or life of all or any, with their concurrence, upon trust to sell the property, and to stand possessed of the proceeds "upon trust for all and every my said sons and daughters who shall be then living and the issue of any then dead (such issue standing in loco parentis) share and share alike":—Held, that the sons and daughters and the issue of a deceased son or daughter (as representing their deceased parent) took as tenants in common, but that, there not being words of severance among the issue of a deceased son or daughter, such issue took inter se as joint tenants. Shepherdson v. Dale (supra) disapproved. Yates, In re, Bostock v. D'Eyncourt, [1891] 3 Ch. 53; 64 L. T. 819; 39 W. R. 573.

A testatrix appointed property to trustees to sell all the property except certain real estate, and to hold the proceeds to pay the legacies thereinafter given, and to pay an annuity to A. for life, and subject thereto for B. and her children, and after B.'s death without children to sell the real estate not before sold, and out of the proceeds to pay A., his executors, administrators, and assigns, a legacy in lieu of the annuity, and to hold the residue for all the children of C., and the issue of such as should be then dead, equally to be divided between such children and issue, share and share alike, but so that such issue should take such share only as their respective parents would if living have been entitled to. A. died in the lifetime of B., who had no children:—Held, that in the events which had happened the legacy to A. was payable, that it was a demonstrative legacy, and that the issue of the deceased children of C. took as tenants in common. Hodges v. Grant, 36 L. J., Ch. 935; L. R. 4 Eq. 140; 15 W. R. 607.

The testator gave the interest in a fund to his niece A. as long as she continued unmarried, but he declared that if she married or died unmarried the fund was "then to be divided between the brothers and sisters of the said A. and their children." A. had six brothers and sisters living at the testator's death. A. died unmarried, her sister B. having predeceased her. B. left two children, one of whom predeceased A.:—Held, that the two children of B. took vested interests at her death in one-sixth of the fund as tenants in common, subject to A.'s life interest. Crosthwaite v. Dean, 40 L. T. 837.

M. by her will gave the whole of her property to A. for her life, remainder as to one-fourth to L. or her issue, as to one-fourth to the issue of C., deceased, as to one-fourth to G. or his issue, and as to the other fourth to H. or her issue. The question having been raised as to the period at which the class of issue entitled under the gift was to be ascertained:—Held, that all issue coming into existence before the death of the tenant for life were included in the class, and that they took as joint tenants. Jones, In re, Hume v. Lloyd, 47 L. J., Ch. 775; 26 W. R. 828.

A testatrix devised and bequeathed all her real and personal estate to trustees upon trust to pay a competent portion of the annual proceeds thereof for the maintenance, education, and support of such of her children as should be under the age of twenty-one years until the youngest of them should attain that age, and as to the residue thereof "upon trust for all or such of my children as shall be then living, and the issue of such of my said children as may be dead leaving issue, and their respective heirs, executors, and administrators, in equal shares as tenants in common, but the issue of any deceased child shall take only as a class, as if by representation of their parents, and not as individuals, for and during the natural life of the last survivor of my said seven children," with subsequent trusts after the death of such last survivor:—Held, that the children of a deceased child of the testatrix were entitled to their parent's share as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants. Quirk, In re, Quirk v. Quirk, 61 L. T. 364; 37 W. R. 796.

Words of Survivorship between Legatees.]—Words "equally among them," coupled with subsequent words "and to the survivors and survivor of them," create a joint tenancy. Oakley v. Young, 3 Eq. Abr. 536.

Devise to two equally to be divided, and to the survivor of them; they are joint tenants. Clerk v. Clerk, 2 Vern. 223.

Devise of the residue of personal estate to the wife for life, if she die without issue living at her death to testator's two brothers, or if one of them shall be dead to the survivor. They both died in the life of the wife; the legacy was vested in both as joint tenants, and therefore goes to the representatives of the survivor. Barnes v. Allen, 1 Bro. C. C. 181.

Devise of lands to younger children equally as tenants in common, with benefit of survivorship:—Held, to refer to a survivorship spoken of in the former part of the will, and therefore to be a tenancy in common, with a limitation to the survivors after the death of any before twenty-one without issue. Hawes v. Hawes, 3 Atk. 524; 1 Ves. Sen. 13; 1 Wils. C. B. 165.

Words of survivorship in a will shall not defeat the effect of words importing a tenancy in common, but shall be referred to some time, as the death of the tenant for life, or even to the death of the testator, though a construction not to be adopted if there can be any other. Russell v. Long, 4 Ves. 551.

J., being entitled to a debt of 20,000*l.* due from the Crown, devised the same to six of his relations, equally to be divided between them, share and share alike, and if either of them die to the survivor or survivors of them. All the legatees survived the testator, but before the debt was recovered one of them died:—Held, that the legatees were joint tenants, and that the representative of the legatee dying, was not entitled to any part of this legacy. Bindon (Earl) v. Suffolk (Earl), 4 Bro. P. C. 574. Reversing 1 P. Wms. 96.

Legacy to A. for life, and after her decease to her children, if she should have none to B. and C., share and share alike, or to the survivor. A. vested interest in B. and C., upon the death of the testator, as tenants in common, although she survived them, dying without children. Perry v. Woods, 3 Ves. 204.

Bequest of an annuity to the children of A., in equal shares and proportions, to continue during their lives, and the life of the survivor of them. The children take as tenants in common, and there is no survivorship between them by implication; therefore the share of one dying goes to its representative. Jones v. Randall, 1 J. & W. 100; 20 R. R. 237. See also Armstrong v. Eldridge, 3 Bro. C. C. 215.

A testator by his will gives to his five daughters a sum of money in gross, the interest to be paid to them in equal parts or shares during their lives, the principal to be placed in the funds, in trust for them, or the survivor or survivors of them; the principal, after their deaths, in equal parts to the surviving children as they arrive at the age of twenty-one. One of the daughters dies:—Held, that the surviving daughters take the whole for their lives, as tenants in common. Minton v. Cave, 10 Jur. 86.

A testator devised a farm to his two sons, with permission to dispose of it to certain persons, if they thought proper; but if it should not be sold, he bequeathed it, after the decease of either of his sons, to the survivor, and directed that after the death of both it should be sold, and the money divided equally between the children of his sons:—Held, that the sons were only joint tenants for life, with a power of sale; that they could make a good title, and give discharges for the purchase-money; that they were joint tenants for life of the purchase-money: and that, upon the death of the survivor, it would devolve to their children. Breedon v. Breedon, 1 Russ. & M. 413; 8 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 104.

A testator, by will in 1819, devised freehold and copyhold estates to trustees, after the death of all his three children except one, in case there should be no issue of such deceased children, or being such, they should all die, to pay the rents to such one only child for life, and after the death of such surviving child, in the event aforesaid, leaving lawful issue, then to pay and divide the rents unto and among the children of such surviving child so dying, if more than one; and in case there should be but one child of such surviving child living at his or her death, or in case there should be more than one, and they should all except one depart this life, then, so soon as such event should happen, absolutely to convey the estates in fee to such only or surviving child of the survivor of his children so dying on his or her attaining twenty-one, and in the meantime to apply the rents for his or her benefit:—Held, that this was a gift to the surviving children of the testator's surviving child for life in equal shares as tenants in common, with remainder to the survivor of those children in fee; and that the remainder in fee was void for remoteness, and passed as undisposed of to the heir-at-law. Garland v. Brown, 10 L. T. 292.

By a will, made before 1838, a testator devised unto his seven children, "and their heirs for ever, the fee simple" of real estate; and if either of his children should die leaving children, the share of him or her so dying to go to such children; but if any of his children should die and leave no child, the share of him or her dying to go to his (the testator's) surviving children and their heirs for ever. All the seven children survived the testator:—Held, that the word "die" must be construed to mean die in the lifetime of the testator, and therefore that the seven children took as tenants in common in fee. Apsey v. Apsey, 36 L. T. 941.

W. by his will, subject to a life estate, gave all his real and personal property to seven children, equally to be divided among the survivors or survivor of them; and if any of them should die leaving issue, he gave the share of such child so dying equally to be divided among such issue:—Held, that the children took as tenants in common in fee simple. Bird v. Swales, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 273; 4 W. R. 227.

Bequest to A. and B., with benefit of survivorship as to the moiety of B. at B.'s death to A., her executors, administrators, and assigns:—Held, that A. and B. took as tenants in common, and A. having died in the testator's life, that her share lapsed, and that B. took a life interest only in the other moiety, which fell into the residue on his death. Patterson v. Rowland, 28 Beav. 347.

A gift to A. and B. (in terms creating a joint tenancy), followed by a proviso for survivorships to B. if A. died without children, creates a tenancy in common. Ryves v. Ryves, 40 L. J., Ch. 252; L. R. 11 Eq. 539.

Where a testator gives residuary property to trustees upon trust to pay the interest to one for life, and after her decease divide the same among her children and their issue, such children and their issue to be entitled as amongst themselves to the benefit of survivorship and accruer of surviving shares, all the children coming into esse during the lifetime of their mother are entitled as tenants in common, with benefit of survivorship. Law v. Thorp, 27 L. J., Ch. 649; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 447; 6 W. R. 480.

Testatrix gave an annuity of 50*l.* to her son-in-law for his life, provided he remained unmarried, but if he should marry the annuity to cease; and after his death or second marriage, whichever should first happen, she gave 1,000*l.* to be equally divided between her brother and sisters; and if they should not all be then living, she gave the share of him, her, or them so dying to be equally divided between them, her surviving brother and sisters. The testatrix's brother and sisters all died in her son-in-law's lifetime, and he died unmarried:—Held, that the brother and sisters took a vested interest in the 1,000*l.* as tenants in common. Peters v. Dipple, 12 Sim. 101.

A testator gives to his wife all his household goods, &c., absolutely, and the dividends of a sum of stock to be paid half-yearly, subject to a defeasance in case of her marrying in a particular manner, in which event the capital was to sink into the residuary estate. Then followed specific gifts of further portions of his stock to his daughter A., to be paid at twenty-one, for her separate use; and in case she died under twenty-one leaving children, to such children equally at twenty-one; but in case she died under twenty-one without children, such sum to sink into the residue. Then followed specific gifts of other portions of his stock to his daughter A. and his other children for life, and after to their children equally at twenty-one, with power to make advances for maintenance to his daughters for their separate use, and in default of children to sink into the residue, with a provision that, as to such of his children as should be under age at his death, the dividends should be applied for their maintenance; and whereas he gave the capital to his daughters, he gave the dividends only to his two sons, and there was a proviso for forfeiture in case of any attempt at assignment, charge, or anticipation, and no deduction to be made from the gifts to his wife in case of a deficiency. There was then a gift to trustees of leaseholds and personalty, in trust to sell, and pay debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, and to invest the residue after paying debts and legacies, and to pay the dividends to his wife for life, or until her second marriage as aforesaid; and after her decease or second marriage, to pay the dividends of all the residuary estates unto and among his seven children (by name) during their several and respective lives, to be divided in the proportion which the dividends and stock specifically bequeathed bore to each other; and on the decease of his said children, upon trust to pay the principal or capital among the children of his aforesaid seven children share and share alike at twenty-one; but in case any of his said grandchildren should happen to die without children surviving, or there being such, all should die under twenty-one without issue, the share of his said grandchildren so dying to go to the others, share and share alike, with trusts for maintenance, with a gift over in the event of the death of all his children and grandchildren without issue. There was then a proviso that this last gift to his wife and children should be subject to the aforesaid proviso for forfeiture, and the shares so forfeited to go to the others of the children. The testator made two codicils, by which he revoked the specific legacies to his two sons, and gave them smaller sums in the same terms as by the will directed, as also to his daughter E. The testator left his widow and children surviving, and, on the death of his two sons, one having two sons, questions arose as to the effect of the will, and on bill filed for the purpose of putting a construction upon it:—Held, that there was a gift to the seven children as tenants in common in unequal shares during their respective lives, the word "deceases" shewing that intention, and that as each died a certain portion should become subject to distribution, and be let loose to go to all the grandchildren who had then attained twenty-one, and so on as each child died; that the codicils only affected the share of the sons, and not of their children, to whom with the other grandchildren all the undisposed-of residue would go, and there was no intestacy as to corpus or dividends. Alt v. Gregory, 3 W. R. 630.

Held, on appeal, that on the true construction of the will the surviving children of the testator for the time being were entitled to the whole income of the residue till the death of the last surviving child. S. C., 8 De G. M. & G. 221; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 577; 4 W. R. 436.

Effect of Words "Equal Shares" where Gift over on Death of Survivor.]—Testator gave a residue to trustees to pay the interest to four persons for life, and after decease of the survivor then to divide the principal among their children; two died: the interest shall be paid to the other two. Though the words "share and share alike" in a will generally create a tenancy in common, they cannot do so where there is an express joint tenancy. Armstrong v. Eldridge, 3 Bro. C. C. 215.

Gift of the income of property to A., B., and C. for their lives and the lives of the survivors and survivor of them during their and her lives or life; and from and after the death of the survivor of them, then in trust for their children:—Held, that A., B., and C. took as joint tenants. Pearson v. Cranswick, 31 Beav. 624; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 397; 11 W. R. 229. Affirmed 9 L. T. 275.—L.JJ.

A testatrix gave 50*l.* long annuities to her sister M. P., and her said sister's husband, for their joint lives, and after their decease to her nephew. The husband, having survived the sister, was held to be entitled to the long annuities. Townley v. Bolton, 1 Myl. & K. 148; 2 L. J., Ch. 25.

A testatrix gave unto A. and B. a sum in the long annuities, to be equally divided during their lives, "after which" she gave the said sum to C.:—Held, that the survivor of A. and B. took for life. M'Dermott v. Wallace, 5 Beav. 142.

A gift upon trust to pay the income to wife for life, and after her death to pay the interest to the testator's three sons "for their natural lives, in equal shares," and after their decease he gave one-third of the fund to the children of each of them in equal shares and proportions, to be paid when and as they should respectively attain the age of twenty-one years, and directed that the interest be paid to the children until they should attain twenty-one; and he gave the residue to the same three sons:—Held, that the life interest was, notwithstanding the words "in equal shares," a joint tenancy; and one of the three sons having survived, took the whole income; and that, on the death of the survivor, the capital was divisible among the children of the sons in three shares per stirpes, and not per capita. Begley v. Cook, 3 Drew. 662; 5 W. R. 66.

A testator gave to A. an annuity of 50*l.* per annum for her life, and after her decease to the children she might have born in wedlock, equally to be divided between them during their lives, and after the decease of the survivor to go to his nephew and his two nieces, equally between them. A. having died without issue:—Held, that the gift to the nephew and nieces was not void for remoteness, and that they took the capital from whence the annuity proceeded absolutely, in equal shares, as tenants in common. Evans v. Walker, 3 Ch. D. 211; 25 W. R. 7.

Testator gave to C. B. and J. T. all his houses at W., "each to have one-half, share and share alike, and what debts he should owe at his death, both to pay a like share of the same; all the above premises he gave, devised, and bequeathed to C. B. and J. T., each to enjoy one-half during their lives, and at their decease the said premises to go to their children." J. T. died without issue and intestate, leaving C. B. his heiress-at-law, and also heiress-at-law of the testator:—Held, that C. B. and J. T. each took a life estate in the property, with remainders to their children in fee as joint tenants; and that in the events which had happened J. T.'s share went to C. B. in fee, and C. B.'s share to C. B.'s children in fee as joint tenants. Laverick's Estate, In re, 18 Jur. 304; 2 W. R. 113.

W. bequeaths the residue of his real and personal estate (directed to be converted) in trust for M. F. for life, and then upon trust to pay the interest, &c., unto and between his two grandchildren E. G. and G. G. during their respective natural lives in equal shares, and after their decease unto and between all and every their child and children in equal shares; and if no child, to the testator's legal personal representatives. There being several children, four of whom died before the death of the survivor of the testator's grandchildren, upon the question what was the period of division:—Held, that the children took equally vested interests on the death of the tenant for life. Pearce v. Edmeades, 3 Y. & C. 246; 3 Jur. 245.

Accruing Shares where Original Shares held in Common.]—A testator gave his real and personal estate to A., B., and C., as tenants in common. By a codicil he declared that if any of the devisees should die in his lifetime, his estate and interest should "go to the survivors or survivor of them, and the heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns of such survivor." A. died in the testator's lifetime:—Held, that B. and C. took as joint tenants the share intended for A. Leigh v. Mosley, 14 Beav. 609.

A testator gave all the property he possessed in the parish of K., consisting of houses, lands, debts, ready money, and other effects which he then possessed or might possess at the time of his decease, and also all his funds in the Bank of England, or that of the United States of America, to his reputed children, Anthony, James, and Richard, and their heirs, share and share alike, as soon as they should have attained twenty-one, it being his will that if one of them should die before he attained that age his share should vest in and belong to the survivors. James died under twenty-one, leaving Anthony and Richard surviving:—Held, that the share of the testator's property which James would have been entitled to if he had attained twenty-one vested in Anthony and Richard as joint tenants. Jones v. Hall, 16 Sim. 500.

Gift of Residue following Gift in Common to same Persons.]—A testator devised certain properties to his sons A., B., C., D., and E. respectively as tenants in common, and appointed them residuary legatees:—Held, that they took the residue as joint tenants. Wallis' Trusts, In re, 23 L. R., Ir. 460.

Effect of Gift by Reference.]—O. devised all his real estate, charged with an annuity and bequests, to his three sons, I., W., and C., "as tenants in common" in fee. I. gave his property to his two brothers, "absolutely for their uses, under the directions of the will of my late father." C. devised all his estates to E.; when I. made his will, all the moneys charged on the estates by the will of O. had not been paid:—Held, that the will of I., the son, created a joint tenancy in the property to his father thereby devised, and that the plaintiff took the whole of his share. Oliver v. White, 4 De G. F. & J. 17; 31 L. J., Ch. 689; 6 L. T. 198; 10 W. R. 276.

h. Amounts, Shares, and Proportions.

Amounts where doubtful.]—Testator bequeathed to his grandchildren, naming them, the sum of 1,000*l.*, payable to each of them on their attaining twenty-one, and in case of the death of either of them before that period, the legacy to be divided amongst the survivors:—Held, that the grandchildren were entitled to one sum only of 1,000*l.*, and not each of them to a separate legacy to that amount. Stewart v. Garnett, 3 Sim. 398.

Where there is a proviso in a will, that in case what is left to one daughter shall exceed in value what is given to another, the former shall refund pro tanto, what is given to either of the daughters' children is to be looked upon as given to the daughter. Thomas v. Bennet, 2 P. Wms. 343.

Testator, possessed of 5,000*l.* 3 per cent. consols, bequeathed 2,000*l.* thereof to trustees in trust as to 1,000*l.* for G., and as to 2,000*l.* for B.:—Held, that testator meant to give trustees 3,000*l.* in trust; bequest to them being mentioned only once, and the legacy of the 2,000*l.* to B. being mentioned twice. Alfred v. Green, 5 Madd. 92.

A. bequeathed property amounting to 1,279*l.* to B. Subsequently B., after referring to the will of A., and that he was desirous of making the following legacies to A.'s relations, bequeathed to them legacies amounting to 2,800*l.*; and proceeded: "But if the property I became entitled to under the will of A. should fall short and be deficient in paying such legacies, my desire is, that 500*l.* out of any other part of my personal estate shall be paid and applied for that purpose":—Held, that the legacies, though nominally amounting to 2,800*l.*, were limited to 1,279*l.* plus 500*l.*, and that they must therefore abate. Read v. Strangways, 14 Beav. 139; 20 L. J., Ch. 487.

Shares and Proportions.]—A testatrix bequeathed as follows: "As to all the rest of my personal estate, I give the same to A., B., C., D., &c., upon trust, to pay one-third to P. S. T. for her own proper use; as to the remaining two-thirds, in trust to invest the same and receive the dividends, and pay the same for the use of F. I. T. and C. H. T. for and during the term of their natural lives; and after the decease of either of them (the said F. I. T. and C. H. T.), then in trust to pay one-fourth part of the trust fund unto P. S. T. to and for her own use and benefit, and to pay the dividends and profits of one other fourth part of the said trust fund unto the survivor of them (the said F. I. T. and C. H. T.), to and for his use, for and during the term of his natural life; and from and after the decease of the survivor of them (the said F. I. T. and C. H. T.), in trust, to pay, assign, and transfer, and set over the said trust fund, together with all interest that shall be due thereon, unto P. S. T., to and for her own proper use and benefit." P. S. T. died in 1821, F. I. T. in 1831, and C. H. T. in 1837:—Held, that C. H. T. was entitled, on the death of his brother F. I. T., to three-fourths of the two-thirds of the income of the trust-fund. Wentworth v. Williams, 11 L. J., Ch. 107.

By his will the testator bequeathed his residue between Ann Sarah Parker and ten other persons (naming them). Two of the legatees having died, the testator, by a codicil, gave the residue between eight persons, naming them, and Ann Sarah Parker, G. F., and Ann Parker. It appeared that Ann Sarah Parker and Ann Parker were the same persons:—Held, that she was entitled to one-tenth, and not to two-elevenths of the residue. Read v. Strangeways, 12 Beav. 323.

Under words in will "to pay to each of my younger children (three daughters), as and for their respective portions, a sum equal to one-fourth of what shall remain to my (eldest) son William, payable to each of my said daughters respectively, at her or their respective ages of twenty-one, or marriage," &c.:—Held, that all daughters were only entitled to a sum equal to a fourth of what remained to the eldest son, or each of them to one-seventh (such appearing to be testator's intent), and that the time of testator's death was that at which the amount of his property and proportions of the shares were to be computed. Colclough v. Gaven, 3 Dow, 267.

Testator directed his trustees to invest 1,400*l.* upon trust for his wife for life, and 800*l.* upon trust for his daughter for her life; and he directed the income of the 1,400*l.* to be paid to his daughter for life if she survived his wife. He then directed his trustees, after the decease of his daughter, to pay and divide the two sums of 1,400*l.* and 800*l.* between his daughter's children; but if she died unmarried, or, being married, died without issue, then he gave the two sums, as to the sum of 800*l.*, equally between the brothers and sisters of his wife, and the remainder of the sums equally between his own brothers and sisters. The testator's daughter having survived the testator, and having died unmarried in the lifetime of the testator's widow, the brothers and sisters of the testator's widow claimed the whole fund in which the 800*l.* had been invested:—Held, that the same was divisible in the proportion of eight to fourteen between the brothers and sisters of the testator's widow and the brothers and sisters of the testator. Hewitt v. George, 18 Beav. 522.

A testator devised his Upton Park estate to his five daughters and his grandson, as tenants in common for their respective lives, with remainders over. By a codicil he devised to his son Alfred and his heirs "the like share he had given to his five daughters in the Upton Park property, in every respect whatever":—Held, that Alfred took one-seventh in fee. Bedborough v. Bedborough, 34 Beav. 284.

A testator bequeathed 2,400*l.*, part of his preferential stock in a railway company, upon trust for the benefit of a niece; 1,000*l.*, other part of his preferential stock, upon like trusts for the benefit of another niece; and the rest of his preferential stock upon like trusts for the benefit of a third niece. The preferential stock was composed of various kinds of stock of different values:—Held, that the whole of the stock must be apportioned rateably amongst the three nieces. Shey v. Barber, 16 W. R. 842.

And see PAYMENT, post, col. 1697, and cases ante, col. 834.

i. Copyholds.

Formalities of Will.]—Copyhold surrendered to the use of a will shall pass by a will attested by one or two witnesses only. Wagstaffe v. Wagstaffe, 2 P. Wms. 258; Appleyard v. Wood, Select. Cas. Ch. 42.

Though, where a copyhold is surrendered to the use of a will, there need not be three witnesses to such will, because the copyhold passes by surrender and not by the will, yet a trust, or equity of redemption of a copyhold, cannot pass by a will unless attested by three witnesses. Id. 261.

A devise of a copyhold, surrendered, &c. signed only by the testator, is sufficient. Fenoulet v. Passavant, 2 Ken. Ch. 109.

Where the legal estate is in trustees, so that the cestui que trust cannot surrender it, it will pass by his will, though unattested; for equitas sequitur legem. Tuffnell v. Page, 2 Atk. 37; Barnard. 91. Carr v. Ellison, 3 Atk. 75.

So also copyhold estate surrendered to use of will. S. C., Dick. 76.

J. surrendered to the use of his will, to be published in the presence of three or more credible witnesses. He made his will and devised the copyholds, but the will not being attested by any witness:—Held, the copyholds did not pass. Godwin v. Kilsha, Ambl. 684.

Testator devised to a charity his copyhold lands, which he had previously surrendered to his will. His will consisted of eleven sheets, two of which he signed in extremis, and then died. There were no witnesses; yet held a good appointment under 43 Eliz. c. 4. Att.-Gen. v. Sawtell, 2 Atk. 497.

Copyhold lands are not devisable by will, but the devisee may come and be admitted, as though his name were inserted in the surrender. Devise of customary freeholds, where there is no custom to surrender to use of will, must be according to the Statute of Frauds. Hussey v. Grills, Ambl. 300, 301.

By the custom of the manor of Shap, the legal interest in land of customary tenure, parcel of the manor, is not devisable, but is transferred by a deed of bargain and sale, having the effect of a surrender, in which the operating words are "bargain, sale, and surrender," and on the presentment or production of which admittance is granted to the alienee; but an equitable interest in such customary lands is capable of being passed by devise, without regard to the custom. A tenant of this manor, who was seised of customary lands, conveyed them, by a deed of bargain, sale, and surrender, to a trustee, upon trust, for such person as the tenant, by any deed, instrument in writing, or by his last will, or any codicil thereto, or any instrument in the nature of a last will or codicil to be by him legally executed, should appoint or devise the same; and under his conveyance the trustee was admitted:—Held, that the equitable interest in the lands would not pass by an unattested codicil of the tenant. Willan v. Lancaster, 3 Russ. 108; 27 R. R. 25.

C., by his will, devised all his freehold and copyhold estates to his two daughters, A. and M., and all other daughters that he might thereafter have, as tenants in common in fee. He had afterwards another daughter, L.: he then gave directions for another will, by which he gave all his real estates to his two eldest daughters, and a sum of 15,000*l.* to his daughter L. The attorney took the minutes of this second will in writing, but before it was prepared the testator died; these minutes were proved in the Spiritual Court as a testamentary paper :—Held, this paper being proved in the Spiritual Court was insufficient to pass the copyhold estate. Carey v. Askew, 2 Bro. C. C. 58; 1 Cox, 241. And see 8 Ves. 492, 498, 499.

Surrender, where Necessary.]—Where the legal estate is in trustees, copyhold lands will pass under the will of cestui que trust, without surrender before the statute. Gibson v. Rogers, Ambl. 94; 1 Ves. Sen. 485; 4 Ves. 288, n.

Devise of copyhold by mortgagor or cestui que trust would be good without surrender of copyhold. Gibson v. Styles, 9 Mod. 267.

An equity of redemption in copyholds passes by will without surrender. Macnamara v. Jones, 1 Bro. C. C. 481.

The trust of a copyhold not necessary to be surrendered. Macey v. Shurmer, 1 Atk. 390.

Devise of copyhold, good without mention of surrender. Manwood's Case, Cary, 25.

Copyhold estates surrendered to the use of mortgagees, but they had not been admitted; the mortgagor devising them must surrender to the use of his will. Kenebel v. Scrafton, 8 Ves. 30.

Whatever words there may be in a will relative to copyhold lands, they can have no effect if there were no surrender; for nothing can pass a legal estate, but what will pass it in law. Trodd v. Downs, 2 Atk. 304; 9 Mod. 292.

Testator by his will taking notice that he had not surrendered copyhold estates which he devised, but directing his son to convey them, and devising to the son other estates, though the copyholds are not devisable by custom, yet the surrenders decreed to be made. Wardell v. Wardell, 3 Bro. C. C. 116.

A will so called of copyholds does not operate strictly as a devise, but rather as a designation of the person to take under the previous surrender, analogous in some respects to the appointment of a use under a power created by deed. Whether in the absence of a special custom it is necessary to surrender a reversion or remainder in copyhold property to the use of a will, quære. A testator being entitled to a reversion in fee in copyhold property, which he had not surrendered to the use of his will, and being also entitled to certain freeholds in fee-simple in possession, made a will in 1804, by which he affected to devise these copyholds, and all other his freehold, leasehold, and copyhold estates, to his wife for life, with remainder to his three younger children, Thomas, John, and Eliza. In 1807 he made another will, commencing with the words, "This is the last will and testament of me," &c.; and thereby after reciting, that on his death his eldest son, Edward, would become entitled to all his freehold estates, the testator gave all his real and personal estates to his wife for life, and after her death all his "property" and effects to all his children, except Edward, equally, share and share alike. The testator died in 1807, leaving his said four children, and also two others born since the date of the former will. In 1851 the reversion of the copyholds fell into possession :—Held, that the court would, if necessary, supply a surrender in favour of the objects to whom the first will expressly devised the copyholds :—Held, also, that as there was freehold property upon which the general devise in the second will could operate, there was no ground for deciding that it revoked the intended devise of the copyholds by the former will :—Held, further, that it was impossible to consider the intention to devise the copyholds expressed in the first will to be a reason for supplying a surrender to the uses of the testator's will generally, and thus to make the general devise in the second will operate to pass the copyholds, by revoking the former will, except so far as it expressed that intention, because the intention expressed by the first will was to give all the copyholds to three only of the five objects to whom the general devise in the second will was made, and therefore that intention could not apply to the second will :—Held, further, that though the words of the second will did not sufficiently express an intention to pass the copyholds to enable the court to supply a surrender to the uses of that will, yet if a surrender were supplied generally to the use of the testator's will, the general devise in the second will would pass the surrendered copyholds. Freeman v. Freeman, Kay, 479; 2 Eq. R. 522. Affirmed 23 L. J., Ch. 838; 2 W. R. 658—L.JJ.

—— Effect of.]—Copyhold estates pass by the surrender, not by the will, which operates as a declaration of uses. Att.-Gen. v. Vigor, 8 Ves. 286.

Surrender of copyhold to such uses as he shall by will appoint, does not give effect to a will made before. Warde v. Warde, Ambl. 299.

A testator, being absolute owner of some copyholds of which he had been admitted tenant, and having the legal fee of other copyholds holden of the same manor to which he had not been admitted, but subject to trusts under which he was in equity only tenant for life, with remainder to his son in tail, remainder to himself in fee, surrendered, to the use of his will, all his copyholds holden of that manor, or which he was seised of, or entitled to, in possession, reversion, remainder, or expectancy; he was subsequently admitted tenant of all the copyholds which were subject to the trusts, except the moiety of one tenement, and afterwards made a will, devising all his hereditaments, freehold and copyhold, in possession, reversion, remainder, or expectancy, to trustees and their heirs, upon trust for his son for life, with remainder over :—Held, that the surrender and the will passed both the legal and beneficial interest in all the copyholds upon which the surrender operated, including those of which the devisor was in equity only tenant for life, and that the son was bound to elect whether he would give effect to this general devise, or would insist upon the benefit of the equitable estate tail, which he took under the old trusts to which some of the copyholds were subject. Abdy v. Gordon, 3 Russ. 278.

In two manors in Durham there is no custom for surrendering to the uses of the will, but the tenant divests himself of the legal estate, and by surrender vests it in a trustee, who subscribes a memorandum or defeasance that the surrender is to the uses of the surrenderor's will. In this case the father and maternal grandfather of the testator, R. N., being both copyholders, had respectively caused their copyhold tenements to be surrendered to the other, who had subscribed the usual defeasance. The legal estate in both descended to the testator. But with regard to the tenements in the manor of Houghton, they were devised by the father of the testator to trustees, to the intent that his widow might receive an annuity thereout, and subject thereto to the testator R. N., in fee. The widow being alive at the time the testator R. N. made his will, and died, it was held that the copyholds in the manor of Houghton passed by his will. With respect to the tenements which were in the other manor, the testator's maternal grandfather, who had the beneficial interest in them, devised them unto trustees, upon trust for the testator. R. N.:—Held, that there being nothing to separate the legal estate and equitable interest, the equitable interest had merged in the legal estate in the testator, and could not be devised by him according to the custom of the manor:—Held, also, that his widow was entitled to free bench, and the heir, subject thereto, to the inheritance, but they, taking benefits under the will, were bound to elect. Nicholson v. Nicholson, Tam. 319.

A., seised of freehold estates, and of customary freeholds, which were not devisable, made a voluntary surrender of the latter to B. in fee, in trust, as B. admitted, for A., and after his death for the purposes of his will; but B. executed no declaration of trust. A. made a general devise of all his real estates, and after A.'s death B. was admitted:—Held, that he was a trustee for the devisees, and not for A.'s customary heir. Wilson v. Dent, 3 Sim. 385.

Effect of Devise before Admittance.]—Devisee of a copyhold, who has not been admitted, cannot devise the same. Wainewright v. Elwell, 1 Madd. 627.

When a testator, at the making of his will, has the legal seisin of a copyhold, and devises it, and the devisee is not admitted, nothing passes by the will of the devisee, and an admittance of the devisee subsequent to his will will not alter the case. But where the testator has only an equitable interest in a copyhold and devises it, the equitable interest will pass to the devisee, and the devisee, though never admitted, may devise such equitable interest. Phillips v. Phillips, 1 Myl. & K. 649; 1 L. J., Ch. 214.

The right of the equitable owner of a copyhold estate to dispose of his equitable interest by will, cannot be controlled by the custom of a manor. Lewis v. Lane, 2 Myl. & K. 449.

A copyhold estate will pass by the will of a devisee who dies before admittance. King v. Turner, 1 Myl. & K. 456; Coop. t. Brough. 64. Reversing 2 Sim. 545.

A testator seised in fee of a copyhold estate, devised it to his wife for life; and after her decease he (without giving any estate to his executors) directed them to sell the copyholds, and then divide the proceeds. The testator's widow was admitted for life; and after her decease the executors sold the estate, and executed a bargain and sale to a purchaser, and he, without having been admitted, made his will and devised the estate to his wife; he was subsequently admitted to the copyhold estate, and died. Upon a suit to administer the estate of the purchaser's wife:—Held, that the admission of the wife of the first testator inured for the benefit of the purchaser under the executors; that the customary heir of the purchaser took no estate in the copyholds, but that they passed to the wife as devisee. Seaman v. Woods, 24 Beav. 372; 27 L. J., Ch. 538; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 725.

After-acquired Copyholds.]—One by will, reciting that he was seised of a copyhold, devises all his real estate, not being seised of any copyholds, but being seised of freehold estates at the time; he afterwards bought a copyhold:—Held, it did not pass. Warde v. Warde, Ambl. 299.

Copyhold estates purchased and surrendered to uses declared or to be declared by will concerning the same, passed according to a will previous to the purchase, devising all copyholds generally; and, therefore, containing a description applicable to them. Att.-Gen v. Vigor, 8 Ves. 256.

After-purchased copyholds would pass by a previous will, if surrendered to the uses of that will. Heylyn v. Heylyn, Cowp. 130; Spring d. Titcher v. Biles, 1 Term Rep. 435, n.

The lord of a manor before the Wills Act devised all his real estates; subsequently he purchased freeholds held of his manor:—Held, that the freeholds did not pass by his will. Distinction between escheat and purchase explained. Delacherois v. Delacherois, 11 H. L. Cas. 62; 4 N. R. 501; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 886; 10 L. T. 884; 13 W. R. 24.

Effect of General Devise on Copyholds.]—Where a man devises all his estate, real and personal, to a wife or child, and has no other real estate but the copyhold, it shall pass by those general words. Smith v. Baker, 1 Atk. 386.

C. gave all his messuages, lands, tenements, and hereditaments in A. and elsewhere, and all other his real estates, to trustees for 500 years, and after the determination of the term he gave all the premises to his wife for life, sans waste. All the estates having come originally from the wife, testator could not mean to sever the copyhold from the freehold; therefore, by the general words of the will, the copyhold passed. Carr v. Ellison, 3 Atk. 73.

By a devise of all lands and tenements, only freeholds will pass; yet, if the testator had nothing but copyholds, they shall pass; and leaseholds, if there are no other, will pass by these words. Caswall, Ex parte, 1 Atk. 560.

Copyhold surrendered to use of a will will pass by a general devise of lands, notwithstanding there are freeholds. Tendril v. Smith, 2 Atk. 85.

Devise of "all lands, messuages, &c.," will pass copyholds, where the introductory words shew testator's intent to dispose of all his estate. Goodwyn v. Goodwyn, 1 Ves. Sen. 226.

Whether by words "all the rest of my estate and fortune" in a will, copyhold estate as well as freehold passed, quære. Dod v. Dod, Ambl. 275.

Testator gave to his executors "all his goods, estates, bonds, debts, to be sold," &c. The word "estates" will pass a copyhold which was surrendered to the use of the will. Jongsma v. Jongsma, 1 Cox, 362.

Estate held by copy of court roll according to custom of manor, but in case of intestacy distributable as personal estate, and in other respects differing from copyhold:—Held, to pass under a residuary bequest of personal estate, and not with copyhold messuages, &c., with limitations in strict settlement, upon whole will and circumstances. Wathins v. Lea, 6 Ves. 633.

Copyhold estate shall not pass by general description, where there is freehold to satisfy the words, though it had been supposed to be freehold; and the first devise was for payment of debts, and then given to a younger child, otherwise provided for. Lindopp v. Eborall, 3 Bro. C. C. 188.

Under a devise of "all my property," copyhold estate passed to the devisee and his heirs. Nicholls v. Butcher, 18 Ves. 193.

A testator seised of freeholds and copyholds in fee, and leaseholds for lives, devised "all his real estate whatsoever and wheresoever":—Held, that the copyholds and leaseholds for lives, as well as the freeholds in fee, passed, notwithstanding some parts of the will were inapplicable to them. Weigall v. Brome, 6 Sim. 99.

If I devise all my lands and hereditaments in Dale, and have a manor in Dale, the manor, as it is an hereditament in Dale, will pass; but if I have the manor in Dale, and also land there, not parcel of the manor, it is a question whether the manor will pass by devise of all my lands. If I have a freehold and copyhold lands in Dale, and devise all my lands and hereditaments in Dale to pay my debts, only my freehold shall pass if that be sufficient; secus, if I have surrendered the copyhold to the use of my will. Haslewood v. Pope, 3 P. Wms. 322.

Copyholds held not to pass under a devise of "all and every my freehold hereditaments and estate in the county of Surrey," although the freeholds and copyholds were to some extent intermixed, and usually let together. Quennell v. Turner, 13 Beav. 240; 20 L. J., Ch. 237; 15 Jur. 547.

Devise and bequest of freehold, leasehold, copyhold, and 1,000*l.* stock to A., B., and C., tenendum, the said last-mentioned freehold and leasehold messuages, tenements, estates, and premises, and the 1,000*l.*, upon trust for A.:—Held, that A. was not interested in the copyholds, which descended to the customary heir. Jackson v. Noble, 2 Keen, 590; 7 L. J., Ch. 133; 2 Jur. 251.

A testator gave and devised "all the rest, residue, and remainder of my property, whether freehold or personal, and wheresoever situate, to my wife, her heirs and assigns for ever, being fully satisfied that she will dispose of the same, by will or otherwise, in a fair and equitable manner, to our united relatives, bearing in mind that my relatives are generally in better worldly circumstances than hers are." The testator died seised of copyhold as well as freehold estates:—Held, first, that no trust was created by the will, but that the wife was entitled to the property absolutely:—Held, also, that, looking to the whole scope and object of the will, the copyholds passed under the general devise. Reeves v. Baker, 2 Eq. R. 476; 18 Beav. 372; 23 L. J. Ch. 599; 18 Jur. 588; 2 W. R. 354.

A gift of "all my freehold estate and effects wheresoever situate," does not include copyholds. Ballard, In re, 22 W. R. 433.

—— When Unsurrendered.]—Devise of all testator's "real and personal estate subject to debts," affects copyhold land unsurrendered, for the benefit of the creditors, there being no freehold lands; if there had been it would have been otherwise. Ithell v. Beane, 1 Ves. Sen. 215; Dick. 132.

Devise of "all freehold and copyhold lands, the copyhold part whereof I have surrendered to the use of my will, subject to debts"; some were surrendered, others not: the latter did not pass. A person entitled under a will, and also paramount and against it, must elect. Wilson v. Mount, 3 Ves. 191.

Devise of copyhold estates in general terms unrestrained, to a child, passes all copyholds surrendered and not surrendered to use of will. Blunt v. Clitherow, 10 Ves. 589.

Where there is a surrender of copyhold lands to the use of the will, they will not pass by a general devise of lands. Hawkins v. Leigh, 1 Atk. 387. See 1 P. Wms. 60.

Devise by general words, viz. messuages, lands, tenements, and hereditaments, for payment of debts will include copyholds, if required; and the want of a surrender will be supplied Kidney v. Coussmaker, 12 Ves. 136; 2 R. R. 118.

Copyholds not intended to be comprehended in a devise to the wife in the general terms, "real and personal estate," so as to entitle her to have the surrender supplied. Church v. Mundy, 12 Ves. 426.

Upon appeal, the Lord Chancellor's opinion being that the reversion of the copyhold estate passed under the general devise, "as to all such worldly estate and effects as it may please God to bless me withal, or I may leave, or I may be entitled to at the time of my decease, whether real or personal, not before given or disposed of," especially if there was no freehold estate: inquiries were directed to ascertain that fact, and also whether there was any custom of surrendering a vested interest in reversion or remainder expectant upon an estate tail. S. C., 15 Ves. 396.

Construction of a residuary devise as including under the general words, "estate and effects," a copyhold, not surrendered in favour of a younger son, subject to debts, the will reciting that the eldest son was provided for, and no freehold estate. Pennington v. Pennington, 1 V. & B. 406.

Testator, having surrendered some only of his copyholds to use of will, devised all his copyhold messuages, &c., whatsoever and wheresoever, and which he had surrendered to use of his will:—Held, that surrendered and unsurrendered passed equally. Strutt v. Finch, 2 Sim. & S. 229.

A devise of "all my real estate" will carry copyhold surrendered, and if no freehold, will for favoured objects carry copyhold not surrendered. Wentworth v. Cox, 6 Madd. 363.

Devise of "all my freehold messuages, &c., the copyhold parts thereof having been duly surrendered to the uses of this my will," passes unsurrendered as well as surrendered copyholds. Oxenforth v. Cawkwell, 2 Sim. & S. 558.

Testator, seised of freehold and copyhold estates in the counties of H. and C., devises all his lands, tenements, and messuages and hereditaments in those counties, to his wife for life, remainder to his first and second sons in tail, remainder to his wife in fee, having, in the beginning of the will, declared that as to all his worldly estate he disposed thereof as therein followed; but not having surrendered the copyhold to the use of his will, the court would not supply the want of a surrender, there being freehold estates to answer the words of the devise. Milbourne v. Milbourne, 1 Cox, 247; 2 Bro. C. C. 64.

A., by will, gave all his real estate, except certain copyholds, which he was about to settle on similar trusts as had been declared by a former settlement, in favour of his wife and children, but, so far as the same should be subject to the trusts of his will, he devised them upon trust for his wife and children. By a voluntary settlement subsequently executed, he covenanted to surrender the copyholds to trustees, to be held upon other trusts in favour of his wife and children. He died without having surrendered the copyholds to the trustees :—Held, that they passed under and were subject to the trusts of the will. Tatham v. Vernon, 7 Jur. (N.S.) 815 ; 4 L. T. 531 ; 9 W. R. 822.

A testator was in 1792 possessed of freehold lands, and of an equitable fee in copyhold estate. He made a will by which he subjected his real estate in aid of his personalty to the payment of his debts, and, subject thereto, he gave all his "messuages, tenements, lands, hereditaments, and premises, with the buildings, mines, &c.," thereon and therein, over which he had a disposing power, to trustees, for 500 years, out of the rents, &c., or by assignment, &c., of the term, to raise money, to pay his debts, legacies, and after payment thereof to apply the rents, &c., or the remainder of the estate to the use of his grandson W. C. on his attaining twenty-three, and to raise 1,000*l*. to pay to his other grandson R. C. on his attaining twenty-three, and in order that these grandsons might be properly educated, the testator directed that 200*l*., until W. C. should attain twenty-three, and 100*l*. afterwards, and till R. C. should attain twenty-three, should be raised for that purpose. By the custom of the manor, the copyholds which the testator possessed would descend to his customary heir or heirs, the tenure being gavelkind. The testator had not made any surrender of them to the use of the will. When he died in 1799, his only daughter (the mother of W. C. and R. C.) was his customary heir, and on her death they became her customary heirs :—Held, that the testator's copyhold interest did not pass by the will, but descended to his customary heir. Turre v. Browne, 5 H. L. Cas. 555 ; 24 L. J., Ch. 757.

The annuities created for the maintenance of the grandsons had fallen into arrear :—Held, that they were charged on the real estate itself, and not merely on the annual rents and profits ; held, also, that the annuities did not carry interest. Ib.

Before the statute 55 Geo. 3, c. 192, general words of devise included a legal estate in copyholds surrendered to the uses of the will by force of the intention shewn by the surrender that such general words should include it ; and where the question is of an equitable estate, some intention must be shewn that such general words should include it ultra the words themselves. Ib.

—— Of Particular Words of Description.]—Devise of copyhold estate by the description of copyhold ground rent good. Walker v. Shore, 19 Ves. 387.

Copyholds held to pass under a will by the words "moneys, property, and effects," aided by the context. A will commenced with a statement that it was the disposition of the testatrix's "estates, property, and effects." She then gave and "bequeathed" her "moneys, property, and effects" to her daughters, with an ultimate limitation to her own next of kin. The disposition pointed to personal estate. There was a direction to invest. The words "devise" and "heirs" were not used, and the expressions "legacy," "capital," and "principal" were applied to the gift ; there being a trust for conversion :—Held, that the copyholds passed under the gift to the children. Streatfield v. Cooper, 27 Beav. 338.

J. G., by his will, declared his daughter M. A. to be his sole residuary legatee. J. G. at his death was entitled to certain copyhold estates, which were not specifically mentioned in his will : —Held, that the copyholds did not pass under the will to M. A. Lea v. Grundy, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 951.

—— Of Devise without Words of Inheritance.]—Testator, after expressing an intention to dispose of all his property, directed his just debts and funeral expenses to be paid by his executor thereinafter named, and then, after giving several pecuniary legacies, devised all his copyholds, which were his only real estates, to his son J., without words of inheritance, and left all the rest and residue of his estate and effects to his said son, whom he appointed sole executor and residuary legatee, such son being also his heir :—Held, that the will was sufficient to pass the fee in the copyholds, and that it charged them with the debts. Dover v. Gregory, 10 Sim. 393 ; 9 L. J., Ch. 81.

—— Of Devise to Trustees where Custom to Nominate Successor.]—By the custom of the manors of Y., P., and S., the tenant of a copyhold tenement held only for life, with a power to nominate by writing one or more successors, but so that if there were more than one, they held concurrently for their lives or the life of the survivor, who had power to nominate a successor to himself. A copyhold tenant of these manors by his will devised all his copyholds to three trustees, to the use of his grandson A. for life, with remainder to the use of the trustees to preserve the contingent remainders, with remainder to the use of the children of A. and their heirs as tenants in common, with remainder to the use of the plaintiff. By a codicil the testator, after reciting that he had ascertained that his "copyhold estates" were held of the manors of P. and S., directed that "all his copyhold estates within the manors of P. and S." should be held by his trustees to the uses and upon the trusts in his will declared, if and so far as the custom of the respective manors would warrant and authorise ; and if the custom of the manors or either of them did not warrant or authorise the entail created by his will, then and in that case his grandson A. and his assigns, or his successor or successors, should have and hold his copyhold estates according to the custom of the manors. A. was admitted tenant for his life, and nominated the defendant as his successor, who was admitted accordingly :—Held, first, that the trustees took the legal estate in the copyholds held of the manor of Y., and ought to have been admitted instead of A., and that all the beneficial limitations in the will were equitable interests. Allen v. Bewsey, 7 Ch. D. 453 ; 37 L. T. 688.

Held, secondly, that the codicil had no reference to the copyholds held of the manor of Y. ; and that even if it did refer to them, it did not revoke the equitable limitations of the will. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that, although by the custom of the manor the tenements were only held for life with power of nominating a successor, the testator had power to dispose of the equitable inheritance by giving successive equitable interests. Ib.

—— Of Gift of Rents and Profits.]—See Fitzroy v. Fitzroy, 2 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 185.

k. Mortgages.

Where Fee Acquired by Foreclosure.]—Testator, having a foreclosed mortgage in fee of certain farms in Lancashire, gave, amongst other things, to his wife for life, "the interest or proceeds of certain farms, in the county of Lancaster, mortgaged to me for 2,500*l.*," and after her decease "one-third part of the sum of 2,500*l.* principal money disposed of in mortgage of the farms aforesaid" to his daughter Harriet; and he declared that upon his wife's decease his daughter Elizabeth should inherit and enjoy the bequests aforesaid in the same proportion as her sister Harriet; and that his son should in like manner inherit and enjoy one-third part of the aforesaid bequests upon the same condition as his daughters:—Held, that the farms passed as real estate to the testator's wife for life, with remainder to his son and daughters, as tenants in common in fee. Le Gros v. Cockerell, 5 Sim. 384.

Construction of will passing an estate originally on mortgage, but foreclosed, the testator's intent being to dispose of all his interest, though inaccurately mentioned both as land mortgaged and as money due on mortgage. Silberschildt v. Schiott, 3 V. & B. 45.

Arrears of Interest on Mortgage Debt.] — Bequest: "To my son W. G. I give all my interest and claim on household property in P. court, belonging to J. H., on which I have a mortgage for 1,500*l.*":—Held, that this passed arrears of interest due on the mortgage at the time of the testator's death, as well as the principal. The testator was mortgagee in possession, and repairs had been done to the mortgaged property during his lifetime, by his orders:—Held, that the amount of the repairs was a debt payable by the executrix out of the general estate, and not chargeable to the legatee of the mortgage. Gibbon v. Gibbon, 22 L. J., C. P. 131; 17 Jur. 416.

Under Devise of Freeholds by Mortgagee in Possession.]—The lessee for a term of years of four houses assigned the term, by way of mortgage, to the owner in fee of the immediate reversion, who afterwards devised the houses by the description of "my freehold houses," mentioning the numbers of the houses in the street where they were situated; and he was in possession as mortgagee at the time of his death:—Held, that the mortgage debt did not pass under the devise, but formed part of the testator's personal estate. Bowen v. Barlow, 42 L. J., Ch. 82; L. R. 8 Ch. 171; 27 L. T. 733; 21 W. R. 149—C. A.

Under Devise in Fee where Property subsequently Sold by and Mortgaged to Testator.]—Testatrix devised all her freehold messuages in S. to trustees, in trust to sell and stand possessed of the proceeds in trust for A., and gave the residue of her personal estate to the trustees, in trust for B. After the date of the will she sold the houses, and conveyed them to the purchaser, and he deposited the conveyance and title-deeds thereon with her, to secure part of the purchase-money:—Held, that the security and the money due on it did not pass under 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 27, s. 23, to the trustees in trust for A., but to the trustees in trust for B. Moor v. Raisbeck, 12 Sim. 123.

A testator, by a codicil to his will, devised certain specific freehold property to a devisee. At the date of the codicil he was seised in fee of the property so devised. He subsequently sold the property, taking a mortgage of it from the purchaser to secure part of the purchase-money. He died during the continuance of the mortgage:—Held, that the benefit of the mortgage debt did not pass to the specific devisee. Moor v. Raisbeck (supra) approved. Woodhouse v. Meredith (1 Mer. 450) distinguished. Clowes, In re, [1893] 1 Ch. 214; 2 R. 115; 68 L. T. 395; 41 W. R. 69—C. A.

Under Locke King's Act—Interest of Devisee where Land Delivered in Execution under Elegit.]—A testator, who died in 1890, devised certain land to his brother. In 1884 judgment had been recovered for a sum of 1,550*l.* against the testator; and the land devised to the brother was, under a writ of elegit, delivered in execution for the judgment debt. The judgment remained unsatisfied at the testator's death:—Held, that the judgment debt was a charge on the land, and was a sum of money charged "by way of mortgage or other equitable charge" within 40 & 41 Vict. c. 34, s. 1, and must, therefore, be paid by the devisee of the land in exoneration of the testator's general personal estate. Anthony, In re, Anthony v. Anthony, 61 L. J., Ch. 434; [1892] 1 Ch. 450; 66 L. T. 181; 40 W. R. 316.

—— Where Land Subject to Vendor's Lien for Unpaid Purchase-money.]—A testator who had contracted to purchase real estate, and paid the deposit money, by will made in 1881, specifically devised such real estate to his daughter for life, with remainder to her children, without shewing any intention that the purchase-money should be paid out of his personal estate; and he died without having disposed of his personal estate, which was rather less in amount than the unpaid purchase-money, and without having completed the purchase or paid any further part of the purchase-money. After his death an action by the vendor against the executor and trustee of the will for specific performance of the contract was compromised by the defendant thereto, and the contract was put an end to upon the terms that the vendor should retain the deposit money and have his costs; and this compromise was confirmed by the court by an order made by consent in an administration action in the presence of the tenant for life of the real estate and the trustee, all the remaindermen being infants. Upon the further consideration of the administration action, the devisees contended that they were entitled to so much of the personal estate as was equivalent to the unpaid purchase-money, upon the ground that the purchase was a conversion by the testator of his personal estate to that extent, and that Locke King's Acts had not altered the law in that respect:—Held, that there was a vendor's lien, and that Locke King's Acts Amendment Act applied; that, accordingly, all the devisees were entitled to was the real estate charged with the unpaid purchase-money, and therefore on the facts to nothing; but held, moreover, that the order of compromise would be fatal to their claim, if otherwise good. Cockcroft, In re, Broadbent v. Groves, 52 L. J., Ch. 811; 24 Ch. D. 94; 49 L. T. 497; 32 W. R. 223.

Locke King's Acts Amendment Act, 1877

(40 & 41 Vict. c. 34), s. 1, applies to leaseholds. A testator by his will, made in 1884, bequeathed to his wife the leasehold house "in which I now reside." At the date of the will he was residing in a leasehold house. In 1887 he entered into a contract with his lessor to purchase the reversionary ground lease, but died before the purchase was completed. His widow accepted the bequest:—Held, that all the testator's interest in the house passed to the widow, subject to her liability to pay the purchase-money. Kershaw, In re, Drake v. Kershaw, 57 L. J., Ch. 599; 37 Ch. D. 674; 58 L. T. 512; 36 W. R. 413.

A building agreement provided that when the lessee of certain land had built and taken leases on a sufficient number of houses thereon to secure by the ground rents a total annual rent of a fixed amount the lessor would either convey to the lessee in fee simple the surplus land not included in any lease, or, at the option of the lessor, would purchase the ground rents to be created out of such surplus land at an agreed price. The lessee built and obtained leases of houses sufficient to secure the total annual rent, and subsequently built houses upon the surplus land. The lessor elected to purchase the ground rents of these latter houses, but died before the "completion" of the purchase, having specifically devised the land which was the subject of the agreement, but without having made any disposition of residuary, real, and personal estate. The executors completed the purchase and paid the money:—Held, that the purchase-money of the ground rents was a charge or lien upon the land in question within Locke King's Act. Kidd, In re, Brooman v. Withall, 63 L. J., Ch. 855; [1894] 3 Ch. 558; 13 R. 101; 71 L. T. 481; 43 W. R. 51.

—— Contrary Intention.]—A testator, after reciting that the absolute interest in reversion in a sum of consols, subject to some life interests, might be acquired by him in exchange for a charge upon his real estate for an annual sum equal to the dividends, devised his real estate subject to any such charge. The reversionary interest was acquired, the consols transferred, and repayment secured by mortgage:—Held, that the will and other documents shewed a "contrary intention" within the meaning of Locke King's Act, and that the real estate was not liable for the debt. Campbell, In re, Campbell v. Campbell, 62 L. J., Ch. 594; [1893] 2 Ch. 206; 3 R. 331; 68 L. T. 851.

A testator directed his private debts to be paid out of the proceeds of certain life policies; he bequeathed his residue, subject to the payment of his trade debts; after the date of his will he deposited the title-deeds of real estate with his bankers to secure an overdrawn trade account:—Held, that this amounted to a declaration of intention contrary to Locke King's Act, and that the devisee of the real estate was entitled to have it exonerated from the banker's lien. Fleck, In re, Colston v. Roberts, 57 L. J., Ch. 943; 37 Ch. D. 677; 58 L. T. 624; 36 W. R. 663.

A testator, after directing the payment of his debts, devised a freehold house to his wife "absolutely, to do with as she thinks proper"; and he requested his executors to sell and convert into money whatever freehold or other property he possessed, and to collect all debts due to him, and to apply the proceeds in the payment of certain legacies. The testator's real estate was all subject to one mortgage:—Held, that the will did not shew any "contrary or other intention" within the meaning of Locke King's Act, and that consequently the widow took the house subject to its rateable proportion of the mortgage debt. Brownson v. Lawrance (L. R. 6 Eq. 1) dissented from. Sackville v. Smyth (L. R. 17 Eq. 153) and Gibbins v. Eyden (L. R. 7 Eq. 371) followed. Smith, In re, Hannington v. True, 55 L. J., Ch. 914; 33 Ch. D. 195; 55 L. T. 549; 35 W. R. 103.

—— Implied Exoneration.] — Testator, who was a baker, by his will made in 1885, gave his trade property, which included real and leasehold estate, and business to his son, subject nevertheless to, and charged, in exoneration of the rest of his estate, with payment of all debts and liabilities owing at the time of his death in connection with the said business. The testator included in this gift his freehold premises situated at Acton, which he had purchased and meant for his said business, subject, as to such estate, to any purchase or other moneys payable in respect thereof at the testator's death. The testator then gave the residue of his real and personal estate to trustees upon trust to convert, and out of the proceeds to pay his funeral and testamentary expenses and debts other than those thereinbefore provided for. At his death the testator owed trade debts not secured by mortgage, and private debts which were secured by mortgage of real and leasehold estate used in his business, and also of real and leasehold estate not used in his business. On the question whether the real and leasehold estate used in the business was primarily liable together with the other real and leasehold estate to the payment of the mortgage debts under Locke King's Act and the Amendment Acts:—Held, that, the testator having divided his debts into two classes, trade debts and private debts, and as to the first class having clearly indicated a contrary intention so as to exclude the operation of the acts, the necessary implication was that he had the same intention in dealing with the second class, and that the mortgage debts were therefore primarily payable out of the proceeds of sale of the residuary real and personal estate. Nevill, In re, Robinson v. Nevill, 59 L. J., Ch. 511; 62 L. T. 864.

A testator, who died in 1874, bequeathed three leaseholds, A., B., and C., to his wife, and directed that "should there be at the time of my death any incumbrances on C., I desire the said incumbrances to be paid off." A. and B. were subject to mortgages at the time of his death, but C. was unincumbered:—Held, that the above direction did not raise an implication that A. and B. were not to be exonerated out of the general estate of the testator. Bull, In re, Catty v. Bull, 49 L. T. 592; 31 W. R. 854.

3. Gifts by Reference and Implication.

a. By Reference.

Words whether of Reference or Limitation.] —A testator bequeathed "a sum" of consols to trustees for his daughter L. for life, with remainder to her children. By a codicil he directed "that the sum of 200*l.* per annum be added to the sum" by his will, "granted to his daughter L. during her life, and invested in the same manner and trusts" as governed the will:—Held, that the words, "during her life," were words of reference, and not of limitation, and that the gift by the codicil was of a sum sufficient to produce 200*l.* a year, which was to be held for the daughter for life, with remainder for her children. Auldjo v. Wallace, 31 Beav. 193.

Reference to "Trusts then subsisting"—Trusts not yet in Operation.]—A general reference in a gift to the terms of a former disposition does not determine the time when the gift is to take effect. By a marriage settlement a fund was settled by the husband in favour of the husband and wife during their respective lives, and after the decease of the survivor for the children. Another fund was settled by the husband's mother for herself for life, and after her decease upon such of the trusts thereinbefore declared concerning the first fund in favour of the children as should be then subsisting or capable of taking effect:—Held, that the trust of the second fund in favour of the children arose at once upon the death of the tenant for life in the lifetime of the husband and wife. Hare v. Hare, 24 W. R. 575.

—— To Directions in Non-existent Paper.]—A testator, after devising his real estate upon certain limitations, bequeathed all the residue of his property to trustees "to form a trust fund to purchase land to go with the inheritance in a manner as described in a paper marked B*." After his death no such paper could be discovered:—Held, that, notwithstanding the non-existence of the paper, there was an imperative trust declared for the conversion of the residuary estate into land, which was to go according to the limitations affecting the real estate. Willoughby v. Storer, 22 L. T. 896; 18 W. R. 658.

—— To "Legatees before Named."]—Real and personal estate given to trustees, upon trust to pay the income to the testator's wife for life, and, within or at the expiration of ten years from the death of the survivor of himself and his wife, to sell and convert the same into money, and out of the income to pay annuities to several persons and classes of persons for the said term of ten years, with pecuniary legacies to the same persons and classes, and also to other persons, at the expiration of that time; and annuities to other persons for the lives of the annuitants, and specific legacies to others. The residue was then given to all and every the several legatees before named (with exceptions) rateably and in proportion to the amount of their respective legacies. The wife survived the testator:—Held, that the "legatees before named" should be construed to be the legatees taking benefits out of the fund which fell in at the wife's death, and the "legacies" such legacies as remained to be satisfied at the expiration of the ten years; that annuitants for life, not having other legacies, were legatees of shares in the residue; that the specific legatees, including one taking a bequest of a watch, chain, and seals, were entitled to share in the residue according to the value of their respective legacies; that annuitants who survived the testator and died before the expiration of the ten years, when their pecuniary legacies were payable, took vested interests in such annuities and legacies; that a class described as "the children" of B., but not otherwise named, came within the description of "legatees before named"; that the widow of the testator did not take under the residuary gift; that the annuities which ceased at the expiration of the ten years were not legacies in respect of which the annuitants took any share in the residue. Bromley v. Wright, 7 Hare, 334.

—— To "Relations Named in Will"—Legatees under Codicil.]—The testator gave the residue to his relations named in the will. He made a codicil which he directed to be taken as part of his will, and a second by which he gave legacies, but gave no such direction in this codicil; there were legacies given to two of his relations: they shall take shares of the residue. Sherer v. Bishop, 4 Bro. C. C. 55.

—— To "Relations hereafter Named"—Names Omitted.]—A testator by his will, dated in 1861, devised and bequeathed all his property to his wife for life, and after her death he directed it to be divided amongst his "relations hereafter named." No relations were named in the will, and the testator's heir-at-law claimed on the ground that there was an intestacy:—Held, that the word "named" must be taken in its plain sense, indicating an intention to specify certain relations; and that, as the testator had not done so, there was an intestacy, and the heir-at-law was entitled to the real estate. Crampton v. Wise, 58 L. T. 718.

—— To Legatees "Specially Named."]—A testator gave legacies to various legatees by name, and some to classes described, but the persons composing which were not named; he gave his residue to his legatees "specially named," except one of the classes described:—Held, that this shewed that by the words "specially named" the testator meant described or mentioned; and that all the legatees, whether named or only described, took shares. Holmes' Trusts, In re, 1 Drew. 321; 22 L. J., Ch. 393.

Reference in Codicil to Will thereby Altered.]—A testator bequeathed his personal estate to his wife absolutely, and he devised two real estates to her for life, and after her death in trust for sale and division amongst other parties. Having sold one of the estates, he made a codicil changing his trustee, and authorising the sale of the remaining estate at any time, and he gave the produce thereof to his wife for life, and then "upon the trusts and for the intents and purposes in his will expressed and declared as concerning all his real and personal estate"; and in all other respects he confirmed his will:—Held, that the produce of the estate was not divisible amongst all the devisees and legatees rateably, but was subject to the trusts declared by the will. Baker v. Richards, 27 Beav. 320; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 697.

By will the testatrix gave a share of her property to A., a married woman, for her separate use during her life, with a general power of appointment on her decease; and another share to B., also a feme covert, for her separate use during her life, with remainder to the children of B. By a codicil, revoking this disposition, the testatrix declared that B. should have her share, "the same as A., to be at her own disposal, independent of her children, so that no part of it should be put under trust, as mentioned in the will, but to be entirely at her (B.'s) own disposal, to give to any of her children (the R.'s) who may be kind and dutiful to her" :—Held, that B. took an estate for her separate use during her life. Ker v. Ruxton, 16 Jur. 491.

By articles of agreement, it was provided that the interest of a fund which was vested in trustees should be paid to Lady C. for her life, and after her death the principal to go amongst the then unmarried children of herself and husband, as the husband should by deed or will appoint, and in default of appointment equally among the children who should be living at the death of the husband. The fund having been invested in lands pursuant to a trust in the articles, the husband, by his will, appointed the lands among his sons as follows: Ballygriffin to John, Gurtaneelig to George, Knuttery to Henry, and Gneeve to Nelson, to go to them immediately from and after the decease of Lady C., with a clause of survivorship among the brothers, if any of them should die before they became respectively entitled thereto. The testator, by two subsequent deeds of appointment, irrevocably appointed Ballygriffin to John, and Knuttery (which he had by his will given to Henry) to George, and by a codicil (in which these two deeds were recited) he revoked the appointment of Knuttery to his son Henry in the will contained, and instead thereof appointed to him Gurtaneelig. Henry died after the testator, but before the death of Lady C. :—Held, that the devise of the lands of Gurtaneelig by the codicil was to be considered in the light of an absolute appointment, and that same was not subject to the clause of survivorship contained in the will. Charitable Donations and Bequests Commissioners v. Cotter, 1 Dr. & War. 498; 2 Dr. & Wal. 615; 2 Ir. Eq. R. 196.

—— To Limitations in Will altered by Effect of subsequent Codicil.]—A testator by his will devised his real estate upon trust for his brother for life, and after his death upon trust for the brother's four sons in order as named in the will and their respective issue male in strict settlement severally in succession according to seniority; and he directed his personal estate to be held upon such trusts as would best correspond with the trusts thereinbefore declared concerning the real estate. By a codicil, after reciting the trusts in the will relating to the real estate, the testator directed that his will should be read as if there were contained therein immediately after the limitation upon trust for his brother for life a limitation upon trust for the brother's four sons and their respective issue male in such order of succession as the testator's wife should appoint. The wife altered the order of succession :—Held, that the personal estate devolved in the order of succession appointed by the wife as to the real estate. Martineau v. Briggs (ante, col. 711) distinguished. Liddell v. Liddell, 66 L. J., Ch. 62; 74 L. T. 105—H. L. (E.)

Reference whether to Whole or Part of Antecedent Expression.]—Testatrix gave pecuniary legacies to A., B., and C. respectively, and appointed A. and B. her executors, and bequeathed her residuary property to her executors A. and B. By a codicil she declared that C. should be also executor, and that her will should take effect as if his name had been originally inserted therein as third executor; and she requested C. to accept a legacy of 50*l.* as some slight acknowledgment for the trouble he would have, &c., to be independent of and in addition to the benefit he derived under her will; and she declared that her trust estate and property should vest in C. jointly with A. and B., and confirmed her will in all other respects :—Held, that C. was not entitled to one-third of the residue. Hillersdon v. Grove, 21 Beav. 518.

A testatrix, by her will, after reciting that being joint heiress with her two sisters, she was possessed of a third part of the rectorial tithes of B., gave to her sisters the said third part or share to be equally divided between them, and to be held by and subject to the same conditions by which they, her two sisters, held the other two parts or shares. At the date of the will both of the sisters were married, and on the occasion of the marriage of each her shares of the tithes had been put into settlement :—Held, that the sisters became entitled respectively to a moiety of the third upon the trusts declared by their respective marriage settlements of the shares originally vested in them in their own right. Ord v. Ord, L. R. 2 Eq. 393; 15 L. T. 51.

Testator by his will gave an annuity of 300*l.* a year to his grand-daughter A., and after her death he directed that the said sum should be raised and paid among her children as she should appoint, and in default of appointment in equal shares during their respective lives; and he gave to his grand-daughter E. a like annuity, to be paid to her and her children in the same manner as the annuity thereinbefore given to his grand-daughter A. By a codicil he revoked the devises of the several annuities, and instead thereof gave to each of his grand-daughters A. and E. an annuity of 150*l.*, to be payable in the same manner as the annuities of 300*l.* :—Held (Rigby L.J., dissenting), that the substitution of the smaller annuities extended to the interests of the children of the grand-daughters. Freme's Estate, In re, Freme v. Hall, 64 L. J., Ch. 862; [1895] 2 Ch. 778; 73 L. T. 366; 44 W. R. 164—C. A.

A. bequeathed leasehold estates, after the failure of previous limitations in favour of A. and his issue, "in trust for such persons as at the time of such failure of issue should be his (the testator's) next of kin according to the Statute of Distributions, and as if the testator had survived A., and in the like shares as they would be entitled to the same under the statute." He afterwards bequeathed a legacy in trust for M. for life, and, after her decease without issue, in trust for his own "next of kin in manner aforesaid" :—Held, that the persons entitled to the legacy would be the persons who would be next of kin of the testator living at the death of M., and not the next of kin at his own death. Bessant v. Noble, 26 L. J., Ch. 236; 4 W. R. 475—L. C.

Bequest to the children of a deceased niece who should be living at the testator's death, followed by a bequest to a nephew for life, and after his decease upon the like "trusts" for the benefit of his issue, and subject to the same powers, "limitations," &c., in respect of his issue, as those expressed as to the niece's children. The nephew had no child living at the testator's death, but he afterwards had one child born :—Held, that such was entitled to the second legacy. Yardley v. Yardley, 26 Beav. 38.

A testator devised his real and personal estate to trustees, upon trust to sell and put out one-ninth of the produce in government or real securities, and to pay the interest to A. for life, and afterwards to her children. By a codicil he bequeathed a leasehold to the trustees, to hold upon the same trusts, in all respects, and for the same persons and subject to the same powers, provisoes, condition, and limitations as the above one-ninth :—Held, that A. was not entitled to enjoy the leasehold in specie, but that it must be sold and invested for the benefit of the parties entitled in succession. Murton v. Markby, 18 Beav. 196.

Where legacies were given to children "subject to the same limitations" as certain portions they were entitled to :—Held, that the expressions put them on the same footing as to interest. Bredin v. Bredin, 1 Dr. & War. 494.

A testator left 20,000*l.* upon trust to pay the income to his widow during her life, with a provision that if he should marry again she should only receive the income of 10,000*l.*, the income of the remaining 10,000*l.* going to his children. He bequeathed all his residuary estate "upon the trusts hereinbefore declared with reference to the sum of 20,000*l.*" The widow married again :—Held, that the widow took no interest in the testator's residuary estate. Trew v. Perpetual Trustee Co., 64 L. J., P. C. 49 ; [1895] A. C. 264 ; 11 R. 423 ; 72 L. T. 241 ; 43 W. R. 636—P. C.

—— Of Property mentioned.]—A testator gave his estate to four children in equal proportions, but his wife was to have "her proportionate part" for life, and it was given afterwards to the four children. And as to "the part of his estates" thereinbefore given to his daughter, she was to have it for life, with remainder to her children : —Held, that the "part" of the daughter included her share in the part given to the wife for life, and that therefore she was only entitled to a life interest in it. Watson v. Pryce, 34 Beav. 71.

Leasehold for years, being mentioned in former part of will :—Held, to pass by the residuary devise, in which, although the word "leasehold" occurred, yet, unless extended beyond the antecedent, it could have comprised only the leasehold for life. Sherratt v. Sherratt, Coop. t. Brough. 35.

A testatrix, after bequeathing certain property to her two daughters and to her three sons, T., G., and J., gave the residue of her property to her sons T. and G. if both living at her decease, and, if either should be then dead, leaving no issue, the whole to the survivor ; and, if both should be then dead, leaving no issue, then the whole to J. ; and, if he should be then dead leaving no issue, then to and amongst her daughters equally, or the survivor of them, or to an only surviving one ; but directing, if either of her sons or her daughters should die, leaving issue, that such should take the parent's respective share of the provisiom already made for the sons and daughters respectively, unless otherwise appointed by the parent :—Held, that the word "provisions" meant only the residue so disposed of, that the sons T. and G. having survived the testatrix, were entitled absolutely to the residue. Young v. Martin, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 582 ; 7 Jur. 1147.

A specific devise or bequest is a devise or bequest by a description which identifies a particular subject then existing as intended to pass to the donee in specie either directly or indirectly. A father devised three properties to his three sons respectively for life, with remainder in fee to their respective children, and in case of the death of either of them without issue between the others "in the same manner as the estates devised were limited to them respectively," subject to the proviso that if either died leaving a widow, but no children, the widow should have an estate for life in the premises "so specifically devised" to her husband :—Held, that the devise to such widow attached, not only to the property originally devised to her husband, but also to property coming to him under the contingent limitations. Giles v. Melsom, 42 L. J., C. P. 122 ; L. R. 6 H. L. 24 ; 28 L. T. 789 ; 21 W. R. 417.

A bequest of leaseholds by reference to the uses declared respecting freeholds make the leaseholds subject to other limitations and restrictions declared concerning the freeholds. Heasman v. Pearse, 40 L. J., Ch. 258 ; L. R. 11 Eq. 522 ; 24 L. T. 864 ; 19 W. R. 673.

A testatrix by her will duly appointed some settled property to her husband, upon trust, that so soon as certain proceedings in law and equity (pending with respect to the property) should be terminated, and the same should come into his possession, then he should pay, assign, transfer, and set over the stock, which, by four several indentures, had been assigned or appointed by the testatrix, to the persons in the several indentures mentioned ; and secondly, that he should pay to each of her brothers and sister 2,000*l.* :—Held, that the termination of the legal proceedings applied equally to the stock and the legacies of 2,000*l.* Luff v. Lord, 11 L. T. 656 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1248.

—— To some or all of Persons named.]—A testator gave 1,000*l.* to his sister Sarah for life, with remainder to her children ; he then said : "To each of my sisters, M., A., C., and B., I bequeath 500*l.* ; and in case of death of either, their portions to go to the surviving sisters above mentioned." C. died in the lifetime of the testator :—Held, that her 500*l.* survived to M., A., and B., and that Sarah was not included in the words, "the surviving sisters above mentioned." White v. Wakley, 26 Beav. 23 ; 28 L. J., Ch. 79.

Under devise of personal residue to relations in such proportion as testator had given other part of his fortune, pecuniary legatees only are entitled, and not a devisee of real estate. Adair v. Maitland, 7 Bro. P. C. 587 ; 3 Ves. 231.

A general gift of the corpus of a fund to the children of A., described as her children, after a previous gift of the interest to her for the maintenance of her children, W. and R. :—Held, to be confined to the two before named, and not to include after-born children. Connor, In re, 2 Jo. & Lat. 456 ; 8 Ir. Eq. R. 401.

A testatrix gave a sum of money in trust for "my nephew and nieces." She had numerous nephews and nieces, but in a former part of the will she had mentioned by name four nieces and one nephew :—Held, that all the nephews and nieces were entitled to a share of the money. Lever, In re, 18 W. R. 35.

Residuary bequest to the testator's nephew and nieces per stirpes equally for their lives, and after the death of either that share of the principal to be paid equally to and among the children of such of the said nephews and nieces as should die ; and if any die without leaving any child or children, that share to go to and among the survivors or survivor of them in manner aforesaid. Upon the death of one without a child, that share goes to the survivors for their respective lives only, and will pass to their children respectively with the original shares; but upon the death of the last survivor without a child, his shares both original and accrued are undisposed of, notwithstanding another has left a child. Milsom v. Awdry, 5 Ves. 465; 5 R. R. 102.

Reference to what Part of Antecedent Expression.]—Testator having directed transfer of 3 per cent. consols, three months after his decease, gave several other legacies of stock "as aforesaid." Those words upon construction referred to description of stock, not to the time of the transfer. Sibley v. Perry, 7 Ves. 522; 6 R. R. 183.

Testator gave certain leasehold houses in trust for A., absolutely for her separate use, and other leasehold houses in trust for B. for her separate use, for her life, and after her decease for her children; if none, to fall into the residue; and he gave the residue in trust for A. and B., to be divided between them, share and share alike, and to be paid and applied in like manner, for their use and benefit, as the rents and profits of the leasehold premises hereinbefore settled upon them, and their receipts to be a sufficient discharge: the reference in the residuary clause is not to the interests of A. and B. in the houses, but to the provision that they shall take for their separate use; therefore they take the residue absolutely. Shanley v. Baker, 4 Ves. 732.

By will a testator gave a legacy "equally between my brothers and sisters now living"; and he directed that their shares should not lapse by their deaths in his lifetime, but should go to their executors. By a codicil of the same date he bequeathed another legacy, "between my brothers and sisters, in like manner as I have directed by my will":—Held, that the class mentioned in the codicil was not the same as that in the will; that the "manner" referred to the mode in which the class was to take, and not to the class itself; and consequently that the representatives of a sister who predeceased the testator took no interest in the second legacy. Wilder, In re, 27 Beav. 418.

The testator bequeathed 5,000*l.* to his wife for life, and after her decease to his nephew absolutely; but if the nephew should die in the lifetime of his wife, then he directed his executors to divide the same amongst the children of the nephew; and in case the nephew should die without leaving lawful issue, then to pay the same unto and equally between his two nieces, Louisa and Georgiana, for their separate use; and in case one or both of the nieces should die in the lifetime of the wife, then to pay and divide the share of the niece so dying unto and equally between her children as tenants in common; and the testator bequeathed all moneys in the public funds of which he should die possessed upon trust for his wife for her life, and after her death for the benefit of his nieces Louisa and Georgiana, in manner thereinbefore directed of and concerning the sum of 5,000*l.*, and he gave all the residue, except moneys in funds, to his wife absolutely. One of the nieces died in the lifetime of the wife, leaving children:—Held, that the gift of the 5,000*l.* to the children of the nieces could not be regarded as a part or modification of the gift to the mother, but was in fact a substitutionary gift, to arise on a distinct event; that the reference to the bequest of the 5,000*l.* in the residuary gift of the moneys in the funds by the words "in manner hereinbefore directed" might refer to the manner of taking as tenants in common or for their separate use; that the children of the niece did not, therefore, by virtue of the reference, take any interest in the residue of the moneys in the funds; and that, as to such moneys, so far as related to the share of the deceased niece, there was an intestacy. Lumley v. Robbins, 10 Hare, 621; 1 Eq. R. 129; 22 L. J., Ch. 869; 17 Jur. 410; 1 W. R. 285.

—— Whether Reference to Will includes Codicil.]—A. devised property to the children of B., in like manner as they were entitled under the will of B., deceased:—Held, that A. referred to the will and codicils together of B. A father, having eight children, devised his estate to six of them equally. Afterwards the wife's father devised another property unto her children, to be vested at the like times, with like benefit of survivorship, and provision for maintenance, and in like manner in all other respects, so far as the nature of the property and the difference of tenure would permit, as the children were entitled to the estate of their father, under the dispositions and limitations contained in his will:—Held, that the eight children participated in the second devise. Pigott v. Wilder, 26 Beav. 90.

Effect of Word "Said."]—A testator gave his freehold estate "and property, whether real or personal," to A. for life; and after her decease, he gave "all his said freehold estate and property" to B. and wife for life; and after their decease, he gave "all his said freehold property" to their children, "for an estate of inheritance in fee-simple," and in default he gave "his freehold estate and property" to C., "his heirs and assigns, in fee-simple." He charged his personal estate with some legacies, and he gave the residue of which he should die possessed, &c., to A.:—Held, that B. and his children took no interest in the personal estate, which belonged to A. Hollingsworth v. Shakeshaft, 14 Beav. 492; 21 L. J., Ch. 722.

A testator, having bequeathed a sum of money to his executors, in trust for his four grandchildren, Joseph, James, Lydia, and Mary, and the residue of his estate and effects, upon the happening of certain contingencies, unto his four grandchildren, devised his real estate, subject to a life interest, unto his grandson Joseph, charged and chargeable nevertheless with the payment thereout of 1,500*l.* apiece, unto each of the three brothers and sisters of Joseph, that was to say, James, Lydia, and Mary. And the testator proceeded as follows: "And I direct that if any of the children of my late son Joseph, being a son or sons, shall die under twenty-one, or if any of the children of my son Joseph, being a daughter or daughters, shall die under that age without being or having been married, then as well the original share or shares of the children so dying as the share or shares which by virtue of this proviso shall have survived or accrued to him, her, or them of and in the said sums of 1,500*l.* apiece, and of and in the rest and residue of my personal estate and effects, shall go, remain, and be to the other and others of the said children, and if more than one, in equal shares as tenants in common." The two grandchildren, Lydia and Mary, both died under twenty-one and unmarried:—Held, that the words "said children" referred to the four grandchildren, and that James was entitled to one moiety only of the two sums of 1,500*l.* given to the grand-daughters. Dickason v. Foster, 4 L. T. 628.

Limitations by Reference with Words added.]—Trust by will as to a moiety of the share of the testator's married daughter, A., for her separate use to the end and that it may not be subject to the control, &c., of B., her present husband, or any other husband, remainder to her husband B. for life, remainder for all the children of A., and in case there shall not be any children of A., or all shall die before twenty-one, for the survivor of B. and A., his wife, his or her executors, &c., and, as to a moiety of each of the shares of each of his unmarried daughters, upon the like trusts, and under the like restrictions, as described concerning the share of A., so, and in such manner as, that the same may be secured for the benefit of his said daughters and their children, and not to be subject or liable to the control of any husband they may happen to marry; one of the then unmarried daughters having married and died without issue, her husband surviving is not entitled to any interest in the moiety the subject of the trust created by the will. Judd v. Wyatt, 11 Ves. 483.

A father devised his real estate to his sons, A., B., and C., as tenants in common, subject to charges in favour of his wife and daughters, and gave his personal estate to his children in equal shares. Many years after his death, but before the charges had been satisfied, A. made a will, giving all his property "unto my brothers B. and C. absolutely for their uses under the directions of the will of my father":—Held, that the use of the plural word "uses" and the reference to the directions of the father's will were not sufficient to vary the construction of the previous words of gift, and that B. and C. took as joint tenants. Oliver v. White, 4 De G. F. & J. 17; 31 L. J., Ch. 689; 6 L. T. 198; 10 W. R. 276.

A testator gave his residue to his grandchildren, the children of his son and daughter (A. and B.), living at his decease, with a gift over to his brothers and sisters, in case any died before attaining a vested interest. By a codicil he gave 4,000*l.*, the interest to be paid in equal moieties to A. and B. during their lives, and at their decease the 4,000*l.* to be for the benefit of his grandchildren, agreeably to the instructions contained in his will. A. died, living B.:—Held, that a moiety of the 4,000*l.* became, upon the death of A., divisible among his children. Archer v. Legg, 31 Beav. 187; 10 W. R. 703.

A testator gave all his real estate to trustees, to pay the income thereof to his mother for her life, and then to sell, and divide the proceeds into two moieties, the one moiety to the children of his sister S., and the other moiety to his sister M. or her children if she were then dead. He then gave all his personal estates, after payment of debts, &c., to his wife A. for life or widowhood; and from her decease or second marriage, to transfer the whole to such persons and in such manner as he had declared concerning his real estate, "payable on the decease of his mother." The widow married during the life of the mother:—Held, that the construction to be put on this was, that on the death or marriage of his widow the personal estate was to be distributed in the same manner as the real estate was to be distributed on the death of the mother. Mountain v. Young, 18 Jur. 769.

Legacy to A. for life, then to her children for maintenance, and to be equally divided among them on their arriving at twenty-one, followed by a legacy to B., "on the same conditions on his attaining the age of twenty-one." The legacy to B. construed in the same manner as the other, viz., for life only, &c. Longdon v. Simson, 12 Ves. 295.

A testatrix directed trustees to make an investment, and out of the dividends to pay annuities of 100*l.* each to his two nieces and his nephew for life, and the capital to their children respectively, and to apply 100*l.* a year in the maintenance of the children of Daniel, a deceased nephew, until twenty-one, when he gave them the capital fund producing this annuity. He bequeathed his residue to his two nieces and nephew and the children of Daniel, "in equal shares, in like manner as was thereinbefore mentioned with respect to the annual sums of 100*l.* bequeathed to them respectively":—Held, that the children of Daniel took one-fourth only of the residue. Eames v. Anstee, 33 Beav. 264.

By his will a testator devised his W. property to J. F. L. and declared that he was to hold it with other property for his life, and after his decease to the use of his first and other sons successively, one after another, in tail male, with several remainders over. He afterwards purchased the lands of D., and by codicil devised them to J. F. L., he paying any part of the purchase-money which remained unpaid, to hold it subject to the same entail as the W. property; and by another codicil dated six years afterwards, devised it to J. F. L. and "entailed it in him and his issue male":—Held, that J. F. L. took an estate in tail male in the lands of D. Lowry v. Lowry, 13 L. R., Ir. 317.

Where Reference incomplete — Intention of Testator.]—A testator by his will gave his residuary estate to trustees upon trust to divide it equally between his children, and by a codicil directed them to hold the sum of 2,000*l.*, part of the share of his daughter E., in trust for her for life, and after her death for her children, with an ultimate trust for the survivors or survivor of the testator's children, and the issue of such of them as should be then dead leaving issue: and the testator directed his trustees to hold the sum of 2,000*l.*, part of the share of his daughter C., in trust for her for life, and after her death "upon such and the like trusts as are hereinbefore declared of the sum of 2,000*l.*, secured for the benefit of my daughter E., as fully and effectually as if such trusts were here fully repeated," and the testator directed his trustees to hold the sum of 2,000*l.*, part of the share of his daughter L., "upon such and the like trusts as are hereinbefore declared of the two several sums of 2,000*l.*, and 2,000*l.* secured for the separate use and benefit of my daughters E. and C., as fully and effectually as if such trusts were here fully repeated." E. died leaving issue, and C. without having had any issue:—Held, that the 2,000*l.* forming part of the share of C. did not pass after her death upon the same trusts as E.'s 2,000*l.*, i.e., to the issue of E., but upon trusts corresponding to these, but having C.'s name substituted for E.'s, so that, in the events which had happened, it passed to the survivors of the testator's children, and the issue of such of them as were dead leaving issue. Smith, In re, Bashford v. Chaplin, 45 L. T. 246.

A testator bequeathed 20,000*l.* consols upon trust to pay the dividends to his wife for life, and after her death to B. (the wife of A.) for life for her separate use, and after the death of B. upon trust for the benefit of B.'s children. The testator's wife, who was his residuary legatee, survived him only two days, and by her will, after giving several legacies of 100*l.* each, bequeathed to A. and B. "the same amount and on the same trusts and conditions" as were "named" in her late husband's will. She directed her residuary estate to be divided into two moieties, whereof she gave one to A. and B. and their children, "on the same trusts as before alluded to." There was no other part of the testator's will to which the bequest in the testatrix's could be referred, except that above stated: —Held, that a legacy of 20,000*l.* consols passed by the wife's will on the same trusts as those above mentioned of the husband's will. Stephens v. Powys, 1 De G. & J. 24.

Testator bequeathed certain houses in trust for his grand-daughter Martha for her separate use for her life, and on her decease in trust to apply the rents for the maintenance of her children then living, and when they should all attain twenty-one, in trust to sell and divide the produce among them equally; and in case Martha should die without leaving issue, to divide the produce amongst such of the testator's grandchildren thereinafter named as should be living at her decease; and the testator, by three separate and subsequent clauses, bequeathed other houses in trust for his grand-daughters Charlotte, Sarah, and Harriett, for their separate use for their lives, and repeated after each clause, "and after her decease in trust for the issue of her body in the same manner and subject to the same conditions and limitations as hereinbefore expressed in the bequest to my grand-daughter Martha." In a subsequent part of his will he declared that, if all his said grand-daughters should die without leaving issue, all the houses mentioned in his will should fall into the residue of his estate. Charlotte died leaving issue; Harriett died without issue:—Held, that the houses bequeathed in trust for her went over to Martha and Sarah, as being the only grandchildren of the testator living at her death. Doughty v. Saltwell, 15 Sim. 640.

A testatrix gave certain estates on trust, as to a moiety, for E. for life, with remainder, if the trustees should think proper, in trust for E.'s husband for life; and as to the other moiety, on similar trusts for H. and her husband, and in certain events, which happened, upon the same trusts, in favour of E. and her issue, as were thereinbefore expressed concerning the other moiety. The trustees, after the death of E., declared that E.'s husband should have the income of both moieties for life:—Held, that he was entitled to the income of the moiety given to H. for life. Ashburnham v. Ashburnham, 13 Jur. 1111.

A testatrix, having by her will directed her trustees to stand possessed of a fifth of her residuary estate upon trust for a woman for life, and after her death for her children, directed them to stand possessed of three other fifth parts upon such trusts for three other women respectively as should correspond with the trusts thereinbefore declared concerning the fifth part or share of the first-mentioned woman:—Held, that the three women took only life interests, with remainder to their respective children, in the same manner as the first-mentioned woman and her children took. Smith v. Greenhill, 14 W. R. 912.

A testator gave an estate to his daughter E. for life, and after her death upon trusts to her children, and made similar dispositions of other estates in favour of his daughter A. and his sons J. and W. respectively and their respective children, and gave his residuary estate to E. and A. equally. By a codicil he gave the residue to his wife for life, and after her death between E., A., J., and W. equally, "precisely in the same way as the shares before given to them in my will": —Held, that the shares of the residue were not given absolutely by the codicil, but were subject to the limitations contained in the will as to the estates specifically devised. Colshead, In re, 2 De G. & J. 690.

Held, also, that, E. and W. having died without issue, their shares in the residue went to the personal representatives of E. and A., the absolute gift to E. and A. in the will remaining to that extent unaltered. Ib.

A testator gave his real and personal estate to trustees as to one-fourth to A. for life, and, after her decease, for her children, and, in default of children, for B., C., and D., and their issue, in the same manner as thereinafter directed respecting their original shares; as to one other fourth to B. for life, and, after his decease, for his children, and, in default of children, for A., C., and D., and their issue, in the same manner as directed respecting their original shares; as to one other fourth part for C. and her children by reference to the share of A., using the same referential expressions as are next given concerning the remaining share; and the fourth share he bequeathed for the benefit of D. and his children upon the trusts, and subject to the powers and authorities, and with the like remainders over in default of issue, and similar and in all respects corresponding with the trusts, powers, and authorities expressed and declared concerning the one-fourth share bequeathed in trust for B. and his children, as effectually as if the same trusts were there repeated. D. died unmarried:—Held, that the fourth share went over, upon the death of D. without issue, to the other three legatees: A., B., and C. Surtees v. Hopkinson, 36 L. J., Ch. 305; L. R. 4 Eq. 98; 16 L. T. 8; 15 W. R. 395.

—— Whether Trusts to be the same or corresponding.] — A testator gave property, including 2,700*l.* stock, to his wife for life, and after her decease as to 800*l.*, part of the stock, for his daughter Y. as therein mentioned, and after the decease of Y. for her children living at the time of her decease, equally. The testator subsequently gave 1,200*l.*, further part of the stock, for his daughter S., in similar terms to those used with respect to the gift of the 800*l.* stock to his daughter Y.; and, after the decease of his daughter S., to transfer the 1,200*l.* stock to all and every the children of his said last-mentioned daughter, at the same time and in the same manner as was thereinbefore mentioned with respect to the 800*l.* for the benefit of his daughter Y.:—Held, that a child of S. who predeceased her mother took no share in the fund. Swift v. Swift, 1 N. R. 353; 32 L. J., Ch. 479; 11 W. R. 334.

By a marriage settlement certain funds were settled upon certain usual trusts for the benefit of the husband and wife and their children, and it contained a hotchpot clause. By the will of the wife's mother, made subsequently, a portion of her personal estate was bequeathed to the trustees to pay and transfer the same to the trustees of the settlement, to be held by them upon and for the same trusts and purposes as were therein expressed concerning the property thereby settled. On a summons taken out by the trustees of the settlement to ascertain the effect of this bequest, it was contended by parties to whom but small appointments under the settlement had been made that the bequest was to be treated as an accretion to the settlement, so as to make the hotchpot clause applicable by bringing into account the funds already appointed under the settlement :—Held, that, inasmuch as there was no context in the will importing that the use of the words "same trusts" implied an accretion of the settlement trust fund, the bequest must be deemed to be of an independent fund, to which the hotchpot clause in the settlement was not applicable. North, In re, Meates v. Bishop, 76 L. T. 186.

—— Whether Interest given by Implication.]—A father gave to his sons H. and J. 16,000*l.* upon special trust and confidence to invest and to pay the income of 8,000*l.*, part thereof, to his daughter A. for life for her separate use, and after her death to divide the 8,000*l.* amongst her children at twenty-one. He then directed that his sons should pay the income of the remaining 8,000*l.* to his daughter S. for life in the same manner in every respect and subject to the same control as he had directed as to his daughter A., it being his intention that his daughters' fortunes should not be subject to the debts of their husbands. He then gave to H. and J. 6,000*l.*, to invest and pay the income to his son S., and to divide the principal amongst his children. The sums were charged on real estate. There was power to apply the income for the maintenance and education of the daughters' and sons' children. The daughter S. died, leaving four children who had attained the age of twenty-one. The sum representing the 8,000*l.* had been paid into court :—Held, that by implication the four children were entitled to the fund. Sweeting v. Prideaux, 45 L. J., Ch. 378; 2 Ch. D. 413; 34 L. T. 240; 24 W. R. 776.

Gift to the sons and daughters of T., viz., A., B., F., and M., 100*l.* each, F. excepted, "as the interest of such share shall be paid to M. for life, then the said 100*l.* shall be given to F.'s children," then gift of residue "to A. for life, and after her decease I give to the sons and daughters of T. (except and excepted as aforesaid) all my remaining effects" :—Held, that the children of F. took no part of the residue. West v. Laking, 12 Jur. 129.

Testator bequeathed to G. two sums of stock, and, in case of his death in the testator's lifetime without issue, the two sums were to be equally divided amongst the testator's nieces thereinafter named, under the same conditions and restrictions as were thereinafter mentioned respecting the several bequests thereinafter to them respectively given. The testator then gave 12,000*l.* stock to trustees, upon trusts to pay the dividends (in thirds) to the testator's three nieces A., B., and C., for their lives, and after their respective deaths to transfer the capital (in thirds) to the children of the nieces, with limitations over in the nature of cross-remainders, in the event of any of the nieces dying without leaving children, with an ultimate limitation, in the event of all the nieces dying without leaving children, in favour of the residuary legatee, a stranger. G. died, without issue, in the testator's lifetime. The nieces had children :—Held, that the children took the same interest in the stock given to G. as they did in the 12,000*l.* consols. Ross v. Ross, 2 Coll. C. C. 269; 9 Jur. 795.

By a settlement trustees were to raise 2,000*l.* for A. for life, with remainder to her children, with powers for maintenance, advancement, "or otherwise," and in default of children the fund was given to C. A like sum was given to B. for life, with remainder to her children, with the like provision for their maintenance "and otherwise" as before expressed in respect to the 2,000*l.* given to A. and her children, and otherwise in like manner, to all intents and purposes, as if such trusts and provisions were there fully repeated :—Held, that this included the gift over to C., and that on the death of B. without children C. was entitled to the second 2,000*l.* Shirley, In re, 32 Beav. 394.

Reduplication of Charges.]—Where trusts of a fund are declared by way of reference to the trusts of a prior fund, such limitations ought not to be so construed as to multiply the charges which had been made on such prior fund. Where, therefore, A. bequeathed to trustees a considerable sum of money for B. during his life, after his decease in trust to raise portions of 5,000*l.* each for the younger children of B. as therein named, with gifts over, subject to these charges, and he also bequeathed one-fifth of his residuary personal estate upon the trusts before declared concerning the capital of which the dividends were given to B. for life, the residuary personal estate being of very considerable amount :—Held, that the children of B. were not entitled to double portions of 5,000*l.* each. Boyd v. Boyd, 2 N. R. 486; 9 L. T. 166.

A trust created by reference to other trusts ought not, generally speaking, to be so read as to create a duplication of charges. Hindle v. Taylor, 5 De G. M. & G. 577. And see Sambourne v. Barry, Ir. R. 11 Eq. 140.

By the will of E. B. an undivided moiety of freeholds and leaseholds is vested in trustees upon trust to sell and pay annuities and legacies, and after decease of S. L. (her sister) and of A. B. to divide the residue among certain parties. S. L. survived, and devised the other undivided moiety of the premises to the trustees of her sister's will, to hold them upon the same trusts, or such as should after her decease be subsisting, for the benefit of the same person and for the same purposes as were declared by her sister's will of and concerning the moiety of her sister in the premises :—Held, that the intention of S. L. was to add the produce of her moiety to her sister's personal estate, and that it was applicable in aid of payment of the annuities and legacies of E. B.'s will, and subject thereto belonged to E. B.'s residuary legatees. Baskett v. Lodge, 23 Beav. 138.

When an estate is devised by reference to the like limitations as are expressed in another instrument concerning another estate, the court will consider that the testator's intention was to make the second estate a supplemental provision to the first, and not to multiply charges or powers of charging. This construction is rendered more certain if the second estate is insufficient alone to bear an independent set of charges; or if the will devising the second estate contains more than one devise, by reference to the same limitations. Leigh v. Leigh, 22 L. T. 837; 18 W. R. 991.

A father by his will made a series of specific devises upon trust for each of his children for life, with power for such child to appoint by will to his or her widow or surviving husband an annuity not exceeding one-third of the income of the property specifically devised to him or her for life; and he then gave his residuary real and personal estate upon and for the trusts and purposes, and with the same or the like powers, in favour of all his children, share and share alike, and their issue, as should correspond with those thereinbefore expressed and declared concerning the estates specifically devised:—Held, that each child had power to appoint by will an annuity not exceeding one-third of the total income arising from the specifically devised estate and the child's share of residue. Secus if the power had been to appoint an annuity of or not exceeding a fixed amount. Cooper v. Macdonald, 42 L. J., Ch. 533; L. R. 16 Eq. 258; 28 L. T. 693.

The gift of property subject to charges, to which it is already liable, does not create a new charge. It may be a recognition or confirmation of the charge already existing, but does not create a charge more extensive than what before existed, or was supposed to exist. Doolan v. Smith, 3 Jo. & Lat. 547; 9 Ir. Eq. R. 426.

By a marriage settlement, the lands of X. and Y. were, in case the wife survived her husband, charged with an "annuity or yearly rent-charge" of 50*l*., for the benefit of the wife during her life, provided the leases of the lands should so long continue; and it was provided, that if the husband should, at any time during his life, purchase or become seised of 20*l*. per annum, to be settled "as a jointure" on his wife, in addition to her above-mentioned rent-charge or sum of 50*l*. per annum, the trustees should pay him a certain sum out of the trust moneys. The mother of the husband, having power to appoint the lands of Z. amongst such of her sons as she should think fit, granted, with his consent, an annuity or yearly rent-charge of 20*l*., charged on said lands, to his wife for her life; and thereupon the trustees paid the trust money to the husband. The husband afterwards acquired the lands of Z., subject to the annuity of 20*l*.; and the lease of X. having expired, and that of Z. (which was vested in a third person) being about to expire, he made his will, whereby he devised all his real, freehold, and personal property to his son, "subject to my wife's jointure," and to a further sum of 70*l*. during her life, which he thereby charged on his entire property:—Held, that the 50*l*. per annum was not impliedly charged upon Z. by the will; and that whether the word "jointure" in the will referred to the 50*l*. per annum, or the 20*l*. per annum, the gift of his property, subject to his wife's jointure, did not create a charge upon it, but left it as it was, subject to the charges created by the prior instruments. Ib.

b. By Implication.

Principles.]—Necessary implication imports, not natural necessity, but so strong probability, that an intention to the contrary cannot be supposed. Wilkinson v. Adam, 1 V. & B. 466; 12 R. R. 255.

An estate by implication cannot be against the plain intent of the party expressed in his will. Smith v. Clever, 2 Vern. 60.

No estate raised by implication in a will can destroy an express estate. Bamfield v. Popham, 1 P. Wms. 54; Salk. 236; 2 Vern. 427; 2 Eq. Ca. Abr. 308, pl. 12.

Implication may arise from an elliptical form of expression, which necessarily involves and implies something else, or from a form of gift which cannot be rendered effectual, or a direction to do something, which direction cannot be obeyed without implying something else. Parker v. Tootal, 11 H. L. Cas. 143; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 185; 12 L. T. 89; 13 W. R. 442.

After a clear gift to a college of three presentations to a living, their interests cannot be extended by doubtful words. Emmanuel College, Cambridge v. Norwich (Bishop), 4 Bro. C. C. 481.

Implication from Particular Words—"With."]—A. gives by a codicil to B., during her natural life, his house in G., with all the household goods found therein at the time of his decease. The word "with" so conjoins the house and goods that the devisee can have no larger interest in the one than in the other. Leeke v. Bennett, 1 Atk. 470.

—— From Particular Negative Expressions.]—By a marriage settlement certain trust funds stood limited in trust for the wife for life, and after her death, in default of children, for such persons as A. (the wife) should by will appoint, and, in default of appointment, to her next of kin. The husband took no interest under the settlement. By her will A., after reciting the settlement, directed and appointed all such property so subject to her disposition as aforesaid, and from and after the decease of her said husband (but not to affect the income thereof during his life) in equal fifth parts unto and between her brother and four sisters therein named. At the date of the will the said brother and sisters were five out of six people who would have been entitled as the next of kin of A. if she had then died:—Held, that the husband of A. did not take any life estate by implication. Woodhouse v. Spurgeon, 52 L. J., Ch. 825; 49 L. T. 97; 32 W. R. 225.

Resulting trust for the heir; the only express devise being to convey to the devisor's son from and after his age of thirty, which he did not attain; and no devise by implication from a declaration, that he shall have no power over the estate until his age of thirty. Nash v. Smith, 17 Ves. 29.

Under a power for raising portions for younger children, an appointment by a charge, confined to the particular event of four or more, was not extended by implication from general words in a subsequent part of the deed, providing for the case of no appointment. Mosley v. Mosley, 5 Ves. 249.

—— From Gift to A. after Death of B.—Realty.]—A., a copyholder, devised his lands to S. (a stranger) for twenty years after the death of his wife to raise portions for his younger children. Per Lord Chancellor, where such a devise is made to the heir, there an estate shall arise to the wife by implication; but where it is devised to a stranger (as in this case) there in the meantime it shall descend to the heir. Fawlkner v. Fawlkner, 1 Vern. 22. A stranger is but fidei commissarius, quoad the profits of that part of the real estate which are devised from him. Gilb. Eq. R. 270.

A devise of lands to the heir after the death of the wife, by necessary implication, gives an estate for life to the wife. Otherwise where the devise is to a stranger. London (City) v. Garway, 2 Vern. 571.

Devise after the death of the devisor's wife. If the devisee is heir, the wife takes for life by implication, otherwise not. Upton v. Ferrers (Lord), 5 Ves. 806; 5 R. R. 167.

Devise to B. after the death of A. B. being the heir-at-law, a necessary implication for A. for life. Dashwood v. Peyton, 18 Ves. 40: 11 R. R. 145.

One, having a wife and four daughters, devises lands to one of his daughters after the death of his wife; this is a devise to the wife for life by implication, though the daughter was only one of the co-heirs. Hutton v. Simpson, 2 Vern. 723; Pre. Ch. 439. S. C. nom. Simpson v. Hornby, Gilb. Eq. R. 115, 120.

A testator, after making certain dispositions in favour of his wife and others, directed that from and after the decease of his wife without leaving issue of his marriage his trustee should stand possessed of all the undisposed-of residue of his real and personal estate in trust for his natural daughter for the term of her natural life, with further provision in case of her death or marriage. It appeared that there was no issue of the marriage, that the testator's widow was still living, and that the natural daughter was still unmarried:—Held, from an examination of the whole will, that, according to the intention therein appearing, the vesting in possession of the natural daughter's estate was not postponed till after the death of the widow. "From and after the decease of my said wife" must be construed as referring only to property in which the widow took an interest terminable at her death. Rhodes v. Rhodes, 51 L. J., P. C. 53; 7 App. Cas. 192; 46 L. T. 463; 30 W. R. 709—P. C.

Estate for life in lands by implication, rebutted by the party having a bequest for life in a particular part of them, and by the testator desiring she should not be turned out. Boon v. Cornforth, 2 Ves. Sen. 277.

Devise of land to the testator's second son for life, he or his heirs paying rent thereout to the eldest son for his life; and after the death of the second son and his wife, remainder to the first, &c., son of the second son. The wife of the second son had an estate for life by implication, by the opinion of Lord Chancellor Parker. Willis v. Lucas, 1 P. Wms. 472; 10 Mod. 416.

Construction of a will devising specific parts of the estate to certain persons for their lives, the residue, after the death of those persons, to others, some of whom were heirs-at-law; that the words "after the death," &c., meant only subject to the life estates, repelling the implication of an estate for life in the residue, if it could arise; and whether it could, where some of the devisees were not heirs, quære. Dyer v. Dyer, 19 Ves. 612; 1 Mer. 414.

Estate for life by implication in real and personal estate. Cockshott v. Cockshott, 2 Coll. C. C. 432; 15 L. J., Ch. 131; 10 Jur. 141.

Testator devised his estate to A. in case his daughter should die leaving no heirs of her body:—Held, a gift to the daughter for life, with contingent remainder to such heir of her body as should be living at the time of her death. Read v. Snell, 2 Atk. 646.

Devise of moiety to A. for life, and of other moiety to B.; and after A.'s death, fee to be conveyed to B. If B. dies before A., A. is not entitled to B.'s moiety by implication. Aspinall v. Petrie, 1 Sim. & S. 544; 2 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 121; 24 R. R. 222.

A testator gave a house and furniture to A. and B., and after their death to C., together with his estate at N.:—Held, that the estate at N. did not vest in C. till after the death of A. and B., but descended in the meantime to the testator's heir-at-law. Attwater v. Attwater, 18 Beav. 330; 23 L. J., Ch. 692; 18 Jur. 50; 2 W. R. 81.

A testator gave his real and personal estate to his daughter for life, with remainder to his other children; but he directed that no division of the property should be made until the decease of his daughter and her husband, and of the survivor of them:—Held, that the husband took no interest by implication. Barnet v. Barnet, 29 Beav. 239.

Devise of real estate to W. R. W. and his heirs, upon trust to receive the rents and profits, and apply same in discharge of the testator's debts and legacies, and after payment thereof to convey a portion of said real estate to testator's brother R. W. for his life, and the residue thereof, and the part so devised to R. W., after his decease to such of the sons of W. R. W., the trustee, as should at his decease be his second son, for life, with remainder to the first and other sons of such second son in tail male; with remainder to the third, fourth, and other sons of W. R. W. successively, in strict settlement. Testator appointed W. R. W. his residuary legatee. The debts and legacies were all paid, and R. W. died in the lifetime of W. R. W.:—Held, that the heir-at-law of the testator was entitled to the rents and profits of the real estate until the death of W. R. W., as undisposed-of realty. Wills v. Wills, 1 Dr. & War. 439; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 531.

Testator being seised in fee of a house in the town of C., and of estates in the counties of H. and L., gave pecuniary legacies to his two sons (one of whom was his heir), and also to his two daughters M. and C. He then gave to his wife for her life the possession of his house, together with the use of his plate, furniture, &c., and the interest of his stock in the funds during her life, "save and except the clauses in favour of my daughters as already mentioned; at her decease, it is my will and pleasure that M. and C. shall divide equally between them, as residuary legatees, whatever I may die possessed of, except what is already mentioned in favour of others":—Held, that M. and C. took an estate in fee in remainder expectant on the death of the testator's widow in the house in C., and an estate in fee commencing on the widow's decease in the estates in H. and L., and that the widow did not take a life interest by implication in those estates, and that the heir took them by descent during her life. Davenport v. Coltman, 12 Sim. 588; 11 L. J., Ch. 262; 6 Jur. 381. And see S. C. at law, 9 M. & W. 481; 11 L. J., Ex. 114.

Children, by implication from will and codicil, the latter saying, that in case tenant for life had no children, gift over:—Held, entitled to legacy. Rogers, Ex parte, 2 Madd. 449; 17 R. R. 239.

The word "family" admits of a variety of applications, and the construction to be put upon it, in a particular will, must depend upon the intention to be collected from the whole context of the will. Where a testator directed his business to be carried on by his wife and son for the mutual benefit of the family, and devised his property in trust, that, at his wife's decease, the whole of it, as well freehold as personal, should be equally divided among his children, it was held that the testator in the words "my family" intended to comprise his wife, and as to the testator's property devised after his wife's decease to his children, it was held upon the whole will, and what appeared to be the evident intention of the testator, that the wife took a life interest by implication as well in the real as in the personal estate. As to the effect of a devise to the heir and another person, or to the heir and other persons on the death of A., where there is no explanatory context, quære. Blackwell v. Bull, 1 Keen, 176; 5 L. J., Ch. 251.

A life estate in A. B. will not be implied from a gift on the death of A. B. to the testator's heir-at-law or next of kin along with other persons. A testator, who died in June, 1837, gave to trustees the whole of his property in trust for the payment of his debts, with full power to sell all or any part of his estates or to demise the same; and directed them out of the moneys produced or out of the rents to pay his testamentary expenses and debts, and then gave certain legacies, and directed that after the death of his wife, and after the payment of all debts and legacies, the whole residue of all his remaining property should be divided into twelve portions, three of which should be given "to the children" of his late aunt, Mrs. W., "equally among them, the descendants, if any, of those who might have died being entitled to the benefit which their deceased parent would have received had he or she been then alive," with similar gifts to the "children and descendants" of his other aunts; "and should there be no children or lawful descendants of any of his aunts remaining at the time the bequests should become payable, then the portions" were to fall into the residuary fund. The testator declared that it should not be incumbent on his executors to pay the legacies sooner than two years after his decease, nor to divide the residue amongst his relatives until two years after the death of his wife, and made provision for payment of an annuity of 700*l.* to which his wife was entitled under her marriage settlement. The wife died in 1876. The testator's co-heirs were certain of the children of the aunts, and his next of kin were certain children of the aunts. The children of the aunts were all dead, but many of them had left children and grandchildren:—Held, that the widow did not take a life estate by implication. Ralph v. Carrick, 48 L. J., Ch. 801; 11 Ch. D. 873; 40 L. T. 505—C. A. Affirming 25 W. R. 530.

—— Personalty.]—A testator, having brothers and sisters, and several nephews and nieces, and having given a legacy to one of his brothers, directed his residuary estate to be invested in government security, the interest to be paid for the maintenance of M. as long as she lived single and without a child; and, at her death, the money to come to his brothers' and sisters' children: M., although married, and having a child, is entitled to the interest for life, not to the principal. Bird v. Hunsdon, 2 Swan. 342; 1 Wils. Ch. 456; 19 R. R. 82.

Testator bequeathed one moiety of personal estate to his daughter for life, remainder to her children, and their children by way of substitution, absolutely; her other moiety he gave to his son for life, remainder to his son's children, and if he died without issue living at his death, then to the children of the daughter "in such shares and proportions and in such manner as was directed for the payment and division of their shares in the other moiety": the son died without issue:—Held, that the daughter took a life interest in the second moiety by implication. Davies v. Hopkins, 2 Beav. 276.

Estate for life in real estates and in personalty by implication. Ramsden v. Hassard, 3 Bro. C. C. 236. And see Backwell v. Bull, 1 Keen, 176; 5 L. J., Ch. 251.

Bequest, after the death of A., of 2,500*l.* as A. should appoint, with a gift over "of the same" in default, and to be paid with interest from A.'s death; A. appointed a part to B., and 1,630*l.* to other persons, and directed the said sums to be paid at the decease of B., except the one left to himself, which was to be payable at A.'s decease:—Held, that the interest on the 1,630*l.*, accruing between the deaths of A. and B., neither passed to the appointees of that sum, nor to B. by implication, but went over, as in default of appointment. Henderson v. Constable, 5 Beav. 297; 11 L. J., Ch. 332.

A testator willed that certain property should be vested in a manner most secure, and least liable to fluctuation or risk, and that 3,000*l.* should be at the will of his wife at her death; but the residue he willed his wife should distribute to his relations. He made his wife residuary legatee:—Held, that the distribution to the relations was not to take place until the wife's death, and the court inclined to the opinion that the wife took a life estate by implication; but held that, at all events, she was entitled for life under the residuary gift to her. Hudleston v. Goulsbury, 10 Beav. 547; 11 Jur. 464.

A will containing a devise of realty in trust for A. for life, remainder to B., his wife, for life, and after the death of the survivor, to sell and divide the proceeds equally among the children, whose shares were to be vested at twenty-one for sons, and twenty-one or marriage for daughters, with a proviso postponing payment in the event of any shares vesting in the lifetime of either tenant for life. The will also contained a bequest of stock, in trust to pay the dividends to A. for life, and on his death to divide the principal among his children equally, the shares to vest at the same time as were before provided as to the proceeds of the realty; and there was a proviso that in the event of there being no child of A. and B., or all the children dying before twenty-one, or, if daughters, before that age or marriage, the proceeds of the realty and the sum of stock should be divided equally among the members of a defined class of persons who should be living at the death of the survivor of A. and B., or A.'s children or child, as according to the trusts thereinbefore declared the case might require:—Held, that the last of these clauses must be read distributively, and that it did not give to B. by implication a life interest in the stock. Drew v. Killick, 1 De G. & Sm. 266; 11 Jur. 900.

A testator made a minutely specific provision for his wife for life; and directed that all his property at her death should be sold and divided between his children, "or such of them as shall be living at my decease, and the issue of such of my wife":—Held, that in a fund not described part of the estate, the widow did not take a life estate by implication. Stevens v. Hale, 2 Dr. & Sm. 22; 6 L. T. 453; 10 W. R. 418.

A gift of personal estate to several children "after the death of A.," their mother, no estate being given during the life of A., raises an implied gift of a life estate in favour of A. Cock v. Cock, 28 L. T. 627; 21 W. R. 807.

After gifts to A., B., and C. there was a gift "after their decease" of that property, together with the residue:—Held, that "after their decease" meant "subject to the interests of A., B., and C.," and that these words did not postpone the immediate enjoyment of the general residue. Lill v. Lill, 23 Beav. 446; 5 W. R. 300. S. P., Key v. Key, 4 De G. M. & G. 73; 1 Eq. R. 82; 22 L. J., Ch. 641; 17 Jur. 769.

A bequest by a testator of the remainder of his personal property, after his wife's death to be equally divided among a class which could only then be ascertained by implication, entitles the wife to receive the interest of the property during her life. A testator, after giving an annuity and legacies to his wife, and an annuity to his father for his life and that of his (testator's) mother, left several legacies which he wished to be paid duty free after the death of his father and mother; after his wife's death he directed the remainder of his property to be equally divided among his brothers and sisters, if living; if dead, among his nephews and nieces:—Held, that the widow took a life estate by implication in the residue. Humphreys v. Humphreys, L. R. 4 Eq. 475; 14 L. T. 557; 15 W. R. 391.

A testator by giving his residuary personalty after the death of his wife to some only of his next of kin, does not give his wife a life interest therein by implication. Springfield, In re, Chamberlain v. Springfield, [1894] 3 Ch. 603; 8 R. 466.

Gift of residue to trustees to invest and pay the income to daughter T. "during the joint lives of herself and my two sons-in-law for her sole and separate use and benefit, and after the death of my sons-in-law, or either of them, I direct that their or his widow or widows shall be entitled to share and participate equally with my daughter T. in the income, so that the same shall be received and enjoyed by my daughters and the survivors or survivor of them during their or her lives or life for her sole and separate use and benefit." Upon the death of the last survivor, the capital to be divided amongst the grandchildren. T. died before the sons-in-law:—Held, that there was an intestacy of the income until the widowhood of the daughters. Isaacson v. Van Goor, 42 L. J., Ch. 193; 27 L. T. 752; 21 W. R. 156.

A testator gave a sum of stock in trust to pay the income to a married woman for life, and after her decease, if she should have children, in trust to pay the income to her husband for life, and after his decease in trust for the children equally; but if there should be no child (which was the case) then, after the decease of the husband and wife, in trust for other persons absolutely. The husband survived his wife:—Held, that he took a life interest by implication. Blake, In re, 36 L. J., Ch. 747; L. R. 3 Eq. 799; 16 L. T. 279.

By a marriage settlement certain trust funds stood limited in trust for the wife for life, and after her death, in default of children, for such persons as A. (the wife) should by will appoint, and, in default of appointment, to her next of kin. The husband took no interest under the settlement. By her will A., after reciting the settlement, directed and appointed all such property so subject to her disposition as aforesaid, and from and after the decease of her said husband (but not to affect the income thereof during his life), in equal fifth parts unto and between her brother and four sisters therein named. At the date of the will the said brother and sisters were five out of six people who would have been entitled as the next of kin of A. if she had then died:—Held, that the husband of A. did not take any life estate by implication. Woodhouse v. Spurgeon, 52 L. J., Ch. 825; 49 L. T. 97; 32 W. R. 225.

A testator bequeathed life annuities payable from his death, and he directed a fund to be set apart to secure them. He also gave one half of the residue of his personal estate to his widow absolutely, and the other half to parties for life, with remainders over. By a codicil he postponed the payment of the annuities until the death of the wife:—Held, first, that she did not by implication take the intermediate dividends of the fund set apart to answer the annuities:—Held, secondly, that such dividends, as between the tenants for life and those in remainder, constituted income, and not corpus. Cranley v. Dixon, 23 Beav. 512; 26 L. J., Ch. 529; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 531.

A testator gave a legacy to the mayor of Dublin for such objects as he should deem most deserving, and gave the residue of his property to his trustees for such objects as they should consider most deserving:—Held, that the legacies were not charitable, and not given to the mayor or the trustees for their own benefit, and therefore void. Harris v. Du Pasquier, 26 L. T. 689; 20 W. R. 668.

These gifts were to take effect after the death or marriage of the testator's wife:—Held, no life estate by implication to the widow. Ib.

A testator devised to A. all his real estate, including chattels real, in trust for B. and her heirs, for her sole and separate use. Provided that if B. should die under the age of twenty-one, and unmarried, he bequeathed all the property he should be possessed of or entitled to at his decease to A., his heirs, &c., for ever, subject to a life annuity; and he bequeathed a legacy of 500*l.* to A., whom he appointed his executor:—Held, that there was no gift by implication of the personal estate to B. James v. Shannon, Ir. R. 2 Eq. 118.

A testator bequeathed the residue of his personal estate, which he directed to be converted into money by his executors, and to be divided in sixths. He bequeathed the interest of five-sixths to W. L. for life, and after his death the principal to his children, and if he should have no children, the interest to A. C. for life and after her death the principal to her children; and if there should be no child of A. C., he bequeathed the five-sixths to the St. George family in different shares. He bequeathed the remaining one-sixth and the interest and dividends thereof, &c., after the decease of W. L., to the children of A. C., and if there should be no child of A. C., to the St. Georges in equal shares. There was no child of A. C.:—Held (1), that W. L. did not take an interest for life in the one-sixth by implication; (2) that the interest of the one-sixth went, during the life of W. L. to the St. George family. Greene v. Flood, 15 L. R., Ir. 450. See also Ralph v. Carrick, supra, col. 1417; Ramsden v. Hassard, 3 Bro. C. C. 236.

Gift over on Death implied from Gift over on other Events.]—Testator gave to trustees all his real and personal estate, upon trust to suffer his widow to receive the rents and dividends for her life, provided she kept his property in repair and insured the same against loss or damage by fire, and provided further that she remained a widow and did not cohabit with any other man; and in case she made default in repairing or insuring his said property, or married again, or cohabited with any other man, then, in either of the said cases, upon certain trusts in favour of his children or their issue. The widow died without having committed any of the acts or defaults of which her life estate was determinable:—Held, the gift over took effect on the determination of the prior estate by death as well as on the other events. Cane, In re, Ruff v. Sivers, 60 L. J., Ch. 36; 63 L. T. 746.

Implication of Absolute Interest—From Gift to A. until of Age.]—Bequest of stock to executors for the use of E. and A., or the longer liver, the dividends to be paid to their order during the lives of either of them, and then to the issue of A., if any; if not, the stock to be transferred in trust for J. till he comes of age. J. attained twenty-one, and died; then E., and lastly A., without issue. The representative of J. held entitled to the fund, and that the trust during the minority was only a mode of convenience. Atkinson v. Paice, 1 Bro. C. C. 92.

Legacy to trustees to be put out upon security, the interests to be paid to A., and in case she marry or die the interests to be paid to B., in trust for her till she come to the age of twenty-one years:—Held, that B. was absolutely entitled to the legacy. Hale v. Beck, 2 Eden, 229.

A testatrix having by will directed the trustees, who were also the executors of her will, to invest the residue of her property in the funds, left the interest to two nieces, to be paid to them half-yearly, and at their decease "the half-yearly dividends to be continued to their children till they came to the age of twenty-one." She then "constituted and appointed" the executors (nominatim) trustees for the nieces and their children. All the children of a deceased niece had attained twenty-one:—Held, that they were entitled absolutely to the moiety given to her for life. Wilks v. Williams, 2 J. & H. 125; 5 L. T. 445; 10 W. R. 55.

Devise of the residue of real and personal estate to executors for A., till he attain twenty-one, and then the trust to cease, passes the whole beneficial estate to A. Peat v. Powell, Ambl. 387; 1 Eden, 479.

J. S., after the devise of several parts of his real and personal estates to several persons, devises the interest and produce of the surplus of his real and personal estate to his grandchildren, until their age of twenty-one. This will pass the absolute right and property of the real and personal estate to the grandchildren after that age. Newland v. Shephard, 2 P. Wms. 194.

A testator gave his residue to his wife for her and her son's support, clothing, and education, until he should attain twenty-one. If he died under twenty-one, then he gave all the interest of his bank stock to his wife for life; after her death, he gave all his property to his daughter:—Held, that the son did not take any estate by implication on attaining twenty-one; but there was an intestacy. Fitzhenry v. Bonner, 2 Drew. 36; 2 Eq. R. 454; 2 W. R. 30.

—— With Gift over on Death under Age.]—Legacy to be paid on marriage with consent; and given over in case of death before twenty-five "or" such marriage with consent:—Held, that the legacy was only intended to go over in the event of death before twenty-five "and" such marriage with consent. Malcolm v. O'Callaghan, Coop. t. Brough. 73; 2 Madd. 349.

Leaseholds were bequeathed to executors in trust for A. and B., "for their use and benefit until A. is twenty-five years old, and in case A. and B. should die before A. attains twenty-five, then the leaseholds shall be equally divided between C., D., and E." A. attained twenty-five:—Held, that A. and B. became absolutely entitled in moieties to the leaseholds. Gardiner v. Stevens, 30 L. J., Ch. 199; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 307; 9 W. R. 138.

Devise to A. until he attained twenty-one, with devise to B. for life if A. died under twenty-one. The will then proceeded with a gift of the produce of the estate to a class of persons, such gift commencing with the word "likewise" with a capital letter. The will contained no stops. A. attained twenty-one. On the construction of the will:—Held, that the son having attained twenty-one, the gift to the nephews failed. Paylor v. Pegg, 24 Beav. 105.

A testator, after directing payment of his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, gave to his daughter by a first marriage 500*l.*; he then gave to trustees all the residue of his estate and effects except articles specified, upon trust to permit his wife to receive the rents and profits for life, for the maintenance of herself and such children as he might have by her living at the time of his decease till twenty-one. He then gave to each of such children 500*l.*, to be paid to them as they respectively attained twenty-one; but in case of his wife's decease before they attained that age, the trustees to apply the interest of his estate and effects for their maintenance and education until they arrive at that age equally; but in case any of them died under twenty-one, that share to go equally among the survivors or survivor. There was then a specific gift to the wife, with a proviso that if she should marry again all the testator's estates and effects should be equally divided amongst his children by her in equal proportions as they should attain twenty-one, subject to maintenance in the meantime. The widow did not marry again, and on the questions what interest she and the children took under the will:—Held, that the gift to the daughter by the first marriage was intended to be all her provision, and that there was an absolute gift of the corpus of the residue to the children of the second marriage equally in any event, subject to the provision for the wife. Tunaley v. Roch, 5 W. R. 515.

A grandfather by his will, after reference to the provision thereinafter made for his grand-daughter, directed that, as to certain shares, until his grand-daughter attained the age of twenty-one, or should be married with consent, his executors should hold them upon trust to pay the dividends to his daughter; but when his grand-daughter should attain the age of twenty-one, or before upon marriage with consent, upon trust to pay the dividends to his daughter during her life, apart from her husband; and in case of her marriage with consent, then upon such marriage he gave to his executors such a sum of money as would with the value of the shares make up 2,500*l.*, upon trust to settle the same for the benefit and provision of his daughter for her separate use, with power in such settlement for her to dispose of the same among her issue, or if no issue, a general power of disposition; and the will contained a gift over in the event of her dying under twenty-one and unmarried. She attained twenty-one, but was still unmarried:—Held, that she was not entitled absolutely, but took an interest for life, subject to any question that might arise on marriage. Savage v. Tyers, 41 L. J., Ch. 815; L. R. 7 Ch. 356; 20 W. R. 817.

—— From Direction to divide "According to Value."]—Testator by an ungrammatical will before the Wills Act, 1837, after giving his widow the rents of all the tenements and lands belonging to him during widowhood, to be afterwards divided into three equal parts according to value between his three sons, enumerated the particulars of his real estate, and proceeded: "My stock in trade, money, book debts, and what other effects not included in the above statement, to be equally divided between my two sons T. and W., and to pay all my lawful debts":—Held, that the words "according to value" did not amount to a direction to sell, and that the three sons in the first gift took for life only. Milsome v. Long, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1073.

—— From Appointment of Executor to be Guardian of Illegitimate Child.]—A direction in a will that the testator's brother should be his executor, to arrange, dispose of, and settle his affairs, and the appointment of the brother to be the guardian of the testator's daughter, an only child, who was afterwards discovered to be illegitimate, does not amount by implication to a bequest of the personal estate in favour of the daughter. Davis v. Davis, 1 Russ. & M. 645; 1 L. J., Ch. 155.

—— From particular Circumstances—Property the Subject of Gift—Lease accompanied by Loan of Money—Specific Devise of demised Premises.]—A. made a lease for years of certain premises to B., containing a proviso that the rent thereby reserved was to be reduced on the exercise of an option given to B., his executors, administrators, and assigns, of purchasing it for 350*l.* A sum of 350*l.* was advanced by A. to B. to enable him to put buildings on the demised premises, in pursuance of a building covenant contained in the lease; and by deed of covenant of same date as the lease B. bound himself, his heirs and personal representatives, to pay off the 350*l.* in six years. In default of such payment there was a power of sale given to A. and his representatives, and it was provided that until this sum was paid the rent of the premises should be the original amount reserved by the lease. Many years afterwards A. by his will specifically devised the demised premises to his son G., and after certain other dispositions devised the residue of his property to trustees upon certain trusts. At the time of his death A. was the owner in fee of the demised premises. After A.'s death the person in whom the interest of B. was then vested paid the sum of 350*l.* to A.'s administratrix:—Held, that the sum of 350*l.* passed under the specific devise of the demised premises to G., and not under the devise of his residuary estate. Duffield v. M'Master, [1896] 1 Ir. R. 370.

—— From ultimate Gift of Fund set apart for Payment of Insurance Premiums.]—A testator gave to B. a moiety of the beneficial interest to arise by virtue of the policy he had effected on the life of his son in the P. office, and to C. the other moiety. And after giving various legacies, he directed his trustees to invest 500*l.* in consols, and out of the rents and income of his property, and the dividends of the consols, pay the annual premiums on the policy he had effected in the P. office, and also the premiums on a policy he had effected on his own life and the life of M. in the E. office, and when the continuance of the payment of the premiums should become unnecessary by the decease of his son and M., or otherwise, to apply the interest and dividends for the benefit of his son's wife and children until the youngest should attain twenty-one, and then to divide the principal equally between them. Also, to receive the money he should be entitled to upon the policy effected in the P. office for the joint benefit of B. and C.; and in case of the death of either without lawful issue, then to the survivor; and in case of both their deaths without lawful issue, then over. B. died an infant shortly after the testator's decease:—Held, that C. was absolutely entitled to the whole of the money secured by the policy in the P. office, and the son's wife and children to that effected in the E. office. Noy v. Roworth, 6 L. T. 676; 10 W. R. 510.

—— From Proviso for Deduction of Advances to Child.]—A testator had advanced by way of loan to the defendant, one of his children, a sum of 2,000*l.*, upon which sum interest was paid during the testator's lifetime. The testator, by his will, devised and bequeathed his property, both real and personal, to trustees on trust to permit his widow to receive the income actually produced by such property, however constituted or invested, during widowhood, and subject thereto on trust for his child, if only one, or all his children equally if more than one, who being a son or sons should attain the age of twenty-one years, or being a daughter or daughters should attain that age or marry. The will contained a proviso that any advances made by the testator to any child or to the husband of any child in his lifetime, together with interest on such advances, as charged against such child or her husband in his private memorandum book in his own handwriting, should, according to the amount thereof, be taken in full or in part satisfaction of his or her share in the testator's property, unless the testator should otherwise declare by writing under his hand. The sum advanced to the defendant was charged against him in the testator's memorandum book, and such book contained an entry as follows: "This is the memorandum book named in my will as containing the advances made by me to my children or their husbands to be taken in satisfaction of their respective shares in my estate":—Held (Cotton, L.J., dissenting), that the testator's widow was entitled to receive from the defendant during her life, as part of the annual income given to her by the will, interest on the said sum of 2,000*l.* Limpus v. Arnold, 54 L. J., Q. B. 85; 15 Q. B. D. 300; 33 W. R. 537—C. A.

—— From Gift to A., and if he Dies without Issue, over.]—Children, by implication from will and codicil, the latter saying, that in case tenant for life had no children, gift over:—Held, entitled to legacy. Rogers, Ex parte, 2 Madd. 449; 17 R. R. 239.

Bequest of an annuity to A. and B., and to the survivor for life; and if A. should have any "children," then to be equally divided between them; but if A. should die "without lawful issue," then to A. and his heirs for ever:—Held, that the children of A. took absolute interests in a perpetual annuity. Robinson v. Hunt, 4 Beav. 450.

Bequest of a share of testator's property to A. (not a child or issue of the testator), with a direction that if any legatee should die before the will took effect "without leaving any children legally to inherit," then his or her share should "lapse to the general fund." A. died in the testator's lifetime, leaving children who survived the testator:—Held, that A.'s children took by implication the share bequeathed to him. M'Lean v. Simpson, 19 L. R., Ir. 528.

Pecuniary legacies were given severally to A., B., C. and D. "during their natural lives," and in case of the demise of any of them "without legitimate issue," his proportion was to be divided among the survivors. A. died leaving children:—Held, that they did not take by implication, but that on A.'s death his legacy fell into the residue. Ranelagh v. Ranelagh, 12 Beav. 200; 19 L. J., Ch. 39.

A testator bequeathed a sum of money to his wife's nephew for life, and if he should die in the testator's lifetime without issue, then he gave the same to other parties. The nephew died in the lifetime of the testator, leaving issue:—Held, that such issue was not entitled by implication to the legacy. Cooper v. Pitcher, 4 Hare, 485; 16 L. J., Ch. 24; 9 Jur. 202.

Devise and bequest of residuary real and personal estate to the testator's son, and the heirs of his body for ever; and in case the son should die without children, the whole to be divided amongst the testator's surviving grandchildren, share and share alike. The son takes an estate tail in the freehold part of the property. Abram v. Ward, 6 Hare, 165; 16 L. J., Ch. 293; 11 Jur. 867.

Where there is an indefinite bequest to a parent, and if he dies without having or leaving children over, the children do not take by implication. Where there is a bequest to the parent for life, and if he die without having or leaving children over, the children are not entitled by implication. Where there is a bequest to a parent for life, and if he die without having or leaving children over, and there are matters in the will to raise an inference in favour of the children, the court is at liberty to take them in connection with the bequest, in the event of the parent dying without having or leaving issue, and to hold that the children are entitled by implication. A. bequeathed to each of his grandnephews, A. and B., an annuity for their lives; and in case of the death of either of them leaving issue, he directed that the annuity of him so dying should go to such issue if more than one, share and share alike, the share or shares of such child or children as should die under twenty-one or marriage to go to and be equally divided amongst the survivor and survivors of such issue during their respective natural lives; and if but one, the whole of annuity to go to such only child for life; and in case of the death of either A. or B. without lawful issue living at his death, that the annuity of him so dying should go to the survivor for his life; and in case of the death of both A. and B. without having issue or leaving such, and that such issue should die before the age of twenty-one, then, after the death of the survivor of such issue of A. and B., he directed that the said two annuities should sink into his residuary personal estate. A. died without issue:—Held, that there was a bequest by implication of A.'s annuity to the children. Kinsella v. Caffrey, 11 Ir. Ch. R. 154.

A testator devised a freehold house to his niece for her life for her separate use, and after her death, "she leaving no child or children," to her nephew, S. G. R. The residue of his real and personal estate he devised and bequeathed to his two nephews, S. G. R. and W. W. R. in equal shares. The niece died, leaving children:—Held, that the niece only took for life, and after her death the property passed under the residuary gift, and that the court could not imply a devise in fee-simple to the niece, or a devise in remainder to her children. Scale v. Rawlins, 61 L. J., Ch. 421; [1892] A. C. 342; 66 L. T. 542—H. L. (E.)

Devise in trust for A. for life, and after the decease of A., in trust to permit such one child of A., and the heirs of his or her body, to receive the rents as A. should appoint by deed or will, and in default of appointment to go to his eldest son and the heirs of his body; and in case there should be no son, to and amongst his daughters, and to the heirs of their bodies, share and share alike; and in default of such issue, in trust for B., C. and D. successively for their lives, with similar remainders respectively to them as to A.'s sons and daughters, with remainder over in fee, and a residuary devise to A. A. by will appointed to his eldest son, who died without issue in his lifetime:—Held, first, that A. took an estate tail in remainder, after the estate devised to his eldest son in default of appointment; and secondly, that the words "in case there shall be no son" did not give an estate by implication to the other sons of A. Bell v. Bell, 15 Ir. Ch. R. 517.

A. by will gave 2,000*l.* on trust for E. for life, with remainder as E. should appoint, and in default of such appointment for such persons as should be living at the death of E. and next of kindred of A.; and in case E. should die without issue living to attain twenty-one, then over. E. never executed the power of appointment, and died leaving one only child, who attained twenty-one:—Held, that there was no estate by implication in the issue of E. Hayton's Trusts, In re, 4 N. R. 55; 10 L. T. 336.

Bequest of residue of personal estate to trustees, upon trust for A.; but if he should die in the testatrix's lifetime, "without leaving any child or children him surviving," then in trust for B. absolutely:—Held, not to create a trust by implication for the children of A. on his death in the testatrix's lifetime; and semble, that it was a case of intestacy. Lee v. Bush, 2 De G. M. & G. 810; 22 L. J., Ch. 97; 16 Jur. 1057.

A bequest to A. for life, with a gift over, if he die without leaving issue, gives no interest by implication to the issue. A. gave his residue to his three children "for their natural lives, viz., they to have the interest during their natural lives, and if any die without leaving issue, in that case to return again for the benefit of his grandchildren":—Held, that the three children took during their joint lives and the life of survivors and survivor; and, secondly, that their children took no interest by implication, so that if the three children all died leaving issue there would be an intestacy after the death of the survivor. Neighbour v. Thurlow, 28 Beav. 33.

A testator gave legacies to his children absolutely, and then gave the income of his residuary estate to his wife for her life, and directed that after her death the income should be divided equally among his said children during their respective lives, and after the death of all his children he directed the capital to be divided equally among all his grandchildren; provided, nevertheless, that in case of the death of any of his said children, leaving lawful issue, "the respective legacy, share, and interest" of the child or children so dying should immediately thereupon become vested in such his, her, or their issue respectively:—Held, that upon the death of a child leaving issue before the period of distribution, the income of that share of the residue of which the child had been tenant for life was payable until the period of distribution to the issue as joint tenants, and not to the surviving children of the testator. Walmsley v. Foxhall, 1 De G. J. & S. 605.

Bequest to W. of an annuity during his natural life, and in case W. should die without child or children, and from and after his death, then over:—Held, that W.'s children took no interest in this annuity. Sparks v. Restal, 24 Beav. 218.

B., after directing the payment of his general expenses, gave all his funded property in the Bank of England and certain other personal and real estate to his daughter S., she paying and receiving all his debts. The will proceeded as follows: "The said S. shall in no way dispose of any of the said funded property, but to hold the same for her natural life, and if she should die without issue the said landed property shall go to J. B. for his natural life. I will and direct that all the funded property shall go to my granddaughter W. and her heirs for ever; and I also will and direct that after the death of the said J. B. all the said landed property shall go to W., and her heirs for ever." On the question what interest S. took in the testator's funded property:—Held, semble, that the issue of S. took no gift by implication from the terms of the gift over, but W. took the funded property absolutely on the death of S. Hovill, Ex parte, Banks' Trust, In re, 2 K. & J. 387.

Where a testator directed the annual interest of his residue to be divided into as many shares as there were living children of T. and L., share and share alike, as they should come of age; and in case any one should die without children, his share to devolve on survivors successively, till the whole interest came into the hands of the grandchildren and great-grandchildren of T. and L.:—Held, that the children of T. living at his death were entitled to the income only, but that there was a gift by implication to these children absolutely, with a gift over of the share of any grandchild who had died without having had issue; not absolutely, but according to the gift of the original share. Wetherell v. Wetherell, 4 Giff. 51; 10 W. R. 818.

Bequest of residue to John L., but if he should die in the lifetime of the testatrix, without leaving children, then to Charles L.:—Held, that the children of John L. took nothing by implication. In such a case the same words receive the same construction in the case of a residue, as in that of a mere legacy. Addison v. Bush, 14 Beav. 459.

A testator directed that the interest of his estate should be divided half-yearly between four of his sons, and at the decease of either without lawful issue, such share to revert to the remainder then living, or their child or children:—Held, that each of the four sons took an absolute interest in his share, subject to be divested in case of his dying without leaving issue; and that there was no gift by implication to the children of any who might die leaving issue. Dowling v. Dowling, L. R. 1 Ch. 612; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 720; 15 L. T. 152; 14 W. R. 1003.

Devise of lands of gavelkind tenure to trustees, upon trust to sell a competent part for the payment of debts, and subject thereto upon trust for P. M. for life, and after his decease for the first son of P. M. for life, and after his decease for the first son of such first son and the heirs male of his body, and in default of such issue for every other son of P. M. successively, for the like interests and limitations; and in default of issue of the body of P. M., or in case of his not leaving any at his decease, for T. M. for life, and after his decease for T. G. M., the eldest son of T. M., for life, and after his decease for the first son of T. M., and the heirs male of his body, and in default of issue of the body of the said T. G. M. for every other son of T. M., successively, for the like estates and interests; and on failure of all such issue of the body of T. M., upon trust for him, his heirs and assigns, for ever; provided that if P. M., or T. M., or any of their issue, should become entitled to the Jodrell estate, then the trustees should stand seised of the devised premises, upon trust for the next person entitled thereto under his will, as if the person so succeeding to the Jodrell estate were dead. T. M. died after the date of the will, and the testator by a codicil declared that his trustees should stand seised of the devised estates upon trust for his wife for her life, and from and after her decease upon the trusts declared by his will, subject to the declaration therein contained with reference to the Jodrell estate:—Held, that P. M. took an estate for her life only; that T. G. M. took an estate for life in remainder after the life estate of P. M., contingent on P. M. not leaving any issue at his decease, and determinable on his becoming entitled to the Jodrell estate; that the eldest son of T. G. M. took a contingent remainder in tail, after the determination of the life estate of his father. Monypenny v. Dering, 7 Hare, 568; 14 Jur. 1083.

Gift to Children in Esse or En ventre — Implied Gift to Afterborn Children.] — One devises to his son then living, and if he dies under twenty-one, and testator's wife shall be enceinte at his death with other child or children, then to such at twenty-one; but if no such, then over to his nephews. Two children were born after the will, in the lifetime of the testator:—Held, to take under the devise. White v. Barber, Ambl. 701.

A bequest in favour of the testator's two children, then born (by name), and the child "of which his wife was then enceinte":—Held, on the context, to include, besides the above three, a fourth child, born three years after the date of the will. A testator in 1831 devised his copyhold messuages to trustees, upon trust to permit his wife to occupy one of them during the minority of his youngest child, and to apply the rents of the others to the maintenance, &c., of his children, Thomas and John, "and the children or child of which his wife was then enceinte" during minority, making thereout a provision for his wife. The testator then provided for the advancement of his "said children," the division of the messuages among them at twenty-one, and for the benefit of survivorship among them. He also bequeathed his personal estate on the like trusts in favour of his "said children," and in all these cases he added the words "as well the children or child of which my wife is so enceinte as those already born"; but in several instances he simply used the words "said children," and in one instance omitted "said." In 1847 the testator made a codicil, disposing of freeholds and copyholds acquired since the date of the will on the same trusts, and confirming the will. The child of which the wife was enceinte was afterwards born, and subsequently, in 1835, a fourth child was born:—Held, that the fourth child was entitled to a share. Goodfellow v. Goodfellow, 2 Beav. 360; 18 Beav. 356.

Implication from Gift of Land to A. for Life, Remainder to Children without Words of Limitation, and in Default over.]—By will made before 1838, a testatrix, as to the estates wherewith it had pleased God to bless her, gave, devised, and disposed thereof in manner following, that was to say:—First, she gave and devised to A. and B., and their heirs, certain specified hereditaments of gavelkind tenure (not using the word "estate"), to hold the several premises, with their appurtenances, until A. and B., their heirs and assigns, to and for the several uses, estates, intents and purposes thereinafter expressed, limited, and declared of and concerning the same (that was to say), to the use of her grandson S. for his life, and from and after the determination of that estate, to the use and behoof of A. and B., and their heirs during the life of S., in trust to preserve the contingent uses and remainders thereinafter limited; and from and immediately after the decease of S., to the use of all and every of the child and children, if more than one, of his body lawfully begotten or to be begotten (without any words of inheritance), but if he should die without leaving such issue, then to the use and behoof of her grandson C. for his life. Then there were trusts to preserve contingent uses and remainders, and then the property was to go to the children of C. in precisely the same terms, without any words of inheritance; but if C. should die without leaving such issue, then to the use and behoof of the testatrix's three granddaughters D., E., and F., their heirs and assigns for ever, as tenants in common. These dispositions were followed by a devise of other lands to A. and B., to uses in favour first of C. and his children, and then of S. and his children in precisely the same terms mutatis mutandis. But beyond what is stated, there was no devise of real estate in the will. S. died leaving children who survived him, but there was no child either of S. or C. at the date of the will or of the testatrix's death:—Held, that the children of S. took only life estates in joint tenancy in the specified hereditaments, and that subject to such life estates the beneficial inheritance descended as undisposed of to the testatrix's gavelkind heirs, the gifts over to C. and his children, and to D., E., and F., their heirs and assigns, having failed by reason of S.'s death, leaving children. Pollard, In re, 2 N. R. 404; 3 De G. J. & S. 541; 32 L. J., Ch. 657; 8 L. T. 710; 11 W. R. 1083.

One of S.'s children mortgaged his interest in the property:—Held, that thereby the joint tenancy so far as it affected that share was severed, and the intestacy as to it after his death was accelerated. Ib.

—— From Life Interest with Power of Appointment — Where Life Interest lapses.]—A testator left 2,000*l.* to E., for her sole and separate use, free from the control of her husband, "and to be appropriated by her to and amongst her children in such shares as she shall think proper." E. having predeceased the testator, leaving children:—Held, that the legacy did not lapse, and that there was an implied gift of the capital sum to E.'s children. Haly's Trusts, In re, 23 L. R., Ir. 130—C. A.

—— Where Power released.]—Where a testator by his will gives his wife a life interest in certain property, and a power of appointing such property among a class, and subsequently makes her residuary legatee, the residuary gift is not such a gift over as will prevent the court from implying from the power a gift to the class, to take effect, even if no appointment is made by the wife:—Held, in such a case, upon the construction of the particular will, that the wife did not on releasing her life interest become absolutely entitled to the property which she had power to appoint. Bull v. Vardy (1 Ves. 270) distinguished. Brierley, In re, Brierley v. Brierley, 12 R. 55; 43 W. R. 36—C. A.

Executory Trust for Settlement on Daughter, her Husband and Children—Gift over shewing Intention to include Children of Future Marriage—Second Husband entitled to Life Interest.]—A testator bequeathed his personal estate upon trusts for his children equally, and directed that in case his daughter, M. A., or any future-born daughter, should marry during minority with, or after minority without, such consent as therein mentioned, the share of such daughter or daughters so marrying should be assigned to trustees in settlement "upon such respective marriages" for the benefit of such daughter or daughters so marrying for life, "and after her or their deceases for the use of her or their intended husband or husbands for his or their life or lives, and after their decease respectively," for the children of "such marriage or respective marriages," with a gift over in the event of a daughter dying "without leaving any issue her surviving." M. A., the only daughter of the testator, was twice married. On her first marriage, she being then an infant, a settlement of her share was made on herself, husband and children, containing no provisions in favour of the husband or children of a future marriage. On her second marriage a settlement of her share was made whereby a life interest was limited to her second husband in the event of his surviving her, which happened. She subsequently died without leaving issue her surviving:—Held, that the executory trust contained in the will authorised a settlement of a daughter's share on her for life with remainder to any husband she might leave for his life; and that the second husband of M. A. was accordingly entitled to a life interest in her share. Nash, In re, Nash v. Allen, 58 L. J., Ch. 754; 42 Ch. D. 54; 61 L. T. 193; 37 W. R. 646.

Implication of Gifts to Survivors.]—A bequest of the interest of the residue to the use of "A. and his wife for their lives," with remainder over :—Held, that the wife, who survived her husband, was entitled during their joint lives and the life of the survivor. Moffatt v. Burnie, 18 Beav. 211 ; 23 L. J., Ch. 591 ; 18 Jur. 32 ; 2 W. R. 83.

A testator gave a fund to trustees upon trust to pay the interest thereof unto and between B. and C. during their respective lives in equal shares ; and after the decease of B. and C. upon trust to pay, assign, and transfer the fund unto and between the children of B. and C. And if there should be no child or children of B. and C. living at the time of the death of C., then upon trust for other parties. B. died, leaving children :—Held, that C. took during his life the whole of the produce of the trust fund, and that at his death the principal was distributable among the children of B. and C. who should survive C. Pearce v. Edmeades, 3 Y. & C. 246 ; 8 L. J. Ex. Eq. 61 ; 3 Jur. 245.

Legacies are given to A., B., & C., to be paid at their respective marriages, and if any of them die, her legacy to go to the survivors. One of them dies unmarried. The survivors shall not receive her legacy before their respective marriages. Moore v. Godfrey, 2 Vern. 620.

A testator directed an annuity to be purchased for the life of his two sisters, to be equally divided between them : — Held, that the annuity was only to continue during the joint lives of the two sisters. Grant v. Winbolt, 23 L. J., Ch. 282 ; 2 W. R. 151.

The testator gave an annuity to A. for life, and the income of the residue to B. and C. "during their lives as tenants in common." The gift over to their respective children was only after the deaths of A., B., and C. ; and there was a provision for intermediate maintenance ; it was only on a contingent event, which never happened. B. died :—Held, that C. was not, by implication or otherwise, entitled to more than half of the income for life. Drakeley's Estate, In re, 19 Beav. 395 ; 2 W. R. 613.

Devise and bequest to A., and after her decease, leaving any child or children her surviving who should attain twenty-one, to pay her share "to her eldest child, his executors, administrators, and assigns," with a gift over in default of such child :—Held, that A.'s eldest child, who died in A.'s life, did not take, but that the second child, who survived her mother, was entitled. Stevens v. Pyle, 30 Beav. 284.

A gift of income to persons by name, though accompanied by words of severance, followed by a gift over after the death of the same persons, naming them, is clear evidence of intention that the subject of the gift should pass as a whole. Draycott v. Wood, 8 L. T. 304 ; 2 N. R. 55.

Where it is impossible to ascertain the donees nominatim, the same rule holds as to a gift to persons as a class. Therefore, in construing such a gift, the court will prefer to imply a clause of accruer, rather than to hold it as in joint tenancy, the latter being liable to severance, and therefore less proper to carry out the intention. Ib.

The words "during their joint and natural lives" in a settlement held to mean "during their lives and the life of each of them." Smith v. Oakes, 14 Sim. 122.

Bequest of the interest of the residuary personalty to the testator's wife for life, and from and after her death to B. D. for life, and from and after the death of the survivor of them the capital to W. absolutely, subject to the payment to A., B., and C. of 1,000*l.* each, which the testator gave to them, to be paid to each of them at the end of twelve months next after the decease of the survivor of his said wife and B. D. ; provided that if either of the said A., B., and C. should die "in the lifetime of my said wife and my said brother B. D." :—Held, that A.'s personal representative was entitled to her legacy, and that the gift over had not taken effect. Day v. Day, Kay, 703 ; 18 Jur. 1013 ; 2 W. R. 700.

Devise of 100*l.* to A. and B., viz., 50*l.* to A. and 50*l.* to B., payable at such a time, and if either die before the time then the 100*l.* to the survivor. The whole 100*l.* decreed to the survivor, notwithstanding the severing clause, which holds only in case both live to the time of payment. Scoulding v. Green, Pre. Ch. 37.

Bequest of personal estate, after the death of the tenant for life, in trust to pay equally between A. and B. ; but if "neither" should be then living to C. A. died in the lifetime of the testatrix. B. survived the tenant for life, and claimed the whole, either as surviving joint tenant, or under a gift to her by implication. The court rejected such claim, and :—Held, that the moiety intended for A. had lapsed, and belonged to the next of kin of the testatrix. Baxter v. Losh, 14 Beav. 612 ; 21 L. J., Ch. 55.

Bequest of personalty to trustees, in trust to pay the income to A. and B. for their lives, with provisions for the maintenance of their children, if any, and against alienation ; and after the decease and failure of issue of A. and B., the trustees were to continue the payments to any husband A. and B. might respectively have, during the life of such husband ; and after the decease of the respective husbands of the said A. and B., then the testatrix gave the whole of the said funds over to C. A. died without leaving a husband or issue :—Held, that B. did not take the whole for her life, but that C. took A.'s share immediately on her decease. Ewington v. Fenn, 16 Jur. 398.

A testator gave his residuary estate upon trust, in case he left no child him surviving, for his wife for life, if she should so long continue his widow : but if she should marry again to pay one-half of the dividends, and after her death to pay the whole to his brother and sister during their joint lives, equally to be divided, and after the decease of either of them the brother and sister to pay the same wholly to the survivor for life, and after the decease of "every of them," his wife, brother, and sister, he declared that the trust fund and the dividends were to be held in trust for the children of the brother :—Held, that a moiety of the income accruing due after the second marriage of the widow, and between the death of the survivor of the brother and sister, and that of the widow (who survived them), neither belonged to the widow nor was undisposed of, but belonged to the brother's only child. Brown v. Jarvis, 2 De G. F. & J. 168 ; 29 L. J., Ch. 595 ; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 789 ; 8 W. R. 644. And see Swan v. Holmes, 19 Beav. 471.

Bequest of a moiety of a residue to A. for life, and of the other moiety to B. for life, "and from and immediately after the decease of A. and B." to stand possessed "of all my personal estate" in trust for eight grandchildren. A. died, and B.

was living :—Held, that the moiety enjoyed by A. became immediately divisible amongst the grandchildren. Sarel v. Sarel, 23 Beav. 87.

A testator gives an annuity of 200*l.* to S. A. H. for life, and at her death 100*l.* of the same to be continued to such of her daughters as remained single during their lives, at the termination of which the same should revert to his children, their executors, administrators, and assigns. The annuity is paid to S. A. H., and on her death 100*l.* continued to her three unmarried daughters. One dies; and on the question whether the annuity of 100*l.* survived :—Held, that it did. Smyth v. Smyth, 3 W. R. 189.

J., referring to the fact that he possessed certain stock, requested payment to his brother of a net annual annuity, the residue to his sister, also the net interest or other stock to E. J.; each of the above three annuities to be enjoyed for their lives, with benefit of survivorship; and at the dissolution of those three persons, over absolutely. The testator then directed an accumulation to make up 100*l.* to pay the following annuities: to E. O. 20*l.* per annum, to C. T. 20*l.* per annum, to M. E. 20*l.* per annum, to T. T. 20*l.* per annum; the benefit of survivorship in these four annuities to devolve to E. O.; but in case of her not surviving, the benefit of survivorship to be derived by the three first-named legatees; and on the demise of all the annuitants, over as before. E. O. survived T. T. and died, and on the question whether her representatives were entitled to the two annuities to her and T. T. :—Held, that they were not, and that the annuities, being undisposed of, went to the next of kin. Jernegan v. Baxter, 2 W. R. 481.

A testator devises his property to be invested in the funds, and gives 100*l.* a year out of the interest to be paid yearly to the order of A., and the remainder of the interest to B. and C., during their lives, share and share alike; at the death of either, her share to go to A.; and then orders, that at the death of both B. and C. the property shall be drawn out of the funds, and remitted to a corporation to be applied to charitable purposes; the testator dies; then B. dies; and then A. :—Held, that A.'s representative was entitled to the 100*l.* a year, and B.'s moiety of the residue of the interest during the life of C. Booth v. Garraway, 2 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 183.

B. bequeathed to his five daughters, naming them, 12,500*l.*, chargeable on his real and personal estate, the interest to be paid to them in equal shares during their lives, the principal to be invested for them or the survivors or survivor of them for their maintenance, to be free from the debts and control of their husbands, "the principal, after their deaths, in equal parts, to their surviving children, as they arrive at the age of twenty-one"; and he gave to his trustees the residue of his property. Two of the daughters died, one leaving two children :—Held, that the principal was to remain in its integrity until the death of the survivor of the five daughters, and on the death of such survivor the fund to be divided amongst the persons described as "surviving children," but that the time had not arrived to decide who were meant by those words. Minton v. Minton, 4 L. T. 696; 9 W. R. 586.

A. gave his residue to his three children "for their natural lives, viz., they to have the interest during their natural lives, and if any die without leaving issue, in that case to return again for the benefit of his grandchildren" :—Held, that the three children took during their joint lives and the life of the survivors and survivor. Neighbour v. Thurlow, 28 Beav. 33.

J. by his will gave to his daughters N. and S. the interest of 2,000*l.* consols, to be paid to them in equal shares for and during the term of their natural lives. By a codicil thereto the testator declared it to be his will, that after the decease of his daughters N. or S. the property for which they were to receive during their lives the interest, which was thereby to be for their sole and separate use, independent of any connections they might form, should become the joint property of the lawful heirs of his four children in equal shares :—Held, that each of the daughters N. and S. took the income of a moiety of 2,000*l.* for her life, and that on the death of one her moiety went over at once to the heirs of the children of the testator. The share of the heirs of the surviving daughter was carried to a separate account for such person as should be her heir at her death. Hensley v. Wills, 14 L. T. 162; 14 W. R. 422.

A testator gave to Mrs. R. and M. P. "each a moiety of the interest" of certain invested moneys, and also gave to Mrs. R. and M. P. "each a moiety of the rents" of his freehold estate, "and at the death of the last survivor" of them directed the investments and property to be sold, and the proceeds to be equally divided between his surviving nephews and nieces :—Held, that on the death of M. P. there was an intestacy as to one moiety of the interest and rents during the life of Mrs. R. Rownd v. Pickett, 47 L. J., Ch. 631; 26 W. R. 493.

A. bequeathed one-half of the interest of a sum to A. and B., and the other half to C. and D., during their natural lives, and after the death of A., B., C., and D. he bequeathed the principal to E., and he appointed residuary legatees. A. died, and then B., leaving C. and D. surviving :—Held, that no part of the principal or interest went to E. during the life of C. and D.; held, also, that the executors of B., and not the residuary legatees, were entitled to the interest of one-half during the lives of C. and D. Gray v. Robinson, 11 Ir. Ch. R. 295. See also Alt v. Gregory, and other cases ante, cols. 1378 to 1383.

Implication of Gift by Recital.]—If a testator recites that he has, in the first part of his will, given such an estate to A., that is a sufficient devise. Yates v. Thomson, 3 Cl. & F. 572.

Devise to the heir, after death of devisor's wife, a necessary implication that the wife should take for life; but no implication for her upon such a devise of another man's estate through the medium of election. No devise by implication from the mere recital of an erroneous conception of right. Dashwood v. Peyton, 18 Ves. 27; 11 R. R. 145.

Devise of lands, "which he has before given to A.," over to B. on a given event, is a devise by implication to A. Bibin v. Walker, Ambl. 661.

A. by will, taking notice that his natural son J. had disobliged him, declared thus: "I do hereby resolve not to give him more than 20*l.* per annum for life"; and he gave his estate to his legitimate son. Per cur., the words do not amount to a devise, and the bastard shall take nothing. Holder v. Holder, Vin. Abr. tit. Devise, (D. B.) pl. 8.

By a codicil a testator gave to A. B. "500*l.* in addition to 1,500*l*. which he had before bequeathed to him." The testator had previously bequeathed two legacies only of 500*l*. and 500*l*. each :—Held, that by implication the legatee was entitled to 2,000*l*. Jordan v. Fortescue, 10 Beav. 259 ; 16 L. J., Ch. 332 ; 11 Jur. 549.

A testator devised all his real estate whatsoever and wheresoever to trustees upon certain trusts. He then recited that he left nothing to his nephews and nieces, because they would become entitled to property held by him under their grandfather's will upon his (the testator's) death without issue. He then bequeathed all his residuary personal estate. The testator was mistaken in supposing that the property referred to by him would devolve upon his nephews and nieces upon his death, it having descended upon the testator himself as the heir-at-law of his father :—Held, that under the circumstances he died intestate in respect to it. Circuitt v. Perry, 23 Beav. 275 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1157.

A testator gives all the residue of his property to his executors on trust for the sole use and benefit of his daughter L. until she shall attain twenty-five ; and if she marries before that age, for the sole and separate use of L. and her husband ; but if she remains single or is a widow at twenty-five, she shall have power of disposing of the whole property by will. Should she die before twenty-five unmarried, or after that age intestate, then over. By a codicil the testator takes notice that he has left in trust all his property for the sole use and benefit of his daughter, and substitutes other parties for the executors before appointed. The testator left L. surviving, who had attained twenty-five, and was unmarried. On the question what estate L. took :—Held, that she took absolutely. Grover v. Raper, 5 W. R. 134.

A testator gave by will 3,000*l*. upon trust for A. and her children, and after the decease of A. without issue for the children of B. By a codicil of later date he recited that he had by his will given the 3,000*l*. to A. for life, with remainder to her children, and afterwards to B. for life, with remainder to his children ; and revoked the will as to 2,000*l*., part of the 3,000*l*., from and after the devise to A. and her children, and instead of giving the 2,000*l*. to B. and his children, bequeathed the same to C. :—Held, that the erroneous recital in the codicil, that the 3,000*l*. was given to B. for life, did not amount to a gift of an estate in the 1,000*l*., which remained unrevoked. By the will the testator had also given 2,000*l*. to B. for life, with a gift over on insolvency :—Held, that, if the codicil had been read as an implied gift of 1,000*l*. to B. for life, the gift over on insolvency would have attached to the 1,000*l*. as well as to the 2,000*l*. Smith, In re, 2 J. & H. 594.

A testator having devised his "fee-simple and other freehold property," in default of issue of his own, to N. for life, remainder to the sons of N. successively in tail, made a codicil as follows : "Having left in my will my fee estate and personal property to S. M. Nugent in case I had no family, I do not now revoke my bequests to him ; but as I have no children, and have lived very happily with my devoted wife, I will and bequeath to her an annuity of 200*l*. over and above her legal jointure, to be paid her by S. M. N. off my estate as long as she lives" :—Held, that the personal estate was undisposed of. Nugent v. Nugent, 8 Ir. Ch. R. 78.

The testator devised and bequeathed real and personal estate, after payment of debts on trusts (subject to the dower and thirds at common law of his wife), to receive and apply the rents, issues, and profits thereof, or the overplus thereof after deducting the dower and thirds of his said wife and the interest of moneys charged on his said real estate, for the maintenance of his children, and then on trust to sell and divide the moneys among his children :—Held, that this was not by implication a gift of an interest in the estate to the wife. Adams v. Adams, 1 Hare, 537 ; 11 L. J., Ch. 305 ; 6 Jur. 681.

A mere erroneous recital in a codicil of what the testator has given by his will does not operate to create a new gift, or to vary the disposition made by the will. Adams v. Adams (supra) explained. Mackenzie v. Bradbury, 6 N. R. 283 ; 33 Beav. 617 ; 34 L. J., Ch. 627 ; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 650.

Bequest by will of 1,000*l*. to the children of A., of whom W. was one. Recital in a codicil of a bequest of 1,000*l*. to W., with directions as to the time of payment and mode of application :—Held, first, not to create a new legacy ; held, secondly, not to enlarge the interest of W. in the original legacy. Ib.

A testator in his will ratifies a settlement, and recites that an annuity of 200*l*. is thereby secured to his wife, which was not the fact. He then bequeaths her another annuity of 400*l*., "in addition to the said annuity of 200*l*. secured to her by the settlement" :—Held, that this was merely a mistake in the recital, and did not constitute a bequest, in addition to the annuity of 400*l*., of so much as would make up the settled property 200*l*. a year. Ralph v. Watson, 9 L. J., Ch. 328.

Plate excepted by bequest of personal estate to wife, after her decease over, and recited to be hereinafter given to daughter, but not further noticed : undisposed of. Frederick v. Hull, 1 Ves. 396.

An erroneous recital in a will, that the lands of Blackacre (of which the testator was seised in fee farm) were settled on A. at the death of H., does not operate to give a life estate by implication to H. But it is sufficient to take those lands out of a general residuary devise, so that they descend upon the testator's heir-at-law. Harris v. Harris, Ir. R. 3 Eq. 610 ; 17 W. R. 790.

A testator, after bequeathing a farm to his eldest son, added, "I observe by my marriage settlement that the lands of K. and G. M'G. are settled upon him" (the testator's eldest son) "at my wife's death. I, therefore, consider these ample provision for him, and I do, therefore, bar him from any further participation in my property, save only the use or enjoyment of such part or parcel as my wife may in her judgment think fit to allow him during her life, but at her death I do strictly limit him as hereinbefore mentioned." After other devises and bequests, the testator, by the residuary clause, gave all the residue of his property to his wife, with power to apportion it. The lands of G. M'G. were not in fact settled on the testator's eldest son by his marriage settlement, or at all :—Held, that the son took those lands as heir-at-law of the testator, and that the wife did not take in them an estate for life by implication. Ib.

A testator, being entitled to a policy of assurance for 500*l*. on the joint lives of himself and his wife, bequeathed all his personal estate, "save and except the sum of 500*l*. payable at my death under a policy of insurance to my wife, and to which she is absolutely entitled under the said policy," to trustees, upon trust for his wife for life, and for his children after her death :—Held, that the sum of 500*l.* payable under the policy was given by implication to the widow absolutely by the will. Hall v. Lietch, L. R. 9 Eq. 376 ; 23 L. T. 298 ; 18 W. R. 423.

A devise for life contained in a will cannot be enlarged by a recital in a codicil that such devise was in tail. Arnold, In re, 33 Beav. 163 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1186 ; 9 L. T. 530 ; 12 W. R. 4.

Precatory words will not create a case for election, neither will the absence of the execution of a power upon an erroneous impression, stated in the will, that by its non-execution A. (a legatee) will divide the fund equally with B. Langslow v. Langslow, 21 Beav. 552 ; 25 L. J., Ch. 610 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1057.

An erroneous recital in a will as to the effect of a settlement does not put the devisees to their election, whether they will take under the will or the settlement. Box v. Barrett, L. R. 3 Eq. 244 ; 15 W. R. 217.

Under a settlement the four daughters of a testator took equal shares, subject to his life interest. The testator by his will, recited that under the settlement his two daughters, A. and B. would become entitled, and that in making his will he had taken the same into consideration, and had not devised to them so large a share under his will as he otherwise should have done ; he then devised to A. and B. certain estates, and to his two other daughters, C. and D., other estates, of much greater value. The will did not purport to affect the settled property :—Held, that as the will did not purport to make any disposition of the settled property, and was only made under a mistaken impression, C. and D. were not put to their election. Ib.

A widow of a freeman of London who left children and died intestate was entitled to four-ninths of his personal estate, and having by deed assigned over her four-ninths for her separate use in case of marriage, and to such persons as she should appoint, and for want of such appointment then to her children ; the widow intending to marry a second husband, by another deed, to which the husband was a party, in consideration of the intended marriage, and of a settlement made on her by him, recites that if she did not dispose of her four-ninths, the husband would be entitled thereto, and then assigns it over to trustees, in trust for the intended husband, during their joint lives, subject to her control and disposal by writing ; after which she dies without disposing of it. Decreed, the second husband is as a purchaser, and the recital that he would be entitled to it if the wife should not dispose of it was a gift. Poulson v. Wellington, 2 P. Wms. 533.

A testator gave the interest of 2,000*l.* to G., and the residue of his estate to P., and then said "and failing G. and P. without children, one or other of them, the property hereby conveyed to them shall devolve on S." :—Held, that the words "property conveyed to them" did not confer by implication a life estate upon G. in the residue given to P. Pursell v. Elder, 13 L. T. 203.

A testatrix gave the residue of her property to A., and by a codicil reciting that gift, and that as life was uncertain A. might be removed before her, she in such case appointed B. and C. her residuary legatees. The testator made a second codicil as follows : "As the death of Mrs. W. (the mother of B. and C.) has taken place, and as her two children will ultimately become my residuary legatees, the 15*l.* she was to have I give to Mrs. H." :—Held, that A. was entitled to the residue. Vaughan v. Foakes, 1 Keen, 58.

A father bequeathed a legacy of 1,000*l.* to each of his sons. By a codicil he gave to his eldest son a sum of "300*l.* instead of a sum of 500*l.* which I have bequeathed to my other children." The will contained no such bequest to his other children :—Held, that the codicil was insensible, inoperative, and void for uncertainty. Armit v. Hipkins, 28 L. T. 222 ; 21 W. R. 475.

A testator gave to each of his three brothers and six sisters a legacy of 500*l.*, and other legacies to other relations of his, which, with the preceding legacies to his brothers and sisters, amounted to 6,100*l.* He then gave "the remainder of his property to his wife absolutely, except 4,100*l.*, of which she was only to have the use during her life, and which he wished to be divided among his relations to whom he had left legacies in the fore part of his will, in proportion to the legacies left above, which would just make their legacies double the first bequest" :—Held, that although there had been a mistake by the testator in computing the amount of the legacies given by him in the former part of his will, there was no such evidence of a clear intention on his part to double the amount of the preceding legacies as would justify the court in holding that the words "four thousand one hundred pounds" ought to be read "six thousand one hundred pounds." Thompson v. Whitelock, 28 L. J., Ch. 793 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 991 ; 7 W. R. 625.

The mere misrecital of a will by a codicil is inoperative, and will not modify the dispositions of the will ; but an erroneous recital of a will, coupled with or followed by a clear indication of the testator's intention to make some modified or different disposition, inconsistent with the dispositions of the will, is operative to modify or alter the earlier gifts. A testator by his will gave to his daughter (in events which happened) an estate tail in his real property, and an absolute estate in his personal property. By a codicil, after reciting that his daughter would take an estate for life in his property, with remainder to her issue, he directed that the life estate should be for her separate use, that she should have a power of appointing a life estate to any husband who should survive her, and that if she should have more than one son, and her eldest son should inherit property from other sources of a certain value, then her second son should succeed to the property given by the will, with certain gifts over :—Held, that the estates given by the will were modified by the codicil, and that the daughter was entitled to a life estate only in the real and personal property of the testator, with remainder by implication to her eldest son absolutely, subject to the appointment by her of a life estate in favour of a husband, and to a shifting use in favour of a second son. Margitson, In re, Haggard v. Haggard, 48 L. T. 172 ; 31 W. R. 257—C. A.

Mistake in the computation of a legacy rectified according to the intention, though contrary to the words. Milner v. Milner, 1 Ves. Sen. 106.

A testator gives to his wife an annuity of 100*l.* and the sum of 1,000*l.*, which he considers will, with the property which she is entitled to after his death, make up an income of 2,500*l*. a year; in fact, those gifts make up her income only to 1,800*l*. a year. She is entitled to have the deficiency supplied out of his residuary estate. Trevor v. Trevor, 5 Russ. 24; 6 L. J. (o.s) Ch. 182; 29 R. R. 6.

A testatrix gave to A. an annuity of 40*l*., contingent on a certain event. She then gave A. a legacy of 30*l*. By a codicil she said, "And I increase the immediate annuity of 30*l*. left by my will to" A., "to an annuity of 50*l*." :—Held, that he took an annuity of 50*l*. in addition to the contingent annuity of 40*l*. Ives v. Dodgson, 39 L. J., Ch. 693; L. R. 9 Eq. 401; 23 L. T. 215.

A father directed his debts to be paid, "including a debt of 300*l*. owing from me to my daughter." He owed his daughter 150*l*. only :—Held, that she was not entitled to receive more than the 150*l*. Wilson v. Morley, 46 L. J., Ch. 790; 5 Ch. D. 776; 25 W. R. 690.

A will contained a bequest of 1,000*l*. on trusts, and of 5,000*l*. on trusts, and another bequest on trusts in which no sum was mentioned, but the language was continuous, and no actual blank was left. In another part of the will there was power to invest the said sum of 5,000*l*., and the said two sums of 1,000*l*. :—Held, that the latter clause was evidence that the testator intended a bequest of 1,000*l*. in the bequest in which no sum was named. Edmunds v. Waugh, 4 Drew. 275; 6 W. R. 589.

A testator, after reciting inaccurately that his wife was entitled for life to 39,000*l*. settled on his marriage, which he stated would, at 4 per cent., yield 1,560*l*., directed his trustees to add an annuity of 440*l*. to raise his wife's jointure to 2,000*l*. :—Held, that the widow was entitled to have her annuity made up to 2,000*l*. at all events. Ouseley v. Anstruther, 10 Beav. 459.

Bequest of 1,000*l*. to A., the interest of 2,000*l*. to B., and at his death to his children, the sum of 1,000*l*. to D., the sum of 1,000*l*. to B., in addition to 1,000*l*. before mentioned :— Held, that the former legacy to B. was of pounds sterling, and that the gift to his children was of an absolute interest in capital. Mann v. Fuller, Kay, 624; 2 Eq. R. 1085; 23 L. J., Ch. 543; 2 W. R. 510.

On construction of will :—Held, that the capital of the residue passed by implication, though the interest and dividends only were expressly given. Phillips v. Chamberlaine, 4 Ves. 51.

A sum of 20,000*l*. was bequeathed by a testator to A., his wife, who was also his residuary legatee, and after her death to B., wife of C., for life, for her sole and separate use, and after her death upon certain trusts for the benefit of their children (no interest being given to C.). A. by her will, after three legacies of 100*l*. each absolutely, gave to C. and his wife "the same amount and on the same trusts and conditions as are named in my late husband's will to C." One moiety of her residuary personal estate was also directed to be given to B. and C. and their children, "on the same trusts as before alluded to" :—Held, that the words "same amount" did not refer to the preceding gifts of 100*l*., and that notwithstanding the mistaken reference to the testator's will as containing any gift to C., the 20,000*l*. passed by A.'s will on the same trusts as were contained in the testator's will. Stephens v. Powys, 1 De G. & J. 24.

Legacies out of a specific fund, given over in case of lapse or death of the legatees, before the fund shall be realised, not extended by a subsequent recital of the fund as "willed to" those legatees over. The surplus therefore passed under the residuary clause. Smith v. Fitzgerald, 3 V. & B. 2; 13 R. R. 129.

A testator gave by will 3,000*l*. upon trust for A. and her children, and after the decease of A. without issue for the children of B. By a codicil of later date he recited that he had by his will given the 3,000*l*. to A. for life, with remainder to her children; and afterwards to B. for life, with remainder to his children; and revoked the will as to 2,000*l*., part of the 3,000*l*., from and after the devise to A. and her children, and instead of giving the 2,000*l*. to B. and his children, bequeathed the same to C. :—Held, that the erroneous recital in the codicil, that the 3,000*l*. was given to B. for life, did not amount to a gift of a life estate in the 1,000*l*., which remained unrevoked. By the will the testator had also given 2,000*l*. to B. for life, with a gift over on insolvency :—Held, that if the codicil had been read as an implied gift of 1,000*l*. to B. for life, the gift over on insolvency would have attached to the 1,000*l*. as well as to the 2,000*l*. Smith, In re, 2 J. & H. 594.

A testatrix directed a sum which she said she owed to A. and B. on her promissory note, and her other debts, to be paid. She directed the residue of her estate to be applied towards establishing a school in connection with a certain chapel for the time being, and "to pay the same over to the treasurer for the time being of such school, now or hereafter to be built." The testatrix did not in fact owe the money to A. and B. : —Held, whether there was a valid debt or not on the promissory note to A. and B. was a question of law; but if there was no debt, it was good as a legacy. Longstaff v. Rennison, 1 Drew. 28; 21 L. J., Ch. 622; 16 Jur. 559.

Equitable Estate whether Co-extensive with Legal Estate.]—Devise to trustees and their heirs, "upon trust for the use and benefit of" A., B. and C. (without words of limitation) :—Held, that A., B. and C. took in fee. Devise to trustees in fee, upon trust for the use and benefit of A., B. and C., the rents to be paid for their maintenance and education, "or to the survivors or survivor of them, share and share alike" : —Held, that they took equitable estates in fee as joint tenants. Moore v. Cleghorn, 10 Beav. 423. Affirmed 17 L. J., Ch. 400; 12 Jur. 591.

A testatrix devised to trustees and their heirs her copyhold dwelling-house, garden, and ground, together with the furniture and effects therein; and also the ten cottages and two new cottages built by her, with their appurtenances at L., upon trust to pay the rents of the said hereditaments to her niece S. S., the wife of G. S., or to permit and suffer her to use and occupy the said hereditaments during her life, to the intent that the same hereditaments and the rents, issues, and profits thereof might be for her separate use; and after her decease to G. S. for his life, and after his decease to stand possessed of the same hereditaments in trust for such of the testatrix's nephews and nieces, or grandnephews and grandnieces, as S. S. should appoint; and in default of appointment upon trust to sell and dispose of the said hereditaments and premises, the produce of such sale to constitute part of her residuary personal estate :—Held, that the furniture and effects did not pass to S. S., but belonged to the residuary legatees. Stubbs v. Sargon, 2 Keen, 255 ; 6 L. J., Ch. 254. Affirmed 3 Myl. & Cr. 507 ; 7 L. J., Ch. 95 ; 2 Jur. 150.

A. by his will devised all his real and personal estate to trustees upon trust as to the real estate, to repair and let the same, &c., and upon further trust, notwithstanding any limitation of uses or trusts thereinbefore mentioned, at their discretion to sell and convey the same ; and as to the money to arise upon such sales, upon trust to add the same to his personal estate, to constitute a part thereof, and directed his trustees, when J. C. should arrive at the age of twenty-four years, to convey, assign, &c., to J. C. all the legal estate and interest in all his freehold, copyhold, and leasehold messuages, lands, &c., and all other his real and personal estate and effects not thereinbefore devised and bequeathed, &c. :—Held, that J. C. took the produce of the mixed fund of the real and personal estate of testator, and that rents of real estate till J. C. attained twenty-four did not result to heir-at-law of testator as undisposed of, but passed to J. C. as part of fund given in trust. Ackers v. Phipps, 9 Bligh (N.S.) 430 ; 3 Cl. & F. 655.

A testator gave real and personal estate to his daughter A. and to two other persons, upon trust to permit A. to receive the rents and interest for life for her separate use, and after her decease in trust to convey to her heirs, executors, &c. ; but in case A. should marry and have no children, then the property to belong to D. ; or in case of his decease before A., then to his children :—Held, that A. took an absolute equitable estate, with an executory gift over to D. and his children ; and D. having died in the lifetime of A., leaving no children :—Held, that A. was absolutely entitled to the property. Jackson v. Noble, 2 Keen, 590 ; 7 L. J., Ch. 133 ; 2 Jur. 251.

Conveyance of real estate to a trustee in fee in trust for one for life, and afterwards to her children equally. There being no limitation to their heirs :—Held, that the children took for life. Holliday v. Overton, 14 Beav. 467 ; 21 L. J., Ch. 769 ; 16 Jur. 346.

A testator gave all his real and personal estate in trust to divide the income, rents, interest, and profits equally amongst his children by name, or such other as he might have at his death, or en ventre sa mère, providing as to the payment to daughters half-yearly, and to their separate use, and the issue of any dying in his lifetime leaving issue, if not, their shares to the survivors ; and in case any of his children and their issues should die "in the lifetime of any husband or wife with whom his children" should have intermarried, he gave their shares to his then surviving children, and the issue of such as should be then dead, it being his will that none of his sons' wives or daughters' husbands "should become heirs to their children's property," and that none of his children should sell any part of his estates. Some of the testator's children having died without issue in his lifetime :—Held, that each of the surviving children took the share of his real property, not for life only, but in fee, and of his personalty absolutely. Hodson v. Ball, 14 Sim. 558 ; 9 Jur. 407.

Real estates were limited in remainder in trust for the next of kin of a married woman, as if she had not been married :—Held, that the next of kin took life estates only. Lucas v. Brandreth, 28 Beav. 273 ; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 945.

A testator, by will in 1826, gave real and personal estate to trustees in fee, in trust for his four nieces, M., B., S., and J., for their respective lives, as tenants in common ; and on the death of any of them, then in trust as to the share of her so dying, to stand possessed of and interested in such share for the child or children of such of them as should have died ; and if any of them should die without issue, then he directed the share or shares of her or them so dying to go to the survivor or survivors of them and their heirs, and to be conveyed to them and their heirs accordingly. B. and J. died leaving children. M. died a spinster. S. was a spinster and over sixty :—Held, first, that the equitable fee was given to the children of the nieces, and secondly, that, seeing that S. was past the age of child-bearing, she was entitled to her own one-fourth share in fee, under the gift over to the survivor of the nieces. Maden v. Taylor, 45 L. J., Ch. 569.

A testator devised freehold property to trustees, their executors and assigns, in trust as to three freehold houses for the sole benefit of his two daughters E. and S., either to live in or let for their joint benefit ; and should either of his daughters die and leave no children or child, then either one of the houses, at the option of the survivor, to be sold, and the produce divided between the survivor and such of the testator's sons as should be living ; but if either of his daughters should marry and have a child or children, then such child or children to have the mother's share of the rents and profits of the three houses after the mother's decease. On the death of one daughter without children one of the houses was sold, according to the direction in the will. The other daughter then died without children :—Held, that the gift for the sole benefit of the two daughters of the testator gave them an estate commensurate with the estate in fee given to the trustees, and made them joint tenants in fee subject to executory gifts over in the event of their dying leaving issue ; and that, this event not having happened, the joint tenancy in fee was unaffected, and the devisee of the survivor was entitled to the two unsold houses. Yarrow v. Knightley, 47 L. J., Ch. 874 ; 8 Ch. D. 736 ; 39 L. T. 238 ; 26 W. R. 704—C. A.

A testator being seised of lands under leases for lives renewable for ever, in 1824 devised all his freehold leases and interest whatsoever to trustees, and the heirs of the survivor of them, in trust, after payment of the head rents, to apply the clear yearly rents to and amongst his three daughters during their respective lives, in equal shares and proportions, for their sole and separate use ; and in case any or either of his daughters should happen to die leaving lawful issue, then in trust, as to the share and proportion of such daughter so dying, to and for the use of such issue as she should by deed or will appoint, and in default of such appointment to the use of such issue equally, share and share alike ; and if any of his daughters died without issue, he directed that her share of the rents should go to and be paid to the survivors or survivor of them for the increase of her and their respective shares, to their separate use, and go to their lawful issue, subject to the like power of appointment among such issue ; and in case of the death of all his daughters without leaving lawful issue, then in trust to pay the rents to his nephew during his life; and after the death of his nephew, in case he should happen to die leaving lawful issue, in trust, as to one-half of his freehold and leasehold interests, to the use of the children of his sister in equal shares, and to their lawful issue; and in case his nephew should happen to die without issue, then, as to the whole of his freehold and leasehold interests, to the use of the said children of his sister in equal shares, and to their lawful issue; and in case they should be then dead, then, as to the whole, in trust for the issue of his nephew; and in case of the deaths of his nephew and the children of his sister without issue, in trust to assign over the freehold and leasehold interests to his own right heirs; and a power was given to the trustees to lease from time to time as they should remain seised and possessed by virtue of the trusts in the will contained, with the consent of the person or persons then entitled:—Held, first, that the legal estate was devised to the trustees during the existence of the entire series of limitations, and, secondly, that the daughters of the testator took equitable estates in quasi tail in their respective shares. Sherwin v. Kenny, 16 Ir. Ch. R. 138.

A. devised his real and personal estate to trustees and their heirs, to sell, if expedient, and invest in consols, and permit his wife, durante viduitate, to receive the rents and dividends, and from and after her death or second marriage to divide the residue of his estate and effects between his children [without words of inheritance]:—Held, that (subject to the wife's interest) the children took the real estate absolutely. Tatham v. Vernon, 29 Beav. 604; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 815; 4 L. T. 531; 9 W. R. 822. See also Pollard, In re, supra, col. 1429.

Deduction from Interest of Remainderman implied from Direction as to Prior Life Interest.]—A testator bequeathed to A. a share of the income of his personal estate, and directed that after A.'s death the share to which he would if then living be entitled should be paid to his wife E. In a subsequent part of the will the testator, after reciting that A. was indebted to him for a sum advanced to him, directed that the sum advanced should be retained by his executors out of the share of A. in the income. A. having survived the testator and died before the sum was fully paid off:—Held, that the executors were to retain the balance out of the income bequeathed to E. Knight v. Sterry, 18 Jur. 928.

Substituted Legacies when subject to Limitations of Original Legacies.]—A legacy substituted for another shall be raised out of the same fund, and subject to the same conditions. Testator created a term for debts and legacies, and gave 1,000*l.* to his niece, to be paid immediately after his decease if she should be then married; if not, the interest of the said legacy to be paid her for life, to be calculated and paid to the day of her death or marriage; if she should die unmarried, the legacy to lapse for the benefit of the estate; and by codicil he gave her 200*l.* in addition to what he had given her by the will:—Held, that the additional legacy is to be raised out of the same fund, and subject to the same conditions; and the legatee having married after the testator's death, is entitled. Crowder v. Clowes, 2 Ves. 449.

A bequest by a codicil of 1,000*l.*, instead of 1,500*l.* given by the will, is subject to the same limitations and restrictions which affected the 1,500*l.* Prescott v. Edmunds, 4 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 111.

A testatrix, by her will, dated in 1832, directed the trustees of a fund over which she had a power of appointment to hold 1,000*l.*, part thereof, on trust for her daughter E. for her separate use for life, with remainder to her husband, with remainder to her children, and, in default of children, as therein mentioned, among the other children of the testatrix. She then gave other similar portions (1,000*l.* each) of the same fund on similar trusts for her two other married daughters, H. and F., and their husbands and families. Afterwards, H. and her husband becoming involved, the testatrix advanced them 1,000*l.* out of her own moneys, taking their joint receipt for the same, and an acknowledgment that it was in discharge of the above legacy. Afterwards, by a codicil referring to the will, and to this payment and acknowledgment, the testatrix desired the acknowledgment to be cancelled; and then expressing a fear of a deficiency of the trust fund, directed 1,000*l.* to be paid to F. and 1,000*l.* to E., without any express directions as to the settlement of these sums:—Held, that the sums given to E. and F. in the codicil must be taken to have been given with the like restrictions, &c., as the similar amounts given to E. and F. in the will. Fenton v. Farington, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1120.

Where testator by will devised residue to daughters as tenants in common, and afterwards made a codicil for an express purpose, but redevised the residue to daughters, omitting words of severance, the codicil was construed by will, and they take as tenants in common. Mathews v. Bowman, 3 Anstr. 727.

By his will a testator gave 20,000*l.* to his daughter for life, with remainder to her children, to be vested at twenty-one or death under that age leaving issue. By a codicil, "instead of the 20,000*l.*," he gave 15,000*l.* to his daughter for life, with remainder to her children, "or the survivors":—Held, that the gift by the codicil was not substitutional so as to make the limitations of it similar to those in the will, and therefore that children who died after attaining twenty-one in the life of the daughter were excluded as against the surviving children. Haley v. Bannister, 23 Beav. 336.

A testator bequeathed a legacy to trustees for his son for life, with remainder to his children. Subsequently, by a codicil, reciting that he had given a legacy for the benefit of his son and his family, he revoked the legacy, and in lieu thereof made his son one of his residuary legatees:—Held, that the son was entitled to the share of the residue absolutely. Hargreaves v. Pennington, 34 L. J., Ch. 180; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 834; 12 W. R. 1047.

A testator by his will gave two-thirds of his residue to his eldest son, with a gift over in case he died under twenty-five and unmarried, and he gave the remaining one-third to his second son upon similar terms. By a codicil he revoked so much of his will as related to the distribution of his residue, and gave to his second son 20,000*l.* sterling in lieu of his one-third of the residue, and he appointed his eldest son residuary legatee:—Held, that the gift of the 20,000*l.* was absolute, and not subject to the same liabilities as the one-third of the residue. Alexander v Alexander,

5 Beav. 518. And see Donnellan v. O'Neill, Ir. R. 5 Eq. 523.

A testator bequeathed to A. B. an annuity of 150*l.* half-yearly for her separate use; afterwards, on hearing that she was married (as she was at the time of the original bequest), he wrote on the margin of the will opposite the above passage, "now Mrs. C. D., one hundred guineas per annum, in quarterly payments," which he signed. The two handwritings were proved separately:—Held, nevertheless, that the annuity of one hundred guineas was in substitution for the other, and that this was given to her separate use. Martin v. Drinkwater, 2 Beav. 215; 9 L. J., Ch. 247.

A testator by his will gives 3,000*l.* to his brother for life, with remainders to his wife and children, and 6,000*l.* to his sister B. for life, with remainders to her husband and children, and then, after two small bequests, the residue of his personal estate and effects to his sister C. absolutely. Afterwards, by a codicil, entitled by him a codicil to his will, he leaves to his brother an equal share of his effects with his sisters, subject to similar limitations with those of the 3,000*l.*, and then adds, "my sister B. to have an equal share with my sister C." He makes a second codicil, repeating the two small bequests above mentioned in the same terms in which they were given by his will, and appointing a third executor to act with the two others named in the will:—Held, that the effect of the codicils was only to equalise the shares of his brother and sisters, and that the substitutional share of B. remained subject to the same limitations for the benefit of her children which were declared concerning the 6,000*l.* given her by the will. Cookson v. Hancock, 1 Keen, 817. Affirmed, 2 Myl. & Cr. 611; 6 L. J., Ch. 56.

A wife appointed 5,000*l.* to her daughter, but if she had a fortune of 25,000*l.* (over which the husband had a power of appointment), then she desired the 5,000*l.* to be divided between her son and daughter, desiring that her husband should have a life interest therein:—Held, that the husband took a life estate, at all events. Darby v. Darby, 18 Beav. 412.

Testator by his will gave an annuity of 300*l.* a year to his grand-daughter A., and after her death he directed that the said sum should be raised and paid among her children as she should appoint, and in default of appointment in equal shares during their respective lives; and he gave to his grand-daughter E. a like annuity, to be paid to her and her children in the same manner as the annuity thereinbefore given to his grand-daughter A. By a codicil he revoked the devises of the several annuities, and instead thereof gave to each of his grand-daughters A. and E. an annuity of 150*l.*, to be payable in the same manner as the annuities of 300*l.*:—Held (Rigby, L.J., dissenting), that the substitution of the smaller annuities extended to the interests of the children of the grand-daughters. Freme's Estate, In re, Freme v. Hall, 64 L. J., Ch. 862; [1895] 2 Ch. 778; 73 L. T. 366; 44 W. R. 164—C. A.

Limitations when Implied in case of Cumulative Legacies.]—An additional legacy is subject to all the conditions attached to the previous legacy, unless there are express words to the contrary.

A testator gave his wife an annuity during her widowhood. Eleven years afterwards he made a codicil, and thereby, after reciting that he had made too small a provision for his wife, he gave her, in addition to all other provisions, an annuity of 800*l.* for her life, for her sole and separate use. After his death the widow married again:—Held, that the gift in the codicil was not subject to the condition of widowhood, and that, therefore, she was not deprived of it by her second marriage. May v. May, 19 W. R. 432.

A bequest by will of an annuity to a married woman for life, for her separate use; by codicil, a legacy of 300*l.*, "in addition" to that in the will; by a second codicil, a bequest of furniture and money in the house to the same legatee, "for her own use and purposes":—Held, that the 300*l.* must follow the trusts of the annuity; but not so the legacy in the second codicil. Warwick v. Hawkins, 5 De G. & Sm. 481; 21 L. J., Ch. 796; 16 Jur. 902.

A testator by his will gave a legacy to his daughter for life, for her separate use, with remainder to her children. By a codicil, headed as "instructions to his solicitor," to add to his will, he gave another legacy "to his daughter and children for their sole use and benefit, &c., &c.," and one-third of the residue "to his daughter and children for their sole use and benefit":—Held, that the daughter took a life interest in the gifts by the codicil. Cator v. Cator, 14 Beav. 463.

Bequest of 1,000*l.* to A., the interest of 2,000*l.* to B., and at his death to his children, the sum of 1,000*l.* to D., the sum of 1,000*l.* to B., in addition to 1,000*l.* before mentioned:—Held, that the former legacy to B. was of pounds sterling, and that the gift to his children was of an absolute interest in capital; held, also, that the reference to the former legacy in the latter gift to B. did not diminish the previous legacy, and that the latter legacy was given to B. absolutely, and not to him for life, and then to his children. Legacies given "in addition to" previous gifts to the same person only partake of the same incidents where the former gifts are absolute or defeasible; but the doctrine has never been extended so far as to alter an absolute gift of the latter legacy into a gift to the legatee for life, and after his death to other persons. Mann v. Fuller, Kay, 624; 2 Eq. R. 1085; 23 L. J., Ch. 543; 2 W. R. 510.

Where testator by his will gave annuities to his sister A. and other females, which he declared by a general clause were for their separate use, and by a codicil gave "to each of his sisters 100*l.* a year in addition to the legacies given by the will":—Held, in the case of A., that the annuity given to her by the codicil was also for her separate use. Day v. Croft, 4 Beav. 561.

After a legacy in stock in 4 per cent. consols bank annuities, a legacy to same persons of an additional sum of 200*l.* was to be paid out of the 4 per cents., and was held pecuniary. Deane v. Test, 9 Ves. 146; 1 Smith, 112.

When a life interest in a legacy is given by will with limitations over, and by codicil another legacy is given to the same legatee, in addition to the former legacy, the legacy given by the codicil is not primâ facie subject to the same limitations as the legacy given by the will. Hill v. Jones, 37 L. J., Ch. 465—L.C.

A father bequeathed to his daughter an annuity, and also, in case she did not marry before the age of twenty-eight, a legacy of 1,000*l.* By a codicil on the same paper, he gave her "furthermore 5,000*l.* upon the terms hereinbefore mentioned." A suitor of the daughter wrote to the testator after the date of his will, and before she attained twenty-eight, proposing to marry her, in answer to which the testator stated what provision he meant to make for her in his lifetime, but did not mention the above-intended testamentary dispositions. He added, that the marriage had his qualified consent, but that he must hear from his daughter before he made it absolute. The daughter wrote to the testator, expressing her consent, to which, being very ill, he replied that he could not appoint a time to attend to business. He shortly afterwards died, without making any further communication on the subject, and subsequently the marriage took place before the daughter attained twenty-eight:—Held, that the 5,000*l.* was subject to the same condition as the 1,000*l.* Yonge v. Furse, 8 De G. M. & G. 756; 26 L. J., Ch. 352; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 603; 5 W. R. 394.

By his will, a testator devised and bequeathed his real and personal estate to trustees, upon trust to invest 2,000*l.*, and stand possessed of 1,000*l.* upon trust for his daughter Mary and her family, and upon trust to pay the interest of the other 1,000*l.* to his son John for his life or solvency; and after his death, insolvency, or bankruptcy, in trust for his wife for life, and afterwards to divide the capital among her children and issue; and in default, as therein mentioned. The testator then directed that, subject to the 2,000*l.*, the trustees should stand possessed of the residue of his estate and effects, in trust for all and every his child and children, in equal shares, and the several heirs of their respective bodies ("except as to John and his children and their issue, whose share, in consequence of the 1,000*l.* set apart for him and them as aforesaid, shall be rated at 1,000*l.* less than the share of any other of my children"); and in case there should be a failure of issue of any of such children, then, as to the share or shares of him, her, or them whose issue should so fail, to the use of the other or others of them, as tenants in common, and the several heirs of their respective bodies; and in case there should be a failure of issue of all such children, then to the use of such one child, and the heirs of his or her body. The testator left Mary and John his only children, and died seised and possessed of both freehold and leasehold estates:—Held, that the exception in the parenthesis did not alter the gift of the share of the residue to John, so as to make it liable to the same trusts as of the 1,000*l.* Green v. Green, 3 De G. & S. M. 480; 18 L. J., Ch. 465; 14 Jur. 74.

Testator gives 24,000*l.* upon trust, as to 6,000*l.* to pay the interest to S. B. (his niece) during her life, and after her decease the principal among her children; if she should die without issue, over. He declares similar trusts as to three other sums of 6,000*l.* (making the remainder of the 24,000*l.*) for his three other nieces and their children. Proviso, that in case any of his said nieces should marry without such consent as therein prescribed, each, &c., so marrying should forfeit the interest of her 6,000*l.*, and all other sums to which she might be entitled under his will, and the respective sums of 6,000*l.*, and all such other sums, &c., should fall into his residue; and he gives the residue in trust for his two nephews and their children; in case of the death of either without issue, his moiety to go over to, and be divided among, his said nieces. Afterwards, by codicil, he gives to each of his nieces 2,000*l.* in addition, "subject to the same powers, provisoes, directions, and limitations, as are contained in the will respecting the sums of 6,000*l.*" S. B., who was of age at the date of the will, marries without the consent required:—Held, a forfeiture extending not only to the future interest of her 6,000*l.*, but to the capital, and also to the 2,000*l.* given by the codicil, and to a fund set apart to answer an annuity to which S. B. would otherwise have been entitled on the death of the annuitant. Whether the forfeiture would also extend to her share of the residue in the event of the contingency upon which it is given over to the testator's niece, quære. Lloyd v. Branton, 3 Mer. 108; 17 R. R. 33.

A testator appointed 10,000*l.* each to his younger children, and all the residue to his eldest son; and he directed the income of the whole, until the youngest should attain twenty-one, to be applied in the maintenance of the minors. In the event of a younger child dying under twenty-one, he appointed his share to the eldest son, "in addition to the residue":—Held, that the share of a younger child who died under twenty-one was not payable to the eldest until the youngest child attained twenty-one. Duffield v. Currie, 29 Beav. 284.

A testator gave the interest of his residuary estate to his mother for life, and afterwards one-half of the interest to his brother and one-half to his sister. Upon the death of the sister the capital was to go to her children, if any, and if not to his brother. Upon the death of his brother the capital was to go to his children. The sister died without children:—Held, that the children of the brother took no interest in her moiety. Tatnall v. Tatnall, 10 Beav. 509.

A testatrix directs that her trustees (who were also her executors) should, within a year after her decease, pay to the several persons named in a schedule to her will the sums set opposite to their respective names, as vested and transmissible interests; in a subsequent clause she gives 3,000*l.* to the trustees, upon trust to invest the same, and pay it to A. on her attaining twenty-one, with a proviso that it should fall into the residue if A. died under twenty-one. By the schedule to her will she gives to her executors 600*l.* in trust for A., in addition to the 3,000*l.* given by the will:—Held, that the legacy of 600*l.* was not affected by the contingency to which the 3,000*l.* was subject, but vested immediately. Tilbury v. Wakeford, 5 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 73.

Gift of a share "in addition":—Held, under the circumstances, not liable to the same contingency as the original share. A testator devised an estate to A. and B. successively for life, and, after their deaths, to sell and divide the produce between his grandchildren who should be living at the decease of the survivor of A. and B., except his grandsons E. and J., neither of whom was to receive anything; and he directed that the shares which would be otherwise payable to them should be paid to his grand-daughter S., "in addition to her own share." E. and J. survived the tenants for life, but S. predeceased them:—Held, that the two shares passed to the representatives of S. King

v. Tootel, 25 Beav. 23. And see More's Trust, In re, ante, col. 968.

—— In Case of Accruing Shares.]—A testatrix gave 4,000*l.* to trustees, in trust, to pay two annuities of 60*l.* and 30*l.*, and to pay the residue and remainder of the said interest and dividends to her nieces, M. A. P. and H. P., with gifts over in favour of the children of those nieces; but if either niece died without issue before both the annuitants were dead, then the whole 4,000*l.* was, on the decease of the last surviving annuitant, to be paid and transferred to the survivor of the two nieces; and the testatrix declared that the respective legacies, by her will, given to the two nieces, should not lapse in the event of either of them dying without issue in the lifetime of the annuitant:—Held, first, that, on the decease of one of the annuitants, her annuity accrued for the benefit of the two nieces, and not for the general residuary legatee; secondly, that, under the circumstances, one niece having died without issue in the lifetime of one of the annuitants, the surviving niece took the share of the niece so dying absolutely, and not for life only, with limitations over for the benefit of her children, like the limitations declared of her own original share, on the ground that there was a new gift to the surviving niece; and that in general a new unqualified gift will not be made subject to the restrictions imposed on a prior gift in the will. Boodle v. Partington, 16 Jur. 606.

Exoneration from Legacy Duty, when Implied in Case of Substituted and Cumulative Legacies.]—See LEGACY DUTY, sub tit. REVENUE.

Disinherison of Heir-at-Law, when implied.]—An heir-at-law may be disinherited by words of necessary implication. Gurly v. Gurly, 8 Cl. & F. 763. Affirming 2 Dr. & Wal. 463.

An heir-at-law is not to be disinherited unless by express words; and unless it be distinctly pointed out to whom the estate is to go it devolves upon him. Salter v. Cavanagh, 1 Dr. & Wal. 668.

Where there is uncertainty in a will whether property has been devised or bequeathed from the heir-at-law or next of kin, the proper course is to allow the property to go as the law directs in cases of intestacy. It is not enough to shew that a testator did not intend to die intestate; it must be shewn distinctly that some person has been substituted for the heir. It is a rule of law that the heir-at-law is not to be disinherited unless by express words or necessary implication. Hall v. Warren, 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1089; 5 L. T. 190; 10 W. R. 66. S. P., Boutell v. Mohun, Pre. Ch. 381; Johnson v. Telford, 1 Russ. & M. 244; 8 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 94; Kellet v. Kellet, 1 Ball & B. 541; 3 Dow, P. C. 248; Berry v. Usher, 11 Ves. 92.

It is a rule in equity to give the turn of the scale in favour of an heir, and the court always inclines in his favour, and will allow artificial reasoning to prevent his being disinherited. Crabtree v. Bramble, 3 Atk. 689. Parsons v. Freeman, id. 747.

An heir is not to be disinherited, unless by express words or necessary implication, and the same rule holds with respect to an heir of customary lands. Gascoigne v. Barker, 3 Atk. 8. London (City) v. Garway, 2 Vern. 571.

b. Uncertainty.

Principles.]—A bequest will not be held void for uncertainty, although the meaning be not absolutely certain, if the court can arrive at a reasonable degree of certainty. Adams v. Jones, 9 Hare, 485; 21 L. J., Ch. 352; 16 Jur. 159.

The court will not adopt an intestacy for uncertainty accept in the last resort. Bernasconi v. Atkinson, 10 Hare, 345; 17 Jur. 128; 1 W. R. 152. Minshull v. Minshull, 1 Atk. 412.

To make a will void for uncertainty, it is not enough that the dispositions in it are so absurd and irrational that it is difficult to believe they could have been intended by the testator; but it must be incapable of any clear meaning. Mason v. Robinson, 2 Sim. & S. 295.

Under an extremely obscurely worded will, the real estate was held to have descended, and the personal estate to be applied, as if the testator had died intestate. Jackson v. Craig, 20 L. J., Ch. 204; 15 Jur. 811.

Every word in construction of will is to have effect, if not inconsistent with general intention, which is to control. If two parts are inconsistent, the latter prevails. If a meaning can be collected, but it is wholly doubtful in what manner it is to take effect, it is void for uncertainty. Constantine v. Constantine, 6 Ves. 100.

Uncertainty as to Purpose.]—A testator gave to his executors beneficially, in equal proportions, all his property which he might not dispose of, subject to his debts and any bequests which he might afterwards make. He afterwards made a codicil in these words: "In a codicil to my will I gave to the Corporation of Gloucester 14,000*l.* In this I wish my executors would give 60,000*l.* more to them for the same purpose as I have before named. I would also give my friends (several were named with large legacies), and I confirm all other bequests, and give the rest of my property to their executors for their own interest." No other codicil was produced:—Held (affirming a decree of the court of chancery on a bill filed by the Corporation of Gloucester claiming the two legacies), that the purpose of both the legacies must be held to be the same, and that both failed for uncertainty of the purpose. Gloucester Corporation v. Osborn, 1 H. L. Cas. 272. Affirming 3 Hare, 131; 13 L. J., Ch. 54; 7 Jur. 1125.

—— As to Condition.]—A husband devised and bequeathed all his property, consisting of premises held in fee, and leaseholds for years, together with other personal property, to his wife, "on the condition that my wife shall retire immediately after my death into a convent of her own choice." There was no gift over:—Held, that this was a condition subsequent, and void for uncertainty. Duddy v. Gresham, 2 L. R., Ir. 442—C. A. Reversing 39 L. T. 48.

—— As to Limitations.]—A gift "of the upper storey of four specific houses or shops, to be occupied by the several members and descendants of K. T. C., and L. K. W., as already proposed," i.e. as the context shewed, as a family house for the use of two separate families, is void for uncertainty, and as denoting an intention to create a perpetuity. Yeap Cheah Neo v. Ong Cheng Neo, L. R. 6 P. C. 381.

Testator gave his bank stock to trustees, in trust for F. B. for life, and his funded property to the same trustees, in trust for W. R. E. for life, and after his death, in trust for his issue; and he directed the trustees, after the decease of F. B., to pay the dividends of his bank stock to W. R. E. for life, and after his decease to apply the dividends and capital for the benefit of the children or child of W. R. E., in such manner as he had directed respecting his funded property; and should W. R. E. die without issue, male or female, of his body lawfully begotten, then he directed the trustees to apply his funded property and bank stock for such charitable or other purposes as they should think fit, without being accountable to any person; and he gave the residue of his personal estate and effects, wines, pictures, plate, books, and furniture, to W. R. E.:—Held, that the ultimate trust of the funded property and bank stock was not too remote, but was void for uncertainty, and that the residuary clause was general. Ellis v. Selby, 7 Sim. 352; 4 L. J., Ch. 69. Affirmed, 1 Myl. & Cr. 286; 5 L. J., Ch. 214.

E. by deed conveyed several sums of money, secured by mortgages, amounting to 60,000*l*., to trustees in trust, to be laid out in the purchase of lands to the use of himself for life, remainder as to sums to the amount of 28,000*l*. to his wife for life, remainder to his son R. for life, with several remainders over, remainder to J. in fee; and as to sums amounting to 23,000*l*. to R. for life, with several intermediate remainders, remainder to J. in fee; and as to one particular mortgage of 8,500*l*. and some leasehold estates to secure annuities, the surplus to R. with power of revocation. By his will he gave the leasehold estates and the mortgage of 8,500*l*., together with another mortgage of 6,700*l*., in trust to secure the annuities, the surplus, interest, or rents of the lands purchased to be paid to R. for life, and to be settled in the same manner as his other estates: first, these mortgages are to be considered as real estate; secondly, it being uncertain which of the limitations they were to follow, they are disposed of and passed to R. as heir-at-law, and from him to his general devisee, E., who having died intestate as to the real estate, they go to the heir-at-law, D. Leslie v. Devonshire (Duke), 2 Bro. C. C. 189.

Bequest of share of residue to K. and G., "but in case K. shall die before he shall actually have received the whole of his share and without leaving issue living at his decease, then, and in such case, and whether the same shall have become due and payable or not, such part or parts as he shall not have actually received to be paid to G." K. died unmarried, without having received any share of the residue:—Held, that the gift over was not void for uncertainty, but took effect. Johnson v. Crook, 48 L. J., Ch. 777; 12 Ch. D. 639; 41 L. T. 400; 28 W. R. 12.

A testator devised his estate to trustees to pay the rents to his widow during her life, and after her decease to his four children equally; and after the decease of any of his children leaving issue, then he gave to such issue the share of his or her parent in the rents until the decease of his last surviving child, when he directed that his estate should be sold and the proceeds divided amongst the issue of his children equally; the children of each of his sons and daughters to receive one-fourth part. And in case any of his children should die without leaving issue, then he gave the share of such of them unto the survivors or survivor of them, and the issue of such of them as should have died leaving issue. Two of the children died unmarried, and it was contended on behalf of the issue of the last surviving child, that there was an intestacy as to these two shares:—Held, that there was no intestacy. Booth, In re, 10 L. T. 327.

A testator (passing over his heir-at-law, the son of his deceased elder brother) gave 1,000*l*. to the testator's father for life, and after his death to be continued to the testator's younger brother, and proceeded thus: "and after his death to be continued to my next nearest heir, and so on. This property is not meant to be disposed of by any of the family":—Held, that the ultimate limitation was void for uncertainty. Thomason v. Moses, 5 Beav. 77; 6 Jur. 403. And see Horsfield v. Ashton, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 193; 1 W. R. 259.

Order in which property devolved under the limitations in an ungrammatical will to the issue male and female of persons to whom estates for life were given. Peyton v. Hughes, 7 Jur. 311.

Testator, having by will given the residue to his wife, made a codicil, by which, instead of the general residue, "he gave to her 10,000*l*., to be invested in the names of trustees, the interest to be paid to her for life, and then to his daughter, and his house, furniture, plate, wines, &c., at K. R., in short, the whole of his property at his decease, except carriages and horses and his gold repeater; and it was his further wish that she might continue in either house (but not to change) and have the use of the same for life, wines, spirits, included":—Held, that the codicil, except so far as it cut down the residuary gift to the wife to 10,000*l*., was void for uncertainty. Baker v. Newton, 2 Beav. 112; 8 L. J., Ch. 306; 3 Jur. 649.

A testator devised land to A. "for his life and the life of his heir":—Held, that the devise was legally valid, and that the effect was to give to the devisee an estate during his own life and the life of the person who should be ascertained to be his heir at the time of his death. Amos, In re, Carrier v. Price, [1891] 3 Ch. 159; 65 L. T. 69; 39 W. R. 550.

—— As to Persons.]—Devise to the descendants of S., now living in or about S., or hereafter living anywhere else:—Held, good. Crossley v. Clare, Ambl. 397.

Devise in trust for a son of the testator's nephew, A., at the age of twenty-four; if he have no son, to A., son of the testator's great-nephew, B.; but if neither have a son then to a son of the testator's great-niece's daughter, taking his name; whoever should take, not to be put in possession of any of the testator's effects until twenty-four, nor the executors to give up their trust till a proper entail be made to the male heir by him; is an executory trust in tail for an only son of A. in ventre at the testator's death, and not void for uncertainty, nor too remote. Blackburne v. Stables, 2 V. & B. 367; 13 R. R. 120.

A testator, who had long resided in India, gave a legacy "to J. P., who resided at A. when I left England, or to his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns." J. P. died in the testator's lifetime:—Held, that the bequest was void for uncertainty. Waite v. Templer, 2 Sim. 524; 29 R. R. 161.

The testatrix gave certain freehold and leasehold premises to trustees, in trust, after the decease of M. I., to dispose of and divide the same unto and amongst her partners, who should be in co-partnership with her at the time of her decease, or to whom she might have disposed of her business, in such shares and proportions as her trustees should think fit:—Held, that this was a good devise to the persons to whom it was ascertained that the testator had disposed of her business in her lifetime. Stubbs v. Surgon, 2 Keen, 255. Affirmed, 3 Myl. & Cr. 507; 7 L. J., Ch. 95; 2 Jur. 150.

A testator devised a freehold estate to A. for life, and after his death he devised the same to be equally divided into four parts, between one child of A., one child of B., one child of C., and one child of D., for them to receive the rents, and divide the money between them; and it was his desire that his estate should never be sold out of the family; and, provided that A., B., C. and D. should never have any lawful children, the testator's desire was that their parts should go to their next of kin. At the time of making the will, and of the death of the testator, B. only had a child, namely, a daughter; but after the testator's death B. had a son: at the death of A. there were children, both sons and daughters, of A., C., and D.:—Held, that the gift to "one child" was not void for uncertainty. Powell v. Davies, 1 Beav. 532; 3 Jur. 389.

A testator devised certain estates in remainder to "a son of my nephew J. W., his heirs and assigns." J. W. had three sons, the two elder of whom died infants and unmarried:—Held, that the eldest son of J. W. took an estate in fee-simple in remainder in the estates. Ashburner v. Wilson, 19 L. J., Ch. 330; 14 Jur. 497.

A testator having in the commencement of his will appointed his daughter to act in concert with his son to be guardian and executrix, added, "I also appoint and desire in this my last will and testament, that my son to be my executor and residuary legatee do jointly with my daughter, my executrix, who is to act independent of her husband, and be guardian to the children":—Held, that the son alone was entitled to the residue. Langley v. Thomas, 6 De G. M. & G. 645; 3 Jur (N.S.) 345; 5 W. R. 219.

—— Where Class to be ascertained at some Future Time.]—A testator bequeathed leaseholds in Church Street, having sixty years unexpired, and as to which there was no obligation on the part of the lessor to renew, to A. for life, with remainder to the children she should leave, and in default to R. He bequeathed to trustees other leaseholds upon trust, to accumulate the rents until the leases of the Church Street property "should become nearly expired," and then to apply such part thereof as should be necessary in the renewal of the Church Street property "for the benefit of the respective persons to whom he had before by his will given the same," and the residue, after answering the purpose aforesaid, he gave to his residuary legatees. The testator died before the Thellusson Act came into operation:—Held, that the trust for accumulation and renewal was void for remoteness and uncertainty. Curtis v. Lukin, 5 Beav. 147; 11 L. J., Ch. 380; 6 Jur. 721.

A testator bequeathed five leasehold houses, having about fifty-four years to run, to his daughter for life, with remainder to her children; and after the expiration of any of the leases, he directed his trustees to convey to his daughter and her children one or more of the five freehold houses of equal annual value, or as near as could be, to the expired leasehold:—Held, that the decree was neither invalid for remoteness nor uncertainty. Wood v. Drew, 33 Beav. 610.

A testator directed a general accumulation of his real and personal estates during the lives of his three sons, grandsons, and the issue of such grandsons who should be living at his death; and that his personal estate should be laid out in the purchase of real estates, and that his trustees should stand seised thereof, and of all other his real estate, upon trust, during the lives aforesaid, to receive the rents and profits, and from time to time "to lay out and invest the money to arise from such rents and profits in such purchases as he had thereinbefore directed to be made with his personal estate, and should from time to time collect and receive, and lay out and invest, the rents and profits" of such real estate "in the manner thereinbefore directed with respect to the rents and profits of the hereditaments originally purchased." He also directed that the trustees should from time to time cut down such timber as should be upon the lands devised and directed to be purchased as should be fit to be cut down, and should sell and dispose of the same, and should lay out and invest the money arising by such sales in such purchases as thereinbefore directed to be made with regard to his personal estate, and the rents and profits of his real estate. And he further empowered his trustees, "until a convenient purchase or convenient purchases could be made, to permit such part of his personal estate as was then invested in the funds, or consisted of securities for money, to remain in such funds or upon such securities, and to invest or place out the money to arise from such part of his personal estate as should not at his decease consist of money, and from the rents and profits of the hereditaments to be purchased, or from the sale of the timber, in the government funds or real security, and from time to time to sell and call in the same, and again invest the same as his trustees should think proper, until a convenient purchase could be found, or until a sufficient sum should be accumulated to make a proper purchase." And after the death of the survivor of the persons during whose lives the accumulations were to be made, the testator directed a partition to be made by his trustees of his estates, and the whole thereof to be divided into three lots of equal value, or as near thereto as possible, and that the premises contained in one of such allotments should be conveyed to the use of "the eldest male lineal descendant then living" of each of his three sons, with remainders over:—Held, that the devise was not void for uncertainty; also, that the question of uncertainty had not been disposed of in any previous decision upon this the Thellusson will. Thellusson v. Rendlesham (Lord), 7 H. L. Cas. 429; 28 L. J., Ch. 948; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1031; 7 W. R. 563.

A testator left all his property upon trust for A. for life, and from and after his death to pay the same to any niece or female relative of A., provided she marries a person of the name of B., residing in the county of T., and who has been born and reared a Roman Catholic; but the said bequest is not to vest in the niece or female relative of A. so marrying a B. until five years after the death of A.:—Held, to be void for remoteness, and, on appeal, to be void for uncertainty. Smithwick v. Hayden, 19 L. R., Ir. 490—C. A.

—— "Friends" construed "Kindred entitled on Intestacy."]—A testator devised freehold lands to his wife for life, provided she remained unmarried, and directed that on her death or marriage the lands should revert to his friends, and be their property. With the exception of a few nominal legacies, he bequeathed to his wife all his personal and chattel property absolutely, and appointed her sole residuary legatee:—Held, upon the construction of the will, that the words "my friends" were capable of meaning the testator's kindred who would have taken his interest in the lands but for the interposed devise to his wife; that the devise over, on the death or marriage of the wife, was not void for uncertainty; and that upon her death the testator's heir-at-law became entitled under the devise. Coogan v. Hayden, 4 L. R., Ir. 585.

—— Gift "to A. or B."]—Bequest to A. or B. void for uncertainty; if discretionary in C., it is good. Longmore v. Broom, 7 Ves. 128.

Testator directed the interest of her residuary estate to be applied in defraying the expenses of the education of her nephews, George and Charles, and the principal to be applied either in binding them apprentices at the age of fourteen, or to be reserved till they attained twenty-one, to commence business. "In the event of George and Charles (both or either of them) being settled before this will comes in force, I provide that the next boy (James or Henry) have the benefit, and so on." George and Charles survived the testatrix, but died under twenty-one:—Held, that James and Henry were entitled to the residue. Prestwidge v. Groombridge, 6 Sim. 171.

—— Where Object Charitable.]—A testator, by deed-poll, duly inrolled in chancery, conveyed to trustees a piece of land and cottages for the purpose of an hospital for ten aged or infirm poor persons, preference being given to particular parishes. By his will, made in 1882, he charged his copyhold and freehold estates with his debts and funeral expenses and legacies, and gave the residue of his personal property to the trustees of the deed-poll upon trust to build an hospital on the site of the premises conveyed by the deed-poll, and to employ the income of the remainder in insurance and repairs, and paying 18*l.* or more to each of the ten poor inmates, and the ultimate balance (if any) to aged and deserving poor of either sex as out-of-door pensioners. The testator died within twelve months from the execution of the deed-poll, which therefore became void under the statute of mortmain. Upon further consideration in an administration action:—Held, that the ultimate gift of the balance of the dividends failed for uncertainty, and that the legacies must be paid out of the proceeds of the real estate, and the debts and funeral expenses in the first instance out of the personalty. Taylor, In re, Martin v. Freeman, 58 L. T. 538.

A direction was given by a testator to the commissioners of charitable donations and bequest, to apply the balance of the interest, on a sum bequeathed to them, for the benefit and maintenance, and to enable the families of his late workmen at B., or their children, to become apprenticed, or to emigrate abroad:—Held, that the attempt to construe the bequest as a gift to individuals failed for uncertainty. Cullimore's Trusts, In re, 27 L. R., Ir. 18. And see Charitable Donations Commissioners v. Deey, ante, col. 803.

And see Cases, sub CHARITABLE LEGACIES, post.

—— Parol Evidence, when Admitted.]—Parol evidence admitted to ascertain the person the testator intended should take a legacy. Hodgson v. Hitch, Pre. Ch. 229.

Parol evidence may be received in case of uncertain description of a person in a will. Edge v. Salisbury, Ambl. 71; 1 Ves. Sen. 230.

Collateral proof may be allowed to make certain a person or thing described in a will. Caldicot v. Hodgson, 2 Vern. 593.

Devise to "Mr. N., kinsman of Mr. E. N., if the house of lords will allow his right to be Lord Viscount N.; but if their lordships do not confirm the title to him, then over," good. The devisor having in his mind the notion of an individual, the court will search for the person that conforms to the description given. And as to the condition, devise to one who is suing for a certain estate in case he fails in that suit, and if he succeeds over, has been held good. Fingal (Earl) v. Blake, 2 Moll. 50.

Uncertainty as to Property the Subject of Gift.]—Testamentary papers in this form: "I leave and bequeath to all my grandchildren, and share and share alike;" and, "further, I appoint F. H. and F. E. my trustees for all my grandchildren and nieces": are void for uncertainty, and pass no interest in the real estate. Mohun v. Mohun, 1 Swanst. 201; 1 Wils. Ch. 151; 18 R. R. 58.

One bequeaths to her grandchild A. some of her best linen; this void for the uncertainty, yet the court recommended it to the executor to give some of the best linen to the legatee A. Bequest of such of the best linen as the executor should think fit, or as the legatee should choose, had been held good. Peck v. Halsey, 2 P. Wms. 389.

A statuary bequeathed articles used in his business by their technical names, some of which were very obscurely written. Reference directed to ascertain what was meant, the master taking to his assistance persons skilled in writing, and acquainted with articles used by statuaries. Goblet v. Beechy, 3 Sim. 24; 9 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 200. But see 2 Russ. & M. 624.

Testator first gave all his property to trustees upon certain trusts, and secondly directed that the trustees, from the commencement of the fifth year from the date of his decease, should set apart annually 10 per cent. upon the gross income of his estate to be invested as additional capital in some good and valid medium of profit or interest, in order that the new income derived from that might go to increase the benefits intended by the former. He then proceeded to dispose of the remaining income:—Held, that no partial intestacy was created by the direction as to the 10 per cent., but that the dispositions of the bulk of his property were to be treated as if it did not exist. Thompson v. Thompson, 1 Coll. C. C. 398; 8 Jur. 839.

A testator made a bequest in the following words: "I give to my executors the sum of 1,000*l.*, upon trust to be invested in the funds of the Bank of England, during the lives of the survivor or survivors of them, for the widows of J. S. and T. D., to be divided between them, share and share alike." The testator appointed two executors of his will. One of the widows died in the testator's lifetime; the other widow survived the testator, and received the interest of the 1,000*l.* during her life:—Held, upon the death of the surviving widow, that the bequest was void for uncertainty, and belonged therefore to the residuary legatee. Hoffman v. Hankey, 3 Myl. & K. 376.

Testator devised all his real estates (except the hereditaments thereinafter particularly devised) to trustees on certain trusts. In a subsequent part of his will he devised his farm in A., in the possession of T. H., to T. R. He had two farms in A., both of which were in the possession of T. H., but at different rents, and known by different names. There being no evidence to shew with certainty which of the two farms the testator meant to devise to T. R., the court held the exception to be inoperative, and that both the farms passed by the general devise to the trustees. Blundell v. Gladstone, 14 Sim. 83; 8 Jur. 301. But see S. C., 3 Mac. & G. 692.

A testator gave to each of his four daughters a house and garden in the village of R., if they should feel inclined to reside there, and directed the house or houses to be built at the expense of his executors. A house was built:—Held, that the clause was not void for uncertainty, and if there had been uncertainty, the executors had determined it by building the house. Edwards v. Jones, 35 Beav. 474; 14 W. R. 815.

A., having a cotton manufactory and other property situate at H. and W., and a freehold estate at B. unconnected with his manufactory, by his will gave to trustees all his freehold estates at B., and all his freehold and leasehold property at H. and W., and all his real and personal estate and effects, upon trust to carry on the manufactory, for which purpose he authorised them to retain as much ready money as a capital in the business as by them might be considered necessary; and he directed that at the end of every twelve months, provided his daughters L. and E. were living, the profits, if any, and the surplus income from the H. and W. estates, after paying annuities charged thereon, and retaining a sufficient capital to carry on the manufactory, should be equally divided between his two daughters L. and E.; but if the trustees were not inclined to carry on the business, they were to let the premises, and the reserved capital was to be equally divided between L. and E., and also the surplus rents of H. and W. The testator then gave estate B. to his daughter E. for life, remainder to her issue, share and share alike, remainder to L. for life, remainder to her issue; and if L. should die without issue, and E. should leave issue, such issue was to have the whole of the estates in B., H. and W., and all other his real and personal estate and effects; and if both L. and E. should die without leaving issue, "then the whole of the rents, profits, and interests of all my estates, real and personal, situate in B., W. and H., to be paid to R. H." The trustees carried on the manufactory, retaining a very large sum for capital. L. and E. both died without leaving issue:—Held, affirming the decision of Wood, V.-C., that the daughters took absolutely all the testator's personal estate not retained by the trustees for capital; but that what was so retained was to be considered as annexed to, or as passing with, the H. and W. estates to R. H. Horsfield v. Ashton, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 193; 1 W. R. 259.

Testator bequeathed to his wife the interest and dividends of such stock as should be standing in his name at his decease during her life, and he directed that at her decease one moiety of such stock, "subject to, and after deducting such premium or sum of money as should be necessary for the renewal of the crown lease of the leasehold messuages which he purchased of Sir H. T., in case he should not have renewed such in his lifetime," should go to his five children. In a subsequent part of the will he gave to his son G. all his leasehold houses, which he purchased of Sir H. T., to hold to his said son and his executors, &c., for the then existing term or terms therein, and "all benefit of renewal aforesaid," for his and their own use and benefit. At the time of the widow's death the lease was subsisting unrenewed:—Held, that there was a gift to the son out of the consols of a sum of money sufficient to effect the renewal of the lease. Rickards v. Rickards, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 419; 7 Jur. 715. Affirmed, 13 L. J., Ch. 344.

Where testator devised all his houses at S. to trustees, to convey to his daughter M. such one as she might choose, and to convey all the others to his daughter C., and M. died in his lifetime:—Held, that the gift in favour of C. had failed. Boyce v. Boyce, 16 Sim. 476.

A testatrix gave such of her jewels as should at her death be deposited in her jewel-box at Rundell & Bridge's to persons whose names would be found written on a paper contained in the box, and bequeathed the rest of her jewels to A. B.; two years before her death she became the subject of a commission of lunacy, and no jewel-box was then, or at the date of her will, or at her death, deposited at Rundell & Bridge's, nor was there any written paper designating who were to take the jewels: the intended gift of the jewels wholly fails. Jerningham v. Herbert, 4 Russ. 388; Tam. 103.

Gift of the residue of a fund after the application of an undefined amount to a void charity is void for uncertainty. Att.-Gen. v. Hinxman, 2 J. & W. 277; 22 R. R. 119.

—— As to Amount.]—A testator directed his trustees to invest his residuary estate, and suffer the interest to accumulate until the principal together with the accumulation of interest should amount to "3,000*l.* or thereabouts," and then to place out the same at interest, and pay the interest equally among certain legatees, in equal shares, during their lives and the life of the survivor; and in case any of them should die leaving lawful issue, the issue were to be entitled to the same share in the interest to which their parents would, if living, have been entitled; and immediately after the decease of the survivor of the legatees specifically named, then upon trust to pay the 3,000*l.* or thereabouts equally among the lawful issue of the legatees to whom the testator gave the same; but in case any of them should happen to be then dead leaving lawful issue, such issue were to be entitled to the share to which the parent or parents of such issue would, if living, have been entitled:—Held, that the gift was not void on the ground of the uncertainty arising from the words "or thereabouts." Oddie v. Brown, 4 De G. & J. 179; 28 L. J., Ch. 542; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 635; 7 W. R. 472.

A direction to build "a suitable, durable, and handsome monument": — Held, not void for uncertainty in the amount that might be required for the purpose. Mitford v. Reynolds, 1 Ph. 185; 12 L. J., Ch. 40.

A request by a testator that a handsome gratuity should be given to each of his executors is void for uncertainty. Jubber v. Jubber, 9 Sim. 503.

One devises to two of his sisters 400*l.* apiece, and to his third sister what his executors should think fit. The court decreed the third sister should have 400*l.* also, and be made equal to her two other sisters, if the estate would hold out. Wareham v. Brown, 2 Vern. 153.

Where 300*l.* or 400*l.* per annum is directed to be purchased, the court will take it in the largest sense, and construe it to be 400*l.* per annum. Seale v. Seale, 1 P. Wms. 290; Pre. Ch. 421; Gilb. Eq. R. 105.

Testatrix gave to each of the in-brothers and in-sisters for the time being resident in the several hospitals of and in the vicinity of Canterbury whose yearly income should not exceed 25*l.* augmentation or yearly increase of 5*l.* for ever: —Held, that the bequest was void for uncertainty, principally on the ground that the amount of the fund to be appropriated to answer the bequest was not specified by the testatrix and could not be determined. Flint v. Warren, 15 Sim. 626; 16 L. J., Ch. 441; 11 Jur. 665.

A testator bequeathed "fifty shares in the York Union Banking Company," to be held upon certain trusts. At the date of the will the company was registered and incorporated as an unlimited company under the companies acts, and the testator held seventy shares therein of the nominal value of 100*l.* each. Between the dates of his will and his death, the company was registered as a limited company under the same style, except that the word "limited" was added, and each 100*l.* share was converted into two shares of the nominal value of 60*l.*, and 140 of these new shares were allotted to the testator in substitution for his seventy shares of 100*l.* each:—Held, that the bequest was not specific, but general, that it was in effect a gift of such a sum as at the death of the testator should be the value of fifty shares of 100*l.* each in the unlimited company, and that as, by reason of events of which the testator was aware, it had become impossible to determine such value, the bequest failed. Gray, In re, Dresser v. Gray, 56 L. J., Ch. 975; 36 Ch. D. 205; 57 L. T. 132; 35 W. R. 795.

Upon a question as to the amount of a legacy from a doubt as to a figure, an issue was directed instead of a reference to the master. Norman v. Morrell, 4 Ves. 769; 4 R. R. 347.

6. TRUSTS.

a. Secret Trusts and Promises made to Testator.

What is a Good Declaration of Trust.]—Devise of 1,500*l.* to A. and B. for such uses as testator had declared to them, and by them not to be disclosed. A., in the life of B., writes a letter disclosing the trust. This is a good declaration of the trust. Crooke v. Brooking, 2 Vern. 106.

A. having made his will, and his wife executrix, and the son prevails with the mother to get his father to make a new will, and that he might be made an executor, and promises to be a trustee for his mother, trust decreed. Thynn v. Thynn, 1 Vern. 296.

Circumstances under which a parol trust of real estate will be enforced. Donohoe v. Conraky, 2 Jo. & Lat. 688; 8 Ir. Eq. R. 679.

Communication to and Acceptance by Trustee.]—Where on the face of a will there is nothing to shew that any trust or purpose was intended by the testator other than a gift of the whole beneficial interest to the legatee, the plaintiffs, in order to succeed in setting the bequest aside, must prove by evidence a trust expressed, or such engagement, by words or by silence, as will authorise the court to say that the legatee undertook to do that which the law prevented the testator from imposing upon her—an express trust to devote the residue to an illegal charitable purpose. Where the evidence, parol and documentary, merely proves the wishes and intentions of the testator, and that he refrained by instruction and premeditation from declaring any trust, or imposing any obligation, or exacting any promise for their fulfilment from the legatee, and also that the legatee was, from the impulses of her own mind and disposition, bent on fulfilling the testator's wishes and intentions if she had the power, it falls short of what is required to establish the existence of any secret or honorary trust the performance of which could be compelled on the footing of the breach of a promise or engagement which would have been binding on the conscience. Where a gift is in terms absolute, but accompanied with an expression of wishes in favour of another object, and a confidence in the honour and justice of the legatee, unless the language is so express as to be in terms imperative, and to exclude all option or discretion, it cannot bind the legatee or create a trust. Lomax v. Ripley, 3 Sm. & Giff. 48; 24 L. J., Ch. 254; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 272; 3 Eq. R. 301; 3 W. R. 269.

W., shortly before his death, informed the wife of F. that he had conferred great benefits upon them by his will, and begged the wife to make a provision of 300*l.* per annum for N., which she promised to do:—Held, that the property which the wife took under the will, and of which F., jure mariti, was in the possession and enjoyment, was fixed with a secret trust in favour of N. Norris v. Frazer, L. R. 15 Eq. 318; 21 W. R. 434.

A testatrix having executed a will and three codicils, made a fourth codicil as follows:—"I do hereby bequeath to J. B. (to whom I have willed my landed property) also all my personalty, such as cash, furniture, &c., to be applied as I have requested him to do." The wishes of the testatrix as communicated to J. B. appeared fully from his affidavit in the action, and in part from a memorandum drawn up by him (but not signed by the testatrix) immediately before the execution of the codicil, and it also appeared thereby that the testatrix did not intend to alter her previous dispositions, except for the purpose of giving effect to her wishes as stated to J. B.:—Held, that the court would give effect to the trust intended to be reposed by the testatrix in J. B., and that he held as trustee for the objects specified in the will and three codicils, subject to the alterations contained in the new dispositions shewn by his affidavit. Held, also, that the words, "cash, furniture, &c.," were not sufficient to cut down the general expression, "all my personalty"; and that, therefore, the fourth codicil extended to and comprised the whole personal estate of the testatrix. Held, further, that, assuming that effect could not have been given to the trust reposed in J. B., the will and three codicils would nevertheless have remained in operation, since the fourth codicil would in that case have been executed for the purpose of creating new interests which failed. Held, also, that, one of the witnesses to the codicil being interested under the parol trust, such interest failed. Fleetwood, In re, Sidgreaves v. Brewer, 49 L. J., Ch. 514; 15 Ch. D. 594; 29 W. R. 45.

A person gave his real and personal estate to trustees, on trust to sell the same, and, after payment of his debts, to pay the same, and he gave and bequeathed the same to I. (to whom he was engaged to be married) "absolutely, trusting she would carry out his wishes with regard to the same, with which she was fully acquainted." Shortly before the date of his will the testator had verbally expressed to I. his wish that she should make certain gifts out of the property to be bequeathed to her, and she had afterwards written down his wishes for her own use, but not in the testator's presence:—Held, that I. took the property beneficially, but subject in part to the wishes which the testator had expressed to her, and as to which she had bound herself. Irvine v. Sullivan, 38 L. J., Ch. 635; L. R. 8 Eq. 673; 17 W. R. 1083.

A certain estate was devised by will to one for life, remainder in tail male. By an unattested codicil, some annuities were directed to be paid by whoever inherited such estate. A general demurrer to a bill, which prayed payment of an annuity and arrears, was allowed. Middlebrook v. Bromley, 2 N. R. 224; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 614; 11 W. R. 712.

If A. devise all her personal estate to B., to be disposed of as B. shall think fit, and add by parol, "You may if you please give 100*l.* to my niece," B., on a bill, in the answer to which the parol declaration is admitted, shall be decreed to pay the 100*l.* to the niece. Nab v. Nab, 10 Mod. 404.

If a legatee promises a testator, that in consideration of a disposition in her favour she will do an act in favour of a third person, she who undertook to do the act must perform it. Drakeford v. Wilks, 3 Atk. 539.

Testator gave his real and personal estate to his wife absolutely, "having a perfect confidence she will act up to those views which I have communicated to her in the ultimate disposition of my property after her decease." After the death of the wife intestate, a bill was filed by two natural children of the testator against his heir and next of kin, and also against his wife's heir and administrator, alleging that testator, at time of making will, desired his wife to give the whole of his property after her death to the plaintiffs, and that she promised and undertook so to do:—Held, that if the plaintiffs had proved that allegation, a trust would have been created as to the whole of the property in favour of the plaintiffs. Podmore v. Gunning, 7 Sim. 644; 5 L. J., Ch. 266.

A testator bequeaths to A. and B. in trust for certain purposes which the will states to have been fully explained to them; on the same day a paper writing is signed by A. and B., in which they declare that the bequest is upon trust for six persons, whose names are stated, and after their signature some lines are added in the handwriting of the testator, by which a seventh person (an unborn child) is admitted to a share of the legacy; upon a bill filed by one of the six persons named in the body of the paper writing, the court recognised the paper writing as a valid declaration of trust, though it had not been proved as a testamentary paper. Smith v. Attersoll, 1 Russ. 266; 25 R. R. 41.

Bequest of 200*l.* to A. and B. "to spend as I" (the testatrix) "shall, by word of mouth, direct during my lifetime." The testatrix verbally informed A. that she wished to leave "something to J., and something to the Lord's work," and suggested C. and D. as persons to whom she proposed to give the last-mentioned bequest. After the testatrix's death A. found a letter in her handwriting, which, after reciting the bequest in the will of the 200*l.*, proceeded as follows:—"I would ask you to give or send 100*l.* to J.; the second hundred I wish sent for the Lord's work, 50*l.* to C. and 50*l.* to D.; I would ask them to lay it out":—Held, that no valid trust was created affecting any portion of the 200*l.* King's Estate, In re, 21 L. R., Ir. 273.

A testator, by his will, made in August, 1890, devised and bequeathed all his residuary real and personal estate whatsoever to his wife, her heirs, executors, and administrators respectively, "well knowing she will religiously carry out what she knows to be my wishes in the disposal of it." The testator's wife stated that up to July, 1890, the testator's intentions, as known to her from his conversations, as to the disposal of his furniture, pictures, plate, &c., appeared to fluctuate, but that after that date the impression left on her mind was that it was his intention to dispossess his eldest son of whatever he could keep from him. An undated memorandum in the testator's writing was produced, in which it was stated that he wished to leave his furniture, pictures, and plate to his wife and two younger children. The testator never made any statement to his wife as to the disposition of his unsettled real estate or his other personal property:—Held, that the wife took the residuary real and personal estate absolutely for her own benefit. Briggs v. Penny (post, col. 1468) distinguished. Clancarty v. Clancarty, 31 L. R., Ir. 530—C. A.

A., on his death-bed, sent for B., and told him that he had made his will, leaving all to B.; and that the will would be found in his desk, and a letter with it. The will and letter were found in the place indicated, and by the will the testator's property was left absolutely to B. The letter, which was addressed to B., commenced in the following terms:—"Seeing so much litigation and quarrelling arise in consequence of property being left in many hands, to prevent same in my own case I have thought it best to invest the whole of mine in your hands, as you will see by the inclosed will; and, well knowing you will carry out my intentions to the best of your ability, I now state them." The letter then contained a number of pecuniary gifts, including a gift of an annuity of 10*l.* per annum to X., and continued: "After arranging for the due payment of the foregoing in whatever manner you may think best, I wish the remainder of my property to go to yourself and to my brothers in equal proportions, and to be sold or not as you may consider best for the benefit of all parties. I do not wish you to act strictly to the foregoing instructions, but leave it entirely to your own good judgment to do as you think I would, if living, and as the parties are deserving; and, as it is not my wish that you should say anything about this document, there cannot be any fault found with you by any of the parties should you not act in strict accordance with it." To the letter was annexed a postscript, in which A. stated that he felt that he "might not be justified in making more bequests, lest the property should not turn out so as to leave a sufficient surplus after paying them"; and the postscript concluded in these words: "Having written the foregoing in a hasty manner, and perhaps in such a way as you may not clearly understand it, I leave it to yourself to carry out the intentions as you may think best; and should the property not yield sufficient at first to pay the annuities and leave a good surplus, you can defer as many of them as you find least deserving, and can best afford to wait until the outer park becomes more productive":—Held, that the letter did not contain a trust in favour of X. that could be enforced in a court of equity. M'Cormick v. Grogan, Ir. R. 1 Eq. 313; L. R. 4 H. L. 82; 17 W. R. 961.

Where Trust accepted, but Terms not communicated during Life of Testator.]—A testator gave a policy of assurance to two trustees, "to hold the same upon uses appointed by letter signed by them and myself." No such letter existed at the date of the will, but the testator had previously asked the trustees, who had consented, to accept the bequest for the benefit of persons and objects then named by the testator. Long after the date of his will, the testator wrote a letter, addressed to his executors, stating that he had, by his will, left the policy to the two trustees, to be delivered up to them for the purposes they had agreed to carry out. At the same time the testator signed an unattested memorandum, declaring the trusts on which the trustees were to hold the policy given to them by his will. The trustees retained the letter and the memorandum until after the testator's death. Upon a claim by one of the persons beneficially interested under the memorandum against the executors and trustees:—Held, that the testator could not prospectively create for himself a power to dispose of property by an instrument not duly executed as a will; and that the letter would not operate as a gift inter vivos, and that the trustees held the proceeds of the policy in trust for the residuary legatees under the testator's will. Johnson v. Ball, 5 De G. & Sm. 85; 21 L. J., Ch. 210; 16 Jur. 538.

A testator gave certain legacies to A. M. by his will, and by a codicil bequeathed to him a stud of horses and 10,000*l.*, in terms importing an absolute gift, which the testator declared to be "in addition to all the benefits given to him by my will." But by a letter addressed to, and duly received and answered by, A. M., the testator stated that he had left a letter with his solicitor expressing a wish that the 10,000*l.*, which he described as left for that purpose, should be settled on H. M. and F. M. for their joint use in the event of their intermarrying. No such letter was left with his solicitor or any one else:—Held, that parol evidence as to the intentions of the testator was not admissible; held, also, that the sum of 10,000*l.* was bequeathed upon trust, and that A. M. could not in any event take it beneficially. Baillie v. Wallace, 17 W. R. 221.

A. B. instructed his solicitor to prepare for him a will leaving all his property to the solicitor himself absolutely, but to be held and disposed of by him according to written directions to be subsequently given, and a will was prepared and executed accordingly, under which the solicitor was universal legatee and sole executor. No such directions were, however, given to the solicitor by the testator in his lifetime, but after his death an unattested paper was found by which the testator stated his wish that X. Y. should have all his property except a small sum of money which he gave to the solicitor. The solicitor claimed no beneficial interest in the testator's property except to the extent of his legacy, and claimed to hold the rest of the property as trustee for X. Y.:—Held, that, as the testator had not in his own lifetime communicated to the solicitor the object of the trust, no valid trust in favour of X. Y. had been constituted, and accordingly that the solicitor held the property as trustee for the next of kin of the testator. Boyes, In re, Boyes v. Carritt, 53 L. J., Ch. 654; 26 Ch. D. 531; 50 L. T. 581; 32 W. R. 630.

Evidence of Communication.] — A testator having declared, by parol, to his residuary legatee, certain trusts, to which he wished 2,000*l.* to be applied, afterwards made a codicil, stating that he had instructed the residuary legatee as to the disposition of his property:—Held, that the parol trusts could be enforced against the personal representative of the residuary legatee. Att.-Gen. v. Dillon, 13 Ir. Ch. R. 127.

—— Parol Evidence when Admitted.]—Parol evidence is admissible to prove that a legacy has been bequeathed upon a secret trust, entirely or partially undisclosed upon the face of the will, when, at or before the execution of the will, the trust has been communicated by the testator to the legatee and has been accepted by the latter. A will directed a pecuniary legacy to be disposed of by the legatee in a manner of which he alone should be cognisant, and as contained in a memorandum which the testator should leave with him. It was proved by parol evidence that, before the execution of the will, the testator had verbally informed the legatee that he intended to bequeath the legacy in trust for a person whom he then named, and that the legatee had consented to accept the legacy for this purpose, and had promised the testator to carry out his wishes respecting it. The residuary legatees of the testator having claimed the benefit of the legacy:—Held, that a valid trust for the person named by the testator had attached to the bequest. Riordan v. Banon, Ir. R. 10 Eq. 469.

A testator, who died in 1879, by his will dated in the same year gave his residuary real and personal property to his executors on trust to convert and pay the proceeds of such conversion "to my friends A. and B. in equal shares, and I bequeath the said proceeds to the said A. and B., their executors, administrators, and assigns, absolutely, in the full confidence that they will carry out my wishes in respect thereof." Both

A. and B. survived the testator, but were dead when the action to administer his estate was begun :—Held, that parol evidence of a conversation, in which the testator told the witness that he had communicated his wish to benefit a charity to one of the legatees, was inadmissible: —Held, therefore, that A. and B. took an absolute interest in the legacy free from any trust for charity ; and that the legacy was payable to their representatives in moieties. Downing's Estate, In re, 60 L. T. 140.

A testator who died in January, 1885, by his will dated in December, 1884, bequeathed to his friends A. and B., the sum of 500*l.* free of legacy duty to be raised and be paid out of his pure personalty, "relying, but not by way of trust, upon their applying the said sum in or towards the object or objects privately communicated to them" by him. The executors objected to pay over the bequest, on the ground that there was a secret trust, and that such trust appeared to be an illegal one. The legatee accordingly applied to the court to order payment of the legacy. The executors tendered affidavits to shew that the bequest was upon a trust. The legatees objected that the court could not go beyond the terms of the will :—Held, that the evidence was admissible. Russell v. Jackson (10 Hare, 204) followed. Spencer's Will, In re, 57 L. T. 519—C. A.

Parol admitted of declaration of devisee to prove she was only trustee. Strode v. Winchester, Dick. 397.

Though there can be no parol declaration of a trust since 29 Car. 2, yet parol evidence is proper in avoidance of fraud. Hutchins v. Lee, 1 Atk. 448.

Effect of Partial Execution of Trust—Statute of Frauds.]—A., by will, gave lands to S., and having afterwards purchased other lands, he on his death-bed desired B., his heir-at-law, not to hinder S. from enjoying the new purchased lands, though he had not by any writing declared the trust for S. B. suffered S. to enjoy the lands eleven years, and then pretended he thought the after-purchased lands had passed by the will :—Decreed, that this was out of the statute of frauds, and that B. letting S. enjoy it so long was an execution of the trust, and though no express fraud was proved against B. (as in Lester v. Foxcroft, Colles's P. C. 108), yet the possession for eleven years was a strong presumption that he suffered it in execution of the testator's declaration. Harris v. Horwell, Gilb. Eq. R. 11.

Right of Trustee to Legal Estate.]—A devise of land to A. upon the face of the will for his own benefit, but really upon a secret trust assented to by him for a charity, vests the legal estate in A., subject only to a resulting trust for the testator's real representative. Therefore, where a testator devised his residuary real estate to trustees upon a secret agreed trust for a charity, and his heir-at-law was not known :—Held, as between the crown and persons claiming under the surviving trustee, that the legal estate was well devised, and that the former could therefore establish no claim by escheat. The court considered itself bound, by the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 42, to decide the question as to the legal effect of the devise, and accordingly made a declaration as to the legal right, dismissed the attorney-general from the suit, and directed inquiries as to the heir. Sweeting v. Sweeting, 3 N. R. 240 ; 33 L. J., Ch. 211 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 31 ; 9 L. T. 783 ; 12 W. R. 239.

Where Object of Trust Fails.]—Where a testatrix left the residue of her property, including large real estate, to joint tenants, and the evidence shewed that the joint devisees, though not legally trustees, considered themselves under a moral obligation to apply the property to charitable purposes according to the wish of the testatrix :—Held, that the joint devisees were trustees for the heir-at-law and next of kin of the testatrix. Jones v. Badley, L. R. 3 Ch. 362 ; 19 L. T. 106 ; 16 W. R. 713.

Where Bequest prevented by Promise made to Testator.]—Where a son promised to pay his father's legacies, if he would forbear to alter his will, such promise shall be enforced. Chamberlaine v. Chamberlaine, 2 Free. C. C. 34.

Semble, it is said to be the constant course of the court to make decrees upon promises of this nature. Ib.

Provision by will increased, upon evidence of the testator's request to the executor and residuary legatee, and his promise, upon which the testator refused to make a new will, and said he would leave it to the generosity of the executor. Barrow v. Greenough, 3 Ves. 152.

Devise to L., in consideration of her promise to give, &c., is a trust. Clifton v. Lambe, Ambl. 519.

Under certain circumstances verbal promises will bind men in equity to the performance of them ; as where a son promised his father to pay his sister's portions, if he would not by will direct timber to be felled to raise them. Dutton v. Poole, 1 Vent. 318.

Relief granted on fraud, in not performing a promise, relying on which, the testator forbore to bequeath. Chamberlain v. Agar, 2 V. & B. 262.

Discovery compelled where devise was obtained, or prevented by undertaking of devisee or heir, to do certain acts in favour of individuals, and relief upon the ground of fraud. Stickland v. Aldridge, 9 Ves. 519 ; 7 R. R. 292.

Executor promised his testator to pay plaintiff 100*l.* legacy, and said he need not put it in his will ; after the testator's death, he said he would not pay it :—Decree for payment out of assets. Reech v. Kennigate, Ambl. 67. S. C., nom. Reech v. Kennegal, 1 Ves. 123 ; 1 Wils. Ch. 227.

A copyholder by his will intending to give the greatest part of his estate to his godson, and the other part to his wife, the wife persuades him to nominate her to the whole, and that she would give the godson the part designed for him ; decreed against the wife notwithstanding the statute of frauds and perjuries. Devenish v. Baines, Pre. Ch. 4.

A. devises land to his brother, and makes him executor, and wills, that out of the personal estate, and half a year's rent of his personal estate, he should pay his legacies, and give an annuity to his nephew to maintain him at college. It being proved that the brother promised the testator to pay the annuity, otherwise he would have charged his real estate therewith, decreed the real estate to be charged with the annuity. Oldham v. Litchfield, 2 Vern. 506 ; 2 Free. C. C. 284.

—— Evidence of Contract.]—A sister, in a writing addressed to her brother, after stating, "As you have kindly promised, if I do not make a will, my wishes shall be fulfilled," expressed her wish that A. and others should have the same therein specified. She died intestate, and the brother inherited her property. There was some evidence of the brother's having seen the writing in her life, and of his having afterwards expressed an intention to carry his sister's wishes into effect, but he died without having done so:—Held, that there was not sufficient evidence of a contract on the part of the brother to enable the court to enforce the performance of the sister's wishes. Chester v. Urwick, 23 Beav. 407.

Where Bequest Revoked in Consequence of Fraudulent Misrepresentations to Testator—Jurisdiction to affix Trust.—Whether, where A., a residuary legatee, by artful and fraudulent misrepresentations to the testator of the character of B., induces the testator to revoke a legacy given to B., the benefit of which revocation results to A., this court has jurisdiction to affix a trust on A. in favour of B. to the extent of the fruit of the fraud possessed by A., or whether the matter belongs exclusively to the ecclesiastical court; and, secondly, whether such trust can be declared after a sentence of the ecclesiastical court, in which the question of undue influence was in issue, quære:—Held, in the affirmative by the Master of the Rolls, and in the negative by the Lord Chancellor. The parties thereupon appealed to the house of lords. Allen v. M'Pherson, 1 Ph. 133; 12 L. J., Ch. 97; 7 Jur. 49. Affirmed, 1 H. L. Cas. 191; 11 Jur. 785.

Will refraining from Exercise of Power—Effect of Notice and Acquiescence on Rights of Parties interested.]—A., by a voluntary deed, assigned all the personal estate which he was then, or might at any time afterwards, be possessed of or entitled to, upon trust to pay the interest, &c., to himself for life, and after his decease to such persons as he should appoint by will, for their lives, and subject thereto, to pay the principal to his next of kin who would be living at his decease, his, her, or their executors, &c. Soon afterwards the testator, by his will, gave some legacies, and gave the residue to the persons by name who were his next of kin at the execution of the deed, and at his death; upon whose bill, claiming under the deed, an account of the trust estate received by the trustees, and of the personal estate, &c., and to set aside the legacies, it was held that the power was not executed by the will; but one of the plaintiffs being clearly affected with notice, and acquiescence in the plan of giving the legacies, instead of executing the power, the cause was ordered to stand over, with liberty to file a bill to establish the legacies; the court inclining, in case the other plaintiff could be affected with notice, at all events to apply the interest of the personal estate, during the life of the legatees, in payment of the legacies; they were afterwards paid under a compromise. Griffin v. Nanson, 4 Ves. 343.

b. Precatory Trusts.

General Principles—Certainty Necessary.]—When a testator expresses a desire as to the disposition of property, and the objects to which he refers are certain, the desire so expressed amounts to a command. Cary v. Cary, 2 Sch. & Lef. 189.

It seems that any words of a testator intimating a request, wish, desire, recommendation &c., are sufficient to create a trust; provided there be certainty of the gift and of the object to be benefited thereby. Harding v. Glyn, 1 Atk. 469, n.

Bequest in will will raise a trust, if the objects and property are described with such certainty that the court can execute it; but otherwise the devisee takes absolutely. Eade v. Eade, 5 Madd. 119; 21 R. R. 284.

It seems that any words of a testator intimating a "request, wish, desire, recommendation," &c., are sufficient to create a trust, provided there be certainty of the gift and of the object to be benefited thereby. Brest v. Offley, 1 Ch. Rep. 246. Pary v. Juxon, 3 Ch. Rep. 38.

Words of desire will raise a trust where the property and object are certain. Pierson v. Garnet, 2 Bro. C. C. 38; Pre. Ch. 201. And see S. C., id. 226.

Words of recommendation or precatory, or expressing hope, &c., if the objects and subject are certain, are imperative and create a trust. Paul v. Compton, 8 Ves. 380; 7 R. R. 81.

Words of recommendation are not considered imperative unless the objects and subjects are certain. Moggridge v. Thackwell, 7 Ves. 85; 13 Ves. 416; 6 R. R. 76.

No trust arises on words of request or recommendation, unless the objects and subjects are certain. Morice v. Durham (Bishop), 10 Ves. 536; 7 R. R. 232.

Precatory words held imperative where the object and subject are certain. Dashwood v. Peyton, 18 Ves. 41; 11 R. R. 145.

Recommendation in a will, where the object and subject are certain, amounts to trust. Forbes v. Ball, 3 Mer. 664.

Words accompanying a gift or bequest expressive of confidence, or belief, or desire, or hope, that a particular application will be made of such bequest, will be deemed to import a trust upon these conditions—first, that they are so used as to exclude all option or discretion in a party who is to act as to his being according to them or not; secondly, the subject must be certain; and, thirdly, the object expressed must not be too vague or indefinite to be enforced. Vagueness in the object will unquestionably furnish reason for holding that no trust was intended, yet this may be countervailed by other considerations, which shew that a trust was intended, while, at the same time, such trust is not sufficiently certain and definite to be valid and effectual. Briggs v. Penny, 3 Mac. & G. 546; 21 L. J., Ch. 265, at p. 273; 16 Jur. 93. Affirming 3 De G. & Sm. 525.

The maxim, that when words expressive of hope, desire, or request are used by a testator, there must be a certain subject and a certain object to create a trust, explained. The court having to consider whether the precatory words are mere words of recommendation, or whether they amount to an imperative direction creating a trust, if it finds an uncertainty in reference to the subject given, or the object to be benefited, infers that the words are used, not to create a trust, but as mere words of recommendation. But if the court finds that a definite object was absolutely intended, although that object may from circumstances not be ascertainable, and in that sense uncertain, in such a case a trust is the clear result, and the donee, as such, takes no beneficial interest. By will, under a power, a married woman appointed "13,000*l.* to go as follows: that is to say, the whole to my husband absolutely; but it is my request to him, that after reserving for his own absolute use and benefit 2,000*l.*, and applying all the interest to his own use and benefit during his natural life, he will make such disposition of the remainder, by deed, will, or settlement, as he may deem most desirable to carry out my wishes, often expressed to him by word." She had not, in fact, expressed her wishes:—Held, that as to the 11,000*l.*, a trust was intended, and that though the object was not ascertainable, the husband was excluded from taking any beneficial interest. If in such a case the testatrix had declared by word that "her own relatives, of different degrees, or some of them, should be benefited," such a description would be too indefinite to raise a trust for a particular class. Such a declaration could not be imported into the will for the purpose of giving a beneficial interest to the husband. The will contained also the following residuary clause: "As to all and singular other my property," she gave the same to her husband:—Held, that thereby the 11,000*l.* passed to the husband. Bernard v. Minshull. Johns. 276; 28 L. J., Ch. 649; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 931.

Where property is given absolutely, with a recommendation as to its disposal in favour of others, in such terms as ought to be construed imperative, and the objects of recommendation are certain:—Held, to create a trust in their favour; but if the terms are such as that the words are not to be intended as imperative, or if the donee have a discretionary power, as to withdrawing the benefit from the objects, or if they are not clearly ascertained, no trust is created: where, therefore, a party, who acquired by suffering a recovery a fee of settled family estates, devised the same, with limitations, in favour of the male line, and, after several legacies to dependants, declared his trust in the liberality of his successors to reward any other of his servants and tenants, according to their deserts, and to their justice in continuing the estates in the male succession, according to the will of the founder of the family:—Held, that the terms were not sufficiently imperative, nor the subjects to be effected, nor the interests to be enjoyed, sufficiently defined to create a trust for the male line, and that the devisee took the estates unfettered by any trusts in their favour. The principles of construction as to words of recommendation considered in the judgment. Knight v. Knight, 3 Beav. 148; 9 L. J., Ch. 354; 4 Jur. 839. Affirmed sub nom. Knight v. Boughton, 11 Cl. & F. 513; 8 Jur. 923. See Dorchester (Lord) v. Effingham (Earl), 3 Beav. 180, n.

Where in a document there is, first, an absolute gift to a particular individual, and then a subsequent clause containing words of belief, desire, or hope, that a particular application shall be made of such bequest, the court will refuse to establish a precatory trust unless the words of the subsequent clause are clear, definite and imperative. Testator made his will as follows: "I bequeath to my wife all my land in K."; and other property, "to be held by her for her own and all my children's use and benefit. But I leave it entirely in her power to fix the portion that each of my children is to get out of my property," and appointed his wife executrix:—Held, that the will must be read as containing a direct gift to testator's wife and children, and not as imposing a precatory trust on her; that the power to determine the children's shares negatived the idea of a joint tenancy, but did not cut down the absolute gift to the wife and children; that the wife was under the will a trustee of the lands for herself and her children with a large discretionary power of determining what should be the children's portions when their shares came, if ever, to be allotted; and that therefore the cause shewn should be allowed. Byrne's Estate, In re, 29 L. R., Ir. 250—C. A.

—— Doctrine not to be Extended.]—The doctrine of precatory trusts is not to be extended, and, in considering whether precatory words create a trust, the court will not look only to particular expressions, but see whether on the whole will the testator's intention was to create a trust, and regard will be had to any embarrassment and difficulty which would arise from a trust. Diggles, In re, Gregory v. Edmondson, infra.

—— Presence of Precatory Words does not necessarily negative Trust.]—Where a devise is made in terms which do not necessarily amount to an absolute gift, so that, though not technically accurate, they may fairly be considered to create a trust, such a construction is not negatived by the presence of precatory words. Godfrey v. Godfrey, 2 N. R. 16; 8 L. T. 200; 11 W. R. 554.

Such a devise does not come within that class of cases in which it is sought to construe words of absolute gift as creating a trust, by reason of the addition of precatory words. Ib.

A testator expressed his wish that property bequeathed to his wife should be used as to her seemed best for her own and her children's welfare:—Held, on demurrer, that the widow was not absolutely entitled. Ib.

—— Duration of Trust.]—A bequest on trust for the testator's wife for life for her use and benefit and for the maintenance and education of his children constitutes a trust for the maintenance and education of the children even as against the trustee in bankruptcy of the widow, and such trust does not terminate as regards maintenance, nor necessarily as regards education, upon the attainment of majority or marriage of the children. Booth, In re, Booth v. Booth, 63 L. J., Ch. 560; [1894] 2 Ch. 282; 8 R. 256; 42 W. R. 613.

Where Uncertainty as to Object of Trust.]—Bequest to A. B., "trusting she would use it" to indefinite purposes, creates no trust for those purposes. Curtis v. Rippon, 5 Madd. 434; 21 R. R. 327.

A devise to A. for life, with liberty to leave the same to whom she thought most deserving of it, recommending to her to have a due regard to the testatrix's mother's relations, is not mandatory as to the objects of the appointment. Randal v. Hearle, 1 Anstr. 124.

Words of confidence, desire, or request, in order to raise a trust, not only attach on a precise subject of property, but also descirbe with precision the objects of bounty. In this case, a bequest of leaseholds to a brother, "hoping he will continue them in the family," was held insufficient. Harland v. Trigg, 1 Bro. C. C. 142.

Testator by his will gave certain shares of freehold and leasehold houses to his wife, for her sole use and benefit, begging and requesting, that at her death she would give and bequeath the same in such shares as she should think proper, and unto such members of her own family as she should think most deserving of the same. He gave all his moneys in the funds, and all the money he might be entitled to, for her sole use and benefit, begging and requesting that at her death she would give and bequeath what should be remaining, in such sums as she should think proper, until such members of her own and his family as she should think most deserving, and were entitled to the same. He made a codicil, by which he gave in terms his residuary estate to his wife:—Held, that both as to the freehold and leasehold property and the moneys, there was no trust, but the wife took absolutely. Green v. Marsden, 1 Drew. 646; 1 Eq. R. 437; 22 L. J., Ch. 1092; 1 W. R. 511.

A testator, having given an annuity to one of his next of kin, and expressed a reason for giving nothing to the others, gave the residue of his property to his wife, recommending to her, and not doubting that she would consider, his near relations, as he would have done if he had survived her:—Held, that there was no trust for the next of kin, but that the wife took the residue absolutely. Sale v. Moore, 1 Sim. 534.

A. M. devised certain estates to his nephew R. M., and his heirs, "not entertaining the least doubt but that he will in due time, and upon the first proper occasion, take care not only to have the said estates, so devised to him by me, but my paternal estates, settled in such manner, that the said estates may continue in the male line of our family, and in our name and blood." At the death of the testator there were seven persons of the male line of his family, and of his name and blood alive, one of whom was the plaintiff's paternal grandfather, who was descended from the paternal great-grandfather of the testator:—Held, that the objects were sufficiently defined and certain to enable the court to execute the trusts created by the words of recommendation in the will, and that the court in executing the trusts might go into the ascending line, and was not confined to the descendants of the father of the testator; a general demurrer to the bill for want of equity was therefore overruled. Malone v. O'Connor, Ll. & G. t. Plunk. 465.

A testator bequeaths to "his only son 60*l.* a year for ever, also to provide for the two daughters of H. E., and the remainder of his property to the two children of S. A.":—Held, that, under these words, the two daughters of H. E. do not take any benefit. Abraham v. Alman, 1 Russ. 509; 25 R. R. 125.

Testator gave all his property to his son, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, for his and their own use and benefit, "well knowing that he would discharge the trusts the testator reposed in him, by remembering his (the testator's) sons and daughters":—Held, that no trust was created, by reason of the vagueness of the words. Bardswell v. Bardswell, 9 Sim. 319; 7 L. J., Ch. 268.

A testator gave whatsoever property or effects he might die possessed of, after his debts were paid, or might become entitled to, to his wife, and appointed her sole executrix of his will; "and my reason for so doing is the constant abuse of trustees which I daily witness among men; at the same time trusting she will, from the love she bears to me and our dear children, so husband and take care of what property there may be for their good; and should she marry again, then I wish she may convey to trustees, in the most secure manner possible, what property she may then possess, for the benefit of the children, as they may severally need or deserve, taking justice and affection for her guide"; and at the conclusion of his will, he gave the capital of his business to his wife, trusting that she would deal justly and properly to and by all their children:—Held, that no trust was created for the children. Pope v. Pope, 10 Sim. 1.

Testator, after reciting that he was desirous of making a suitable provision for his wife as well as for his daughter and grandchild, in order to mark his unbounded confidence in his wife, and his belief that she would be actuated by the most maternal regard towards his child, gave her all his property for her own use, benefit, and disposal absolutely, implicitly relying on her attachment to his daughter and grandchild. He then directed his executors to sell his property, and to invest the proceeds in government or real securities in his wife's name alone, or jointly with his executors (with power to change the securities), "to hold the same unto my wife for her own absolute use, benefit, and disposal: and whereas I have hereby manifested abundant proof of entire confidence in my said dear wife by thus giving her the sovereign control over the whole of my property for her sole use and benefit, which she will duly appreciate accordingly; but in so doing I nevertheless earnestly conjure her, under the advice of my executors, to proceed forthwith to make ample provision, by deed or will, for our only child and grandchild." The will concluded with a power to the wife, who was executrix, and to the executors, to retain their expenses out of the testator's estate:—Held, that no trust was created by the will in favour of either the daughter or grand-daughter. Winch v. Brutton, 14 Sim. 372; 8 Jur. 1086.

A testator devised and bequeathed his real and personal estate to his widow, "to and for her own use and benefit absolutely, having full confidence in her sufficient and judicious provision for my dear children":—Held, that there was no trust in favour of the children. Fox v. Fox, 27 Beav. 301.

Under a bequest by a husband of "all my property and effects, whatsoever and wheresoever, unto my dear wife (trusting that she will do justice to any children we may have) for her own absolute use and benefit," she is entitled to the property absolutely. Ellis v. Ellis, 44 L. J., Ch. 225; 31 L. T. 875; 23 W. R. 382.

A testator gave all his real and personal property to his widow, her heirs, &c., "absolutely and for ever, in the full assurance and confident hope" that she would bring up, educate, and provide for his children, as it would have been his intention if living:—Held, also, that though the words "full assurance and confident hope" would create a precatory trust, yet the trusts were too obscure to carry into effect, and that the widow took absolutely. Macnab v. Whitbread, 17 Beav. 299; 1 W. R. 473.

A testator gave all the residue of his property to his wife, "her heirs and assigns, for ever, being fully satisfied that she would dispose of it, by will or otherwise, in a fair and equitable manner, to their united relatives, bearing in mind that his relatives were generally in better circumstances than hers" :—Held, that no precatory trust was created. Reeves v. Baker, 18 Beav. 372; 2 Eq. R. 476; 23 L. J., Ch. 599; 18 Jur. 588; 2 W. R. 354.

Testator in India gives all his estates and effects to A. in England, in trust, and directs his property to be remitted to him; and, after several legacies, he gives A. 800*l.*, and requests him, as soon as the property is remitted, to lay out the same in the funds or other securities, which shall appear most advantageous for those who shall be benefited by it hereafter. The 800*l.* is a benefited legacy, not in trust. Wadley v. North, 3 Ves. 364.

A husband gave, devised, and bequeathed all his real and personal estate and effects whatsoever "unto and to the absolute use of my dear wife, her heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, in full confidence that she will do what is right as to the absolute disposal thereof between my children, either in her lifetime or by her will after her decease." The construction of this gift was submitted to the court by all the beneficiaries, and a declaration was asked as to the respective rights of the testator's widow and children. The widow was in possession of the property which formed the subject of the gift, and all the children were sui juris. The court, under the above circumstances, refused to make any further declaration than that the widow was lawfully in possession, and made no order as to costs. Smith v. Gibson, 25 L. T. 559; 20 W. R. 88.

A testator bequeaths the whole of his property to Lady C., the wife of his elder brother, "for her to manage and appropriate in the best manner for the welfare of her family." He then mentions that he makes this disposition on account of the exceedingly embarrassed circumstances of his elder brother, which might leave nothing for his family; to obviate which the testator adds, that all his property is to be placed in trustees' hands, for Lady C.'s sole and separate use :—Held, that there was no trust for the children of the elder brother; and that Lady C. was entitled to the fund absolutely. Crawfurd v. Crawfurd, 3 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 105.

A. gave two-thirds of his residuary property to his wife, to be at her sole and entire disposal, for the maintenance of herself and such child or children as he might leave; and as to the other one-third he bequeathed it to his wife, "being well assured that she will husband the means that may be left to her by me with every prudence and care, for the sake of herself and any children that I may leave by her" :—Held, that as to the one-third, the widow took it absolutely; and as to the two-thirds, that she took a life interest only coupled with a trust for the maintenance of an only child, a married daughter, if she should ever require to be maintained by her. Scott v. Key, 35 Beav. 291; 6 N. R. 349; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 819; 13 W. R. 1030.

A will in these words: "I give and bequeath all my property of what kind soever that I may die possessed of to my dearly-beloved wife, well knowing her sense of justice and love to her family, and feeling perfect confidence that she will manage same to the best advantage for the benefit of her children," does not create a precatory trust for the children, but the wife takes all the property absolutely. Greene v. Greene, 3 Ir. Eq. R. 90; 17 W. R. 487.

A testator gave all his real and personal estate to his wife and her heirs absolutely, "relying on her doing what is right" :—Held, that the words were too vague to create a trust, and that the wife took the property absolutely. Crockford, In re, 21 L. T. 85; 17 W. R. 1004.

An aunt gave all her personal estate to trustees upon trust, after payment of her funeral and testamentary expenses, debts, and legacies, to hold the residue "in trust for such of my nieces A. and B. as shall be living at my death, my desire being that they shall distribute such residue as they think will be most agreeable to my wishes." The nieces both survived the testatrix :—Held, that they took the residue for their own benefit. Stead v. Mellor, 46 L. J., Ch. 880; 5 Ch. D. 225; 36 L. T. 498; 25 W. R. 508.

A husband left his real and personal property to his wife for her life, with power to dispose of all the property, both real and personal, as she might judge best and wisest, he relying with confidence on her discretion, and that she would make such a distribution or disposal of it as would thoroughly accord with his wishes on the subject, with all of which she was perfectly acquainted. There was some evidence of the testator having communicated some wishes to his wife, but none as to what they were :—Held, that the terms of the gift to the wife did not amount to a precatory trust, and that she took the property, both real and personal, absolutely. Reid v. Atkinson, Ir. R. 5 Eq. 373.

Where Uncertainty as to Property the Subject of Alleged Trust.]—Devise to testator's wife, "not doubting she will give what shall be left to my grandchildren," not sufficiently certain to raise a trust. For such purpose, the objects must not only be defined, but the subject of property precisely ascertained, so as to be incapable of diminution by the party. Wynne v. Hawkins, 1 Bro. C. C. 179.

No trust under words of recommendation and confidence applied to an uncertain subject; as what shall be left after the death of a person to whom the property is given in the first instance. Forbes v. Ball, 3 Mer. 437.

A testator bequeaths to his wife the residue of his estate, requesting that she would at her death leave three legacies of 200*l.* each to three persons, whom he describes, and that she would leave the remainder of her property to his two nephews, in such proportions as she thought proper :—Held, that, subject to the three legacies, the widow was entitled to the residue absolutely, and that no trust as to any portion of it was raised in favour of the nephews. Eade v. Eade, 4 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 44.

R., by will, gave all the remainder of her property to H., his heirs and assigns, for ever, as she had full confidence that, if he should die without issue, he would, after providing for his widow during her life, leave the bulk of her residuary estate to four parties named. H.'s wife being dead, he left all his property to trustees, to convert and hold the same, after payment of debts and legacies, in trust for the objects named in R.'s will and six others. On the question whether H. took the property clothed with a precatory trust :—Held, that he did not, but took the absolute interest, the word "bulk" applying to a portion only, and not being a certain fixed subject. Palmer v. Simmonds, 2 Drew. 221; 2 W. R. 313.

A husband gave his wife the whole of his real and personal property for her sole use and benefit, and continued, "It is my wish that whatever property my wife might possess at her death be equally divided between my children": —Held, that this was not a gift coupled with a trust, and that the widow took an absolute interest in the property. Parnall v. Parnall, 9 Ch. D. 96; 26 W. R. 851.

A testatrix left all her property to M., "to be disposed of by him as to him might appear just, having every confidence he would act fairly and in accordance with her wishes." In a conversation between the testatrix and M., previously to the date of the will, she said to him she would wish him to give some of her property to the plaintiffs, but without specifying any particular portion:—Held, that no trust binding upon M. was created by the will. Creagh v. Murphy, Ir. R. 7 Eq. 182.

A testator gave to his widow the whole of his real and personal property, "feeling confident that she will act justly to our children in dividing the same when no longer required by her":—Held, that the widow took an absolute interest, and that the doctrine of precatory trusts did not apply. Mussoorie Bank v. Raynor, 51 L. J., P. C. 72; 7 App. Cas. 321; 46 L. T. 633; 31 W. R. 17.

Testator bequeathed 10,000*l.* to his daughter A., the wife of B., recommending her and her husband to settle it, together with such sum of money as the husband should choose, upon A. and her children:—Held, that a trust was created, the uncertainty of the addition not affecting the primary sum, and that the benefit to the children did not fail by the death of A. in the lifetime of the testator. Ford v. Fowler, 3 Beav. 146; 9 L. J., Ch. 352; 4 Jur. 958.

A. bequeathed to his two sons all his property, real and personal, to have and to hold the same in the most absolute manner; and he declared it to be his will and intention that his sons should, at their discretion and according to their own judgment, allocate to the other members of his family, being his lawfully begotten children, such portions of the property and goods, be the same more or less, as to them should seem fit and suitable; and he appointed his sons his executors:—Held, coupling the will with an admission in the petition by the sons of the testator's intention, that a trust had been created, and that the sons were trustees for the other children of the testator, as to the entire property of the testator, both real and personal. Gray v. Gray, 11 Ir. Ch. R. 218.

A testator, by will, gave the residue of his personal estate to trustees, upon trust to his wife for life; and after her death, for his nephew R. absolutely. After his death, a letter in his own handwriting, but without date, was found among his papers, addressed to R., and he therein, after requesting that it might be accepted in explanation of his will, lest there should be anything not fully explanatory of his intention in the terms of such will, expressed a wish that his property, at the death of his wife, "should be R.'s." He also expressed a wish that R. should educate some one nephew as a physician, and bequeath to such nephew all, or the greater part, of the property bequeathed to R. by the testator, adding that he wished finally to benefit such nephew as R. might select as his successor. This letter was admitted to probate. The testator died, leaving his wife and R. surviving. R. by will gave the property bequeathed to him by the testator to his (R.'s) brothers and sisters:—Held, that although the letter addressed to R. was a distinct testamentary instrument, it was recommendatory only to, and not obligatory on, R., and that it was not sufficiently definite to destroy the effect of the absolute gift to R. contained in the will. Pinkhard's Trust, In re, 27 L. J., Ch. 422; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1041—L.JJ.

Testator gave the residue of his personal estate to his wife, desiring her to provide for his daughter, A., out of the same, as long as she, his wife, should live, and, at her decease, to dispose of what shall be left among his children, in such manner as she shall judge most proper. This is not an absolute trust for the children after the death of the wife. Pushman v. Filliter, 3 Ves. 7.

No trust, under words of recommendation and confidence, applied to an uncertain subject, as what shall be left after the death of a person to whom the property is given in the first instance. Tibbits v. Tibbits, 19 Ves. 656; Jac. 317; 23 R. R. 79.

B. A. by will gave five shares of freeholds and leaseholds which belonged to him, to his wife for her sole use, begging and requesting that at her death she would give the same in such shares as she should think proper to such members of her family as she should think most deserving of the same; with a like gift of all moneys, adding the words "what shall be remaining." The widow having left the mass of her property to a stranger —on the question whether there was an implied trust:—Held, that there was not; the words "share" and "sole use" shewing that the beneficial interest was given, and the request only applied to what might remain. Green v. Marsden, 1 Eq. R. 437; 1 Drew. 646; 22 L. J., Ch. 1092; 1 W. R. 511.

A gift of the yearly interest, dividends, proceeds, and profits, to arise from the shares of the testator in a pottery, shipbuilding yard, shipping trust moneys, effects, and premises, to his wife for her life, for the maintenance, education, and support of herself and his children, and subject to some bequests and trusts for the advancement of the children, a bequest of the residue to the children equally; and the testator particularly recommended, desired, and directed his wife, at his decease, by will or otherwise, to divide or dispose of what money or property she might have saved from the yearly income thereinbefore given to her, amongst all his children in equal shares:—Held, that the attempted disposition of the savings of the widow was in the nature of a precatory gift; but, the widow having taken a beneficial interest, and being empowered to spend the whole, there was no certainty of the subject of the gift, and no trust created of the savings in favour of the children; and that the same, therefore, belonged to the estate of the widow. Cowman v. Harrison, 10 Hare, 234; 22 L. J., Ch. 993; 17 Jur. 313; 1 W. R. 96.

Particular Words — Principle.]—Whether a testator uses terms expressive of his desire, hope, request, &c., or words of command, direction, &c., it is the same thing; in either case he intimates or expresses what his will is, and that ought to be observed, and to prevail. Bute (Earl) v. Stuart, 1 Bro. P. C. 485.

A court of equity will look at the circumstances existing at the date of a will, and, if necessary, construe words importing a trust as an expression of hope or confidence. Quayle v. Davidson, 12 Moore, P. C. 268; 3 L. T. 362; 7 W. R. 164.

If property be given by will absolutely and without restriction, the court will not lightly impose upon it a trust upon mere words of recommendation or confidence. Lawless v. Shaw, Ll. & G. t. Sugd. 164.

"Assurance and Confidence."]—A testator gave all his property to his wife, her heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns for ever; in full assurance and confidence that she would bring up his children in the fear of God, and educate and provide for them as it would have been his intention to do if it had pleased God to spare his life:—Held, to be an absolute gift to the wife. Macnab v. Whitbread, 17 Beav. 299; 1 W. R. 473.

"Beg."]—A testator having stated in his will that he had four shares in the National Bank, and an insurance policy, a bond and half an annuity, gave the bank shares to his sister S., as a trustee for his niece; and having disposed of the other property already mentioned, he bequeathed the "remainder of those effects (all my just debts being paid), if any remain," to his sister, adding, "and I beg she will apportion between the above-named [naming four of his legatees], and as my nephew, John Corbett, has a less secure position in life than his brothers, to him such portion or portions as she shall see fit. I would also wish that she should have power to give some small amounts for charity, especially to L.'s family," &c.:—Held, that his sister took the residue as a trustee for the persons named, and not beneficially. Corbet v. Corbet, Ir. R. 7 Eq. 456.

"In the full Belief."]—A husband, by his will, gave all his property to his wife absolutely for her own sole and separate use, in the full belief that she would so dispose thereof by deed, will, or otherwise, that at her death the whole might be equally divided between his children, share and share alike:—Held, that a precatory trust was created in favour of the children. Fordham v. Speight, 23 W. R. 782.

"Confidence."]—Devise to wife "in confidence" that she will leave, &c., to testator's son, not relievable. Anon., Cary, 22.

Devise and bequest of real and leasehold estates to the devisor's widow and her heirs for ever, "in fullest confidence that after her decease she will devise the property to my family":—Held, an estate for life only, with remainder in trust for the devisor's heir as persona designata. Wright v. Atkyns, 17 Ves. 255; 19 Ves. 299; G. Cooper, 111; 1 V. & B. 313; Turn. & R. 143; 13 R. R. 199.

A testator devised and bequeathed his residuary real and personal estate to his widow "absolutely in the fullest confidence that she" would carry out his wishes in certain particulars—namely, that she would pay the premiums on a policy for 1,000*l.* on her own life, and that she would by her will leave the moneys payable under such policy, and also the moneys payable under a policy for 300*l.* on the testator's life, to his daughter. The policy for 1,000*l.* was the property of the widow; that for 300*l.* belonged to the testator:—Held (Rigby, L.J., dissenting), that the language of the testator was not sufficient to create trusts of the policies in favour of the daughter after the widow's death, or to impose a condition on her, and therefore that she was not, on account of the benefits given to her by the will, put to her election to carry out the wishes of the testator as to the 1,000*l.* policy belonging to her. Wright v. Atkyns (supra) and Lambe v. Eames (infra, col. 1489) discussed. Williams, In re, Williams v. Williams, 66 L. J., Ch. 485; [1897] 2 Ch. 12; 76 L. T. 600; 45 W. R. 519—C. A.

Bequest of all testator's property real and personal to his wife, her heirs, executors, &c., absolutely, for ever, "entertaining as I do, the most entire and implicit confidence that my said dear wife will during her life appropriate the same or the interest thereof with maternal discretion, prudence, and economy, as well towards the maintenance, support, and liberal education of our dear children, as towards the maintenance of herself; and that she will bequeath so much and such part of my said estate and property hereby devised to her as may be by her judicious management preserved for our family unto and equally between and amongst all and every our dear child and children already born, and who may hereafter be born, that shall be living at the time of her decease, and the lawful issue of such of the said children as shall be then dead, in equal shares, but so that the issue of any of the said children who shall have died in the lifetime of my said wife shall only receive in equal proportions, if more than one, the share to which their, his, or her deceased parent would, if living, have been entitled; and if there should be but one such child, or the issue of but one such child, then living, then I should wish the whole to be paid and transferred to such one child, or his or her issue":—Held, that the wife was not absolutely entitled for her own use; that the child of a child dead at the date of the will took a share; but that a grandchild who died in the lifetime of the widow did not. Smith v. Smith, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 967.

See also cases sub Trust and Confidence, infra, col. 1484.

"Under the firm Conviction."]—A testator leaves all his property, real and personal, to his wife, "under the firm conviction that she will dispose of and manage the same for the benefit of our children." On the question what estate the wife took:—Held, that she took nothing but an estate in trust for the children. Semble, where an estate is left to a wife for the benefit of children, there must be words of beneficial enjoyment to confer any estate upon her for her own benefit. Barnes v. Grant, 26 L. J., Ch. 92; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1127; 5 W. R. 14.

"Desire."]—A clause in a will, appointing A. residuary legatee, with the desire that the residuary estate shall be afterwards left by her, in her own and the testator's name, to charitable purposes, does not raise a trust, but operates as an absolute gift. M'Culloch v. M'Culloch, 1 N. R. 535; 11 W. R. 504.

A testator devised all his real estates to his son, in fee, and it was his earnest wish, and he particularly requested his son to keep the devised estates, and all other real estates to which he might become entitled, and not to sell, alien, or dispose of the same, except by way of exchange, or for re-investing the value in the purchase of other estates; and in case his son should die without leaving issue male, it was his (the testator's) anxious desire that he would so settle and devise the same that they might continue in the name of the testator :—Held, that this did not create a valid precatory trust, and that the son was absolute owner in fee-simple of the estates. Hood v. Oglander, 34 Beav. 513 ; 6 N. R. 57 ; 34 L. J., Ch. 528 ; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 498 ; 12 L. T. 626 ; 13 W. R. 705.

A testatrix gave all her property real and personal to her daughter, "her heirs and assigns ; and it is my desire that she allows to A. G. an annuity of 25*l.* during her life, and that A. G. shall, if she desire it, have the use of such portions of my household furniture as may not be required by my daughter." The daughter and her husband were appointed executors :—Held, that no trust or obligation to pay the annuity was imposed upon the daughter, but that there was only a request to the daughter, not binding her in law, to make that provision for A. G. Diggles, In re, Gregory v. Edmondson, 39 Ch. D. 253 ; 59 L. T. 884—C. A.

"Not Doubting."]—Devise, not doubting but she will give, &c., is a trust. Massey v. Sherman, Ambl. 520.

Devise to a nephew in fee, "not doubting, in case he should have no child, but that he will dispose and give my said real estate to the female descendants of my sister, in such part or parts and manner as he shall think fit, in preference to any descendant on his own female line" ; a trust in the event described for the sister's children. Parsons v. Baker, 18 Ves. 476 ; 11 R. R. 237.

"They are hereby Enjoined."]—Bequest as follows : "I give to my brother, in trust for my sisters, M., C. and H., 4,000*l.*, . . . on condition that they will support M. M. ; at the demise of either or any of the above, the survivors or survivor to receive the increased income produced thereby. They are hereby enjoined to take care of my nephew J., as may seem best in the future" :—Held, that the sisters took absolutely as joint tenants ; and that there was no precatory or other trust in favour of the nephew. Moore, In re, Moore v. Roche, 55 L. J., Ch. 418 ; 54 L. T. 231 ; 34 W. R. 343.

Words of Entreaty.]—Words of entreaty in will :—Held, to raise a trust on construction. Prevost v. Clarke, 2 Madd. 458.

—— Of Expectation.]—Words of expectation in a will, not amounting to recommendation, will not create a trust. Lechmere v. Levie, 2 Myl. & K. 197.

"In order that she might provide for."]—A testator left all his property to his wife, in trust for the uses thereafter mentioned. He then bequeathed certain pecuniary legacies, and stated that it was his will that his youngest son P. should live and reside with his mother, and be attentive to her, and directed by her in order that she might by deed or by her last will and testament provide for him in such a manner as to her might seem most expedient and proper ; and he appointed and nominated his said wife his residuary legatee and trustee of his will, in order that she might direct and govern his said children and assist to arrange all matters between them ; and previous to her death—provided that she did not marry again—that she might dispose of the residue of his property to and amongst his said children and provide for his son P. as she might think expedient ; and he directed that if she married again she should cease to be trustee, and receive the sum of 100*l.* only ; and that in such case his son E. should act as trustee in her stead. He nominated his son E. and his wife executor and executrix :—Held, that the testator's wife took the residue absolutely, and that there was no precatory trust in favour of P. Morrin v. Morrin, 19 L. R., Ir. 37.

"Well Knowing that she will."]—The testatrix by her will, after giving among other legacies a sum of 3,000*l.* to S. P. and a like sum of 3,000*l.* in addition for the trouble she would have in acting as executrix, bequeathed all her residuary personal estate and effects unto the said S. P., "well knowing that she will make a good use and dispose of it in a manner in accordance with my views and wishes." The testatrix appointed S. P. sole executrix of her will :—Held, that S. P. did not take the residue for her own benefit, but that the words of the bequest created a trust. Briggs v. Penny, 3 Macn. & G. 546 ; 21 L. J., Ch. 265 ; 16 Jur. 93.

"Recommend."]—A recommendation by a testator to his son to continue his nephews in the occupation of their farms as heretofore, and so long as they continue to manage the same in a good and husband-like manner, and to duly pay their rents, is imperative ; the son decreed to elect, either to continue them as tenants or to make them a compensation for the value of the tenancy out of the property given him by the testator. Tibbits v. Tibbits, Jac. 317 ; 19 Ves. 656 ; 23 R. R. 79.

Trust raised under a recommendation by will to a legatee to dispose of her legacy among certain persons after her death. Malim v. Keighley, 2 Ves. 529 ; 2 R. R. 229.

Bequest to A. for life, with power on her marriage, to appoint the interest to her husband for life, and a recommendation to dispose of the principal after her own death, and the determination of the preceding trusts, among the children of B. The recommendation being held an absolute trust, it is a vested interest in all the children, subject to be divested by appointment ; and there being no appointment, children born after the death of the testator, and those who died in the life of A., are entitled with the rest. Malim v. Barker, 3 Ves. 150.

A., by will, devises all his estates to his eldest son in tail male, with remainders over ; part of the property consisted of an estate in Jamaica, and, therefore, the testator added the following clause : "And I recommend to my executors, that all sugars, rum, and other plantation produce that is sent to the port of London be consigned to the house of C. E. & Co. until such time as any of my sons shall set up in the business of a sugar factor ; then my desire is, that the consignment may pass through his or their hands." C., a natural son of the testator's, set up the business of a sugar factor during the minority of the devisee, and accordingly got the consignments. Upon the devisee's coming of age, C. accounted with him, but insisted on being entitled to his commission, not only upon the produce which he had actually sold, but also upon the produce which had been consigned to him, but was not then arrived in the port of London : —Held, that the words of the above clause were not imperative, or amounted to words of bequest in favour of C., but were recommendatory only : —Held, also, that C. was entitled to a commission only upon what he had actually sold, and not upon what was only consigned, but not delivered to him. Decretal order of chancery confirmed. Beckford v. Beckford, 4 Bro. P. C. 38.

Testatrix willed that, after payment of her legacies, the whole of her property should be given to her sister Mary, to be hers independently of any husband; and earnestly recommended her to take such measures as she might deem best for making it sure, that whatever she might inherit might go at her decease to her children:—Held, that the children, on their mother's death, were entitled to the property as joint tenants absolutely. Cholmondeley v. Cholmondeley, 14 Sim. 590.

Words of recommendation in a will held not to amount to a trust. Payne, Ex parte, G. W. Ry. Act, In re, 2 Y. & C. 636; 7 L. J., Ex. Eq. 1; 1 Jur. 818.

C., having two sons, and being engaged in the sugar trade, devised his sugar houses, &c., to his eldest son; nevertheless, in case his eldest son should die without a son or sons of his body, then he recommended him to give and devise the sugar houses, &c., to his brother, the testator's second son. The eldest son died without issue male, leaving a daughter, and without devising to his brother:—Held, not a trust for the brother, but a mere recommendation. Cunliffe v. Cunliffe, Ambl. 586.

A testator, after giving to his daughter an absolute power of appointment, by will, over certain property, recommended, though he did not absolutely enjoin, his said daughter to distribute the same at her decease amongst her daughters in equal shares:—Held, that these words were merely precatory. Young v. Martin, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 582; 7 Jur. 1147.

Testator gave to his wife all his personal estate, relying, that if she should marry again, she would secure whatever she should possess under his will for her separate use; and he recommended her to give by her will what he should die possessed of under his will to certain persons named:—Held, that wife's executor was trustee for whole property possessed by her under the will for those persons named. Horwood v. West, 1 Sim. & S. 387; 1 L. J. (O.S.), Ch. 201; 24 R. R. 199.

A testator bequeathed a legacy to his daughter A., and recommended her and her husband to settle that legacy, together with such a sum of money belonging to the husband as he should choose, for the benefit of the testator's daughter and her children. The testator's daughter died in his lifetime:—Held, that a trust was created as to the legacy for the benefit of the children, and that they were entitled to it in equal shares, and that the benefit to the children did not fail by the death of A. in the lifetime of the testator. Ford v. Fowler, 3 Beav. 146; 9 L. J., Ch. 352; 4 Jur. 958.

A. devises K. Lodge and other real estates to trustees, in trust in aid of his personal estate, and then to convey to B. in fee; and by a codicil recommended B., if he chooses to keep the house and demesne of M., that he should in twelve months make over K. Lodge to plaintiff. A. died in 1797, and the trustees sold no part of the real estate, nor was it necessary to resort to it. B. entered on the real estate, and resided at M., and died seised in 1799, having devised K. Lodge to the defendant, who entered and continued seised ever since. On a bill filed in 1828 it was held that the words of the codicil were mandatory, but that, as they only raised an implied trust, the plaintiff was barred by adverse possession since 1879. Kingston (Lord) v. Lorton (Lord), 2 Hog. 166.

A testator by his will gave all his estate to his wife, A., for her life; and after her death as to 2,000*l.*, part thereof, he gave the same to be disposed of by her will in such manner as she should think proper; but recommended her to dispose of one half to her relations, and the other half to such of his relations as she should think proper. A., by will, disposed of the 2,000*l.* among various persons, some of whom did not belong to either of the classes mentioned in the will:—Held, that the word "recommended" did not create a binding trust, and that A. had the power of disposing of the fund in any way that she pleased. Johnson v. Rowlands, 2 De G. & Sm. 356; 17 L. J., Ch. 438; 12 Jur. 769.

Testator devised all his real estate to his sister for life, remainder to her children as she should appoint; for want of appointment, to all her children and their heirs, as tenants in common. His sister having two daughters, by a codicil, declared to be a codicil to his will, not then at hand, he gave one of them an annuity; and directing his annuities to be paid out of his 3 per cent. stock, he charged them on his real estate in case of a deficiency, and directing the residue of his personal estate to be invested in freehold lands and hereditaments, he recommended to his sister to settle and convey, or join with her husband in settling and conveying, all his estates and property which she might derive from him after his decease, to the use of her two daughters for life, in such parts, shares, and proportions as she should approve, with remainder to their respective issue and cross remainders, and the usual powers and clauses in strict settlement. The testator's sister died in his life, and her two daughters were his co-heiresses. Some real estates were purchased between the executions of the will and codicil. As to the real estate the will is not revoked, but is republished by the codicil; and the two nieces are entitled to all the real estates, and to those directed to be purchased, as tenants in common in fee. Meggison v. Moore, 2 Ves. 630.

The testator gave his wife 4,000*l.* "to be used for her own and the children's benefit, as she shall in her judgment and conscience think fit, being convinced that it will be disposed of conscientiously and properly by her for the purposes mentioned; at the same time recommending her not to diminish the principal, but to vest it in government or freehold securities":—Held, that this was a gift to the wife for life, to be employed, in such manner as she should think fit, for the benefit of herself and the children, she fairly and honestly exercising that discretion; and that, subject to such life estate, the children took an interest in the capital. Hart v. Tribe, 18 Beav. 215; 23 L. J., Ch. 462; 2 W. R. 239.

Recommendation—Words amounting only to.]—A testator, by his will, devised his residuary real estates to trustees, in trust for certain tenants for life, with remainder to D. F. for life, with remainder in trust for the sons of D. F., as tenants in common in tail male, with cross remainders and remainder over; and he directed his residuary personal estates to be laid out in the purchase of land, to be settled to the same uses. By a testamentary paper of the same date as the will, and headed, "Memorandum, alias directions to my executors," he directed, as to his residuary personal estate, that his executors should apply for an estate of an uncle of the testator, as an investment, "for the use and behoof of D. F.," and if not attainable, to inquire if any part of a certain other estate was to be disposed of. Neither of the specified properties could be obtained on fair terms as an investment:—Held, that D. F. did not take any further interest under the codicil than under the will, and that the testator thereby either meant to express merely a recommendation to his trustees as to the mode of laying out his residuary personalty, or expressed no intention on which the court could act. Fitch v. Friend, 2 De G. & Sm. 405; and see Quayle v. Davidson, infra.

"Request."]—A bequest of personalty to "A. and B., to be divided equally, with a request to A. that, should he die without lawful issue, the property which I bequeath him shall revert back to the sons of B., provided they are prudent and well-conducted":—Held, that these words were not merely precatory, but sufficiently imperative to create a trust in favour of the sons of B. O'Bierne, In re, 1 Jo. & Lat. 352; 7 Ir. Eq. R. 171.

A testator duly appointed a fund in favour of objects of the power absolutely, and he also bequeathed to them his own property, "especially requesting them" to leave the appointed fund to persons not objects of the power:—Held, that this did not raise a case for election; held, also, that the result would have been different, if there had been a different appointment of the subject of the power to strangers. Blacket v. Lamb, 14 Beav. 482; 21 L. J., Ch. 46; 16 Jur. 142.

A father gave his real and personal estate to his son, appointing him his executor, "in trust for the payment, execution, and discharging the intentions and devises thereinafter made, and to which my property, real and personal, so devised, is hereby made subject." The testator then made several bequests, and gave the residue of his real and personal estate to the son after payment of his debts, "requesting him that if he should not find an opportunity to dispose of my freehold estate at Winterborne Whitchurch greatly to his advantage, and for the benefit of his family, that the said estate should belong after him to his eldest son":—Held, that no trust was created of this estate in favour of the son's family or his eldest son, but that the son took it absolutely. House v. House, 31 L. T. 427; 23 W. R. 22.

"Require and Entreat."]—Codicil requiring and entreating the executor, who was also residuary legatee, by will or deed to settle and secure 500*l.* to be paid at his decease; the testator declaring that he had omitted to express it in his will, not doubting that the executor will readily comply with the request; a trust by way of legacy out of the assets, not a condition enforced independently of them. Taylor v. George, 2 V. & B. 378.

"In Trust for."]—A testator devised real estate, consisting of a farm, to his wife for life, and after her death to D., "in trust for his son being brought up to work the farm," with a gift over in the event of D. having no male issue. D. had no male issue at the date of the will, but had a son born after the testator's death:—Held, that, under the will, D.'s son did not take any beneficial interest in the real estate, the words "in trust for his son being brought up to work the farm" being a mere recommendation or expression of hope or confidence that his eldest or only son should be brought up to work the farm. Quayle v. Davidson, supra.

"Trusting that."]—A testator bequeathed stock to A. B., trusting that he would preserve the same, so that after his decease it might go to his four children, or such of them as should survive him:—Held, to create a trust in favour of the survivor of the children after the decease of A. B. Baker v. Mosley, 12 Jur. 740.

A person gave his real and personal estate to trustees, on trust to sell the same, and after payment of his debts to pay the same, and he gave and bequeathed the same to I. (to whom he was engaged to be married) "absolutely, trusting she would carry out his wishes with regard to the same, with which she was fully acquainted." Shortly before the date of his will the testator had verbally expressed to I. his wish that she should make certain gifts out of the property to be bequeathed to her, and she had afterwards written down his wishes for her own use, but not in the testator's presence:—Held, that I. took the property beneficially, but subject in part to the wishes which the testator had expressed to her, and as to which she had bound herself. Irvine v. Sullivan, 38 L. J., Ch. 635; L. R. 8 Eq. 673; 17 W. R. 1083.

"In Trust and Confidence that."]—A testator devised his estates to his son and his heirs male, "in the fullest trust and confidence" that he would not do, nor permit to be done, "any act, in law or otherwise," to defeat the thereinafter-declared trusts and limitations of the estates, but that, on the contrary, he would do all in his power to effectuate them. He then declared how the estates were to go if the son died without issue of his body lawfully begotten, specifically devising one fourth portion to D. The son having entered into possession of the devised estates, suffered a recovery:—Held, that the words of the will did not create a trust, and that the entail was barred by the recovery. Dawkins v. Penrhyn (Lord), 48 L. J., Ch. 304; 4 App. Cas. 51; 39 L. T. 583; 27 W. R. 173—H. L. (E.)

Testator devised a copyhold estate to his wife, upon trust to sell and invest the money in the funds, and gave and bequeathed the interests and dividends to her use. He also gave and bequeathed to her all his effects, whatsoever and wheresoever, for her maintenance, upon full trust and confidence in her justice and equity that at her decease she would make a proper distribution of what effects might be left in money, goods, or otherwise, to his children, accounting what they had already received in money or effects as part of their shares. The widow, executrix:—Held, entitled to the produce of the copyhold estate for life only, with a resulting trust as to the capital for the heir. The widow entitled to the absolute interest in the personal estate. Wilson v. Major, 11 Ves. 205.

Testator, by his will, gave "all my property, of whatever description, whether in possession, reversion, remainder, or expectancy, or what I may be possessed of at the time of my death; and give and bequeath the same, and every part thereof, unto my dear wife, Jane, her executors, administrators, and assigns, to and for her and their own use and benefit, upon the fullest trust and confidence reposed in her that she shall dispose of the same to and for the joint benefit of herself and my children." The court gave an opinion that there was no trust created for the children; but declining to make a positive declaration to that effect:—Held, that it would be right to order the residuary personal estate to be transferred and paid to the widow, and decreed accordingly. Webb v. Wools, 2 Sim. (N.S.) 267; 21 L. J., Ch. 625.

"Will and Desire."]—The words "I desire," or "I will," in a will, amount to an express devise. If a devise is to A. for life, directing him at his death to give it to B., that amounts to a devise of the use of it only to A. for life, remainder to B. Eeles v. England, 2 Vern. 467; Pre. Ch. 200.

A. by will gives 300*l.* to B., and declares her will and desire that he should give the 300*l.* to his daughter at his death, or sooner, if there be occasion for her advancement. B. dies eight days before A.; and the daughter dies at sixteen, unmarried. The 300*l.* decreed to the administrator of the daughter. S. C., 2 Vern. 466; Pre. Ch. 200.

There can be no constructive trust but where the intent of testator is apparent. "Willing and desiring G. to sell," &c., are more properly words of injunction than trust. Hill v. London (Bishop), 1 Atk. 619.

Testator expressing his will and desire that one-third of the principal of his estate and effects be left entirely to the disposal of his wife among such of her relations as she may think proper after the death of his sisters, a trust for her next of kin at the time of her death, having made no disposition. Birch v. Wade, 3 V. & B. 198; 13 R. R. 181.

"I give to A. 500*l.*, and it is my will and desire that A. may dispose of the same amongst her relations, as she by will may think proper":—Held, a trust for the relations of A., and the 500*l.* well bequeathed by the will of A. to her sister and her sister's children, though made without reference to the will of the first testator. Forbes v. Ball, 3 Mer. 437.

A., after bequeathing leaseholds to his wife for the remainder of his interest therein, bequeathed all other his personal estate to his wife for her use and benefit, she maintaining the children who were at his death under twenty-one, and paying his debts; and he declared it to be his will, that although he had given the whole of his property to his wife, yet it was his desire that if his children conducted themselves to her approbation, she should leave such property equally amongst all of them. Three of the children who survived the testator died in the lifetime of the widow, who by her will bequeathed her property to trustees, in trust to invest 200*l.* for one daughter; and as to the residue, in trust for the four surviving children:—Held, that the bequest by the testator to his widow was not absolute, but that the obligation amounted to a trust; and that the bequest by the widow in favour of the four surviving children was a good exercise of the discretion given to her. Bonser v. Kinnear, 2 Giff. 195; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 882.

"Wish."]—A. devised to his wife his house at G., and declared it to be "his earnest wish that his sister should reside at G., with his wife, during her life":—Held, that there was not any trust created in favour of the sister. Graves v. Graves, 13 Ir. Ch. R. 182.

A testatrix, after bequeathing property to her two sons, proceeded thus: "But I most earnestly wish that my said sons may give or settle their respective shares on their respective daughters, in preference to their sons." Quære, whether these words were imperative or merely precatory. Young v. Martin, supra.

A bequest in terms absolute of 2,000*l.* apiece to two persons, followed by the words, "And I wish them to bequeath the same equally between the families of my nephew, S. O., and my dear niece, Mrs. P., in such mode as they shall consider right":—Held, to be an absolute gift, and not to confer merely an interest for life with a precatory trust superadded. Hamilton, In re, Trench v. Hamilton, 64 L. J., Ch. 799; [1895] 2 Ch. 370; 12 R. 355; 72 L. T. 748; 43 W. R. 577.

"Wish and Bequest."]—Where a testator gave his real estates, and also his residuary property, to his wife for life, with remainder to an infant great-nephew for life, a statement in the will that it was his particular wish and bequest that his wife and the infant's grandfather would superintend and take care of the infant's education, so as to fit him for any respectable profession or employment, was:—Held, under the circumstances and upon the effect of the whole instrument, to charge the maintenance and education of the infant upon the interest taken by the testator's widow under the will. Foley v. Parry, 2 Myl. & K. 138; Coop. t. Brough. 219. Affirmed, 5 Sim. 138.

"Wish and Desire."]—Property was assigned to trustees, upon trust, after the death of the settlor, in the meantime, and until his eldest son should attain twenty-one, to pay the rents to the settlor's wife, to be applied by her for and towards the maintenance of herself and all the then present and future-born children of the settlor; and the settlor declared, that if and when his eldest son should attain twenty-one, the trust property should be in trust for such eldest son, but so that the wish and desire of the settlor thereby declared, that the then present and future-born children of the settlor and his wife should participate with him in the same, should be particularly observed:—Held, that a valid trust was created in favour of the younger children to participate, and that it was not void for uncertainty. Liddard v. Liddard, 29 L. J., Ch. 619; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 439; 2 L. T. 200.

A testator gave all his property to trustees, and declared that he had made no provision for his grand-daughter K. H., because her deceased father had, in his lifetime, received more than his other children would become entitled to under his will. He then declared trusts of an equal share of his property for each of his surviving children for their lives, with remainders to their children. He then made a codicil as follows: "My wish, my dear daughters, is that you do give my dear grand-daughter, K. H., 1,000*l.*, and that you will be kind to E. J.; and it is my desire that you do give her some part of my table-linen and sheeting. This is my last wish." By a subsequent codicil he made some alteration in the bequest made by his will in favour of one of his daughters, and, subject thereto, confirmed his will:—Held, that the second codicil confirmed the first, as being part of the will, and that the concluding sentence of the first codicil was sufficient to create a bequest of the 1,000*l.* to K. H., and that as the articles specifically given by it to E. J. passed by the will to the trustees, and not to the daughters, so the 1,000*l.* was to be paid, not by the daughters out of their life interests, but by the trustees out of the testator's general personal estate. Hinxman v. Poynder, 5 Sim. 546.

"I Would have divided."]—A testator had a power to appoint the produce of a policy on his life amongst his children, by writing or will. By will he bequeathed all his personal estate to his daughter F. By a contemporaneous writing, unattested, and headed "Memorandum," he gave directions to F. as to his property, and said: "The money from the Equitable Insurance Office I would have equally divided between my daughters F. G. and A.," and it also expressed his wish that his two sons should have certain interests out of his own property:—Held, that the words "I would have" were imperative, and not mere instructions to F.; held, also, that F., who was not shewn to have obtained the benefits under the will on the faith of any promise to distribute the testator's property according to the memorandum, was not bound to do so. Proby v. Landor, 28 Beav. 504; 30 L. J., Ch. 593; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1278; 9 W. R. 47.

Precatory Words where Explained by Context.]—A husband bequeathed all his furniture, &c., and other property to his wife, and for her "to do justice to those relations on my side such as she thinks worthy of remuneration, but under no restriction to any stated property, but quite at liberty to give and distribute what and to who" she "may please":—Held, that no precatory trust was created. Bond, In re, Cole v. Hawes, 46 L. J., Ch. 488; 4 Ch. D. 238; 25 W. R. 95.

A testatrix, after directing legacies in certain events to fall into the residue, bequeathed specified articles "and other personal effects" to A. and B., in confidence that they would distribute and dispose of them as she by memorandum or otherwise might direct, and appointed A. and B. her executors. By a codicil, she directed her "executors and residuary legatees" to vary certain bequests, and empowered them to postpone legacies, the interest in the meantime "to form part of my residuary estate," and gave a legacy to "A., one of my executors and residuary legatees." By a second codicil, she gave a life interest to a legatee in a sum which, under the former dispositions, would have fallen into the residue, and stated that the alteration would make but little difference, as the sum would ultimately fall into the residue. After authorising the executors to postpone the payment of legacies, and giving other directions, the codicil concluded thus: "These wishes written by myself, and only concerning the interest of my executors, will, I feel sure, be quite sufficient for them to fulfil all herein mentioned, but will perhaps be more correct if I sign my name in the presence of two witnesses, who are also in the presence of each other":—Held, that, on the will alone, the executors would have taken the residue, subject to a trust for the next of kin; but that the word "confidence" in the will admitted of explanation, and was explained by the codicils not to amount to a binding trust. Shepherd v. Nottidge, 2 John. & H. 766.

After a devise to his daughter in fee, followed by a direction to keep the gardens, &c., in repair, a testator added, that in case his daughter married he strongly recommended her to execute a settlement, of which the will went on to prescribe the terms:—Held, upon unopposed petition, that the daughter, who was not married, could not convey the fee. Payne, Ex parte, G. W. Ry., In re, 2 Y. & C. 636; 7 L. J., Ex. Eq. 1; 1 Jur. 818.

A testator gave all his property to his wife, trusting that she would use it for the spiritual and temporal good of herself and children, remembering always the church and poor:—Held, that the wife took absolutely. Curtis v. Rippon, 5 Madd. 434; 21 R. R. 327.

A testator, after certain bequests to his widow, gave the residue of his estate to his father "for his own use and benefit, and at his discretion for the further use and benefit" of his (the testator's) daughter, who was then a minor and his only child:—Held, that, under this clause, the father took the residue as trustee for himself and the testator's daughter as joint tenants, with a discretion in the father as to the application of the daughter's share during her minority. Atkinson v. Atkinson, 62 L. T. 735.

A testator, by his will, gave all his real and personal property to his wife, "to enjoy the same in the fullest and most unconstrained manner, subject, nevertheless, to the following provisions." These were legacies to relations of himself and of his wife; and he expressed his desire that his wife should make her will, and in such manner as that the whole property should be divided among her relations before mentioned, in such proportions as she might think they deserved. The testator then gave certain directions in case his wife should be unable to make a will, and then said, "But it is my express will that the precatory clause or power lastly provided for is not to do away with, or in any the least to deprive my said wife from exercising the entire right and will over my said property, should she be enabled to carry it into effect in the way I have before left it to her, or in any other most agreeable to herself." The testator's widow made her will, giving legacies to her relations, but died intestate as to the residue of her estate:—Held, that the testator's property vested absolutely in his widow, and, so far as the same was undisposed of by her will, belonged to her next of kin. Huskisson v. Bridge, 4 De G. & Sm. 245; 20 L. J., Ch. 209; 15 Jur. 738.

A bequest "of all my property to my husband, hoping that he will leave it after his death to my son, if he is worthy of it," accompanied by the following explanation: "My reason for leaving all I have to dispose of to my husband, and in his entire power, is, that my son is already certain of a fortune, and that I cannot now feel any certainty what sort of a character he may become. I therefore leave it to my husband, in whose honour, justice, and parental affection I have the fullest confidence. If my son dies before my husband, though I leave all without reservation to my dear husband to dispose of as he thinks fit, yet should my son leave any children, I do not doubt it will go to them from him, knowing his steady principles and clear judgment of right and wrong, and his sense of justice," does not create a trust. Eaton v. Watts, L. R. 4 Eq. 151; 16 L. T. 311.

Words of recommendation or desire in a will will not raise a trust, if such construction would conflict with other provisions of more definite and positive import in the same instrument; but the court will give such effect to them as may not be inconsistent with those provisions. Knott v. Cottee, 2 Ph. 192.

Testator, after giving his real and personal estates to his wife in fee, said that he had so given the same to her unfettered and unlimited, in full confidence that, in her future disposition thereof, she would distinguish the heirs of his late father, by devising the whole of his estate, together and entire, to such of his father's heirs as she might think best deserved her preference:—Held, that no trust was created. Meredith v. Heneage, 1 Sim. 542; 27 R. R. 243.

Testator bequeathed the whole of his property to his wife for her life, and directed that upon her death one-third should devolve upon his daughter, and that the other two-thirds should be at the sole and entire disposal of his wife, trusting that, should she not marry and have other children, her affection for their daughter will induce her to make the daughter her principal heir. The widow died unmarried:—Held, that she took an absolute interest in the two-thirds under the will. Hoy v. Master, 6 Sim. 568.

Testator gave to his wife all her jewels, trinkets, &c., which he added might be finally appropriated as she pleased, with the sum of 4,000*l.* in money, but which sum he recommended her to divide amongst certain persons in certain shares:—Held, by the vice-chancellor, that a trust was created in favour of those persons, to take effect after the wife's death; the Lord Chancellor, however, held the contrary, on appeal. White v. Briggs, 2 Ph. 583; 15 Sim. 300; 15 L. J., Ch. 182; 9 Jur. 1083.

A husband devised a freehold house to his wife, and all his personal property to be at her will and disposal in any way she might think best for the benefit of herself and family:—Held, that the widow took the fee simple of the house unfettered by any trust, and that she was absolutely entitled to the personalty. Lambe v. Eames, 40 L. J., Ch. 447; L. R. 6 Ch. 597; 25 L. T. 175; 19 W. R. 659.

A husband gave all his real and personal estate to his wife "absolutely, with full power for her to dispose of the same as she may think fit for the benefit of my family, having full confidence that she will do so":—Held, that she took absolutely. Hutchinson and Tenant, In re, 8 Ch. D. 540; 39 L. T. 86; 26 W. R. 904.

A testator gave and devised all his real and personal estate unto and to the absolute use of his wife, her heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, in "full confidence that she will do what is right as to the disposal thereof between my children, either in her lifetime or by will after her decease":—Held, that under these words the widow took an absolute interest in the property, unfettered by any trust in favour of the children. Lambe v. Eames (supra), Hutchinson and Tenant, In re (supra), Curnick v. Tucker (L. R. 17 Eq. 320), and Le Marchant v. Le Marchant (L. R. 18 Eq. 414) commented on. Adams and Kensington Vestry, In re, Adams, In re, 52 L. J., Ch. 758; 24 Ch. D. 199; 48 L. T. 958; 32 W. R. 120.

—— Interpretation of Trust for "Children."]—Where a precatory trust has been created by will in favour of "children," simpliciter, the trustee may, in executing the trust, limit the shares of daughters to their separate use. Willis v. Kymer, 47 L. J., Ch. 90; 7 Ch. D. 181; 38 L. T. 207.

Parol Gift with Precatory Words—Effect on Testamentary Disposition by Donee.]—The owner of certain jewels presented them to her daughter-in-law on her marriage with the donor's son, who was heir-presumptive to a title. The donee's account of the manner in which the gift was made was as follows: "When I married she gave them to me for life, with the request that at my death they might be left as heirlooms." The donee by will left the jewels to the owner of the title for life, and after his death to each and every of the persons who should in turn succeed to the title and dignity severally and successively as they should in turn succeed to such title and dignity:—Held, that the original gift was an absolute gift; that the words of a bequest did not create a precatory trust, and were not intended to fetter the donee's disposition of the jewels in the least degree, but were a mere indication of the manner in which the donor thought that the donee might best dispose of them; and that the donee had therefore power to dispose of them in the manner directed by her will, or in any other manner she might think fit. Hill (Viscount) v. Hill (Dowager Viscountess), 66 L. J., Q. B. 329; [1897] 1 Q. B. 483; 76 L. T. 103; 45 W. R. 371—C. A.

c. Resulting Trusts.

Where Gift not exhausted by Objects of Trust.]—A gift of residuary real and personal estate to an executor, "to enable him to carry into effect the purposes of the will":—Held, on demurrer, to create a trust:—Held, also, that the objects of the trust not exhausting the gift, there was a resulting trust in favour of the heir-at-law of the surplus realty. Cary v. Cary (2 Sch. & Lef. 189) commented on. Barrs v. Fewkes, 3 N. R. 704; 33 L. J., Ch. 484; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 466; 10 L. T. 232; 12 W. R. 666. And see S. C., 6 N. R. 355; 34 L. J., Ch. 522; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 669; 12 L. T. 727; 13 W. R. 987.

Trust to pay Debts where Debts discharged in Lifetime of Testator.]—A testator's will contained the following clause: "I give and bequeath to my brother E. whatsoever real estate I may die possessed of, wheresoever situate, on trust nevertheless to pay thereout the sum of 800*l.* due from me to the trustees under the marriage settlement of S., and the sum of 300*l.* due from me to B., and also on trust to pay to each of my sisters M. and C. and to my brother A., as long as they respectively live, the sum of 50*l.* every year." The will contained a bequest of the personalty to E. and A. and certain of his sisters, and appointed E. executor thereof:—Held, that the word "thereout" and the words "and also on trust" were sufficient to shew that the gift to E. was not for the purposes thereafter expressed, but only subject to such trusts as were expressed. King v. Denison (1 V. & B. 261) explained. Croome v. Croome, 61 L. T. 814; 87 L. T. Jour. 201—H. L. (E.)

Where Legatees Disclaim.]—By an agreement between H. and R. certain shares in a limited bank, which were the property of H., but standing in the names of H. and R., were to be held for H. for life, with remainder to R., for life, with remainder to such charities as H. should by will appoint. H. died in 1878, having appointed the shares among certain charities, subject to R.'s life interest. R. died in 1884. A winding-up order having been made against the bank, the executors of both H. and R. were informed that a call would be made against them on the shares. All the charities had disclaimed. The executor of R. brought an action against H.'s executors, one of whom was also H.'s residuary legatee, claiming indemnity in respect of the liability on the shares:—Held, that, on the disclaimer by the charities, there was a resulting trust of the shares in favour of H.'s estate, and that H.'s residuary legatee was bound to indemnify R.'s executor. Hobbs v. Wayet, 36 Ch. D. 256; 57 L. T. 225; 36 W. R. 273.

7. Powers of Appointment.

See sub tit. Powers.

8. Options and Rights of Choice or Pre-emption.

Right of Selection.]—If a testator, dying solvent, bequeaths to A. a given number of articles, forming part of a stock of articles of the same description, as, for instance, if he has twenty horses in his stable, and bequeaths to A. six of them, A. has the right of selection. A testator was possessed of fifty original shares, and seventy other after-purchased shares. He gave thirty whole shares to trustees, upon trust, for a married woman for her separate use for life, and thirty whole shares to another party. He declared that the legacies should not be deemed specific, so as to be capable of ademption. On the seventy shares all the calls had not been paid, but on the fifty the whole had been paid. The railway company raised new shares, and offered the same ratably to the registered proprietors. The executors accepted sixty, and paid the deposit on them in respect of the thirty shares first bequeathed:—Held, that the bequests were specific, and that the income of the shares from the testator's death belonged to the legatees; that the legatees were entitled to the new shares in respect of the shares bequeathed to them, subject to the payment of the future calls; that the legatees were entitled to select, and the executors not entitled to appropriate the shares to be taken by the legatees; that the original and purchased shares must, with respect to the liability of the testator and his estate to pay the calls thereon, be considered identical; and that, therefore, his estate was liable to pay the calls on both sets of shares. Jacques v. Chambers, 2 Coll. C. C. 435; 15 L. J., Ch. 225; 16 L. J., Ch. 243; 11 Jur. 295.

A testatrix bequeathed the shares in a company as follows: fifteen to J., and six to B., E. and A. respectively. The remaining shares she left to M. She possessed seventy-four shares in the company, viz. thirty-seven shares fully paid up, and thirty-seven new shares not fully paid up, and she was in the habit of speaking of the whole as thirty-seven shares only. The new shares had been allotted, by way of bonus, in respect of the old ones, but they were distinguished in the company's books by separate and distinct numbers, and were transferable separately from the old shares:—Held, that the four specific legatees took only single shares, and not a new share with each old one, but that they had a right to select the fully paid up shares as the best. M., therefore, was entitled to the residue of the old shares and all the new ones. Millard v. Bailey, 35 L. J., Ch. 312; L. R. 1 Eq. 378; 13 L. T. 751; 14 W. R. 385.

Testator, who was possessed of three leasehold houses in K. Street, bequeathed "two houses in K. Street" in trust for P. for life, and then to form part of his residuary gift. The will contained no other references to the testator's houses in K. Street:—Held, that two of the houses passed under the gift, and that P. was entitled to elect which he would take. Tapley v. Eagleton, 12 Ch. D. 683; 28 W. R. 239.

—— Second Election ultra vires.]—A widow devised an acre of land, which was "to be selected by" the devisee, to a clergyman absolutely, and devised all her other real estate to the trustees of her will to convert it into money. By a letter to the clergyman, dated the day her will was executed, but not intended to be, and not, in fact, delivered to him until after her death, she said that it would be gratifying to her memory if he of his own free will would dedicate the acre of land as a site for a church. He did select an acre for that purpose, but subsequently entered into an arrangement with the trustees of her will, whereby the trustees sold the acre so selected, and granted him permission to select another acre in lieu. The clergyman died without having selected another acre:—Held, that the permission to make a second selection was ultra vires, and that the purchase-money produced by the acre originally selected belonged to the personal representatives of the clergyman absolutely. Littledale v. Bickersteth, 24 W. R. 507.

—— Right to Select the Whole.]—Testator gave all his household furniture, wearing apparel, books, plate, wines, pictures, statues, china, horses, carriages, in short everything in his house and elsewhere, together with all his other property, to trustees in trust to sell all his household property as aforesaid, except such articles whatsoever they might be as his wife might desire to retain for her own use, which he thereby empowered her to appropriate for her own use:—Held, an absolute gift to the wife of the whole or any of the articles enumerated, whether articles of use or ornament, which she might select. Kennedy v. Kennedy, 10 Hare, 438; 1 W. R. 177.

Gift by a testator of his plate to trustees upon trust to permit his widow "to have and appropriate absolutely to herself such parts thereof as she should signify in writing her desire to possess":—Held, that the widow was entitled to the whole of the plate. Arthur v. Mackinnon, 48 L. J., Ch. 534; 11 Ch. D. 385; 27 W. R. 704.

Where Gift to Several—Apportionment not Implied.]—Testator gave to his son, in case he should live to attain twenty-one, such part of his real estate as his son should choose, but not exceeding the yearly value of 350*l.*, and to his daughter such part of his real estate as should remain after his son should have made his choice; or of the whole of his real estate in case his son should not live to choose his part, as she should choose, but not exceeding the yearly value of 360*l.*:—Held, that the son was entitled to priority of choice, on attaining twenty-one, and that there was to be no apportionment, although he might not leave for the daughter lands of the yearly value of 360*l.* Weigall v. Brome, 6 Sim. 99.

—— Right of Heir-at-Law to Priority of Choice.]—D. being seised in fee of two freehold closes of land in R., by his will devised to his son John one freehold close of land in R., and to his son George one freehold close of land in R. John was the testator's heir-at-law. After the death of the testator, John and George tossed up for choice, and George won :—Held, that the devise to John was not void for uncertainty, and that the case was one for election :—Held, also, that party first named in the will being also the heir-at-law was the person who had the right to elect. Duckmanton v. Duckmanton, 5 H. & N. 219 ; 29 L. J., Ex. 132.

Right of Election between Alternative Gifts.] —Bequest of 500*l.*, or an annuity of 25*l.* for life : —Held, not to give the option to the legatee, but to the parties interested in the property subject to the annuity. Wilson v. Wilson, 1 De G. & Sm. 152 ; 11 Jur. 793.

Legacy in lieu of things expressed, shall not put the party to his election as to another benefit, though it may be contrary to an intent that he should take both. East v. Cooke, 2 Ves. Sen. 30.

A testator, being entitled to two leasehold houses situate at P. and at R., directed his trustees to allow his wife to occupy his house at P. or at R., as she should elect, for her life, without payment of any rent :—Held, first, that the widow must elect between the two houses, and could not enjoy both :—Held, secondly, that she was entitled to be indemnified out of the testator's estate against the rent and covenants to which the house she might select was liable. Harby v. Moore, 6 Jur. (N.S.) 883.

Election where Gift of Onerous Property.]—Where a testator makes several bequests to a devisee, one of which is clogged with a burden created by the testator, it is a question of the intention of the testator, to be gathered from the will, whether the devisee must elect to take all or none of the gifts in the will, or whether he may accept the beneficial gifts, and repudiate that which is burdensome. There is no rule that a person to whom a testator has made two distinct gifts, one of which is subject to a burden created by the testator, is bound to accept both or neither of these gifts. In such circumstances the question is one of intention, to be gathered from the will. A testator bequeathed a legacy to A., and devised freeholds to A. and his wife for their lives, with remainder over, and after several intervening gifts bequeathed leasehold premises to A. :—Held, that A. might take the legacy and the freeholds, and repudiate the bequest of the leasehold. Warren v. Rudall, Godfrey, Ex parte, Hall v. Warren, 1 J. & H. 1 ; 29 L. J., Ch. 543 ; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 641 ; 8 W. R. 331.

The legatee of a house, held by the testator on a lease at a reserved rent, higher than it could be let for after his death, cannot reject the gift of the lease, and retain an annuity under the will, but must take the benefit cum onere. Talbot v. Radnor (Earl), 3 Myl. & K. 252.

K. devised estates to his son D., charged with a legacy of 1,000*l.* to his daughter M. ; and by a codicil he bequeathed all his shares in a company unto all his sons and daughters equally, and directed that all calls and payments to be made and become due after his decease should be borne and paid by them in equal shares. M. and her husband gave notice to the executors that they declined to accept the legacy of the shares, and they refused to take a transfer of them. Subsequently calls were made upon the executors, and D. paid them ; and he refused to pay the legacy without deducting the calls thereupon, and without the husband of M. taking a transfer of the shares, and giving an undertaking to pay all future calls. On a bill by M. by her next friend : —Held, that she was entitled to the legacy without deduction, and that she had a right to disclaim the legacy of the shares. Long v. Kent, 6 N. R. 354; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 724; 12 L. T. 794; 13 W. R. 961.

Shares in a company were given, together with other property, and were onerous :—Held, that the legatees might repudiate the shares, and take the rest of the gift. Aston v. Wood, 43 L. J., Ch. 715 ; 31 L. T. 293.

Bequest of six leasehold villas to one for life, and by a subsequent codicil reciting his death, bequest of the same to another, together with any other house testator might build on an adjoining space of ground, "together with the ornamental park I am now forming opposite that cottage and villas," for his life :—Held, that the legatee could not take the villas without the park, of which the tenure was onerous. Green v. Britten, 42 L. J., Ch. 187 ; 27 L. T. 811.

When by a will two distinct legacies are bequeathed to the same person, one of them being onerous and the other beneficial, primâ facie the legatee is entitled to disclaim the onerous legacy and to take the other. If, however, onerous property and beneficial property are included in the same gift, primâ facie the legatee cannot disclaim the onerous and accept the beneficial ; he must take the whole gift or none of it. But this primâ facie rule may be rebutted if the will manifests a sufficient intention of the testator to the contrary. Green v. Britten (supra) followed. Guthrie v. Walrond, 52 L. J., Ch. 165 ; 22 Ch. D. 573 ; 47 L. T. 614 ; 31 W. R. 285.

A testator devised and bequeathed a freehold house and the furniture and effects therein on trust for A. and B. for life. The house was subject to a mortgage for more than its value :— Held, that A. and B. were entitled to the use of the furniture without keeping down the interest on the mortgage. Syer v. Gladstone, 30 Ch. D. 614 ; 34 W. R. 565.

A testatrix gave "all my real and personal estate" to trustees "upon trust at their discretion to sell all such parts thereof as shall not consist of money," and out of the produce to pay her debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, and invest the residue, "and shall stand possessed of such real and personal estate, moneys, and securities" upon trust "to pay the rents, interest, and dividends and annual produce thereof" to T. during her life, with a clause of forfeiture on alienation, and after the decease of T. the testatrix devised and bequeathed the same to other persons. At her death she was entitled in fee to the P. estate which was unincumbered. Some time after her death a remainder in fee to which she was entitled in the B. estate, which was subject to mortgages made by prior owners and was out of repair, fell into possession, and its income was only sufficient to pay the interest on the mortgages. The trustees took out a summons for directions as to interest and repairs. The tenant for life contended that she could disclaim the B. estate:—Held, that as the P. and B. estates were not specially mentioned, but only formed parts of one gift in general terms, T. could not accept one and refuse the other. Guthrie v. Walrond (supra) and Syer v. Gladstone (supra) distinguished. Hotchkys, In re, Freke v. Calmady, 55 L. J., Ch. 546; 32 Ch. D. 408; 55 L. T. 110; 34 W. R. 569—C. A.

—— By Court for Lunatic.]—Where it is necessary for a lunatic to elect under a will as in this case, giving first a personal legacy, and afterwards in same will a real estate, with a charge upon it, the court has power to elect for him; and if the court chooses the real estate, it will continue the charge paid off as a lien on it for the lunatic's next of kin. Marriott, In re, 2 Moll. 516.

Right of Election to take Property on Condition.]—A testator authorised his executors, in case A. and B. should elect to carry on his business, to permit them to do so, without any payment for goodwill, upon their giving their security for their stock in trade, or such part as they should require. Shortly after his death, A. and B. gave the executors notice that they elected to take to the business:—Held, that there was a specific bequest of the business to A. and B.; that upon payment of the value of the stock in trade, and making provision for the testator's death, they were entitled to the goodwill and stock in trade of the business from the time of their election. Fryer v. Ward, 31 Beav. 602; 32 L. J., Ch. 433; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 164; 11 W. R. 104.

Gift Over of Stock in Trade—No Election where prior Gift not subject to Condition.]—A testator having three sons, A., B. and C., devised certain property to A., and other leasehold property, together with all the stock in trade which should be in the premises to B. and C. as tenants in common, and in case his said sons or either of them should die without leaving lawful issue him surviving, he directed that the share of such son so dying, in the premises and in the stock in trade which should be therein at the time of such decease, should go and be divided, share and share alike, between such of his said sons as should be then living as tenants in common. B. and C. carried on the trade after the testator's death; and B. died without issue leaving A. and C. surviving:—Held, that no case of election arose, there being no condition attached to the bequest, that the stock on the premises, at the death of either of the sons, should be subject to the bequest. A., therefore, was only entitled to a moiety of the stock in trade at the testator's death. Thornton v. Thornton, 11 Ir. Ch. R. 474.

Election inferred from Dealings with Property.]—W. P. by will directed his trustees as soon as conveniently might be after his death to divide his residuary real estate into lots, or set a value upon such lots, and give a copy of such particulars of division and valuation to the testator's son; and if, within six months after delivery of such copy, the son should give notice in writing under his hand of his desire to relinquish all or any part of such real estate, his estate in the part relinquished was to cease and become vested in the trustees upon certain trusts; the effect of which was, out of the relinquished estates, and by a charge on the other, to put all the testator's children on an equality. Provided that if the son shall neglect to give "such notice," or "by some notice or other writing," to consent to hold all on the terms thereinbefore mentioned within the time thereinbefore mentioned, then, and so soon as such neglect or refusal should have happened, the estate of the son in all was to shift to the trustees as before, the testator's wish being to give to each of his children or their representatives one-fifth share of his property, and subject to these provisions the testator devised the said estates to his trustees for 500 years, remainder to his son in fee. No allotment or valuation was ever made by the trustees, nor any notice given by the son; but he entered into possession of the estates, and accounted for the rents of the trustees of the father's estate until his death 5½ years after his father:—Held, that the son had waived his right to have the estate first valued; and had elected to take the whole subject to the charge for the benefit of the other children. Godwin v. Coulson, 17 Jur. 795; 1 W. R. 485.

A testator gave all his interest in certain leasehold farms mentioned in his will, and all the stock of every description thereon, and also all moneys due to him, to his son, subject nevertheless to the payment of all his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses. The testator's son continued in possession and receipt of the profits of the farms for about three years, when the leases of the farms and the stock thereon were disposed of. The testator's estate was very involved, and the liabilities to be discharged by the son, under the terms of the will, and as a condition of his accepting the bequest, greatly exceeded the value of the bequest:—Held, that the son must be deemed to have elected to accept the bequest contained in the will, subject to the payment of debts, funeral and testamentary expenses; but he was not personally liable to pay the same. Cowley, In re, Souch v. Cowley, 53 L. T. 494.

Option to Purchase.]—A testatrix, who carried on the business of a brewer, gave to M. a right of pre-emption of "all her brewery, &c.," at one-fourth less than its value. The testatrix held a number of public-houses in connection with the brewery, the tenants of which were bound to take their beer from the testatrix:—Held, that the right of pre-emption extended to these public-houses. Waite v. Morland, 12 Jur. (N.S.) 763; 14 L. T. 649; 14 W. R. 746.

A testator, by his will, gave all his real and personal estate to be enjoyed by his widow for life, and after her death, to be sold, and the proceeds to be divided among his ten children equally. He directed that one of his sons should have a right of pre-emption, for 450*l.*, of a particular parcel of garden land, part of the real estate. After the death of the testator, and before that of the widow, the parcel of garden land was purchased by a railway company, under their compulsory powers; the compensation money paid therefor, when freed from incumbrance, being represented, at the death of his widow, by the sum of 882*l.* 18*s.* 2*d.*, standing in court:—Held, that the testator's son, to whom the right of pre-emption was given, was entitled to the compensation money, subject to the deduction of the price fixed by the testator. Cant's Estate, In re, 4 De G. & J. 503; 28 L. J., Ch. 641; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 829; 7 W. R. 624.

A testator, by his will, directed that his son H. should have the option of purchasing the goodwill, &c., of his business, the purchase-money to form part of the residuary estate. The testator died in 1835, and H., who, from 1820, had managed the business, and resided solely on the premises as apparent owner, claimed it as an advancement, and alleged a parol agreement between him and the testator in 1825, and, as proof thereof, gave in evidence declarations of the testator, about that time, to his neighbours, that he had set up H. in business, and had asked their custom for him:—Held, that as there was no direct transfer or proof of change of possession, the parol declarations of the testator could not countervail his solemn declaration expressed by his will. Sharpe v. Sharpe, 10 L. J., Ex. Eq. 2.

—— Lands subject to Incumbrances.]—There is no rule of law that the donee of a right of pre-emption of lands at a fixed price, conferred on him by will, and duly exercised, necessarily takes the lands as a devisee, subject to incumbrances. Given v. Massey, 31 L. R., Ir. 126.

—— Principle of Valuation.] — Option to purchase at a valuation; valuation must not only be made according to the letter of the will, but must be fair and adequate. Option must be declared before valuation. Goodwill an element in the value of a reversionary interest in a public-house. Edwards v. Edwards, 1 Jur. 654.

A right of pre-emption given by will, whether at a price expressed, or to be fixed by the trustees, will be executed; the construction in the latter case being a reasonable price to be ascertained by reference to the master. But to pass such right to the heir or devisee, the intention to accept the offer must appear by some act, or at least by will. Radnor (Earl) v. Shafto, 11 Ves. 448; 8 R. R. 198.

—— Time for Exercising.]—A., having five daughters, devises lands in trust to convey to eldest, in case she should pay 6,000*l.* among her four sisters, and if not he gives the like pre-emption to each of his daughters. Equity will not enlarge the time. Master v. Willoughby, 2 Bro. P. C. 244.

Devise of lands to trustees in fee, in trust to pay debts and legacies, and after these paid, then to sell, and if any of the testator's name would buy it, such person to have it for 200*l.* less than the value. One of the testator's name brings a bill for this pre-emption, but delays bringing it until twenty-five years after testator's death. Bill dismissed. Huckstep v. Mathews, 1 Vern. 362.

A., seised in fee, devised lands to his daughter and her heirs; and his mind was, that if his son paid to her 50*l.*, then his son should have the land; the money was not paid at the day, and the daughter sold the land, but decreed against the vendee on the son's paying the money; but the court took it to be but in the nature of a security. Bland v. Middleton, 2 Ch. Cas. 1.

Testator devised a house to trustees, upon trust to permit his son, at any time within three months after his decease, to become the purchaser thereof, at a certain price, and to convey the same accordingly; but should the son not complete the purchase within three months, then the trustees were to sell the same by auction within twelve months from the testator's death. The son, who was himself a trustee, within two months declared verbally to his co-trustees his intention to purchase, but the trustees did not deliver the title-deeds to the solicitor who was to prepare the conveyance until the last day of the three months, and no conveyance was made, nor was any part of the purchase-money paid within the three months:—Held, that the right of pre-emption was gone. Dawson v. Dawson, 8 Sim. 346.

A person having under a will a right of pre-emption of an estate for a given sum, provided he signified to the trustees, within one month of the testator's death, his option to purchase, and paid the purchase-money afterwards within two months, duly signified his option to the trustees, and applied to their solicitor for an abstract of title. The solicitor acknowledged this application, and promised to take an opportunity of seeing his clients thereon. But no abstract was furnished; and hearing nothing further, the donee of the right of pre-emption allowed the two months to expire without paying his purchase-money or taking any further step in the matter:—Held, that the trustees were not under any obligation to furnish an abstract, and the purchase-money not having been paid within the two months, the right of pre-emption was lost, the rule being that such a right must be strictly complied with. Brooke v. Garrod, 3 K. & J. 608. Affirmed, 2 De G. & J. 62; 27 L. J., Ch. 226; 6 W. R. 194.

A testator directed his trustees to give to A. the option of purchasing his Lancashire estates at the price mentioned in his conveyance, but the offer was to be considered declined unless accepted within a month from the offer being made:—Held, that no valid offer was made until the price had been stated to A. Lilford (Lord) v. Keck, 30 Beav. 295.

A testatrix appointed lands to the use of her husband for life, with remainder to trustees in fee, with a power to her son to purchase, upon his giving notice to the trustees, within twelve months after the death of the tenant for life. The testatrix having survived her husband more than twelve months:—Held, that the true construction of the condition was, that the notice should be given within the stated period after the estate became vested in the trustees, and that the right of pre-emption was subsisting. Evans v. Stratford, 2 H. & M. 142; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 861; 10 L. T. 713.

A testator devised real estates to trustees for sale, and directed that his eldest son should have an option of purchase at a price to be fixed by arbitration, and that the time allowed for such option should be two months, within which time he should enter into such an agreement for the completion of the purchase as the arbitrators should direct or approve of. The arbitrators made their award on the 5th May, and delivered it to the family solicitor, who acted for all parties. On the 7th May the solicitor sent by post, to the eldest son, a letter containing an extract from the award. On the 16th June the son wrote to the solicitor, accepting the terms, but the formal agreement for purchase was not signed until the 6th July:—Held, that the time began to run when the award was communicated to the son, and not when the award was made, and the agreement, therefore, had been entered into within the time allowed by the will. Austin v. Tawney, 36 L. J., Ch. 339; L. R. 2 Ch. 143; 15 W. R. 463.

—— Time from which Interest Runs.]—The testator directed that if his eldest son elected to take his business he should be debited with the estimated value thereof in the division of his residuary estate. He gave the residue to trustees upon trust to convert, pay annuities, and accumulate the surplus income till his youngest child attained twenty-one, when the funds were to be divided between the children and the issue of deceased children as tenants in common per stirpes. The trustees had power to make advances to the children, such sums to be taken in part satisfaction of their shares of the trust premises. There was no tenant for life under the will. The eldest son took the business and the second son received advances. The period of distribution had arrived:—Held, that on the true construction of the will the eldest son was not liable till the period of distribution to pay interest on the value of the business:—Held, further (Rigby, L.J., dissentiente), that there was nothing in the will to shew that the testator intended his children to take equal shares in the whole of his estate, and that the second son was not liable till the period of distribution to pay interest on his advances. Dallmeyer, In re, Dallmeyer v. Dallmeyer, 65 L. J., Ch. 201; [1896] 1 Ch. 372; 73 L. T. 671; 44 W. R. 375—C. A.

—— Right of Donee to call for Title.]—A testatrix devised real estate to trustees, in trust for her husband for life; and she authorised and directed them to sell the property absolutely to her husband for a certain sum, to be applied for the purposes of her will, provided her husband declared his acceptance of the proposal within a year after her death. Semble, the right of pre-emption to the husband was a gift, and therefore the trustees were not bound to make out, nor were they entitled to the costs of making out, title to the husband out of the assets of the testatrix, to the prejudice of the persons entitled to the residue. Davison and Torrens, In re, 17 Ir. Ch. R. 7.

—— Enforcing Option.]—A. wills that B. shall sell his land to C.; C. shall compel B., by subpœna. Anon., Cary, 14.

—— By Executor of Donee.]—A testator bequeathed four leasehold houses to A. B. and C. D., in trust for his wife for life, and after her death he bequeathed the same to A. B., subject and on condition that he should grant an under-lease to C. D. for all the term wanting eleven days, at 5*l.* a year rent, of two of the houses, containing covenants similar to those contained in the original lease. The original rent of each of these two houses was 18*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* C. D. died in the lifetime of the widow, and on her death his executor claimed an under-lease:—Held, that the gift was not personal to C. D., and was not lost by his death in the lifetime of the widow; and that his executor was entitled to an under-lease according to the requisitions of the will. Taylor v. Cooper, 10 Jur. 1078.

—— Against Executor and Residuary Legatee.]—A testator devised to each of his four daughters a house and garden at G., to be built at the expense of his executors. A daughter, M., requiring the house, one was built with a garden by D., the executor, who was also residuary legatee and devisee:—Held, after the death of D., that the gift was not void, and that M. was entitled to the house and garden. Edwards v. Jones, 35 Beav. 474; 14 W. R. 815.

9. Legacies, whether General, Specific or Demonstrative.

General Principles.]—If it be doubtful on the words of a will whether a specific or general legacy is given, the rule of the court is to lean to the construction which makes the legacy general; but this rule does not involve the proposition that the court is to address itself to the construction of a will with any prepossession one way or the other. Sayer v. Sayer, 7 Hare, 377; 13 Jur. 402. And see Kirby v. Potter, 4 Ves. 478.

The court leans against considering legacies specific. Ellis v. Walker, Ambl. 310.

Legacy of the money due on a note, held specific upon the intention; but the inclination of the court is against specific legacy, and to hold it a general legacy with reference only to the security as the fund first to be applied to it. Chaworth v. Beech, 4 Ves. 555.

The word "my" alone is not enough to make a legacy specific, unless a particular fund is referred to. Parrott v. Worsford, 1 J. & W. 594; 21 R. R. 248.

A bequest of a sum of money in a bag, &c., is a specific legacy, and shall not abate with pecuniary legacies. Lawson v. Stitch, 1 Atk. 507.

Whether a whole or part of a debt due to the estate is given as a legacy, it is equally specific, and consequently a distinct tree and a distinct fruit; but if given out of the great tree of the estate, there is no ground to sever a branch from it in favour of a general legatee. Heath v. Perry, 3 Atk. 304.

Where a man devised such a quantity of corn, or number of sheep generally, it is a devise of quantity only. Jeffreys v. Jeffreys, 3 Atk. 121.

Legacy general, notwithstanding an appropriation of part of the property. Raymond v. Broadbelt, 5 Ves. 199.

Legacies are not specific without something marking the specific thing, as, the description of "my stock," &c., a mere direction to transfer, and that so much capital be kept in the same public fund, is not sufficient. Sibley v. Perry, 7 Ves. 522; 6 R. R. 183.

Bequest of personal estate not held specific merely from being combined with a devise of land. Howe v. Dartmouth (Earl), 7 Ves. 137; 6 R. R. 96.

Bequest, by codicil, that dividends only of legacies which had been bequeathed by will, should not be paid to legatees, and that the legacies should not be paid to them, leaving the principal not further disposed of, is equivalent to gift of the corpus, and is a gift of the principal. Richards v. Richards, 9 Price, 219; 23 R. R. 665.

Legacy of 1,500*l.* to be laid out in land shall be taken as land, but if a deficiency of assets then not specific, but shall contribute in proportion. Specific legacy is what vests by assent of executor. Hinton v. Pinke, 1 P. Wms. 539.

Specific Legacy—Definition of.]—A specific legacy is something which a testator identifying it by a sufficient description, and manifesting an intention that it should be enjoyed in the state and condition indicated by that description separates in favour of a particular legatee from the general mass of his personal estate. Robertson v. Broadbent, 53 L. J., Ch. 266; 8 App. Cas. 812; 50 L. T. 243; 32 W. R. 205—H. L. (E.)

A legacy of stock out of stock is specific, but money out of stock is not, but demonstrative. A specific legacy is not liable to abate; a demonstrative legacy is. A specific legacy is liable to ademption; a demonstrative is not. A specific legacy carries with it the dividend from the death of the testator; a demonstrative legacy does not. A general legacy may be given to a specific legatee, although expressed to be "in addition to" the specific legacy. Mullins v. Smith, 1 Dr. & Sm. 204; 8 W. R. 739.

A specific devise or bequest is a devise or bequest by a description which identifies a particular subject then existing as intended to pass to the donee in specie either directly or indirectly. A father devised three properties to his three sons respectively for life, with remainder in fee to their respective children, and in case of the death of either of them without issue between the others "in the same manner as the estates devised were limited to them respectively," subject to the proviso that if either died leaving a widow, but no children, the widow should have an estate for life in the premises "so specifically devised" to her husband:—Held, that the devise to such widow attached, not only to the property originally devised to her husband, but also to property coming to him under the contingent limitations. Giles v. Melsom, 42 L. J., C. P. 122; L. R. 6 H. L. 24; 28 L. T. 789; 21 W. R. 417.

The mere gift of a sum of money in consols or stock without more is not a specific gift, even though the testator at the date of his will or death has the identical sum in consols or stock; something more is required to shew that he intended the particular property to pass; but although this is the general rule, it will yield to a contrary intention if it can be gathered in a legal way from the instrument itself and the surrounding circumstances of the testator. Burke v. Doyle, [1897] 1 Ir. R. 479.

The fact that the testator has the particular stock or shares specified in the will, and the fact that the particular legacies occur in the middle of a series of specific gifts, are circumstances to be taken into consideration in deciding whether the legacies are specific or not. Ib.

Legacy whether General or Specific—Money Debts and Securities.]—Testator reciting that he is possessed of a certain sum in navy bills, bequeaths it. This is a specific legacy, and shall pass only such navy bills as he possessed at his death. Pitt v. Camelford (Lord), 3 Bro. C. C. 160.

Legacy to A. of 12,000*l.*, and to B. 4,000*l.*, the latter sum directed to be paid out of money in the hands of the testator's agent. At the time of testator's death, there was a sufficient fund in the agent's hands to answer this legacy; but the general assets did not extend to the payment of both. Legatee of the 4,000*l.* held entitled to be paid by priority. Acton v. Acton, 1 Mer. 178.

Bequest of a note for 500*l.* "in the hands of F." when F. had laid it out in stock unknown to testatrix; though the bequest of the note is specific, the legatee shall have the stock in which it is invested. Drinkwater v. Falconer, 2 Ves. Sen. 652.

A testatrix having, under her marriage settlement, a power, in default of issue, to appoint by her will a sum of 2,200*l.*, she, by her will, after reciting the power, proceeded thus: "and I give and bequeath several legacies," some to persons absolutely, and others to persons for life, and after their decease to their children or other persons by substitution, amounting, in the whole, to the precise sum of 2,200*l.*; and as to all such real estates as she had power to dispose of, under her marriage settlement or the will of her husband, she expressed her desire that the same should descend to and vest in her daughter, by the preferable title of descent; and, subject as aforesaid, she bequeathed the residue of her personal estate to her said daughter:—Held, that the legacies were not general legacies, payable out of her general personal estate, but were intended to be given by the testatrix under a mistaken notion, that the execution of the power was not restricted to the event of her dying without issue. Walker v. Laxton, 1 Y. & J. 557.

Testator bequeathed 7,000*l.* secured on mortgage of an estate to W., belonging to R. T. The 7,000*l.* and interest were received after the date of the will by the testator's agent on his account, and immediately afterwards 6,000*l.*, part of it, was invested on another mortgage, and the remainder was paid into a bank in which the testator had no other moneys, but was afterwards drawn out by a person to whom the testator had given a cheque for the amount:—Held, that the legacy was specific, and, notwithstanding the 6,000*l.* remained due on the second mortgage at the testator's death, that the legacy was wholly adeemed. Gardner v. Hatton, 6 Sim. 93.

Testator gave to his sister the interest of 300*l.* upon bond for life; and after her decease to her daughter, the interest due upon the said bond at her death, with the principal. The legacy is specific, and there being among other bonds one of the exact amount, it was held to refer to that, though an insolvent security, and the interest in arrear before the death of the testator. Innes v. Johnson, 4 Ves. 568.

One partner, by will, gives to the other 2,000*l.* which appears to be due to him on the last settlement, in trust, &c., if he did not draw it out of trade:—Held, these last words made it a specific bequest; without them it would not have been specific. Ellis v. Walker, Ambl. 309.

A testator, after stating that, "as for his worldly goods and chattels, he bequeathed them as follows," gave certain pecuniary legacies to his sons and daughter, and then bequeathed to his daughter "all things in the house remaining," of whatever kind, and "all moneys both in the house and out of it." There was no other gift of his residuary estate. He had some moneys both in the house and out of it at his death. He had also consols standing in his name, and some shares in a benefit building society:—Held, that the bequest of "moneys" was specific, and that it did not carry the consols, the shares in the building society, or the residuary personal estate. Collins v. Collins, 40 L. J., Ch. 541; L. R. 12 Eq. 455; 24 L. T. 780; 19 W. R. 971.

A testator said, "I leave my wife 200*l.* to dispose of as she may think proper, and the interest of the residue of my property, viz. the sum of 454*l.* 9*s.* 9*d.*, for life." He subsequently stated that he had 200*l.* in the savings bank, and 454*l.* 9*s.* 9*d.* and 30*l.* in addition in another bank. His property consisted of the 454*l.* 9*s.* 9*d.*, and 30*l.* and some furniture, and there was in the savings bank a sum of 200*l.* in his wife's name, being part of her separate estate:—Held, that this latter sum was the 200*l.* referred to in the will. Hesketh v. Magennis, 27 Beav. 395.

Legacy of 50*l.* for a ring is not specific; therefore it shall carry interest like other pecuniary legacies. Apreece v. Apreece, 1 V. & B. 364.

Testator having a sum of 500*l.* secured by mortgage, bequeathed to defendant 500*l.*, to continue at interest on such securities as he should leave at his death, or to be put out on government securities, at the election of his executors. There being a deficiency of assets:—Held, that the 500*l.* legacy was not so specific as that it should not abate with the pecuniary legacies. Lawson v. Stitch, 1 Atk. 507.

Bank annuities, directed by will to be purchased out of personal estate, to be considered as pecuniary, not specific, legacies. Gibbons v. Hills, Dick. 324.

A direction to invest so much money as will produce a certain amount of stock:—Held, to be a pecuniary legacy. Edwards v. Hall, 11 Hare, 23; 22 L. J., Ch. 1078. Affirmed, 25 L. J., Ch. 82; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1189; 4 W. R. 111—L.JJ.

A testatrix, by a codicil, after reciting that she had in the Bank of Ireland money not theretofore disposed of, bequeathed the said sum to trustees to pay certain legacies. She had no money in the Bank of Ireland, but she had government stock sufficient to pay the legacies:—Held, first, that the legacies were payable out of the general assets; and, secondly, that they were payable in equal priority with other legacies bequeathed by the will and prior codicils. Reilly v. Stoney, 16 Ir. Ch. R. 295.

A testator bequeathed "1,000*l.*, now in the Royal Bank," and charged his house property with the payment of such of his legacies as were not made payable out of some special fund. At the date of the will he had no money in the Royal Bank, but he had shares in the capital stock of that bank of the value of nearly 1,000*l.*, and he purchased other shares afterwards:—Held, that the legacy was payable out of the shares. Conly v. Greene, Ir. R. 5 Eq. 430.

Construction of will where specific legacies were given out of a specific debt. Smith v. Fitzgerald, 3 V. & B. 2; 13 R. R. 129.

Legacies to be paid out of a specific security, which failed:—Held, general upon the circumstances. Roberts v. Pocock, 4 Ves. 150.

A legacy of so much of a specific fund, and in case of failure of that fund, the deficiency out of another specific fund, held a specific legacy, and not general or pecuniary; and that therefore legatee was entitled from testator's death. Fontaine v. Tyler, 9 Price, 94.

A legacy of 1,000*l.*, "being part of the moneys received by J. from my debtor A. G., but not remitted to me," is specific. Nelson v. Carter, 5 Sim. 530.

Upon the construction of a will:—Held, that certain legacies of stock and of money on mortgages, bonds, &c., were specific. Evans v. Jones, 2 Coll. C. C. 516.

Where a testator directs a specific sum to be sold, and a certain sum out of the sale moneys to be paid to A., and the residue to B., each of the legacies is specific, and the legatees are entitled to share the income of the fund from the testator's death between them in proportion to the values of their respective legacies at that time. Jefferys, In re, 35 L. J., Ch. 426.

The testator bequeathed a leasehold public-house upon trust for sale, and out of the proceeds of such sale, and the rents and profits until sale, he gave a legacy to X. Y., and as to the residue of such proceeds, and rents and profits, and all other the residue of his real and personal estate, he gave the same to his two daughters:—Held, that the gift of the residue of the proceeds of the sale of the public-house was not specific, but that such residue formed part of the general residuary estate of the testator. Green, In re, Baldock v. Green, 58 L. J., Ch. 157; 40 Ch. D. 610; 60 L. T. 225; 37 W. R. 300.

—— Stocks and Shares.]—Legacies of stock are specific or general legacies according to the intent of testator from the will, and the circumstance whether he meant to confine it to the stock he then had. Avelyn v. Ward, 1 Ves. Sen. 425.

Bequest of "400*l.* East India bonds," under the circumstances, not specific, but a legacy of quantity to be made good out of the general assets, the testatrix having repeatedly in this bequest omitted the word "my," which she had used in other bequests clearly specific, and having only one East India bond at her death. Bequest of South Sea stock in parcels to a larger amount than testatrix was possessed of held specific, the bequest of the last parcel being called "the remaining South Sea stock standing in her name." These legatees must abate in proportion. Sleech v. Thorington, 2 Ves. Sen. 560.

Legacies are not specific without something marking the specific thing, as the description of "my stock," &c., a mere direction to transfer, and that so much capital be kept in the same public fund, is not sufficient. Sibley v. Perry, 7 Ves. 522; 6 R. R. 183.

A testator, amongst various specific bequests, gave "1,500*l.* of my Egyptian 9 per cent. bonds" to H., and "500*l.* Egyptian 9 per cent." bonds to L. Before his death he sold his Egyptian 9 per cent. bonds, and purchased with the proceeds Khedive 7 per cent. bonds:—Held, that the gift of "my" Egyptian bonds was specific and adeemed, but that the gift of Egyptian bonds to L. was not specific, and not adeemed. Macdonald v. Irvine, 47 L. J., Ch. 494; 8 Ch. D. 101; 38 L. T. 155; 26 W. R. 381.

R. devised 5,000*l.* South Sea annuities to A., and 5,000*l.* South Sea annuities to P. The testator had only 5,000*l.* in this stock. Declared, that these should be considered as legacies of quantity and number, and other 5,000*l.* were ordered to be purchased out of the testator's personal estate. Purse v. Snaplin, 1 Atk. 414.

One devises the sum of 6,000*l.* South Sea stock to J. S., and the testator has but 5,360*l.* No more than the 5,360*l.* shall pass, and the rest of the testator's personal estate not be obliged to make it up 6,000*l.* But it might be otherwise if the testator had no stock at all. Ashton v. Ashton, 3 P. Wms. 384; Cas. t. Talb. 152.

Legacy of 200*l.* 4 per cent. consols bank annuities held not specific. The general assets, therefore, are liable to make up the deficiency of the fund. Wilson v. Brownsmith, 9 Ves. 180.

One devises the sum of 2,000*l.* South Sea stock; at the time of making his will he had just 2,000*l.* South Sea stock; he afterwards sold

1,500*l.* of it, and three-fourths of the residue was turned into annuities by act of parliament:—Held, the bequest was not specific nor adeemed. Bronsdon v. Winter, Ambl. 57.

A bequest of certain quantity of stock will not be held specific from the circumstance of the testator having that exact quantity at the time of the bequest. Id. 59.

Testator willed that his wife should receive the interest of "all the property I possess in the public funds for her life":—Held, that the wife was entitled to receive the income of all the property which the testator had in the funds at the date of his will, and in its then state of investment, notwithstanding it consisted of long annuities. Cockran v. Cockran, 14 Sim. 248; 8 Jur. 679.

A testator by her will bequeathed funded property sufficient to pay an annuity of 50*l.* to A. for life, and after A.'s death she bequeathed the fund to other persons; and after giving various pecuniary legacies, she bequeathed to B. the whole of the remainder of her (the testatrix's) dividends during her life; and after B.'s decease she bequeathed 1,000*l.* stock to C., and other sums of stock to other persons. The testatrix died shortly after the date of her will, entitled to 606*l.* long annuities, but to no other stock:—Held, that the bequest to B. during her life, of the whole of the remainder of the dividends of the testatrix, was specific, and that C. and the other legatees in remainder after B.'s death were not entitled to have the long annuities converted into bank annuities; though being a decreasing fund, the legacies might altogether fail. Vincent v. Newcombe, Younge, 599.

A testator, before making his will, transferred two sums of 4 per cents. and 5 per cents., which were then the whole of his funded property, into the joint names of himself and his wife. By his will he bequeathed all his funded property or estate of what kind soever, to trustees, in trust for his wife for life, and after her decease, in trust (amongst other things) to pay certain legacies of 4 per cent. stock, amounting, within 50*l.*, to the stock of that description which he had so transferred; and he gave the residue of his estate to A. and B. He afterwards purchased further sums of 5 per cents. in the names of himself and his wife, and died in her lifetime, having no stock except that beforementioned, exclusive of which, his property was not sufficient to pay his legacies:—Held, that the wife, on her husband's death, became absolutely entitled to the stock; and that the bequest of the testator's funded property was not sufficiently specific to make her elect between the stock and the benefits which she took, under the will, in certain parts of the testator's property. Dummer v. Pitcher, 2 Myl. & K. 262; Coop. t. Brough. 257. Affirming 5 Sim. 35.

A testator gave to his wife F. the interest of all his property in the public funds during her life, the principal being placed in the names of the undermentioned trustees for that purpose, and he also gave to his wife all his other property which he might be possessed of at his decease, after paying his funeral expenses and debts, part of his funded property being applied for that purpose if necessary. On the death of his wife, he gave to his daughter J. 200*l.* stock 3 per cent. reduced annuities, and to two other persons 50*l.* 3 per cent. reduced annuities respectively, and to his son the residue of his property after paying those legacies. And he appointed two other persons his executors and trustees. At the date of his will the testator had 700*l.* 3 per cent. reduced annuities, but he afterwards sold out that stock, and invested part of the produce on mortgage:—Held, that the gift to F. of the interest of the testator's property in the funds was specific, and was consequently adeemed by the sale of the stock, but that the other legacies were general, and that F. took only a life interest in the testator's residuary estate. Hayes v. Hayes, 1 Keen, 97; 5 L. J., Ch. 243.

A testatrix bequeathed and appointed 1,800*l.* consols, and 300*l.* long annuities, and all moneys over which she had the power of appointment under a particular deed, and all the residue of her personal estate, upon certain trusts:—Held, that the gift of the consols and long annuities was specific. Kampf v. Jones, 2 Keen, 756; 7 L. J., Ch. 63; 1 Jur. 814.

Testator bequeathed, amongst other stock legacies, 30,000*l.* consols to the provost and fellows of Queen's College, to be by them expended, within three years after his death, in the purchase of such books for the use of, and to be added to, the library of the college, as the provost and fellows for the time being should in their discretion think fit; and in a subsequent paragraph he directed that, if at his decease he should not have a sufficiency of stock standing in his name to answer the several stock legacies aforesaid, his executor should purchase and make up the deficiency out of his residuary estate. The stock standing in the testator's name at his death was sufficient to answer the bequest to the college:—Held, that that bequest was specific. Queen's College v. Sutton, 12 Sim. 521; 11 L. J., Ch. 198; 6 Jur. 906.

A testator was possessed of fifty original shares, and seventy other after-purchased shares. He gave thirty whole shares to trustees, upon trust, for a married woman for her separate use for life, and thirty whole shares to another party. He declared that the legacies should not be deemed specific, so as to be capable of ademption. On the seventy shares all the calls had not been paid, but on the fifty the whole had been paid. The railway company raised new shares, and offered the same ratably to the registered proprietors. The executors accepted sixty, and paid the deposit on them in respect of the thirty shares first bequeathed:—Held, that the bequests were specific, and that the income of the shares from the testator's death belonged to the legatees; that the legatees were entitled to the new shares in respect of the shares bequeathed to them, subject to the payment of the future calls; that the legatees were entitled to select, and the executors not entitled to appropriate the shares to be taken by the legatees; that the original and purchased shares must, with respect to the liability of the testator and his estate to pay the calls thereon, be considered identical; and that, therefore, his estate was liable to pay the calls on both sets of shares. Jacques v. Chambers, 2 Coll. C. C. 435; 16 L. J., Ch. 243; 11 Jur. 295.

Testatrix gives to the minister, &c., of A. 5*l.* per annum bank long annuities; to the minister, &c., of B. 5*l.* per annum like bank annuities; to the treasurer of C. and D. 100*l.* long annuity stock each; to the governors of E. 100*l.* long annuity stock; and "30*l.* per annum, further part of my bank long annuities," upon trust, to apply the interest to and for the use of L. D., till she attains twenty-one, and then to transfer "the said 30*l.* per annum bank long annuities" to the said L. D. She then gives to W. C. 150*l.* bank long annuities stock, and 10*l.* per annum, "further part of my long annuities," in trust for H. G. By a codicil, reciting, "whereas I may have made a wrong calculation of the value of my fortune in the funds at the time of my decease," she directs, in case of deficiency, it may be deducted out of the residue, as she would have all her legacies paid to the full. The testatrix, at the time of her death, possessed only 385*l.* long annuities, and her personal estate was insufficient to pay her debts. Upon a question, whether the treasurer of C. was entitled to a legacy of 100*l.* long annuity stock, or only to 100*l.* to be raised by the sale of stock to that amount:—Held, that it was not a specific gift of so much stock, but a pecuniary legacy. Att.-Gen. v. Grote, 2 Russ. & M. 699. Reversing 3 Mer. 316; 17 R. R. 91.

Testator reciting that he has 1,500*l.* 5 per cents., gives it to A., and then gives to B. all other his stock, that he might be possessed of at his death. The latter bequest is not specific, but is liable to debts, in preference to the former. Parrott v. Worsfold, 1 J. & W. 594; 21 R. R. 248.

Legacy of "all my stock that I may be possessed of at my decease," not specific. Id. 601.

A testatrix, by a codicil, gave to A. and M. "50*l.* each of bank long annuities, now standing in my name." At the date of the codicil, and at her death she possessed long annuities sufficient to answer this bequest specifically, but not also to satisfy certain legacies charged by the other testamentary papers upon the same stock. Evidence as to the state and value of the testatrix's property in the funds at those respective times was admitted, and in the effect of that evidence, and the language of the testamentary papers, taken together, the bequests to A. and M. were held not to be specific but pecuniary. Boys v. Williams, 2 Russ. & M. 689. Reversing 3 Sim. 563.

A testatrix, having 115*l.* long annuities standing in her name at her death, of which 65*l.* life annuities had been purchased for her by T., bequeathed her residuary estate to trustees to be invested or continued by them in the public funds, or at interest, the stocks, funds, or securities to be varied at discretion, in trust to pay certain annuities out of the interest, dividends, &c., and subject thereto to pay the said trust moneys, stocks, funds, and securities to S., for life, and subject thereto she gave all the residue of her estate to the trustees absolutely. By a codicil she gave all the money funded by T. in her name in the long annuities (which she mentioned to be 50*l.* per annum) to C., after S.'s death:—Held, that 50*l.* of the long annuities were specifically bequeathed to C. D'Aglie v. Fryer, 12 Sim. 1.

Bequest to an hopsital of 3,400*l.* in the 3 per cents., the dividends to be divided among four widows; this is a pecuniary, not a specific legacy. Peterborough v. Mortlock, 1 Bro. C. C. 565.

Legacies of new South Sea annuities declared to be pecuniary, not specific, though the testator had more of that stock than sufficient to pay them. Simmons v. Vallance, 4 Bro. C. C. 345.

Legacies of stock given by a married woman by her will, executed in pursuance of a power:—Held, notwithstanding the stock was misdescribed, to be specific, and the costs of a suit instituted by the executrices, who were also the residuary legatees of the testatrix, for the purpose of having the trusts administered, directed to be borne ratably by the specific legacies. Warren v. Postlethwaite, 2 Coll. C. C. 116; 9 Jur. 721.

Testatrix by her will gave 15,000*l.* reduced annuities, "part of a larger sum standing in my name," to S. J., and 3,500*l.* like annuities, "being further part of such annuities standing in my name," to J. L. By her second codicil, after reciting that by her will she had bequeathed 15,000*l.* reduced annuities standing in her name to S. J., and that she was desirous of making a further provision for J. W., another legatee, she revoked the bequest to S. J., so far as related to the sum of 6,000*l.*, "part of the said sum of 15,000*l.* reduced annuities," and directed her executors, as soon as conveniently might be after her death to transfer to J. W. "the said sum of 6,000*l.* reduced annuities," and after further reciting that by her will she had bequeathed 3,500*l.* "like reduced annuities" to J. L., and that she was desirous of increasing such bequest, she thereby revoked the last-mentioned bequest, and in lieu of it gave 4,500*l.* "like reduced annuities" to J. L. By her third codicil she, in order that J. W. might have the full benefit of the bequest of 6,000*l.* reduced annuities given to him by her second codicil, directed that such legacy should not be subject to any deduction for legacy duty or other charges, and that the same should be transferred to him before and in preference to any other legacies and bequests given by her out of or as part of her reduced annuities. The testatrix had 21,300*l.* reduced annuities standing in her name at the date of her will. At the date of her second codicil that sum was reduced to 18,000*l.* like annuities. At the date of her third codicil it was reduced to 16,000*l.* like annuities:—Held, that the legacy of 4,500*l.* "like reduced annuities," given by the second codicil to J. L., was not a specific but a general legacy, and that J. W. was entitled to have 6,000*l.* reduced annuities transferred to him out of the 16,000*l.* like annuities, without any deduction or abatement whatsoever. Johnson v. Johnson, 14 Sim. 313; 8 Jur. 1038.

A legacy of l., 3 per cent. consolidated bank annuities, to be retained and appropriated, or purchased by my executors out of my personal estate, is not specific. Rogers v. Clarke, C. P. Cooper, 376.

Testator bequeathed as many of his canal shares as he should leave children him surviving, one share for each child; at the date of his will, he had eight shares and seven children; at his death, ten shares and eleven children:—Held, that the bequest was specific. Miller v. Little, 2 Beav. 259.

Where a testator possessed of canal shares (declared by the act to be personalty), at the date of his will gave five to A., five to B., and the like number to C., but there was nothing to mark any particular shares, and at his death he had ceased to hold any:—Held, that the legacies were not specific, but general, and the legatees entitled to such a sum of money as would suffice to purchase the number of shares so given. Robinson v. Addison, 2 Beav. 515; 9 L. J., Ch. 369; 4 Jur. 647.

Testator bequeathed the sum of 4,000*l.* capital stock in the 3 per cent. consols, or in whatever of the government funds the same should be found invested :—Held, that this was a specific legacy, and that the executor having paid one dividend on the stock, which became due within a year after the testator's death, to the residuary legatee, must refund to the specific legatee. Hosking v. Nicholls, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 478 ; 11 L. J., Ch. 230 ; 6 Jur. 386.

A testator gave all his money in hand and at his bankers to his trustees, to be added to his new 3*l.* per cents., which 3*l.* per cents. and five Devon Great Consols he desired might be equally divided between his grand-daughters ; and he gave to his trustees 600 West Basset shares, 600 Wheal Agar shares, and five Devon Great Consols, to divide between his grandsons ; the remaining Wheal Agar shares he might hold at the time of his decease, as well as any other property, he desired might be added to the 3*l.* per cents. for the benefit of his grand-daughters. He at the time of his death was possessed of ten Devon Great consols, 600 Wheal Bassets, and 1304 Wheal Agar shares :—Held, that the bequests were specific. Hill v. Hill, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 806 ; 12 L. T. 797.

A testator gave a legacy of 500*l.* 3*l.* per cent. consols, or other stock into which the same might be converted, or in case he should not be possessed of such stock he gave a legacy of as much sterling money as that amount of stock would have been worth at his death, and by a subsequent clause the testator gave another legacy of like stock to the same person, "in addition to the legacy already given," to be raised out of the proceeds of his residuary estate : —Held, that the first legacy, there being sufficient stock to answer it, was specific, but that the second legacy, though expressed to be a substitute for the first legacy, was general. Mullins v. Smith, 1 Dr. & Sm. 204 ; 8 W. R. 739.

A testatrix bequeathed a large amount of stock legacies, declaring that by the word stock she meant government stocks, or stock or shares in public companies, to which she might be entitled. She had various such stocks and shares :—Held, that the gifts were specific, and that the legatees were entitled to a proportionate share of each of such stocks and shares. Measure v. Carleton, 30 Beav. 538.

A testator gave freehold property and 2,400*l.* of his preferential stock of a railway company in trust for his niece A. for life ; remainder to her children. A. like bequest of copyholds and stock to two other nieces for life, with remainder to their children. The preferential stock at the time of the testator's death did not amount to 2,400*l.* He had, however, other stocks and railway debentures :—Held, that the niece A. could not elect to have the 2,400*l.* made up from the other stocks, and that as the whole of the stocks were given in trust for the three nieces, the whole of the stock should be divided into thirds. Shey v. Barber, 18 L. T. 145.

A testatrix bequeathed the income of 300*l.*, invested by her in the General Steam Navigation Company, and also the income of 200*l.*, to a lady for life, and after her death desired that the principal sum of 500*l.* should be divided amongst the children of the legatee, and declared that in case her personal estate should prove insufficient for the payment of her legacies and annuities the deficiency should be made up out of certain real estate, and she bequeathed the residue of her personal estate to certain persons. By a codicil, the testatrix gave all her personal estate to another person :—Held, that the gift of the 300*l.* was specific and revoked by the codicil, but that the 200*l.* remained charged on the real estate. Kermode v. Macdonald, 37 L. J., Ch. 879 ; L. R. 3 Ch. 584 ; 19 L. T. 179 ; 17 W. R. 4.

A testator gave to his trustees 700*l.* 3*l.* per cent. consolidated bank annuities, "part of a larger sum of like annuities standing in my name," upon trust to pay a weekly sum to J. He also bequeathed various other sums for the benefit of some of his children, designating the sums as "3*l.* per cent. consolidated bank annuities further part of the said larger sum," and bequeathed to others of his children various legacies of "like annuities, further part of such larger sum." The legacies amounted to a sum far beyond the amount of 3 per cent. consols possessed by the testator at the date of his will and death, but he had at the date of his will and death, besides 3 per cent. consols, a large amount of "new 3 per cent. annuities," and "3 per cent. reduced annuities" :—Held, that the legacies were not specific. Bumpus v. Bumpus, 29 L. T. 800.

A testator gave a legacy of "all those my 7,000 dollars or the produce thereof," to B. The testator was possessed, at the date of his will and death, of 6,800 dollars in United States 5.20 government bonds, but of nothing else in any way answering the description of the gift. The bonds were sold by the executors and produced 7,863 dollars :—Held, that the gift was specific and was represented by the 6,800 dollars in United States 5.20 bonds, to the produce of which B. was therefore entitled. Palin v. Brookes, 26 W. R. 876.

A gift by will in the words, "I give to my dear sister A. the interest of 4,500*l.* money in the funds for her absolute use and benefit" ; followed by specific gifts to the same legatee and the words "and at her death to M., the funded property to H." The testatrix had, at the date of her will, an absolute interest in about 4,000*l.* consols in the names of trustees :—Held, a specific gift of the 4,000*l.* consols for the benefit of the sister for life, with a gift over to H. absolutely. Page v. Young, L. R. 19 Eq. 501 ; 23 W. R. 479.

A testator bequeathed "fifty shares in the York Union Banking Company," to be held upon certain trusts. At the date of the will the company was registered and incorporated as an unlimited company under the companies acts, and the testator held seventy shares therein of the nominal value of 100*l.* each. Between the dates of his will and his death, the company was registered as a limited company under the same style, except that the word "limited" was added, and each 100*l.* share was converted into two shares of the nominal value of 60*l.*, and 140 of these new shares were allotted to the testator in substitution for his seventy shares of 100*l.* each :—Held, that the bequest was not specific. Gray, In re, Dresser v. Gray, 56 L. J., Ch. 975 ; 36 Ch. D. 205 ; 57 L. T. 132 ; 35 W. R. 795.

Where a testator had bequeathed "debenture stock or shares" in two companies, neither of which had issued any such stock or shares :— Held, that upon the construction of the whole will debentures in such companies owned by the testator were meant, and that the gift was, therefore, a specific and not a general legacy. Nottage, In re, Jones v. Palmer, 64 L. J., Ch. 695 ; [1895] 2 Ch. 657 ; 12 R. 571 ; 73 L. T. 265 ; 44 W. R. 22—C. A.

By marriage settlement a wife had, in the event of her dying in her husband's lifetime, a power of appointment by will over the property therein comprised, which in the event of her surviving him became hers absolutely. At the date of the wife's death the property comprised in the marriage settlement included consols and reduced and new 3 per cents.; her separate property comprised consols. By her will the wife, after reciting the settlement, gave and appointed everything she had power to dispose of to trustees, and then gave a number of stock legacies in the form, "I direct my trustees to stand possessed of 1,000*l.* consols upon trust to pay the dividends to A. for life, and after his death to transfer the same sum of consols to his children"; and in the form, "I direct my trustees to transfer 1,500*l.* consols to B." The new 3 per cents. so given amounted to exactly, and the reduced 3 per cents. to very nearly, the amount of those stocks subject to the settlement. The amount of consols so given was more than that subject to the settlement, but less than the amounts subject to the settlement and belonging to her separate estate taken together. The will contained a residuary gift: —Held, that all the legacies were specific, that those of new and reduced 3 per cents. failed, and those of consols could only be paid pro tanto out of the consols belonging to the testatrix's separate estate. Young, In re, Trye v. Sullivan, 52 L. T. 754.

—— Legacies connected with Land.]—Pecuniary legacy directed to be paid by sale of an estate, which testator had contracted to purchase, is payable out of the testator's general assets, if contract cannot be completed. Fowler v. Willoughby, 2 Sim. & S. 354; 4 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 72; 25 R. R. 219.

Devise in trust to sell, but not for less than 10,000*l.*, and to pay several sums amounting to 7,300*l.*, and the overplus moneys arising from the sale to A.:—Held, a specific legacy of 10,000*l.*, and the sale producing less, A. and the others to abate; legacies to charity void by the statute 9 Geo. 2, c. 36, fell into the general residue. Page v. Leapingwell, 18 Ves. 463; 11 R. R. 234.

A testator gave a number of legacies, adding, "I guarantee my estates at C. for the payment of the above legacies"; and, in the subsequent part of his will, he gave many other legacies. The first class of legacies are not specific, and, failing the estates at C., are to be borne by the general personal estate. Willox v. Rhodes, 2 Russ. 452.

Testator, by his will, after devising his messuage, dwelling-house, and hereditaments, situate at W., and all other his real estate, to a trustee, upon the trusts and to the uses therein mentioned, directed, and empowered, authorised the trustee and his heirs to raise, by sale of the timber and other trees growing on his estate of W., the sum of 1,000*l.*, which, and also the principal sum of 1,000*l.* due to him from A., he gave and bequeathed to the plaintiff, to be paid to him when he should attain the age of twenty-four years, but without interest in the meantime. And after giving various pecuniary legacies, the testator gave and bequeathed all the residue and remainder of his personal estate subject to the payment of his legacies, debts, funeral, and testamentary expenses, to his two nieces (who, under the limitations in the will of the real estate, also took estates pur autre vie in the rents and profits of the testator's estate at W.), equally to be divided between them, share and share alike:—Held, that the 1,000*l.* directed to be raised out of the timber constituted a specific legacy, and that the deficiency of the timber, if any, for payment of the legacy, would not be supplied out of the personal estate. Dickin v. Barker, 14 L. J., Ch. 22; 8 Jur. 1098.

Testatrix bequeathed an annuity of 100*l.* to her niece for life, and charged the same upon the leasehold property in Wimpole Street, and all and every her residuary personal estate and effects whatsoever, save and except her leasehold premises at R.:—Held, that this was a demonstrative legacy. Livesay v. Redfern, 2 Y. & C. 90; 6 L. J., Ex. Eq. 35.

Legacy whether Specific or Demonstrative.]—Legacy of 1,000*l.* out of my reduced bank annuities, held pecuniary, the court leaning against holding a legacy specific, unless clearly intended. The court would not take into consideration evidence of the value of the stock at the date of the codicil by which the legacy was given, nor an erasure of a legacy to the same person by will, but decided upon the words of the codicil. Kirby v. Potter, 4 Ves. 748; 4 R. R. 342.

Legacy of my stock, or in my stock, or part of my stock, will make a legacy specific. Id. 750.

After a legacy of stock in 4 per cent. consols bank annuities, a legacy to same persons of "an additional sum of 200*l.* more, to be paid out of the 4 per cents." &c., was held pecuniary. Deane v. Test, 9 Ves. 146; 1 Smith, 112.

A pecuniary legacy, given with a particular security, is a demonstrative legacy. Such a legacy does not fail by the failure of the security upon which it is given. Fowler v. Willoughby, 2 Sim. & S. 354; 4 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 72; 52 R. R. 219.

Legacy "of 5,000*l.* sterling, or 50,000*l.* current rupees," afterwards described as "now vested in" the East India Company's bonds, and sometimes mentioned as the said sum of 5,000*l.* sterling, held not specific, but general as a demonstrative legacy, with a fund pointed out; a construction to be favoured for a natural child, the will also giving one legacy clearly specific, viz. the sum of 33,480*l.*, "which said sum is in two bills" described as then lying for acceptance. Gillaume v. Adderley, 15 Ves. 384.

Testatrix bequeathed an annuity of 100*l.* to her niece for life, and charged the same upon her leasehold property in Wimpole Street, and all and every her residuary personal estate and effects whatsoever, save and except her leasehold premises at R.:—Held, that this was a demonstrative legacy. Livesay v. Redfern, 2 Y. & C. 90; 6 L. J., Ex. Eq. 35.

A legacy of so much of a specific fund, and in case of failure of that fund, the deficiency out of another specific fund:—Held, a specific legacy, and not general or pecuniary, and that therefore legatee was entitled from testator's death. Fontaine v. Tyler, 9 Price, 94.

Bequest of 10,000*l.* sterling, "being my share of the capital now engaged in the banking business," &c.:—Held, to be a demonstrative, and not a specific legacy. Sparrow v. Josselyn, 16 Beav. 135.

A lady, who had gone through the ceremony of marriage with the widower of her deceased sister, gave certain legacies, which she desired her supposed husband to pay out of certain property belonging to her which she believed had passed to him upon marriage. The lady survived the husband:—Held, that they were demonstrative legacies, and payable out of the testatrix's estate. Jones v. Southall, 32 Beav. 31; 1 N. R. 152; 32 L. J., Ch. 130; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 93; 8 L. T. 103; 11 W. R. 247.

H., by will, gave certain annuities, and directed that they should be paid by his trustees out of the rents of his real estate. He then devised his real estates to trustees, out of the rents and income to pay the annuities, and subject thereto upon other trusts. H. died, and the rents and income of his real estates were insufficient to satisfy the annuities:—Held, that the gift was not specific, but demonstrative, and that the deficiency must be paid out of the capital of the residuary personal estate. Paget v. Huish, 32 L. J., Ch. 468; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 906; 2 N. R. 104; 8 L. T. 445; 11 W. R. 636.

A testator bequeathed to C. the full amount of whatever sum H. might be indebted to C. at the testator's decease. The testator added, "And it is my positive will that the amount required for the payment of the same, whatever it may be, be taken out of the amount of that share to which H. becomes entitled by a life interest under my will." The share of H. proved insufficient to pay the debt:—Held, that this was not a demonstrative legacy to C., and that his debt could only be satisfied out of the assets so far as the share of H. therein would extend. Coard v. Holderness, 22 Beav. 391.

A testatrix bequeathed various legacies to be paid out of a reversionary personal estate upon the death of the tenant for life; by her codicil she directed that they should be paid, in common with the other legacies named in her will, immediately after her death:—Held, that the legacies were demonstrative. Williams v. Hughes, 24 Beav. 474; 27 L. J., Ch. 218; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 42; 6 W. R. 94.

W., by will, after desiring that his executor and partner H. might be allowed a year for converting his (the testator's) "proportion of capital, invested in the business he was then carrying on with H.," into cash, and that such cash might be paid over as realised (with the exception of special bequests thereinafter mentioned) to the charity commissioners to be invested, desired that all shares of which he might die possessed might be transferred into the names of the charity commissioners, without being sold; the interest to be paid by them to certain persons for life. W. then directed, that after the death of the persons named sufficient of the property so invested by the commissioners should be converted by them, and paid over to a number of charities, naming the sum to be given to each; and he then requested his executors would pay, as soon as conveniently might be after his decease, "out of the capital employed in the business," to the persons mentioned, certain sums (naming twenty-two legatees, and sums amounting together to about 700*l.*). At the date of his will, W. was in partnership with H., but before his death the business failed, and a composition was paid, mainly by the testator, at whose death the partnership assets were outstanding, and his proportion of capital consisted of half of the assets, after deducting the debts, one of which was a large debt due to himself:—Held, that the twenty-two legacies, directed to be paid as soon as conveniently might be after W.'s decease, were demonstrative, and not specific, and that if the particular fund failed, the deficiency was payable out of the general personal estate not specially given, and that the words "capital invested in the business" comprised all that was coming to the testator from his partner's estate, inclusive of the debt. Bevan v. Att.-Gen., 4 Giff. 361; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1099; 9 L. T. 221.

A testator being entitled to real and personal estate absolutely, and having a power of appointment over certain settled personal estate in favour of his children, gave by his will pecuniary legacies to the children, and then appointed the settled property subject to and charged with the legacies to his children. He also bequeathed and devised his residuary personal and his real estate, subject to the payment of the legacies given by his will:—Held, that the legacies given to the children were in the nature of demonstrative legacies, and that the settled property was primarily applicable for the payment of them. Disney v. Crosse, L. R. 2 Eq. 592.

A testatrix appointed property to trustees to sell all the property except certain real estate, and to hold the proceeds to pay the legacies thereinafter given, and to pay an annuity to A. for life, and subject thereto for B. and her children, and after B.'s death without children to sell the real estate not before sold, and out of the proceeds to pay A., his executors, administrators, and assigns, a legacy in lieu of the annuity, and to hold the residue for all the children of C. and the issue of such as should be then dead, equally to be divided between such children and issue, share and share alike, but so that such issue should take such share only as their respective parents would, if living, have been entitled to. A. died in the lifetime of B., who had no children:—Held, that in the events which had happened the legacy to A. was payable; that it was a demonstrative legacy; and that the issue of the deceased children of C. took as tenants in common. Hodges v. Grant, 36 L. J., Ch. 935; L. R. 4 Eq. 140; 15 W. R. 607.

A testatrix, after reciting that she was entitled to two sums of 4,000*l.* and 6,000*l.* under her father's will, and directing certain legacies, amounting to 4,900*l.*, to be paid out of the 4,000*l.* and out of her other personal estate except the 6,000*l.*, directed "the following legacies and bequests to be paid out of the said sum of 6,000*l.*," and thereupon gave and bequeathed further legacies amounting to 5,800*l.* She declared that all the bequests of her will should be free of legacy duty, which was to be paid out of her residuary estate, and bequeathed the residue to the persons therein named after payment of all debts, expenses, and bequests. After her death it was found that she had only a life interest in the 6,000*l.*:—Held, that the legacies directed to be paid thereout were demonstrative, and not specific. Cunliffe v. Cunliffe, 23 W. R. 724.

Testator gave two sums of 2,442*l.* and 5,000*l.* to his three nieces, the last of which sums was a debt due to him; and he directed, that if he received any part of it in his lifetime, it was to be repaid out of an estate to be sold. The testator received the 5,000*l.* in his lifetime:—Held, not a specific, but a demonstrative legacy; and the primary estate having failed, the personal estate was liable. Colville v. Middleton, 3 Beav. 570; 4 Jur. 1197.

A testatrix, domiciled in Jamaica, gave legacies in Jamaica currency to J. C., H. C. and M. C.,

persons also domiciled in that island, and desired them to be paid out of money due to him on certain bonds, which the will specified. At his death, which happened in Scotland, in 1790, no such bonds were to be found; but J. C. was then indebted to his estate upon other bonds in a sum which exceeded the value of his legacy, and which, a year after the testator's death, including interest, was equal to the amount of the penalties. In 1794 actions were brought in Jamaica upon these bonds by the testator's personal representative there, and judgments recovered against J. C. for the full penalties and costs; but no attempt was made to levy execution upon the judgments, and they remained unsatisfied. About the time of the testator's death the legatees came to England, and never returned to Jamaica, nor did any of them set up a claim to their legacies prior to the year 1817. In the year 1818 H. C. and M. C. resigned their respective legacies to the plaintiff, who was the personal representative of J. C., the other legatee, and he, in the year 1821, when administration was for the first time taken out to the testator's estate in England, filed the bill for the purpose of enforcing payment:—Held, that the legacies were demonstrative only, and were not to be considered as having been adeemed; that, as they were payable out of assets in this country, their value was to be computed according to the standard par of exchange between Jamaica and British currency, and not according to the actual rate at the time of payment; that J. C. must be considered as having been paid his legacy by retaining the amount out of the bond debts, and that that amount was to be deducted first from the interest, and then pro tanto from the principal due from him upon the bonds, as at the end of a year after the death of the testator; and interest was then to be calculated on the balance till the amount equalled the sum for which the judgments were recovered, and no further; that such retainer and set-off could not be allowed in respect of the legacies which the plaintiff claimed only as assignee; and that the assigned legacies, under the circumstances, and after the lapse of twenty-seven years without demand, ought to be presumed to have been satisfied. Campbell v. Graham, 1 Russ. & M. 453; 9 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 234.

A bequest of 5,000*l.* consols, with a direction, that, if the testatrix should not have sufficient stock to answer the legacy, her executors should, out of her residuary estate, purchase enough to make up the deficiency:—Held, to create a specific, and not a merely demonstrative legacy. Townsend v. Martin, 7 Hare, 471.

C. directed his trustees to set apart in their names 1,666*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* consols, and in case he should not have so much, then he directed the trustees to purchase the same, and hold it upon certain trusts. By a codicil C. directed his trustees, in case at the time of his decease he should not have so much consols as he had bequeathed, to purchase the deficiency out of the rents and profits of his freehold and leasehold estates. At the date of his will C. had only 100*l.* consols; he subsequently purchased more, and sold the whole before the date of his first codicil, two days before the date of which he purchased 2,000*l.* imperial annuities, which he further increased, and then reduced. At the period of his death C. had 1,000*l.* imperial annuities:—Held, that the legacy of the consols was not specific, but that it was a demonstrative legacy, for the payment of which C. had demonstrated the rents and profits of his freehold and leasehold estates. Bessant v. Noble, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 461.

A. bequeathed 2,000*l.* long annuities standing in her name in the books of the governor and company of the Bank of England. At the date of her will, and at her death, she was possessed of 300*l.* long annuities only, but she had other personal estate of considerable value:—Held (affirming 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1046; 8 W. R. 631), the bequest was a specific, and not a demonstrative, legacy, and fails as to the deficiency. Ward, In re, Gordon v. Duff, 3 De G. F. & J. 662; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 746; 9 W. R. 643.

A testator bequeathed the dividends on his American bonds, "which should be due to him at the time of his decease," upon trust for payment of certain arrears of allowances to his daughters. In his lifetime the dividends on these bonds having fallen into arrear, part of the arrears was capitalised, and bonds issued for the amount, and delivered to the trustees of a separation deed executed by the testator, though it did not appear that he was himself aware of the capitalisation:—Held, that he must be taken to have been aware of the capitalisation, and therefore that the capitalised bonds did not pass as dividends due to him at the time of his death, but that only the uncapitalised dividends passed, and that the legacy was specific, and not demonstrative. Ricketts v. Harling, 23 L. T. 760.

A testator, reciting that he was entitled, after the death of his sister, to 5,602*l.* consols, bequeathed to his son 2,000*l.* consols, part thereof, or a sum equal thereto, to be transferred or paid to him when the same should be received by his executors. After the date of his will his sister died, and he received the 5,602*l.* consols, which he sold out and mixed with his other moneys. He afterwards confirmed his will by a codicil, but died without having any sum of consols:—Held, that the legacy was specific; and that, the particular fund, part of which was given to the son, being no longer in existence, the legacy failed. Oliver v. Oliver, 40 L. J., Ch. 189; L. R. 11 Eq. 506; 24 L. T. 350; 19 W. R. 432.

A wife, who had a power of appointment over a fund invested in government stock, by her will gave legacies of specified sums of the fund:—Held, that the legacies were specific, and carried interest from her death. Davies v. Fowler, 43 L. J., Ch. 90; L. R. 16 Eq. 308; 29 L. T. 285.

A testatrix having, at the date of her will, 3,000*l.* 5 per cent. debenture bonds of the East India loan, bequeathed "the sum of 3,000*l.* invested in Indian security." The bonds were paid off by the Indian Government during her lifetime:—Held, that the legacy was demonstrative, and not specific, and not liable to ademption. Mytton v. Mytton, 44 L. J., Ch. 18; L. R. 19 Eq. 30; 31 L. T. 328; 23 W. R. 477.

A gift by will of "800*l.* invested in 2½ consols" was held to be a specific, and not a demonstrative, legacy, having regard to the other dispositions associated with it in the will, which were all specific or in the nature of specific bequests. Mytton v. Mytton (supra) discussed. Pratt, In re, Pratt v. Pratt, 63 L. J., Ch. 484; [1894] 1 Ch. 491; 8 R. 601; 70 L. T. 489.

A testator, after making various dispositions of parts of his estate, appointed S., his executor, to "execute the disposal of all his personal property and effects by sale at auction, the proceeds of which he gave to his two youngest nieces in London or elsewhere"; and the residuary clause was, "The rest of my property in consols, after all my just debts and funeral expenses are paid, and what is found on my person and in the house, I give and bequeath" to five charities (naming them) "free of legacy duty":—Held, that the gift of the consols was specific, subject to his debts and funeral expenses; also that the bequest to the nieces was residuary. Foæn v. Foæn, 10 L. T. 290; 2 N. R. 452.

A gift of an annuity for the life of the donee, payable out of the testator's long annuities, and which he afterwards directed to be secured on his stock of long annuities:—Held, to be a general legacy, with a specific fund pointed out for its payment, and a sufficient portion of long annuities was directed to be sold out to answer the annuity. Fryer v. Buttar, 8 Sim. 442.

A legacy given in the following terms, "I give to A. B. the sum of 100*l.*, which said sum is owing to me by bond from her father":—Held, to be specific, and not demonstrative. Davies v. Morgan, 1 Beav. 400; 3 Jur. 284.

A legacy of 10,000*l.* consols, "now standing in my name":—Held, from the context of the will, not to be specific. Auther v. Auther, 13 Sim. 422; 7 Jur. 410.

A testator bequeathed to M. "the sum of 42,000*l.* new 3 per cents., more or less, at the time of my death," to B. "the sum of 42,000*l.*, more or less, at the time of my death, to be the Brazilian 5 per cent. stock," "and to L. the sum of 42,000*l.* Russian 5 per cent. stock." At the testator's death, there were no stocks answering to any of these descriptions. The testator had sold the new 3 per cents., and the Brazilian and Russian stocks had been converted by the respective governments:—Held, that the two former bequests were specific, and that the legacies therefore failed, but that the bequest of Russian stock was not specific and was to be treated as a legacy of 42,000*l.* payable out of such stock. Tyler, In re, Tyler v. Tyler, 65 L. T. 367.

M. S., by her will dated in 1865, directed the trustees thereof to stand possessed of the sum of 1,500*l.*, then invested in the Bombay, Baroda, and Central India Railway Company, upon trust for her brother, who had then disappeared, for life, if he should present himself to the trustees within five years after her death; and after the five years or the decease of her brother, whichever should first happen, she bequeathed the sum of 500*l.*, part of the Bombay, Baroda, and Central India Railway shares, to the trustees of a charity for the benefit thereof. M. S. was at the date of her will possessed of about 1,900*l.* in the railway, but at the date of her death in 1881 she was possessed of no property therein, and the brother had not appeared:—Held, that the legacy to the charity was a specific, and not a demonstrative, legacy, and that the investment out of which it was given having ceased to exist, the legacy was not payable to the charity out of the testatrix's general estate. Sayer, In re, McClellan v. Clark, 53 L. J., Ch. 832; 50 L. T. 616.

Legacy whether Specific or Residuary.]—A gift by a husband to his wife of "all my personal property, all sums of money which I may possess or may be owing to me at the time of my decease, together with all the furniture, farming implements," and other things in the family mansion, is not specific. Fairer v. Park, 45 L. J., Ch. 760; 3 Ch. D. 309; 35 L. T. 27.

When a testator gives his property generally by words such as "all my property," or "all that I have power over," and then proceeds to enumerate particulars, the subsequent enumeration of particulars does not cut down the effect of the general words, even when the particulars enumerated constitute only an insignificant portion, and not the principal part, of the testator's property. Therefore, where a testatrix made a holograph will in these words: "I do bequeath to A. all that I have power over, namely, plate, linen, china, pictures, jewellery, lace, the half of all valued to be given to H.; the servants in the house who have been a year with me to receive 10*l.*, and the clothes divided between them, also all kitchen utensils," and the articles enumerated formed an insignificant part of her property:—Held, that the bequest was not restricted to the articles specifically enumerated, but that it passed the whole of the real and personal estate of the testatrix. King v. George, 46 L. J., Ch. 670; 5 Ch. D. 627; 36 L. T. 759; 25 W. R. 638—C. A.

A testator by his will, after directing his executors to pay all his just debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, and giving pecuniary legacies to individuals and to charities, gave all his personal estate and effects of which he should die possessed, and which should not consist of money or securities for money, to E. absolutely; and he gave and devised all the rest, residue, and remainder of his estate, both real and personal, to his executors upon certain trusts; all the legacies to be free of legacy duty; the legacies for charitable purposes to be paid exclusively out of such part of his personal estate as might lawfully be appropriated to such purposes, and preferably to any other payment thereout:—Held, that the legacy to E. was not specific, and not exempt from the payment of the pecuniary legacies. Robertson v. Broadbent, supra, col. 1501.

Residuary disposition of all the testator's real and personal estate in Jamaica, in trust, to be remitted to England, was held specific, and not to include a debt originally upon bond and judgment in Jamaica, and afterwards further secured by bond and judgment in England, under which it was received, and being considered undisposed of, was applied, in the first instance, to the debts, &c. Nisbett v. Murray, 5 Ves. 149; 5 R. R. 6.

Held, as against a claim by pecuniary legatees to marshal, that where there was a gift of all property, freehold, copyhold, and leasehold, at particular places and elsewhere in the county of Somerset, and all other real and personal estates whatsoever (testator not having, as it appeared, and the court observed, any real or leasehold property except in Somersetshire), the gift was specific, and not liable to be marshalled either as to leasehold or other property. Symons v. James, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 301.

One devises to his wife all his personal estate at W.: this is a specific legacy, and to be preferred to pecuniary legacies in case of deficiency of assets; all the testator's personal estate that was at W. at his death shall pass, though not there at the making the will. Sayer v. Sayer, 2 Vern. 688; Pre. Ch. 392; Gilb. Ex. R. 87.

A bequest of "all my household furniture, implements of trade, cattle, sheep, and all the rest and residue of my moneys, securities for money, and personal estate, whatsoever and wheresoever, not hereinbefore disposed of," is a residuary bequest. Taylor v. Taylor, 6 Sim. 646.

A testator gave various annuities for lives, with bequests over of them, and charged them upon his freehold and leasehold estates. He gave all his real and personal property to trustees in trust to pay the rents of his freehold, copyhold, and leasehold estates; and the interest of all his stock in the public funds, with the interest of all mortgages, annuities, and other securities of which he might die possessed, to his son for life, with a disposition in favour of the son's children, and after his death without any (which happened) the testator gave his freehold, leasehold, and copyhold estates to one daughter and her issue, and all his funded property and other personal estate to another daughter and her issue:—Held, that the gift of the leasehold estates to the one daughter was specific, but that the gift of the funded property to the other was not, and that the latter was consequently chargeable with the annuities, in priority to the former. Held, also, that in case of insufficiency the freeholds and leaseholds specifically devised and bequeathed must contribute ratably to the payment of the annuities. Held, also, that, for the purpose of this contribution, the values of the freeholds and leaseholds must be taken at the death of the testator, and not at the death of the tenant for life. Fielding v. Preston, 1 De G. & J. 438; 5 W. R. 851.

A testator gave his freehold and copyhold estates at H. and his leaseholds at C. and K., and all other his freehold, copyhold, and leasehold estates, and all the residue of his personal estate and effects, upon trust for his wife for life, and after her death for his four children, in equal shares, absolutely. The testator had no other leaseholds than those at C. and K.:—Held, that the gift of the leaseholds was specific. Report of Fielding v. Preston (supra) questioned. Cook v. Drew, 2 N. R. 437.

A testatrix, after making two specific bequests of sums in the long annuities, gave the residue of her property, all she did or might possess in the funds, copy or leasehold estates, to her sisters during their lives, and at the decease of both to be divided equally between her cousins. The testatrix's estate, after satisfying the specific bequests, consisted in part of 150*l.* per annum in the long annuities:—Held, that the sisters were entitled to receive the dividends accruing on the long annuities as a specific legacy. Bethune v. Kennedy, 1 Myl. & Cr. 114.

Where in a residuary gift specific property is bequeathed, the bequest may, nevertheless, be specific as to that particular property, though general as to the rest. A testator bequeathed his consols to A., and directed his executors to sell all such parts of his estate and effects as should not consist of ready money or money in the funds, and "to stand possessed of the moneys to arise thereby, with such ready money and the money he might have in the long annuities, upon trust" for A., B. and C.:—Held, that the long annuities were specifically bequeathed, and not liable to contribute towards the payment of general legacies. Mills v. Brown, 21 Beav. 1.

A daughter, who was entitled to two-thirds of her father's residuary estate, after payment thereout of his debts and other charges, died before his estate was completely administered. By her will she specifically bequeathed her estate, term, and interest in certain leaseholds forming part of her father's residuary estate to T. Most of her father's debts and charges had been before her death satisfied out of other parts of the estate, and the leaseholds were sold subsequently by her father's executors:—Held, that the legacy was specific, and that T. was entitled to two-thirds of the proceeds of the sale of the leaseholds free from all liability to contribute to the debts and charges of the testatrix's father. Tootal, In re, Hankin v. Kilburn, 24 L. T. 904; 20 W. R. 257.

A testator bequeathed specifically his household furniture, carriages, horses, and cattle. He also specifically bequeathed several of his books, and a painting and a bust, and he bequeathed "the remainder of his books and paintings, together with the residue of his property, of every nature and description":—Held, that the bequest of the "remainder of his books and paintings" was specific. Langdale v. Esmonde, Ir. R. 4 Eq. 576.

By deed and by will two funds of 37,914*l.* and 800*l.* consols were settled, with powers of varying investments, upon trusts for the nephews and nieces of H., subject to a power in H. of exclusive appointment among them. H. made and revoked a series of appointments, and ultimately, by a deed-poll in November, 1870 (at which time the fund had been reduced to 27,170*l.* consols and 8,000*l.* cash), H., after reciting a desire to revoke the subsisting appointment of the two funds, and to appoint the same amongst his nephews and nieces named, in the shares and proportions and in manner expressed, in pursuance of that desire appointed that the trustees should stand possessed of the two funds, "or other the stocks, funds, and securities" of which the same then consisted, or thereafter should or might consist, or upon which the same or any part thereof was then or thereafter should or might be invested, upon trust as to 7,000*l.* consols, part of the 37,914*l.* and 800*l.* consols, or other the stocks, funds, or securities of which the same might consist, for his nephew absolutely. H. then appointed in like manner further sums (making an aggregate of 37,000*l.* consols) in trust for the four nieces and nephew named; and the residue of the two several sums of consols or other the stocks, funds, or securities, in trust for his niece C. The trust funds at the death of H. were insufficient to pay the 37,000*l.* consols:—Held, that the gift to C. was residuary, and not specific, and that it failed altogether. De Lisle v. Hodges, L. R. 17 Eq. 440.

B. by voluntary settlement vested 600*l.* in trustees to pay the interest to herself for life, and after her decease, as to principal and income, for such of her issue as she should by deed or will appoint. By her will expressed to be made in execution of this power, she directed her trustees to call in the funds, and after payment of her debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, pay to her two daughters 75*l.* each, and the residue to S. to invest the same and apply the interest for the benefit of her granddaughter until she should attain seventeen, and then she directed S. to pay to her daughters a further sum of 100*l.* each and apply the interest of the residue for the benefit of her granddaughter until she should attain twenty-one, and then the principal to her absolutely. The legacies of 75*l.* each were paid to the two daughters, who subsequently sold four-fifths of their 100*l.* legacies to L., and afterwards the remaining one-fifth to C. By payment of costs the fund became reduced to 121*l.*, which L. claimed to receive in priority to C.:—Held, that the gift to the grand-daughter was the gift of the residue, and not of any specific sum; also, that L. and C. were entitled to the fund pari passu. Harley v. Moon, 1 Dr. & Sm. 623; 31 L. J., Ch. 140; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1127; 6 L. T. 411; 10 W. R. 146.

A testator bequeathed the money to be received under a policy of assurance on his life, which, at the date of the bequest, would have amounted to 6,416*l.*, to trustees to invest it in government securities, and pay the income to his wife for life, and after her death, to pay thereout two sums of 2,000*l.* which he agreed to settle on his daughters; and he gave 1,000*l.*, part of the residue of the money, to A.; 1,000*l.* to B.; and "416*l.* residue and remainder of the moneys to be received under the policy after payment of the four several sums of 2,000*l.*, 2,000*l.*, 1,000*l.*, and 1,000*l.*, with any future additions that may be made on the policy," to C. The sum of 6,532*l.* was received under the policy, and invested in reduced 3 per cents., at 94. At the death of the widow the price of the stock had fallen to 89:—Held, that the legacy to C. was a specific legacy of 6,532*l.*; and consequently, that the legacies to A., B. and C. must abate ratably. Walpole v. Apthorpe, L. R. 4 Eq. 37; 15 W. R. 632.

A married woman having a testamentary power of appointment over a settled sum of stock by her will appointed the stock, "or the stocks or funds which might at her death represent such trust funds," to certain legatees: and not having exhausted the whole of the stock, appointed the residue to trustees upon trust to sell and divide the proceeds, after payment thereout of her debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, between her nephews and nieces:—Held, that the legacies were specific not general; and that the gift of the residue was also specific, but that the probate duty was chargeable exclusively on the residue. Davies v. Fowler, 43 L. J., Ch. 90; L. R. 16 Eq. 308; 29 L. T. 285.

A wife by a codicil, reciting that by her will she had bequeathed her residuary personalty to her husband's family, but that a sum of 12,000*l.* out of such residuary estate was derived from her husband, bequeathed it to his family in six shares of 2,000*l.* each upon the same trusts as were declared of her residuary personalty and the income thereof:—Held, that sums of 2,000*l.* were residuary bequests. Webb v. Pollock, 20 W. R. 796.

Testatrix gave nine legacies of 1,000*l.* each, part of 14,500*l.* South Sea annuities, and as to the residue of the said fund, and all other her personal estate, including such of the said legacies as should lapse by death before they should be transferable, upon trust to convert into money such part of the residuary personal estate as shall not consist of South Sea annuities, and invest such money with any money belonging to her at her decease in said fund of South Sea annuities, and from time to time invest the dividends, &c., of all such South Sea annuities as shall constitute her residuary personal estate in the said fund, till the youngest of the said legatees shall or would, if living, have attained twenty-one, and then to transfer the whole of such South Sea annuities to said nine legatees equally, with such survivorship as the original shares. The nine legacies of 1,000*l.* each only are specific; the remainder of the South Sea annuities is part of the general personal estate. Richardson v. Brown, 4 Ves. 177.

A husband gave legacies to his trustees and to his wife, and then gave to his trustees copyhold and leasehold property, and all the stocks, funds, and securities and all sums of money in his house or at his bankers or elsewhere at the time of his death, and also all debts or sums of money and securities for money owing to him, upon trust to pay to his wife in addition to the legacies and bequests therein given an annuity, and subject to the annuity gave this property to two children equally. He then gave several other specific bequests and gave the residue of his property to trustees upon trust for his wife, but subject to the payment of debts, legacies, and other charges:—Held, that the gift of copyhold and leasehold properties, and of stocks, funds, securities, and debts was specific, and that as there was no residuary estate out of which to pay the legacies they must fail. Roffey, In re, Roffey v. Early, 42 L. J., Ch. 472; 28 L. T. 617; 21 W. R. 646.

A bequest to a hospital of "all other of any personal estate which I can by law bequeath to such an institution," is specific. Shephard v. Beetham, 46 L. J., Ch. 763; 6 Ch. D. 597; 25 W. R. 764.

A testator directed his executors to apply 500*l.* for the support and education of his nephew, whose education for holy orders he directed to be under the control of certain persons named, and that, if any part of the sum should remain after providing for such support and education, such residue should be applied for certain religious purposes:—Held, that this was not a general legacy. Lee's Trusts, In re, Ir. R. 10 Eq. 157.

A testator by his will directed his executor to transfer any money that he might have in bank stock at his death into the executor's name, and pay the income to his wife for life, or until she should marry again, and if she should marry again that she should thereupon forfeit her life interest in the fund, and that the whole of the bank stock should, upon his wife's second marriage, be distributed as follows: 1,000*l.* to be retained by the said executor, and applied by him in having masses offered for the repose of testator's soul, and the residue to be distributed among such Roman Catholic charities in Dublin as his executor, in his absolute discretion, might think fit; but if his wife did not marry again, the testator directed that at her death his executor should retain a sum of 2,000*l.* out of the bank stock, and apply the same as he saw fit in having such number of masses as he approved of offered up for the repose of testator's soul, and for the repose of the soul of his wife; and that the residue of the bank stock which should remain after providing for such masses as aforesaid, should be divided in five equal parts, and paid to the treasurers of five different charitable institutions named in his will, and the testator appointed R., his executor, his residuary legatee. The testator died leaving his wife surviving. She never married again, and survived R. R. survived the testator, and died without having applied any portions of the bank stock in having masses said; and by his will he bequeathed all the property he derived in reversion or otherwise under the testator's will:—Held, that the gift of the residue of the bank stocks, after providing for such masses was a specific gift of the portion of bank stock remaining after taking 2,000*l.* out of it; that the testator's widow not having married again, and having survived R., the gift of 2,000*l.* failed, the event upon which it was given never having arisen; and that the legacy of 2,000*l.* fell into the general residue, and therefore passed to R. under the residuary bequest in the testator's will. Fee v. M'Manus, 15 L. R., Ir. 31—C. A.

Specific Gift—Amount.]—A testator bequeathed to his son, W. H., and his daughter, S. Y., all his shares in the B. and E. railway, and all his right, title, and interest therein and thereto. The shares in question were 100*l.* shares, of which 70*l.* had been called up, and the testator had paid the remaining 30*l.* per share in advance, under the provisions of the act of parliament authorising the railway :—Held, that the specific legatees were entitled not only to the 70*l.* paid up, but also to the money paid in advance. Tanner v. Tanner, 5 Railw. Cas. 184 ; 17 L. J., Ch. 115 ; 12 Jur. 87.

A. devised to his wife the dividends of 4,000*l.* bank stock for life, and on her decease to be transferred, and the produce thereof, 500*l.*, he gave to the plaintiff, the other to be divided among the defendants ; the plaintiff is entitled only to 500*l.*, not to 500*l.* stock. Longdale v. Bovey, 2 Anstr. 570.

Testatrix gave to trustees 1,500*l.* and certain Danish bonds, which she described thus : "My four Danish bonds, one of them for the sum of 485*l.*, another of them for the sum of 1,004*l.*, another of them for the sum of 1,315*l.*, and the other of them for the sum of 716*l.*, making the whole, together with the said sum 1,500*l.*, the sum of 5,020*l.*" She had not any Danish bonds for the specified amounts, but she had a mass of Danish bonds which, before making her will, she had received in exchange for other Danish bonds bequeathed to her by her husband, comprising four lots purchased by him at four several periods for sums corresponding with those specified in the bequest :—Held, it appearing that none of such bonds had been sold by the testatrix, that the bequest was a specific bequest of so much of her Danish bonds as was received by her in exchange for the bonds purchased by her husband with the specified sums. Goodlad v. Burnett, 1 K. & J. 341.

—— After-acquired Stock.]—Testatrix, reciting that she was possessed of 12,000*l.* 3 per cent. consolidated bank annuities standing in her name, gave and bequeathed the same, or so much of such bank annuities as should be standing in her name at her death. At the date of her will, and at her death, she had nearly 15,000*l.* in that fund, besides other stock. The excess beyond the sum mentioned did not pass. Hotham v. Sutton, 15 Ves. 319 ; 10 R. R. 83.

—— After-acquired Freeholds.]—A testator, by a codicil executed in 1867, devised to the defendant "all those three freehold cottages . . . and premises thereunto belonging which I have lately purchased." At that date he owned, as tenant in common with his brother, a share in a piece of garden-land adjoining one of the cottages, which he occupied as his residence from 1870 until his death in 1883. In 1875 the testator's brother devised to him his share in the garden-land, which the testator thenceforward occupied with his residence :—Held, that the garden-land did not pass under the devise in the codicil. Cave v. Harris, 57 L. J., Ch. 62 ; 57 L. T. 768 ; 36 W. R. 182.

—— Subsequent Contract to Purchase.]—A. devised to G. for life, "my cottage and all my land at S.," subject to the stipulation (among others) that the plantations, heather, and furze be all preserved "in their present state," and devised "all other my freehold manor, messuages, lands, and real estate whatsoever and wheresoever" to trustees upon trust for sale. At the date of his will A. had a small cottage with twenty-two acres of rough land held with it, and he subsequently contracted to purchase from G. a house of considerable size with gardens and land comprising ten acres closely adjoining the cottage and land. The contract was not completed at his death :—Held, that a contrary intention within the meaning of the 24th section of the wills act was not shewn with sufficient clearness, but that, construing the will as if it had been made on the day of the testator's death, having regard to the circumstances at that date, and to the residuary devise, the specific devise more aptly referred to the cottage and rough land, and did not carry the after-acquired property. Portal and Lamb, In re, 54 L. J., Ch. 1012 ; 30 Ch. D. 50 ; 53 L. T. 650 ; 33 W. R. 859 —C. A.

The words "all my land at S." would, if used alone, have been sufficient to carry the after-acquired land with the house standing upon it ; but upon the authority of Ewer v. Hayden (Cro. Eliz. 476, 658), by force of the context the word "land" must be taken as confined to lands in contradistinction from buildings. Ib.

Effect of s. 24 of Wills Act.]—Semble, per Lindley, L. J. : Sect. 24 of the wills act, which provides that a will shall speak as to the real and personal estate comprised in it (i.e. the will) from the day of the testator's death, leaves open the question whether a particular property passes by the specific or the residuary devise. Ib.

A gift of "all my shares and stock" in a will made since the Wills Act (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26) is a specific gift. Such a gift in a will made before the act would have been a specific gift of all the shares and stock possessed by the testator at the date of his will, and the effect of the act is to import into the gift all the stock and shares acquired by the testator before his death. A gift of "all my stock in the Midland Railway Company" is specific. A testator by his will, dated in 1869, made a bequest of "all my shares or stock in the Midland Railway Company" to trustees upon certain trusts. He was at the date of his will entitled to 1,000*l.* stock in that company. In February, 1871, he transferred the stock into the names of certain bankers to secure an advance made by them to A., who gave the testator an undertaking that the stock should be retransferred within three months. The testator died in 1872, and after his death the bankers sold the stock (which had never been retransferred) and applied the proceeds in reduction of the debt due from A. Under orders made in a suit to administer the testator's estate, A. transferred 500*l.* Midland Railway stock into court, but was unable to make any further transfer :—Held, that the trustees of the bequest were entitled to the stock so transferred into court, and not the residuary legatee. Bothamley v. Sherson, 44 L. J., Ch. 589 ; L. R. 20 Eq. 304 ; 33 L. T. 150 ; 23 W. R. 848.

Parol Evidence.]—A legacy of "100*l.* long annuities stock" :—Held, upon the context of the will, and the evidence of the state of the funded property, to be pecuniary and not specific. Att.-Gen. v. Grote, 2 Russ. & M. 699. Reversing 3 Mer. 316 ; 17 R. R. 91.

"Legacy of 100*l.* out of my reduced bank annuities" held pecuniary, the court leaning against holding a legacy specific, unless clearly intended; the court will not take into consideration evidence of the value of the stock at the date of the codicil, by which the legacy was given, nor an erasure of a legacy to the same person by the will, but decided upon the words of the codicil. Kirby v. Potter, 4 Ves. 748; 4 R. R. 342.

A testatrix by a codicil gave to A. and M. "50*l.* each of bank long annuities now standing in my name." At the date of the codicil, and at her death, she possessed long annuities sufficient to answer this bequest specifically, but not also to satisfy certain legacies charged by the other testamentary papers upon the same stock. Evidence as to the state and value of the testatrix's property in the funds at those respective times was admitted, and on the effect of that evidence, and the language of the testamentary papers, taken together, the bequests to A. and M. were held not to be specific but pecuniary. Boys v. Williams, 2 Russ. & M. 689. Reversing 3 Sim. 563.

A testatrix was the owner of four debentures of the Spanish government, each of which had impressed upon it the words "Capital, 1,000*l.*," and purported to secure to the holder 50*l.* per annum in perpetuity, but redeemable on payment of "55*l.* per cent. on the nominal amount." By her will she bequeathed thus: The sum of 2,000*l.* Spanish bonds or coupons now belonging to me, and all dividends which shall be due to me thereon at the time of my decease":—Held, that two only of the debentures passed, and that parol evidence of declarations of the testatrix as to her intention was inadmissible:—Held, also, semble, that where there is a specific bequest, parol evidence is admissible to shew what property there is answering to the description of it; but that, if on that evidence it appears that there was property correctly answering the description, no evidence can be adduced to shew that it was intended to apply to other property. Horwood v. Griffith, 4 De G. M. & G. 700; 23 L. J., Ch. 465; 3 Eq. R. 158; 2 W. R. 71.

10. Cumulative Legacies.

Where Two Gifts by same Instrument.]—Where two legacies of different amount are given by the same will to the same person, the legacies are to be considered cumulative unless a contrary intention appears in the will. Brennan v. Moran, 16 Ir. Ch. R. 126.

A larger legacy being given after a less to the same legatee in the same will, the legatee decreed to take both. Curry v. Pile, 2 Bro. C. C. 225.

Two equal legacies in the same will, and to the same legatee, only one shall pass. Residue to six grandchildren, the name of one repeated, that of another omitted, all of them shall take. Garth v. Meyrick, 1 Bro. C. C. 30.

A testatrix gave the sum of 100*l.*, to be paid to her brother, C. T., immediately after the decease of her husband, and in default of issue of their marriage, and in a subsequent part of her will, she gave 100*l.* to the same brother, and concluded her will, by directing that legacies, to which no time of payment was affixed, should be paid within three months after the death of her husband:—Held, that the testatrix intended only to give a single legacy of 100*l.* to C. T. Manning v. Thesiger, 3 Myl. & K. 29; 4 L. J., Ch. 285.

Testator, having 7,300*l.* stock, bequeathed to his nephew J. C. 200*l.* stock, part of the aforesaid 7,300*l.*, in order that he might be effectually enabled to resist by law any attempt to deprive him of the little property which he and his connections possessed in Crookhaven; and in order the better to deter any person from attempting the same, he requested that 200*l.* of the above-named stock should be placed in the National Bank of Ireland, subject to the control of the said J. C. and the testator's niece M., should it be found necessary to call for or remove it from the bank, to defend any attempt that might be made to dispossess them. On no other account was the said 200*l.* stock to be removed from the National Bank; but the interest of the same might nevertheless be drawn for the use and benefit of the said J. C.; the principal to continue in the bank for ten years after the testator's death, at the expiration of which term it might be withdrawn for the benefit of his family, provided no threat or information of a claim was made against the property. The property was recovered by law against J. C. in the testator's lifetime, and the testator paid the costs of the action:—Held, that J. C. was entitled to two legacies of 200*l.* stock each absolutely. Inglefield v. Coghlan, 2 Coll. C. C. 247.

Bequest of 500*l.* each to the four children of his niece, A. B., nominatim, followed by a like gift to each of the children "that may be born" to any nephew or niece:—Held, not to include a fifth child of A. B., born at the date of, but not named, in the will; held, also, on the same will, by Sir John Leach, that a child born after the testator's death was not entitled, and, by Sir J. L. Knight-Bruce, that the four children did not take cumulative legacies. Early v. Middleton, 14 Beav. 453; 15 Jur. 867.

Testator, by codicil, gave legacies of 500*l.* each to A., B., C., and D., who, from the other parts of the codicil, and from the will, appeared to be grandchildren of his brother Henry. He added, "Item, I direct my executor to pay out of my personal estate the sum of 500*l.* apiece to each child that may be born to either of the children of either of my brothers lawfully begotten, to be paid to them on his or her attaining the age of twenty-one." At the date of the codicil, and at the testator's death, there were to his knowledge living several grandchildren of his brothers, besides A., B., C. and D., and various children of the brothers of the testator, and the testator was survived by one at least of his brothers:—Held, that A., B., C. and D. were not entitled to double legacies. Early v. Benbow, 2 Coll. C. C. 342; 15 L. J., Ch. 169; 10 Jur. 169.

A testator directed his trustees to convert his personal estate and to stand possessed of the proceeds on certain trusts, "on trust to pay 2,000*l.* to each of his sons who should attain twenty-one, and on further trust to set apart and pay over 200*l.* to each of his sons on their attaining twenty-one." He also directed his trustees to divide the residue, "after full payment and setting aside of the sums directed to be paid and set aside":—Held, that each son on attaining twenty-one, was entitled to two legacies of 2,000*l.* each. Burkinshaw v. Hodge, 22 W. R. 484.

J. D., on his daughter's marriage, covenanted that in case he should depart this life in the lifetime of his said daughter, he would bequeath to the trustee for the time being of her marriage settlement the sum of 5,000*l.*, to be held upon the trusts of the settlement. The daughter died first, and after her death J. D. made his will, and thereby bequeathed to the trustee for the time being of the settlement the sum of 4,000*l.* to be held upon the trusts of the settlement, this bequest being expressed to be in pursuance of the covenant in the settlement. Then followed a devise and bequest of the testator's residuary estate, a direction to pay debts, and, among other legacies to his children, a legacy of 4,000*l.* in trust for the children of the daughter above mentioned on attaining the age of twenty-one:—Held (1), that the testator's estate was not liable under the covenant in the settlement; (2) that the trustee for the time being of the settlement was entitled to the first sum of 4,000*l.*, notwithstanding that it was expressed to be bequeathed in pursuance of the covenant which was already inoperative at the date of the will; (3) that the two gifts of 4,000*l.* in the will were independent gifts, and that the daughter's children were entitled both to the second gift of 4,000*l.* and to the beneficial interest of the first gift of that amount. Dyke, In re, Dyke v. Dyke, 44 L. T. 568.

A testator by his will gave to each of two daughters the sum of 1,000*l.*, as and when they should respectively attain the age of twenty-five years or be married with the consent of his executors: but in case either should die under the age of twenty-five years or marry without consent, he directed that the legacy to such one should, after such decease of them respectively or their respectively marrying without consent, fall into the residue of his estate. By the same will he directed the sum of 1,000*l.* to be invested, as and when each of the same daughters should respectively attain twenty-five, to be settled upon trust for them respectively for life, with remainder to their respective children, with a proviso that, if either should die without leaving issue, the trustees of the will should stand possessed of the last-mentioned trust property, in trust for the survivor, upon the trusts of her original bequest: — Held, that the legacies directed to be settled were cumulative upon, and not substitutionary for, the legacies of the same amount previously given, but that they were respectively contingent upon the daughters respectively attaining twenty-five years of age; and therefore that the daughter who attained twenty-five, and had issue, did not take any interest in the legacy directed to be settled upon the other daughter, who died without issue, and without having attained twenty-five. Thompson v. Teulon, 22 L. J., Ch. 243; 1 W. R. 97.

—— By different Instruments—General Principles.]—Where two legacies are bequeathed to the same person by different testamentary instruments, e.g. one by the will, the other by the codicil, or where they are given by different codicils and both are given simpliciter, the court, in the absence of intrinsic evidence to the contrary, considers the legacies as cumulative. Brennan v. Moran, 6 Ir. Ch. R. 126.

In construing one legacy to be a satisfaction for another, regard must be always had to the particular circumstances, limitations, and funds out of which the two several legacies are to arise. Heather v. Rider, 1 Atk. 426.

Upon the question whether a legacy is cumulative or substitutional, the object of the court will be to ascertain the testator's intention, which can only be done by a close and critical examination of the language used in the testamentary instruments:—Held, upon the language of the codicil in this case, that a bequest contained in the codicil was in addition to the one given in the will. Guy v. Sharp, 1 Myl. & K. 589; Coop. t. Brough. 80.

Where a testator makes distinct gifts by distinct codicils, the presumption is, that the subsequent gifts are additional, and that the testator when he made the last had not forgotten the former, and did not mean to make the last either in vain, or in substitution for the former, but this presumption may be strengthened or rebutted by any circumstances, which by just inference and presumption may enable the court to ascertain the real intention of the testator. The nature of the legacies and the extent of interest in them which is given, are very material circumstances, but the court also regards the situation of the testator with respect to the persons for whom he is making provision, and the other directions which he may have given. Robley v. Robley, 2 Beav. 95; 3 Jur. 694.

Where a testator makes several gifts to a stranger by different instruments, the presumption is that such gifts are cumulative; and the circumstance of difference in their character or amount, or of a further motive or reason assigned upon the instrument, tends to strengthen the presumption. Circumstances in which one testamentary instrument is held to be in substitution for or a mere repetition of another. Suisse v. Lowther (Lord), 2 Hare, 424. Affirmed, 12 L. J., Ch. 315; 7 Jur. 407.

Where testator, in each of two testamentary instruments, gives a legacy simpliciter to the same person, court will presume both to be meant for him. And it is indifferent whether second legacy is of same amount, or less or larger than first. But where the same motive is attached to each, and the amounts are similar, it is taken to mean one legacy, but the double coincidence must occur. Hurst v. Beach, 5 Madd. 358; 21 R. R. 304.

Two legacies of equal sums being given to the same person, the one by the will, the other by the codicil, the legatee shall take both. In this case the rule in favour of the benefits being accumulative, as given by different instruments, was supported by particular expressions of kindness towards the legatee. Ridges v. Morrison, 1 Bro. C. C. 389.

Where legacies are given by different instruments (whether will or codicil, or two codicils) to the same persons, they will, in general, be accumulative. Foy v. Foy, 1 Cox, 163; 1 Bro. C. C. 393, n.

Pecuniary legacies are given by will, and afterwards greater legacies to the same persons by codicil; these no satisfaction for the legacies in the will, but the legatees to have both, because the codicil is part of the will. Masters v. Masters, 1 P. Wms. 423.

Legacies held cumulative — 1. The same legacy given by different instruments shall be cumulative. 2. Probate being granted as of a will and codicil, is conclusive as to the fact of their being distinct instruments. Baillie v. Butterfield, 1 Cox, 392.

Doctrine of the court in the construction of testamentary papers containing repeated legacies to the same objects, where the questions are, whether the instruments are intended to be either wholly or in part additional, or substituted one for another, and whether particular legacies contained in such instruments are substitutional or cumulative. Lee v. Pain, 4 Hare, 201. And see S. C., 14 L. J., Ch. 346; 9 Jur. 127, 247.

Legacies by different instruments to the same legatee simpliciter are cumulative unless the plain effect of the separate gifts is contradicted by the construction of the latter instruments, or by presumption of law. Id. 216.

The right to repeated legacies in such cases does not depend upon a legal presumption, but is founded on the construction and effect of the instruments; and no extrinsic evidence is admissible to prove that the legatee was intended to take one legacy only. If the right of the legatee to legacies repeated in different instruments depended upon a legal presumption only, evidence would be admissible to rebut it. Ib.

The right of a legatee under the general rule of construction as to several legacies bequeathed by different instruments is not repelled by circumstances which only raise a mere balance of argument that the legacies are substitutional. In such a case the pecuniary legatees, and not the residuary legatees, are entitled to the benefit of the doubt which the form of the bequests has created. Id. 236.

The repetition in the later instrument of some legacies, and not of others, implies that a benefit is intended in the case of the former legatees greater than in the case of the latter. The circumstance that the different legacies carry interest from different dates, or whatever else distinguishes the two legacies, is favourable to the claim of the legatee to both. Id. 222.

Legacies to strangers differ from legacies to children in that in the former case there is no relative measure of the bounty of the testator, and no ground for presuming that, as to them, every separate instrument is not to have a separate operation. Id. 224.

The legatee will take two legacies by different instruments, unless substitution be evidently intended from the character of the second instrument, or the expressions used, or the same sum be twice given and the same motive expressed in both instruments. Wray v. Field, 6 Madd. 300.

—— Presumed Intention to give Cumulative Legacies.]—A testator bequeathed as follows: "To M. C. B., besides Austrian metalliques for 104,000 florins, I give 5,000*l.*" By a subsequent codicil he bequeathed as follows: "Whereas I have, by indorsement on two little parcels containing 104 Austrian bonds of 1,000 florins each, given them to M. C. B., I confirm the said disposition, and add to it 20,000*l.*": —Held, first, that the testator, as to the Austrian securities, referred to the same subject-matter; and the testator not possessing such securities at his death, that the gift of them failed; and, secondly, that the gifts of the two sums of 5,000*l.* and 20,000*l.* (though both were connected with the gift of the same Austrian securities) were cumulative, and not substitutional. Hertford (Marquis) v. Lowther (Lord), Berchtoldt's (Countess) Case, 7 Beav. 107; 13 L. J., Ch. 41; 7 Jur. 1098. Affirmed, on appeal by Lord Chancellor, 11th February, 1845.

Testator gave the interest of 50,000*l.* to his wife for life, and directed that, after her death, 10,000*l.* should be set apart out of that sum in aid of his residuary estate, and he directed that the interest of the moneys arising from the sale and conversion of his real and personal estate not specifically devised and bequeathed, and also of the 10,000*l.*, should be paid to A. for life. By a codicil, the testator bequeathed to A. the legacy or sum of 10,000*l.*, to be paid to him "out of my residuary estate": —Held, that the sum of 10,000*l.* given by the codicil was distinct from the sum of 10,000*l.* given by the will. Forbes v. Lawrence, 1 Coll. C. C. 495.

A testator gave to E. 200*l.* and appointed him to be his executor; and declared that, if his (the testator's) son should not recover from his then mental malady, then he gave E. 200*l.* E. did not prove the will: —Held, that he was entitled to both legacies. Wildes v. Davies, 22 L. J., Ch. 495; 1 W. R. 253.

A testator, by will, bequeathed 4,000*l.* in trust after the death of his daughter C., who was then unmarried, for her children, to be paid, if the children were under twenty-one and unmarried at her death, to such of them as were sons at their ages of twenty-one, or sooner if the trustees should think fit, and to such of them as were daughters at their ages of twenty-one years, or days of marriage; but if, after C.'s decease, the children should all die under twenty-one, and unmarried, then in trust for C.'s next of kin in consanguinity. C. married and died, leaving R., her only son, an infant. After her death, the testator, by a codicil, bequeathed to his grandson R. 6,000*l.*, payable when he should attain the age of twenty-one years, and directed his executor to spend any sum not exceeding 250*l.* a year in the maintenance and education of R.: —Held, that the legacy of 6,000*l.* was not a substitution for the legacy of 4,000*l.*, and that R. was entitled to both legacies. Wray v. Field, 2 Russ. 257; 26 R. R. 61.

—— Presumption Rebutted by Internal Evidence of Intended Substitution.]—Where a legacy is given in each of two different instruments, the testator must, primâ facie, be understood to have meant to give to two separate legacies; but there may be circumstances to rebut presumption. A testator gave by his will "to my natural or reputed daughter, M. S., 2,000*l.*, for her own sole and separate use, the interest thereof, at 5 per cent., to be expended on her education," and intrusted the care and charge of her to his brother. In a codicil executed five years afterwards, he said, "I add 3,000*l.* to the 2,000*l.* to which M. S. is entitled under my will, by which she becomes entitled to 5,000*l.*" In about a year afterwards, and about ten days before his death, he made a further codicil, in which he said, "Not having time to alter my will, and to guard against any risk, I hereby charge the whole of my estates and property in the funds with the sum of 20,000*l.* for my daughter, M. D.," in this instance giving her his own name, as if she was a legitimate daughter: —Held, affirming the decree of the court below, that there were circumstances here to rebut the primâ facie presumption in favour of the last legacy being treated as additional, and that it was only in substitution for the sums previously given. Russell v. Dickson, 4 H. L. Cas. 293; 17 Jur. 307. Affirming 2 Dr. & War. 133; 1 Con. & L. 284; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 339.

The rule that legacies to the same persons by different instruments shall be accumulative repelled by internal evidence, and the circumstance that all the legatees by the first instrument were legatees in the second, except those who were dead or had quitted the testator's service. Barclay v. Wainwright, 3 Ves. 462 ; 9 R. R. 245.

If a testator by will gives 2,000*l.* a year by way of jointure to any woman he might marry, and after marriage, by codicil, gives his wife the same jointure, she cannot claim both. Osborne v. Leeds (Duke), 5 Ves. 382 ; 5 R. R. 74.

A claim of double legacies by two instruments, a will and a codicil, repelled by the internal evidence and circumstances. Whether parol evidence of the intention of the testator can be read originally in opposition to a claim of double legacies, quære. Id. 369.

Legacies to the same persons by distinct instruments accumulative ; subject to be repelled by internal evidence, as where the same sum is given for the same cause. Whether by the mere equality of amount, quære. Benyon v. Benyon, 17 Ves. 34 ; 11 R. R. 121.

A testator, having, at the time of making his will, 2,000*l.* 3 per cent. consols, but not mentioning that fact in his will, directed his executors to invest, out of his residuary estate, a sufficient sum in the 3 per cent. consols to produce an annual income of 279*l.* 8*s.*, which he bequeathed to his wife for life, and, after her death, he bequeathed 2,000*l.* stock, part of the fund to be so purchased, to five trustees, upon trust, out of the dividends, and out of the rents of certain leasehold tenements, to pay to poor decayed tradesmen and poor women, residents of Aylesbury, a sum of 5*l.* each per annum ; and if there was a surplus of the dividends, to pay such surplus among those poor men and women as the trustees should think proper. He afterwards sold out the 2,000*l.* 3 per cents., and by a codicil, reciting that he had sold out "the 2,000*l.* stock, as mentioned in his will," and bought long annuities with the proceeds, he bequeathed the dividends of those annuities to his wife for life, and, after her death, he bequeathed the annuities to the five trustees above referred to, upon trust, out of the dividends and out of the rents of the leaseholds before referred to, to pay to poor decayed tradesmen and poor women, natives and residents of Aylesbury, a sum of 5*l.* each per annum ; and that if there was a surplus of the dividends, to pay to six poor men and six women the sum of 7*l.*, instead of 5*l.* each :—Held, that the bequests contained in the codicil were in substitution of the benefits given by the will, and were not cumulative. Att.-Gen. v. George, 12 L. J., Ch. 165 ; 7 Jur. 141. Reversing 8 Sim. 138.

By the first codicil testator gave to his illegitimate children an annuity of 100*l.* each and a sum of 1,000*l.*, with a power to certain trustees to advance 250*l.* out of it. The second codicil related to other matters. By the third codicil having, as he said, republished the first two (in the first of which he had, as it afterwards appeared, introduced the name of Phillis), he proceeded to appoint two persons, different from the trustees of the first codicil, to be guardians and trustees of Phillis and any other natural child he might have ; and he gave to Phillis a specific debt of 1,546*l.*, and two further sums of 1,000*l.* and 4,000*l.* respectively. The fourth codicil did not affect the question. By the fifth codicil, testator having then another natural daughter, Sybil, and having, as he said, purchased other estates, declared that they should be subject to the terms of his last will, with the further proviso that they should be charged with two sums of 5,000*l.* to be paid to the trustees of the third codicil, in trust for his two daughters, to be devested on death before twenty-one, or marriage. By the sixth codicil, the testator, having then a third daughter, confirmed his will and the second and fifth codicils ; and after reciting that he had by one or both of the said codicils provided for his daughter Phillis, he gave the same provision to his two other daughters :—Held, that the legacies were not cumulative, and that the provisions made by the fifth codicil alone remained in force. Robley v. Robley, supra, col. 1528.

Legacies nearly similar given to the same persons by different instruments, legatees not entitled to both. Moggridge v. Thackwell, 1 Ves. J. 464 ; 3 Bro. C. C. 517 ; 2 R. R. 140. Affirmed, 13 Ves. 416 ; 6 R. R. 76.

Legacies to the same persons by different instruments generally presumed additional, unless contrary intent appears, of which simple repetition, if exact, is sufficient proof. Id. 472.

Where, looking to the whole contents of the two instruments, the testator's intent might be inferred that an annuity given by the codicil was intended to be only a substitute for the two others, the court, on error, held that the bequests were not cumulative. Hemming v. Gurney, 1 Dow, (N.S.) 35 ; 1 Bligh (N.S.) 479.

Equal sums given to the same person by a will and codicil held, from the character and objects of the latter, to be substitutional, and not accumulative, although the legacy given by the codicil was only conditional. Fraser v. Byng, 1 Russ. & M. 90. And see Allen v. Callow, 3 Ves. 289 ; Tuckey v. Henderson, infra ; Gillespie v. Alexander, 2 Sim. & S. 145 ; 3 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 52.

—— Partial Similarity Insufficient to Rebut Presumption.] — A testator, by codicil, gave legacies of various amounts to nine legatees, and a year's wages to every one of his servants. He afterwards made a second codicil, which was substantially a copy of the former, except as follows : one of the legatees named in the first codicil was not named in the second ; three of the legacies given by the second codicil were less than those given by the first to the same persons ; one legacy was given by the second codicil to a person not named in the first ; the gift to servants by the second codicil was of "a year's wages liberally interpreted," and the second codicil contained a direction for payment of duty on legacies :—Held, that the case was not taken out of the general rule that the gift of a legacy by a subsequent instrument to a person who takes a legacy under an earlier instrument is cumulative, and not substitutionary. Wilson v. O'Leary, 41 L. J., Ch. 342 ; L. R. 7 Ch. 448 ; 26 L. T. 463 ; 20 W. R. 501.

A testatrix, by a codicil, gave legacies to legatees under her will. Some of such legacies were of the same amounts as the legacies given to the same persons in the will :—Held, that these legacies were cumulative, and not substitutional. Cresswell v. Cresswell, 37 L. J., Ch. 521 ; L. R. 6 Eq. 69 ; 18 L. T. 392 ; 16 W. R. 699.

—— Presumption supported by Internal Evidence.] — Upon the question whether a legacy is cumulative or substitutional, the object of the court will be to ascertain the testator's intention, which can only be done by a close and critical examination of the language used in the testamentary instruments:—Held, upon the language of the codicil in this case, that a bequest contained in the codicil was in addition to one given by the will. Guy v. Sharpe, 1 Myl. & K. 589; Coop. t. Brough. 80.

A testator, having provided for his daughter by his will, by a codicil, after stating that he was most anxious to secure her comfort and happiness, gave her a further sum of 1,000*l.* for life, for the maintenance of herself, establishment, and family, out of respect to the memory of the testator's wife:—Held, that the legacies were cumulative. Mackinnon v. Peach, 2 Keen, 555; 7 L. J., Ch. 211.

A testator bequeathed to his daughter A. 1,000*l.* and 100 banking shares, and to his daughter B. 3,000*l.* and 100 shares. By a codicil he revoked both gifts to A., and bequeathed to her 500*l.* and the 100 shares specified in his will; but to B. he revoked the 3,000*l.* only, and gave to her 1,300*l.* and 100 shares:—Held, that B. was entitled to 200 shares, the legacies being cumulative. Lobley v. Stocks, 19 Beav. 392.

A testatrix, by her will, gave to A. 50*s.* a month for life "in lieu of him giving up all the other notes and claims"; and, by a codicil, she gave him "3*l.* a month" for life, and directed all other things to be paid and done as the will ordered:—Held, that A. was entitled to both the monthly payments for his life. Lord v. Sutcliffe, 2 Sim. 273.

Testator having, by his will, given sums absolutely to his four sons, and life interest in other sums to his wife and four daughters, afterwards, upon the death of one of his sons, to whom 2,000*l.* was given by the will, made a codicil in these terms:—"In consequence of the death of my son James, I have opened my will, and now wish to bequeath to my wife 600*l.* a year, to my three sons 2,000*l.* each, and to my four daughters 300*l.* a year each, and at the death of my wife the 600*l.* a year to be equally divided amongst my daughters. This memorandum will, I hope, be attended to in case of my death before I make the legal alteration in my will":—Held, that the legacies given by the codicil were additional to those given by the will. Tweedale v. Tweedale, 10 Sim. 453; 9 L. J., Ch. 147; 4 Jur. 263.

Legacy by will, the same sums given by a codicil to the same person upon a contingency, was held additional. Hodges v. Peacock, 3 Ves. 735.

By her will, a testatrix, under an existing power, appointed 1,000*l.* to A. By a subsequent testamentary instrument she bequeathed 1,000*l.* to A.:—Held, that the gifts were cumulative. Tuckey v. Henderson, 33 Beav. 174.

By a marriage settlement a sum of 4,000*l.* was to go after the decease of husband and wife and the husband's father, and subject to the father's power of appointment, to the children of the marriage equally, and the real estates of the wife were charged with a sum of 8,000*l.*, which was to be divided among the children in such shares and manners as she should appoint. The wife, by her will, appointed 100*l.* to the eldest son of the marriage, and the remaining 7,900*l.* to the other children of the marriage, directing the shares to vest in sons on their attaining twenty-one, and in daughters on their attaining that age or marriage with their father's consent; she likewise created a further charge, in order that such younger child's share of the 8,000*l.* might be augmented to 5,000*l.*, and by the same instrument she, in exercise of a power of appointment which she had under the will of C., appointed C.'s residuary property to the first and other sons of the marriage successively who should attain twenty-one, and if there were no such sons, to the daughters of the marriage who should attain twenty-one. Afterwards, by a codicil, she directed that the same fortune should be given to any child or children of whom she might be delivered, as was given by her will to each of her daughters, and that if no son of the marriage should live to attain twenty-one, or be married, each of her daughters should be entitled to have for fortune 10,000*l.*, to be paid in the manner and at the times mentioned in her marriage settlement or will respecting the fortunes of her daughters. The wife died in the husband's lifetime, leaving a son and three daughters her surviving; and in the events which happened, two daughters, the only surviving children of the marriage, became entitled under the settlement to the 4,000*l.*, and under their mother's appointment to the residuary property of C.:—Held, that they were entitled to receive 10,000*l.* exclusive of and in addition to their shares of the 4,000*l.*, and of the residuary property of C. Whyte v. Kearney, 3 Russ. 208; 6 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 22. See also Lyon v. Colville, 1 Coll. C. C. 449; Mackenzie v. Mackenzie, 2 Russ. 262.

—— By Express Words.]—A testator gave a legacy of 7,000*l.* to his wife, and other similar legacies. By a codicil he gave a legacy of 6,000*l.* to his wife, and other legacies, and he directed "that, so far as the codicil was in addition to any testamentary document he had already made, he wished it to take effect, and not cancel or revoke any prior document which might exist":—Held, that the legacies were cumulative. Townsend v. Mostyn, 26 Beav. 72.

By his will a testator directed his property to be divided into eight equal shares, one to each of his seven children then living, naming them, of whom R., a daughter, was one, and the other share to the children of a deceased son. The share of each daughter was to be invested, and the interest was to be paid to her as it became due, and after her decease to her children. By a codicil the testator directed his executors to transfer 300*l.* consols as a legacy to R., "my daughter named in my will, in trust as otherwise therein stipulated, anything therein to the contrary notwithstanding":—Held, that the 300*l.* consols was additional to the gift to R. in the will, and that she took the same absolutely, subject nevertheless to have it secured. Ledger v. Hooker, 18 Jur. 481.

Testator, by his will, gave to his son a legacy of 3,000*l.*, and by a codicil a legacy of 4,000*l.*, in addition to the legacy of 3,000*l.* given by his will:—Held, that the son was entitled to a legacy of 3,000*l.*, in addition to the legacy of 4,000*l.* Gordon v. Hoffmann, 7 Sim. 29.

Two Codicils—Same Gift.]—Where the same thing is given by two codicils, it can be considered only as a repetition. The same rule as to legacies of the like sum, or of the like quantities or things, though given in different writings, unless it can be shewn it was testator's intention to make them additions. Legacies of sums, values, or quantities, given by a last, greater than by a first, codicil, are not additional, but augmented ones. Legacies of sums, quantities, or values given by a last, less than by a first, codicil, are not additional, but ademptions or diminutions pro tanto. St. Albans (Duke) v. Beauclerk, 2 Atk. 636. And see 1 Bro. C. C. 392.

The rule to be collected from passages out of the "Code and Digest" is, that the apparent intention of the testator must govern in double legacies. Where another legacy is given for the same cause, though in different instruments, there shall not be a double legacy. The gift of a residue which is totidem verbis the same in the first and fourth codicils makes it manifest testator intended to substitute one in place of the other. Id. 639.

Where a second codicil appears to be only a repetition of the former (with the addition of a simple legacy), the legacies are not doubled. Parol evidence read to shew they were intended as accumulative. Coote v. Boyd, 2 Bro. C. C. 521.

A testator made a will and three codicils. By the first codicil, he gave to his daughter E. and her children 1,000*l.* in addition to her share under the will; and to his daughter H. his furniture, and 2,000*l.* in addition to her share under the will; and he directed that, on the death of H., the 2,000*l.* should revert to other persons. By the second codicil, he gave to E., her husband and children, 1,000*l.*, with ultimate remainders over; to H., for her separate use, the furniture; and to H. and any husband and children 1,000*l.*, with ultimate remainders over. The third codicil was in the same terms as the second, except that, by words in parenthesis, it excluded the husband of E. from any share in the 1,000*l.* It was dated three days after the second:—Held, that the legacies were substitutional. Roxburgh v. Fuller, 11 L. T. 587; 13 W. R. 39.

A testatrix gave legacies by the first codicil to her will; and by the second codicil gave other legacies of the same amount to the same persons, and expressed in the same words:—Held, that these legacies were not cumulative. Tatham v. Drummond, 33 L. J., Ch. 438; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 557; 10 L. T. 233; 3 N. R. 706; 12 W. R. 620.

A testator gave two legacies of 5,000*l.* each to the same person by two codicils executed at the same time, and in nearly the same words, neither codicil comprising any other legacy. One instrument he sent to his solicitor, and the other he sent to the legatee. Three years afterwards he withdrew the codicil held by his solicitor and sent it also to the legatee. He had previously executed his will in duplicate, sending one copy to his solicitor and the other to the principal beneficiary:—Held, that the legacies given by the two codicils were substitutional, and not cumulative. Whyte v. Whyte, 43 L. J., Ch. 104; L. R. 17 Eq. 50; 22 W. R. 180.

Unconditional legacy given by a third instrument which is nearly similar to the first held to be merely a substitution for legacy conditional under the first. Att.-Gen. v. Harley, 4 Madd. 263; 20 R. R. 296.

—— Different Gifts.]—A., by a codicil to his will in 1849, bequeathed the residue of his personal estate to three of his sons, X., Y. and Z., in equal shares; and by a second codicil, dated in October, 1854, he gave to his son Z. a legacy of 4,000*l.* A. died in March, 1857, leaving a widow and fifteen children him surviving, six of whom were not mentioned in his will and codicils. On a bill by the trustees for the opinion of the court:—Held, that the gift of the pecuniary legacy to Z. was additional to, and not in substitution for, the gift of the one-third share of the residue. Gordon v. Anderson, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1097.

Testator gave 6,000*l.* to each of his daughters, then or thereafter to be born, payable at twenty-one or marriage, and directed that the portions of such of them as should die before they were payable should sink into the residue; and after devising his real estates to his sons and daughters in strict settlement, he bequeathed the residue of his personal estate to trustees in trust for such of his children as should first be entitled to his real estates. By a codicil, the testator gave to each of his daughters living at his decease 1,000*l.* in addition to the 6,000*l.* mentioned in his will, for the same uses, &c., as were mentioned therein. By a second codicil, which commenced and concluded with the same words as the first, but did not refer to it, the testator gave to each of his two daughters 2,000*l.* in addition to the 6,000*l.* mentioned in his will, and directed that the portions of his children, who should die before they were payable, should not fall into the residue, but go to his heir. The testator left two daughters:—Held, that the legacies given to them by the codicils were cumulative. Watson v. Reed, 5 Sim. 431.

By her will, a testatrix gave 1,000*l.* stock to trustees, upon trust to apply the dividends for the maintenance of her grand-daughter until she attained twenty-two, and then in trust for her absolutely; but if she died under twenty-two, then in trust for the testatrix's children living at the grand-daughter's death. By a codicil, the testatrix revoked the above trusts, and in lieu thereof directed the trustees to apply the dividends for the maintenance of the grand-daughter until she attained twenty-two, and then in trust for her for life, for her separate use; and in the event of her dying either above or under twenty-two leaving lawful issue, in trust for her children equally; but if she died without leaving lawful issue, then in trust for the testatrix's children living at the grand-daughter's death, and the children of any child who had previously died. By a subsequent codicil, the testatrix declared that she had altered her views respecting her grand-daughter as to the 1,000*l.* left in the will, which (the testatrix now thought) might prove a snare for her, and the testatrix left 500*l.* for schooling and board:—Held, that the legacy of 500*l.* was given in addition to, and not in substitution for, that of 1,000*l.* given by the codicil. Sawrey v. Rumney, 5 De G. & Sm. 698; 17 Jur. 83.

A. gives by will to B. 500*l.*, and by codicil an annuity, and by another codicil in these words, "I add this codicil to my will, I give to B. 1,000*l.*":—Held, B. was entitled to both sums. Hatton v. Hooley, Lofft, 122. Affirmed, sub nom. Hooley v. Hatton, 1 Bro. C. C. 389, n.

Will and Incomplete Testamentary Papers.]—Where a testator had given several legacies by a complete will and codicils, and by a subsequent instrument, purporting to be a "last will and testament," proceeded to give several legacies, different in amount, to the same legatees, but suddenly died before the second will was completed, and the ecclesiastical court granted probate of both instruments as one will:—Held, that such legacies were cumulative. Armstrong v. Millar, 1 Longf. & T. 557; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 659.

Testator, by a will duly attested, gave legacies to various persons, charged upon his real and personal estates, and payable at the end of two years after his death; and he directed that, if his property should be more than sufficient to pay the legacies, they should be increased portionably. By an unattested paper, purporting to be instructions for a will, but admitted to probate, the testator gave legacies to many of the legatees in the will, either individually, or as members of a family; but the directions as to the time of payment, and the increase of the legacies, were omitted:—Held, that the legacies in the unattested paper, were not substitutional for the legacies in the will, but cumulative. Strong v. Ingram, 6 Sim. 197.

Several papers were admitted to probate as making together one will, in the first of which testator gave to his wife the whole of his property, and appointed her sole executrix, but in a later paper he gave it to her, with two others as co-trustees, in trust for herself for life, then for the payment of various legacies, some of which were repeated in different papers, then for his residuary legatee, but never appointed any:—Held, that the original gift to the wife was only revoked to the extent of the subsequent legacies, and that such of those legacies as had been repeated in different papers were not cumulative. Brine v. Ferrier, 7 Sim. 549.

Where a testamentary instrument incomplete as a will appears, on the face of it, to be intended as a substitution for a former complete will, the legacies given by the latter only shall take effect, notwithstanding both instruments are proved in the spiritual court; but where a former will makes a charge of legacies generally on land, and a subsequent will giving legacies is not attested so as to affect the land, yet the general charge of the former shall include the legacies given by the latter; otherwise where the charge is made of particular legacies. Jackson v. Jackson, 2 Cox, 35.

Donatio Mortis Causâ and Will.]—See Hambrooke v. Simmons, 4 Russ. 25.

Second Legacy whether subject to same Incidents as First—Where Substitutional.]—A testator bequeathed to his nieces 500*l.* owing to him from A., and he directed that if his estate should not be sufficient to pay his legacies in full, they should (exclusive of that to his nieces) abate proportionally, and if it should be more than sufficient they should be increased proportionally. The testator received the debt, and by subsequent codicil, "in the place of the intended legacy," gave his nieces 500*l.* to be paid out of his general personal estate:—Held, that the second legacies were substitutionary and subject to the same incidents, and that the nieces were not entitled to have them increased proportionally out of the undisposed of estate. Duncan v. Duncan, 27 Beav. 392.

A testatrix appointed a legacy out of a particular fund. By a codicil she revoked it, and gave a legacy of half the amount only, but without referring to the particular fund:—Held, that the latter was a mere substitution for the former; and the particular fund failing, that the legatee was not entitled to be paid out of the general assets. Bristow v. Bristow, 5 Beav. 289.

—— Where Cumulative.]—Where a legacy is given subject to specified conditions, and another legacy is given by a subsequent codicil to the same object simpliciter, without any intimation of an intention to import the conditions of the first legacy:—Held, to be cumulative and payable out of the same funds, and upon the same conditions, including exemption from legacy duty. Therefore, where a legacy of 500*l.* was given by will to a charity out of pure personalty, and a legacy of 1,000*l.* was given by codicil simpliciter to the same charity:—Held, that the second legacy was cumulative, but liable to abate, according to the proportion of the pure to the mixed personalty. Johnstone v. Harrowby (Earl), 1 De G. F. & J. 183; 29 L. J., Ch. 145; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 153; 1 L. T. 390; 8 W. R. 105.

A man by his will, gives to his executor an annuity of 200*l.*, and charges his real estate with the payment of it. The testator, by a codicil attested by two witnesses only, gives his executor another annuity of 100*l.*, "payable as mentioned in my will":—Held, that the executor was well entitled to both the annuities, but that the annuity given by the codicil was payable out of the personal estate. Wright v. Cadogan (Lord), 1 Bro. P. C. 486.

And see Cases sub tit. LEGACY DUTY (REVENUE).

Gifts to Servants.]—Where a testator makes several gifts to a stranger by different instruments the presumption is, that such gifts are cumulative, and the circumstance of differences in their character or amount, or of a further motive or reason assigned upon the instruments tends to strengthen the presumption. Several bequests to a servant of the testator made in eight different instruments:—Held, to be all cumulative, notwithstanding the gift to the party by the last codicil was much larger than any of the preceding gifts to him, and the whole amount given by that codicil was expressed as being given to provide for the servants of the testator. Suisse v. Lowther (Lord), 2 Hare, 424. Affirmed, 12 L. J., Ch. 315; 7 Jur. 407.

Testator bequeathed to his servant C. a legacy of 6,000*l.* He afterwards gave to his servants who should have been living with him two years at the time of his death a year's wages:—Held, that C., who had been living with the testator two years at the time of his death, was entitled to a year's wages, in addition to the 6,000*l.* Ford v. Ruxton, 1 Coll. C. C. 403.

Testator, by his will, gave to his son 20*l.* to be paid within one month after his death, and 500*l.* to his executors in trust to pay 50*l.* to his son every six months, the first payment to be made six months after his death, and to such female servants who might be in his service at his decease, 5*l.* apiece for mourning. By a codicil, he gave 2,000*l.* to Bridget Bibby, in consideration of her faithful services, and directed that sum to be paid to her within six months after his decease. By a subsequent testamentary instrument, which purported to be his last will, but which he left unfinished, he gave 19*l.* 19*s.* to his son, to be paid within ten days after his death, and to Bridget Bibby, if she should be in his service at his decease, 500*l.*, to be paid at the end of nine months after his decease. B. Bibby was the only female servant who was in the testator's service at his decease:—Held, that the legacies of 19*l.* 19*s.* and 500*l.* were substitutions for the legacies of 20*l.*, 5*l.*, and 2,000*l.*, previously given to the son and B. Bibby respectively. Kidd v. North, 14 Sim. 463. Affirmed, 2 Ph. 91; 16 L. J., Ch. 116; 10 Jur. 995.

A bequest by the will of the testatrix of an annuity to her "servant" E. H., and a bequest by a codicil three years afterwards of an annuity of the same amount to her "servant" E. H.:—Held, to be cumulative, the word "servant" not expressing a motive, but being descriptive only. Roch v. Callen, 6 Hare, 531; 17 L. J., Ch. 144; 12 Jur. 112.

A testator gave a legacy to his "servant and friend" S. He also bequeathed a year's wages to all his servants:—Held, that S. took under the bequest to servants, as well as the legacy to himself individually. Wilson v. O'Leary, 41 L. J., Ch. 342; L. R. 7 Ch. 448; 26 L. T. 463; 20 W. R. 501.

Parol Evidence.]—Two legacies by same instrument; to prove two were intended, onus is on legatee, but if by separate instruments on heir to disprove. Hooley v. Hatton, Dick. 462.

A claim of double legacies by two instruments, a will and a codicil, repelled by the internal evidence and circumstances. Whether parol evidence of the intention of the testator can be read originally in opposition to a claim of double legacies, quære. Osborne v. Leeds (Duke), 5 Ves. 369; 5 R. R. 74.

Under what particular circumstances, and to what extent parol evidence may be resorted to, upon the question of cumulation or substitution, quære. Guy v. Sharp, 1 Myl. & K. 589; Coop. t. Brough. 80.

Where a legacy is given for a particular purpose (as a portion), and another bounty is afterwards given for the same purpose, it is considered as implying an intention in the testator to satisfy the legacy; but this being only a presumption, may be rebutted by evidence showing a contrary intention. Debeze v. Mann, 1 Cox, 346; 1 R. R. 57. Affirmed, 2 Bro. C. C. 519.

In an application for a commission to examine evidence to show that the legacies given in two codicils were both intended for the legatee, the legatee ought to swear she believes that to have been the intention. Coote v. Coote, 1 Bro. C. C. 448.

Parol evidence admitted to explain a will, where doubtful, not to contradict. As, on a legacy to the four children of B., and afterwards another to the children of B.; B. having then two children by the first husband, four by a second; admitted to show the first legacy was restrained to the last four children, not so of the other legacy. Hampshire v. Peirce, 2 Ves. Sen. 216.

Where a second codicil appears to be only a repetition of a former (with the addition of a simple legacy), the legacies are not doubled; parol evidence read to show they were intended as accumulative. Coote v. Boyd, 2 Bro. C. C. 521.

The general doctrine of the admissibility of parol evidence to explain a testator's intention, and the cases of Booker v. Allen, Weall v. Rice, and Lloyd v. Harvey (2 Russ. & M. 270, 251, and 310 respectively) considered. Hall v. Hill, 1 Con. & L. 120; 1 Dr. & War. 94; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 27.

At the death of a testator two copies of his will were produced, one of which had been retained by himself, the other deposited with his bankers; each with a codicil containing the same gift in the same words, but of different dates, and attested by different witnesses. Probate having been granted of the duplicate will and of the two codicils:—Held, that evidence by one of the attesting witnesses to one of the codicils was admissible for the purpose of showing, from the circumstances attending the execution, that the two codicils were not two but one instrument, and accordingly that the legatee therein named was entitled to one legacy only. Hubbard v. Alexander, 45 L. J., Ch. 740; 3 Ch. D. 738; 35 L. T. 52; 24 W. R. 1058.

When after a legacy has been given by one instrument, a legacy of equal, greater, or less amount is given to the same legatee by another instrument, they are primâ facie cumulative. Evidence that the testator had in his possession his first codicil at the time he made his second was admitted, so far as it went to prove the position of the testator, but rejected, so far as it suggested any motive for his making the second codicil:—Held, also, that a letter written to the testator by his solicitor, advising him to recopy his first codicil, was inadmissible. Wilson v. O'Leary, 41 L. J., Ch. 342; L. R. 7 Ch. 448; 26 L. T. 463; 20 W. R. 501.

11. Charitable Legacies.

What Valid.]—A gift for the encouragement of a mere sport or game, even if such sport or game is calculated to promote the health of the community, is not for a general public purpose in such a sense as to be a charitable gift. A gift for the encouragement of yacht racing may, therefore, be void on the ground of perpetuity. Nottage, In re, Jones v. Palmer, 64 L. J., Ch. 695; [1895] 2 Ch. 657; 12 R. 571; 73 L. T. 265; 44 W. R. 22—C. A.

Quære, whether a direction to bury testator in a monument to be erected in unconsecrated ground, is void. Mitford v. Reynolds, 1 Ph. 185; 12 L. J., Ch. 40.

Bequest for purchasing the discharge of poachers, committed to prison for nonpayment of fines, fees, or expenses under the game laws:—Held, void, as encouraging offences, and opposed to public policy. Thrupp v. Collett, 26 Beav. 126; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 111.

—— Trust for Accumulation in favour of Charities.]—A testator, after bequeathing certain legacies, left his residuary personal estate upon trust to pay certain annuities out of the yearly income, and directed that the surplus income of any year was to be given to charities named in his will. Such surplus income was, however, to be accumulated until the death of the last of the annuitants, when the capital of the residuary estate, together with the accumulated income, was to be divided equally among the charities. The will contained no provision for making good any deficiencies in the annuities that might occur in any year out of the accumulations of income of previous years:—Held, that the accumulations had been directed solely for the benefit of the charities; that the charities took in equal shares; that the principle laid down in Saunders v. Vautier (Cr. & Ph. 240) applied as well to charities as to individuals, and that, accordingly, the trust for accumulation was inoperative, and the charities were entitled to the surplus yearly income as it arose. Wharton v. Masterman, Marshalling—By the Court.]—The court will not marshal assets in favour of a charitable bequest given out of a mixed fund, whether the bequest be particular or residuary. Hobson v. Blackburn, 1 Keen, 273.

Court will not marshal assets in favour of a charity. Philanthropic Society v. Kemp, 4 Beav. 581; 11 L. J., Ch. 360. S. P., Makeham v. Hooper, 4 Bro. C. Husband borrows money; husband and wife levy a fine of the wife's land as a mortgage for it; and husband by will gives legacies to charities to the amount of his personal estate, and dies; the mortgage shall be paid out of his personal assets, though the charitable legacies will be thereby lost; but all the husband's debts, though by simple contract, shall be preferred to the mortgage. Tate v. Austin, 1 P. Wms. 264; 2 Vern. 689.

Devise of freehold and leasehold to trustees to sell, and with produce buy ground and erect an almshouse, and let out the residue in land, and bequest of residue of personal estate to like uses; decree at the rolls, which directed the assets to be marshalled, and declared that trustees might erect the almshouse if they could obtain the gift of a piece of ground, reversed on appeal. Att.-Gen. v. Tyndall, Ambl. 614; 2 Eden, 207.

A. and B. are made executors, and land devised to C., paying 1,000*l.* to executors; the residue to a charity; this 1,000*l.* is a charge on the real estate, which by the Mortmain Act is not well disposed, and results to the heir: assets not marshalled in favour of this bequest. This devise held a sale of the land for 1,000*l.*, and the bequest of this 1,000*l.* held intended to the executors as such for the purpose of the will, or as assets for debt, and not otherwise; so that, if good, it would not have lapsed by their deaths. Arnold v. Chapman, 1 Ves. Sen. 108.

Assets, not marshalled in support of a devise, contrary to law, as a gift to charity. Bennet v. Musgrove, 2 Ves. Sen. 52; Mogg v. Hodges, 1 Cox, 9; Inchiquin v. French, 1 Cox, 9.

Where the residue is bequeathed to charitable uses, equity will not marshal the assets by throwing the debts and legacies upon chattels real, that the charitable bequests may be made good out of the other personal estate. Waller v. Childs, Ambl. 524. But see infra.

—— Where General Legacies charged on Realty, if Personalty insufficient.]—Where there are general legacies charged on real estate, if the personal estate is not sufficient to pay the whole, a legacy to a charity shall be paid out of the personal, and the rest out of the real estate. Att.-Gen. v. Graves, Ambl. 158.

Where general legacies are charged on real estate, if personal is not sufficient to pay the whole, the charity legacy shall be paid out of the personal estate, and the rest out of the real. So where there is a particular disposition of different species of estate, enumerating them, and in the devise of the residue one of them is left out, that one shall be first applied. So where there is a charge on real estate, and part is left undisposed of, and descends. Att.-Gen. v. Tomkins, Ambl. 217; 2 Ken. Ch. 129.

—— Where Bequest of Residue to Charity—Realty applied first in Payment of Debts.]—Bequest of the remainder of testator's effects, annuities, mortgages, &c., to a charity; the devise of the mortgages is void; but being part of the enumerated residue, the court will order them to be applied first in payment of debts, before any other part of the personal estate to leave a large fund for the charity. Att.-Gen. v. Caldwell, Ambl. 635.

A. (before the statute of mortmain) gave real and personal estate to a use that would be within the statute, and the other uses which would not be affected by it. B. (after the statute) gave personal estate to the use of A.'s will; the estate of A. being sufficient for the first use, the whole of the second gift shall go to the valid use. Att.-Gen. v. Hartley, 4 Bro. C. C. 412.

—— Where Legacy payable out of Proceeds of Real and Personal Estate—Personal Estate alone sufficient.]—A domiciled Scotchman, having real and personal estate in India, devised and bequeathed it to trustees, to realise and out of the free proceeds to pay 10,000*l.* to three persons whom he appointed executors of his Scotch estates, and he directed such persons to employ the same in founding an hospital in Scotland. He died a few days after executing his will, leaving personal estate in India more than sufficient to pay this legacy:—Held, that, the personal estate in India being sufficient to pay the 10,000*l.*. the charitable bequest of that amount was valid, and that the law of marshalling did not apply. Macdonald v. Macdonald, 26 L. T. 685.

Where Direction to Marshal given by Testator.]—A simple declaration that charity legacies are to be paid out of pure personalty will not give to such legacies a priority upon the pure personalty over other legacies and charges, nor exempt any part of the estate from the ordinary rules of applying and distributing the assets. A testatrix created a mixed fund of realty and personalty for payment of her debts and legacies, but she directed the charity legacies to be paid out of pure personalty; she afterwards directed her trustees to set apart a sum of stock sufficient to provide for a number of annuities, and as the annuitants died, the stock let loose was to be applied in payment of the charity legacies. Semble, that the direction alone was not of itself sufficient to exempt the charity legacies from being payable out of the realty in the proportion of the realty to the personalty, but held that the second part created a demonstrative fund of pure personalty, out of which the charity legacies were to be paid. Sturge v. Dimsdale, 6 Beav. 462; 7 Jur. 543.

A testator by his will gave various legacies to charities, "to be raised and paid out of such of my personal estate as I may or can by law charge with payment of the same." The testator bequeathed other legacies, not charitable, and by a codicil disposed of the residue of his personal estate. The testator was possessed of pure personal estate and mixed personal estate, the former being insufficient for payment of his debts and legacies. The general personal estate, however, including the pure personalty, was sufficient for those purposes, and the question was, whether the charity legacies were to abate, or whether they were to be paid in full out of the pure personalty. The court below held, that the charitable bequests must abate in the proportion which the pure personalty bore to the whole personalty. From this decision the charitable institutions appealed:—Held, that the legacies to the charities in the present case had all the incidents of demonstrative legacies to individuals, except the right to have them paid out of a particular portion of the testator's property to escape the law of mortmain; that as the testator had expressly stated that the charitable legacies were to be paid out of his pure personal estate, and as he had made no provision that the other legacies should be paid in the same way, the inference must be, that he intended the charitable legacies to be paid first out of his pure personalty; that as the testator had himself marshalled or arranged his personal estate, by saying that the legacies to the charities should be paid out of that part which by law could be charged with payment, he could only have meant the pure personal estate, which he had thereby marked as the peculiar fund to pay such legacies; and this view was forfeited by the manifest intention of the testator that all his legacies should be paid in full, which could only be done by paying the charitable ones out of the pure personalty. Robinson v. Geldard, 3 Mac. & G. 735. Reversing, 3 De G. & Sm. 499; 18 L. J., Ch. 454; 14 Jur. 143.

A testator gave the residue of his personal estate, which consisted of both pure and impure personalty, to trustees to sell and convert into money, and out of the proceeds and out of his ready money to pay his debts, funeral expenses, and legacies, and to pay the income to his wife for life, and after her death to raise sufficient to purchase certain life annuities. He then gave some pecuniary legacies, including a legacy of 100*l.* to a charity school, and bequeathed all the residue of his personal estate to three charities in equal shares, and directed that the three last-mentioned bequests should be paid and satisfied out of such part of his personal estate as could be lawfully applied to the payment thereof, and which should be reserved by his trustees for that purpose:—Held, that the direction respecting the payment of the residuary bequests was equivalent to a direction to marshal the assets in favour of the three charities; and that the debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and legacies other than the legacy to the school, must be paid primarily out of the impure personalty. Held, also, that the direction to marshal did not apply to the legacy to the school, which must fail only in the proportion which the impure bore to the pure personalty. Held, also, that the costs of the suit were included under testamentary expenses, and must be paid primarily out of the impure personalty. Miles v. Harrison, 43 L. J., Ch. 585; L. R. 9 Ch. 316; 30 L. T. 190; 22 W. R. 441.

A testatrix by her will having given certain specific and pecuniary bequests to her general residuary legatee, and having also given various charitable legacies, directed the latter to be paid in precedence of the other pecuniary legacies out of such part of her personal property not specifically bequeathed as was by law applicable for charitable purposes, the pure personalty being insufficient to pay all the charitable legacies:—Held, that, in the administration of the testatrix's estate, the debts and the funeral and testamentary expenses and costs of the suit were, in the first place, payable rateably out of the pure personalty, and out of the personalty savouring of realty; and that, after such payment, the charitable legacies were to be paid out of the pure personalty, in precedence of the other legacies. Tempest v. Tempest, 7 De G. M. & G. 470; 26 L. J., Ch. 501; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 251; 5 W. R. 402. Reversing, 2 K. & J. 635.

A testator, after bequeathing an annuity and legacies, devised his real estate to trustees upon trust for sale, and directed the proceeds to be applied, so far as they would extend, in payment of his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses and the annuity and legacies. He then gave his personal estate to the same trustees upon trust to convert into money, and out of the proceeds pay so much of his debts and legacies as the proceeds of his real estate would not extend to pay, and to stand possessed of all the residue of his personal estate upon trust for certain charities; and he declared that only such part or parts of his estate and premises should be comprised in the residue, and be divided, paid, or transferred to or among the charities, as might by law be given or bequeathed for charitable purposes. The testator was at the time of his death entitled to real estate and to pure and impure personal estate:—Held, that the proceeds of the real estate and impure personal estate must be applied in payment of the debts and legacies before the pure personalty was resorted to. Wills v. Bourne, 43 L. J., Ch. 89; L. R. 16 Eq. 487.

A testatrix, after bequeathing several specific legacies, gave the residue of her estate to charitable purposes, and directed the charitable bequests to be paid out of the property by law applicable to the payment thereof:—Held, that the costs must be paid out of the residue, and that what was left, so far as it was pure personalty, must go to the charitable legatees, and, so far as it was impure personalty, to the next of kin. Llewellyn v. Rose, 17 W. R. 984.

A testatrix bequeathed to an hospital all her household furniture and other things in her dwelling-house, and also all her ready money, money at the bankers', and money in the public stocks or funds of Great Britain, and also all other of her personal estate and effects which she could by law bequeath to such an institution, and she appointed executors, but made no further disposition of her property, real or personal:—Held, that the charitable bequest was a specific bequest, and that the debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and costs, must be paid first out of the undisposed-of personal estate, next out of the real estate, and lastly out of the specific bequest; but that the specific bequest must exonerate the real estate from probate duty. Shepheard v. Beetham, 46 L. J., Ch. 763; 6 Ch. D. 597; 25 W. R. 764.

A testator, after making specific and other dispositions, gave to a charity all such portions of his estate as were by law applicable for charitable purposes, and which had not been already given by his will, and declared that the portions of his estate included in that gift should be exonerated from the payment of his debts, &c., and legacies, with the payment whereof he exclusively charged his residuary estate thereinafter disposed of:—Held, that the charitable legacy was specific, and abatable for payment of debts, &c., ratably with the other specific gifts according to their respective values at the testator's death. The testator gave the residue of his real and personal estate in trust to pay debts, including debts secured upon any of the devised estates and in exoneration of such estates. He died indebted to his bankers in a sum secured by mortgage of estates comprised in the will; and possessed of a smaller sum to his credit upon his current account:—Held, that the balance on the current account was, for the purposes of the will, included in the charitable gift, notwithstanding any lien of the bankers. Halse v. Rumford, 47 L. J., Ch. 559.

Testatrix devised all her messuages, &c., and real estate to trustees, to sell and pay funeral, &c., expenses and legacies, except her charitable legacies, which she directed to be paid out of her personal estate legally applicable for that purpose, not out of any part of her said messuages, &c.; and she also directed her trustees to keep separate accounts of the proceeds of her messuages, and of her personal estate legally applicable, as aforesaid; and that if proceeds from messuages should be insufficient to pay the legacies, trustees to apply her personal estate:—Held, first, that though personal estate was more than sufficient for charity, no part of it could be applied to pay other legacies, until proceeds of real estate were exhausted. Secondly, that testatrix's leasehold passed to trustees under devise of all her messuages, &c. Thirdly, that her next of kin, and not residuary legatee, were entitled to surplus proceeds of freeholds and leaseholds: and, fourth, that freeholds having been properly sold in heir's lifetime, the surplus was part of his personal estate. Dixon v. Dawson, 2 Sim. & S. 327; 3 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 195.

Charity legacies directed to be paid out of personal estate; decreed to stand in place of specialty creditors, for what they should exhaust of personal estate. Att.-Gen. v. Montmorris (Lord), Dick. 379.

A testator gave such part of his residuary personal estate as might be legally applied to such purposes unto and equally between six hospitals, two of which were enabled to take impure personalty, with a direction that his estate and effects should be so marshalled and administered as to give the fullest possible effect to such bequest:—Held, that the impure personalty ought to be divided between the two hospitals which were able to take it, and that each of such hospitals ought to receive out of the pure personalty as much as would make up one-sixth of the total personalty, and that the residue of the pure personalty was to be divided among the other four hospitals. Wigg v. Nicholl, L. R. 14 Eq. 92; 26 L. T. 935; 20 W. R. 738.

A testatrix gave all her real and personal estate to trustees upon trust to convert, and out of the proceeds pay her debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and certain legacies bequeathed to private individuals, and directed that all such legacies should in the first instance be payable out of the proceeds of sale of her "real and leasehold estate, if any." She directed her trustees to divide the residue of her estate into three parts and pay the same to certain charities. She then directed that "the foregoing charitable legacies" should be paid "exclusively" out of such part of her pure personal estate as was legally applicable for that purpose. The testatrix had no real or leasehold estate in this country, but was possessed of land in the colony of the Cape of Good Hope (the value of which was less than the amount of the general legacies, and of pure and impure personalty:—Held, that the direction as to payment of the charitable legacies was in effect equivalent to a direction that the residue should consist exclusively of pure personalty, and therefore operated as a direction to marshal for the benefit of the charities; that the general legacies were primarily payable out of the proceeds of sale of the land in the colony; and that the debts and funeral and testamentary expenses and costs of action and the unpaid portion of the general legacies must be paid in the first instance out of the impure personalty so as to leave the pure personalty, so far as possible, to constitute the ultimate residue. Arnold, In re, Ravenscroft v. Workman, 57 L. J., Ch. 682; 37 Ch. D. 637; 58 L. T. 469; 36 W. R. 424.

A testator, by will dated in 1883, after giving certain pecuniary legacies, gave the residue of his estate and property to trustees upon trust to sell and convert, and out of the proceeds of sale and the money of which he should be possessed at the time of his death to pay his funeral expenses, and upon trust to pay and divide the net residue unto and equally between the treasurers for the time being of St. Thomas's hospital, St. George's hospital, Westminster hospital, and Charing Cross hospital, to be applied for the use and benefit of the said hospitals. The testator then declared that his pure personal estate should in the first place be applied in payment of the shares of St. Thomas's hospital and Charing Cross hospital. The Westminster hospital and the St. George's hospital were empowered to take land or impure personalty; the other two hospitals were not. The testator at the time of his death was entitled to both pure and impure personal estate:—Held, that there was in the will sufficient direction to marshal the estates so that the pure personalty was first to be applied in payment of the shares of the two hospitals which could not take land or impure personalty. Pitt, In re, Lacy v. Stone, 53 L. T. 113; 33 W. R. 653.

—— During Limited Period.]—A testator, entitled to estates in two counties, L. and A., both subject to incumbrances, devised them to trustees in trust to apply the rents in payment of head-rents, fines for renewal, taxes, &c., and the interest upon charges affecting them, and to pay the residue of the rents to his wife for life; and after her death in trust to receive the rents, and employ them during the period of twenty-one years in payment of head-rents, fines, &c., and the interest on charges and two annuities to his nephews A. N. and C. N.; and next, so far as the rents would extend, in payment of the charges on his estates, his debts and legacies, at such time as the trustees should think most convenient. He devised portions of the L. estate to his nephews A. N. and C. N., free from incumbrances after the expiration of the period of twenty-one years; and as to the rest, residue and remainder of his estates not before devised, charged with the residue of the incumbrances, debts, and legacies then unpaid, to T. for life, remainder to T.'s first and other sons in tail male, remainder to B. for life, remainder to B.'s first and other sons in tail male, with other remainders over, and an ultimate remainder to his own right heirs. He bequeathed annuities for charitable purposes charged on the A. estate, and directed that charges which should affect his estates, and all his debts due at his death, and his legacies, should be borne by and be charges primarily affecting the "aforesaid residue" of his estates limited as aforesaid, and be paid out of the rents and profits thereof in exoneration of his personal estate and other properties bequeathed and devised to his wife and nephews, and so that such personal estate and other property should be relieved therefrom. After the wife's death, estate A. was sold by the creditors, and the proceeds of the sale paid all the charges except a sum of 337*l.*:—Held, that during the period of twenty-one years from the death of the testator's wife the rents and profits of the estates devised to A. N. and C. N. and to B. respectively were both equally applicable to the payment of the charges on the testator's estates and his debts and legacies, and that the estates devised to B. were not bound to indemnify the estates devised to A. N. and C. N. against such charges, debts, and legacies until after the expiration of the term of twenty-one years:—Held, also, that the fact that the charges had been paid off by the sale of estate A. did not entitle A. N. and C. N. to go into possession of the estate devised to them before the expiration of the twenty-one years, and that the surplus rents of the unsold estates, after payment of the sum of 337*l.* so left unpaid and interest, and of the annuities payable to A. N. and C. N., and the legacies, were applicable, during the twenty-one years, to recoup the persons who would, but for the sale, have been entitled to the sold lands, so much of the charges paid out of the corpus of the estate sold as, but for the sale, would have been payable out of the rents during the term of twenty-one years:—Held, further, that the charitable annuities were not charged on the estates devised to A. N. and C. N., and that the legacies were only charged on the rents of these estates during the twenty-one years:—Held, further, that the charitable annuities charged on the A. estate were entitled to marshal and stand in the place of the incumbrances as against the unsold estates, but so that at the expiration of the twenty-one years' term, their right to marshal as against the estates devised to A. N. and C. N. should cease. Biggar v. Eastwood, 19 L. R., Ir. 49—C. A.

Apportionment.]—A testator gives charitable legacies, charged on a mixed fund of realty and personalty, and gives the residue to charity:—Held, that all the charitable legacies fail in the ratio of the real to the personal estate, and that the deficiency ought not to be made up out of the residue or personalty. Patten v. Smith, 8 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 132.

A testator created a general fund of his real and personal estate, out of which he gave several charity legacies, and the residue to charitable purposes. The former failed as to the realty, and the latter failed altogether:—Held, that the former were not entitled to resort to the personalty released in consequence of the invalidity of the latter gift, but that such personalty belonged to the next of kin. Williams v. Williams, 5 L. J., Ch. 84.

If charitable legacies are charged by will on a fund which consists of pure and impure personalty, the court, in order to fix the proportion in which they are to fall, will look at the condition of the testator's estate, out of which the fund charged is directed to be raised, at the time of his death, and not at the investments of which the fund consists at the time fixed for payment of the legacies. Calvert v. Armitage, 1 H. & M. 446; 8 L. T. 269; 2 N. R. 60.

Where he gave his leaseholds, and also the residue of his property to a charity:—Held, that the leaseholds must contribute ratably with the residue towards payment of legacy, though the charity thereby received an indirect benefit from them. Scott v. Furristall, 10 W. R. 37.

Testator directed all his debts, funeral, and testamentary expenses, to be paid by his executors as soon as conveniently might be, and then gave freeholds to trustees to sell, and hold the proceeds upon trusts for J. C. and his issue; and also gave all his other real and personal estate to the trustees upon trust to sell, and, after payment of debts, to pay certain legacies, among them one to the clergyman and churchwardens for a charitable purpose, and then to pay and divide the residue to and among all the children of J. E. N., when the youngest of such children should attain the age of twenty-one. The pure personal estate was insufficient for the payment of debts; the mixed fund which the testator had created was, however, ample:—Held, that the charity legacy did not fail altogether, but that there ought to be an apportionment according to the proportion which the value of the pure personalty bore to the mixed fund. Briggs v. Chamberlaine, 23 L. J., Ch. 635; 18 Jur. 56.

—— Where Directions given by Testator.]—A testator bequeathed legacies to several charitable institutions, and directed that "all his charitable legacies should be paid out of his pure personal estate." He died possessed of real estate in Madeira, and of mixed personalty and pure personalty in England. The pure personalty was insufficient to pay in full the charitable legacies:—Held, that the proceeds of the Madeira estate, although not savouring of realty within the meaning of the statute of mortmain, did not fall within the words "my pure personal estate." Held, also, in a suit to administer the testator's estate, that the administration charges must be paid ratably out of the whole estate; that the charitable legatees were entitled to the remainder of the pure personalty, and had a claim against the rest of the estate for so much of their legacies as should remain unpaid, but that that claim must abate in the proportion which the personalty savouring of realty bore to the proceeds of the Madeira estate, and that the charitable legatees must be allowed their costs of the suit out of the estate. Beaumont v. Oliveira, 38 L. J., Ch. 239. Affirmed, L. R. 4 Ch. 309; 20 L. T. 53; 17 W. R. 269.

A testatrix bequeathed legacies to charities and to individuals, and she directed her charity legacies to be paid "out of her ready money, and the proceeds of the sale of her funded property, personal chattels, and effects, and not from the proceeds or by sale of her leasehold or real estates"; and she charged her leasehold estates, in addition, with the payment of her debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and legacies not given to charities. The pure personalty was insufficient to pay the debts, &c., and all the legacies:—Held, that the charity legacies failed in the proportion of the mixed personalty to the pure personalty. Philanthropic Society v. Kemp, 4 Beav. 581; 11 L. J., Ch. 360.

Testatrix directed her residue to be divided into two portions, one such as she might give to charitable purposes, the other not; the one, therefore, pure personalty, the other savouring of the realty; and she gave the first fund to be applied "in the endowment of district churches in populous places, so that the poor may have the gospel preached to them in this country," preference to be given to parishes under the patronage of S.'s trustees:—Held, that this was a good gift within the statutes of mortmain. The testatrix directed that the other portion of her residuary estate, i.e. that savouring of realty, should be held upon trust for such purposes as she should afterwards direct; but she died without making any direction:—Held, that such portion was residue nevertheless, and that as to debts and legacies, there must be apportionment between this and the pure personal residue. Edwards v. Hall, 11 Hare, 17; 22 L. J., Ch. 1078. Affirmed, 25 L. J., Ch. 82; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1189; 4 W. R. 111—L. C.

A testatrix, who died in 1879, bequeathed her personal estate to trustees upon trust to sell, and out of the proceeds to pay her testamentary expenses and debts and a legacy of 14,000*l.*, and gave all the rest and remainder of her personal estate "except such parts thereof as cannot by law be appropriated to charitable purposes," to a charity. The testatrix's personal estate consisted in part of pure, and in part of impure, personalty:—Held, that the assets should not be marshalled in favour of the charity; that the charity was only entitled to so much of the estate as consisted of pure personalty after payment of the debts and legacy out of the whole estate; and that the testatrix died intestate as to the impure residuary personalty. Edwards v. Hall (supra) followed. Somers-Cocks, In re, Wegg-Prosser v. Wegg-Prosser, 65 L. J., Ch. 49; [1895] 2 Ch. 449; 13 R. 819; 73 L. T. 58; 44 W. R. 106.

—— What is Direction by Testator.]—A husband gave his wife a legacy of 1,000*l.*, and bequeathed out of his pure personalty 9,000*l.* to trustees for his wife for life, and ultimately between certain charities; he then gave to the trustees all other his real and personal estate for conversion, directing them to hold it, after paying the 9,000*l.*, and after payment, out of such residuary estate as should not be wanted for the legacy, of his debts, funeral, and testamentary expenses, upon trust to pay the income to his wife for life, and after her death to raise out of his residuary estate legacies for the benefit of the plaintiff, and then legacies in favour of charities to the amount of 40,000*l.*, directing these latter legacies to be paid out of his pure personalty; then as to the "ultimate residue" of his residuary estate, he directed his trustees to hold one-tenth for A., another tenth for B., and the remaining eight-tenths for a charity, and declared that the "ultimate residue" should be marshalled so that the eight-tenths might be paid out of that part of his estate which might lawfully be appropriated to charitable purposes. There was only a sum of 2,000*l.* impure personalty. The estate was not sufficient to pay all the legacies in full. On the death of the widow the question arose whether this 2,000*l.* was chargeable in exoneration of the pure personalty with the whole, or only ratably with the pure personalty with its proportion of the debts, costs of administration, and legacies (other than the 9,000*l.*):—Held, that there was nothing in the words of the will to controvert the general rule of the court, and that the debts, costs, and legacies were payable out of the pure personalty (less the 9,000*l.*) and impure personalty ratably. Lewis v. Boetefeur, 38 L. T. 93.

13. LEGACY TO DEBTOR: SET-OFF.

Right to Set-off when arising.]—The right of set-off can only arise out of some contract, express or implied, between the parties, to pay and receive money, or other persons standing in their shoes. A. purchased a business of B., and gave him a promissory note for 350*l.*, the amount of the purchase-money. The note was unpaid at B.'s death. C. bought the business of A., and gave B.'s executors a note for 350*l.*, with an indorsement that the note was given as a collateral security for the 250*l.* secured by A.'s note. C. was entitled under B.'s will to two legacies, which he assigned for value. In a suit to have the legacies invested and secured:—Held, that the executors were not entitled to retain the legacies in payment of the 350*l.* due on the note. Smee v. Baines, 29 Beav. 661; 31 L. J., Ch. 63; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 902; 4 L. T. 573; 9 W. R. 802.

W. was indebted to K., who bequeathed his residuary estate to E. absolutely. E. bequeathed his residuary estate to W. and other persons in equal shares. The debt from W. to K.'s estate was never got in, but that estate presented a clear residue without it. W. became bankrupt before he had paid the debt, and before he had received his share of E.'s estate:—Held, that the executors of E., as residuary legatee of K., were entitled to retain, or set off, the debt, out of, or against W.'s share of E.'s residue. Bousfield v. Lawford, 1 De G. J. & S. 459; 33 L. J., Ch. 26; 8 L. T. 619; 11 W. R. 842.

Cross Demands.]—The court has, on slight circumstances, presumed the existence of an agreement to set off one against another cross demand, although existing in different rights; but such an agreemet will not be presumed without some circumstances from which it might be inferred, semble. Freeman v. Lomas, 9 Hare, 114; 20 L. J., Ch. 564; 15 Jur. 648.

Cross demands, existing in separate rights, are not, in equity (except under special circumstances), allowed to be set off one against the other; and therefore an executor and trustee of a legacy, who was also the residuary legatee, and had become a creditor of the husband and administrator of a deceased legatee, was not, in the absence of any special agreement, allowed to set off his debt against the legacy, to which the husband (having survived his wife, the legatee) was, as such administrator, entitled. S. C., 9 Hare, 109; 20 L. J., Ch. 564; 15 Jur. 648.

Real estate was devised to trustees for a term of years to secure a capital sum and interest thereon in favour of M. and subject thereto, to F. for life. F. was let into possession by the trustees, but failed to keep down the interest upon the charge. M. bequeathed a legacy to F. which the executors retained as a set-off against the unpaid interest:—Held, that F. was entitled to the legacy, there being no doubt as against him, and no right of set-off in respect of the arrears of interest. Morley v. Saunders, 38 L. J., Ch. 552; 21 L. T. 132; 17 W. R. 959.

A. being indebted to B.'s estate, and B.'s estate being indebted to C.'s estate, and A. being also interested in a legacy under C.'s will :—Held, that there was no equity to impound the legacy until A. should have paid the debt, and so enable B.'s executors to pay the debt due to C.'s estate. Avison v. Holmes, 1 J. & H. 530 ; 30 L. J., Ch. 564 ; 4 L. T. 617 ; 9 W. R. 550.

Executor—Gift to, applied in making good Devastavit.]—Executor becoming indebted to the estate of a testator in respect of receipts, as such, annuity given him by will directed to be applied to repay estate. Skinner v. Sweet, 2 Madd. 244.

—— Retainer by, against Devastavit of Co-executor.]—Retainer allowed to one executor out of a legacy to a co-executor in respect of a devastavit. Sims v. Doughty, 5 Ves. 243.

Administrator, Retainer by—Against own Private Debtor.]—A debt due to the administrator of an intestate in his own right from one of the next of kin may be set off in a suit by the next of kin for administration of the estate against a sum due from the administrator in respect of the next of kin's share of the intestate's estate. Taylor v. Taylor, 44 L. J., Ch. 718 ; L. R. 20 Eq. 155.

Executor — Retainer abandoned by proving against Legatee's Estate.]—A bankrupt was indebted to the estate of a testator, and was also entitled as one of the residuary legatees of the testator, and also to distributive shares as next of kin of three other residuary legatees. The executor of the testator proved the debts under the bankruptcy, and received a dividend on the proof :—Held, that he had thereby abandoned the right to retain the debt out of the direct or derivative shares of the bankrupt in the testator's residuary estate. But semble, if the executor had not proved, the personal representative of the testator would have been entitled in equity to retain the amount of the debt against the bankrupt's direct and derivative shares in the residue. Stammers v. Elliott, 37 L. J., Ch. 353 ; L. R. 3 Ch. 195 ; 18 L. T. 1 ; 16 W. R. 489.

—— By Appropriating Assets to meet Legacy.]—Executors who have set apart and appropriated assets to meet a legacy, cannot retain or impound any part of the appropriated assets to meet a debt from the legatee to the general estate of the testator. Ballard v. Marsden, 49 L. J., Ch. 614 ; 14 Ch. D. 374 ; 42 L. T. 763 ; 28 W. R. 914.

—— Retainer Negatived by Covenant in Creditors' Trust Deed.]—By an indenture dated in May, 1850, A. conveyed all his real and personal estate to trustees, upon the usual trusts for sale, and directed them to apply the proceeds in the payment ratably of the debts in the schedule to the deed set opposite to the names of certain specified creditors ; and such creditors covenanted with A. that they would not bring any action, &c., against A. in respect of such debts and that if any action, &c., should be brought, the deed might be pleaded as a release. B., one of A.'s creditors, executed this deed in respect of a certain debt, and made his will in June, 1850, whereby he gave a legacy to A., and directed that if any legatee should be found indebted to him in any sum or bond, &c., or otherwise, such sum should be taken as part of his legacy. B. died in December, 1850. B.'s executors received only 7*s.* in the pound on the debt :—Held, that B.'s executors were not authorised to set off the difference between the debt and the composition from A.'s legacy. Golds v. Greenfield, 2 Sm. & G. 476 ; 23 L. J., Ch. 639 ; 2 W. R. 583.

—— By Express Direction in Will.]—Under a bequest of leaseholds for the legatee's personal support and maintenance, and to be entirely free from any claim, charge, or demand, or lien of his creditors :—Held, the leaseholds could not be withheld from the legatee until he paid a debt due from him to the testator, even assuming that a specific legacy may be so withheld in the absence of such a testamentary exemption ; as to which, quære. Harvey v. Palmer, 4 De G. & Sm. 425 ; 15 Jur. 982.

What Debt Set-off—Private or Partnership Debt.]—A testator bequeathed "all debts which shall be due to me by B. at the time of my decease unto B., his executors, administrators, and assigns, for his and their own use and benefit." And the testator directed his trustees "to deliver up to B., his executors, administrators, or assigns, all securities whatever which I shall hold at the time of my decease for securing the repayment of such debts, and that the trustees shall, when required by B., his executors, administrators, or assigns, give and execute to him or them an effectual release from the payment of all such debts." At the date of the will and at the time of the testator's death there was due to him from B. a sum of 50*l.*, for which B. had given the testator his promissory note. There was also due to the testator from a partnership firm consisting of B. and G. a sum of 300*l.*, for which B. and G. had given the testator their joint promissory note, and a sum of 2,300*l.*, for which B. and G. had given him their joint and several promissory notes :—Held, that, there being a private debt of B. which satisfied the words of the bequest and release, those words could not be construed as including the partnership debts. Kirk, Ex parte, Bennett, In re, 46 L. J., Bk. 101 ; 5 Ch. D. 800 —C. A.

Upon S. and A. entering into partnership, J. (A.'s uncle) advanced to A. 2,000*l.* At the time of J.'s death the firm was indebted to J., on loan, in a sum, A.'s portion of which, on one calculation, would have amounted to a little more, and on another to a little less, than 2,000*l.* J., by his will, made the following bequest : "I forgive to my nephew A. the debt of 2,000*l.*, which I have advanced to him on loan." The master of the rolls decided that the 2,000*l.* referred to in the will was the 2,000*l.* advanced at the commencement of the partnership, although he was of opinion that that advance had been an absolute gift :—Held, affirming his decision, that whether the first advance of 2,000*l.* was a gift or not, the testator meant that 2,000*l.* by the above clause in his will. Smith v. Armstrong, 6 De G. M. & G. 150 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 359.

A testator gave to Mrs. M. the debt or sum of money due from her, or the estate of her late husband, to him, the testator. At the date of the will, and at the time of the testator's death, the estate of M. was indebted in a considerable sum to the firm of which the testator was a member. M. had also been indebted to the testator on a promissory note, after giving which he became bankrupt, and obtained his certificate. After the bankruptcy, however, the amount secured by the note, which had been paid to him out of the assets of the firm, was included, with his approbation, in the account current between him and the firm :—Held, that under the circumstances the sum for which the promissory note was given was not a debt due to the testator from the estate of M., and that there was not in existence anything strictly answering the description of a debt due from the estate of M. to the testator, and that the description was to be taken to apply to the debt due to the firm :—Held, accordingly, that the partnership debt passed by the bequest, subject to the rights of the other partners ; and it being admitted that the affairs of the firm were in such a state that the testator was entitled to more than the amount of such debt :—Held, that the legatee was entitled to the debt, and the benefit of the securities for it. Maybery v. Brooking, 7 De G. M. & G. 673 ; 25 L. J., Ch. 87 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 76 ; 4 W. R. 155.

—— Usurious Debt.]—A testator directed that one of his residuary legatees should be answerable for all debts due to him from the father of the legatee. A debt, though usurious, must be deducted from the legatee's share. Stanton v. Knight, 1 Sim. 482.

—— Rent.]—The executor of A., being sued for payment of a legacy, set up as a defence that the plaintiff had, for several years, occupied a house, part of an estate of which he, and A., and other persons were tenants in common, under the will of B., and that A.'s share of the rent, due from the plaintiff in respect of such occupation, exceeded the amount of the legacy. Semble, the court will not, in a suit so framed, direct inquiries as to the plaintiff's liability for rent, or as to the amount due from him to A.'s estate in respect thereof, although the other parties interested in such inquiries be willing to be bound by them, but will decree immediate payment of the legacy in question, without reference to the counter-claim. M'Mahon v. Birchell, 2 Ph. 127 ; 1 Coop. t. Cott. 457. Varying, 3 Hare, 97.

A testator bequeathed all his personal estate free from debts to A., and directed that his debts should be paid out of the real estate. At his death the testator owed various sums to his tenants, but the arrears of rent due from them exceeded those sums :—Held, that A. was only entitled to the balance between the sums due from the testator and the arrears of rent. Ekins v. Morris, 8 W. R. 301.

Executors granted a lease of part of the testator's property to a legatee, who afterwards incumbered his legacy, notice of the charge having been given to the executors :—Held, that they had, as against the mortgagee, a right to set off the rent due from the legatee at the date of the notice, but not the subsequent rents. Stephens v. Venables, 30 Beav. 625.

—— Statute-barred Debt.]—In a suit by a legatee to obtain payment of the legacy out of the assets of the testator, in a due course of administration :—Held, that the executor might retain so much of the legacy as was sufficient to satisfy a debt due from the legatee to the testator, at the time of his death, although the remedy for such debt was, at the time of the death of the testator, barred by the Statute of Limitations, 21 Jac. 1, c. 16. Courtenay v. Williams, 3 Hare, 539 ; 15 L. J., Ch. 204.

Whether the executor would have had the same right of retainer if the suit had been for payment by himself personally and not out of assets of the testator, quære. Ib.

A testator directed his residuary estate to be divided amongst his six children. "And I direct that, in order to equalise my said residuary estate amongst my six children, in case it shall appear by my private ledger, that any, or either of them my said children, or the present or any future husband of any of my said daughters, are indebted to me at my decease in any sum of money, such debt shall be considered as forming part of my residuary estate, and the shares of my said children shall respectively become liable to pay such debt." One of his sons owed him a large debt, but part of it was barred by the statute of limitations :—Held, nevertheless that the whole must be paid out of his share, and that the clause amounted to a hotchpot clause. Rose v. Gould, 15 Beav. 189 ; 21 L. J., Ch. 360.

Although a debt due to a testator's estate is barred by the statute of limitations, his executors may set off a legacy bequeathed by him to the debtor against the debt, and retain the same accordingly. Coates v. Coates, 33 Beav. 249 ; 33 L. J., Ch. 448 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 532 ; 9 L. T. 795 ; 12 W. R. 634.

A. lent B. two sums of 1,000*l.*, for which B. gave promissory notes of 1,000*l.* each, and in one of them C. joined as surety. B. subsequently deposited a policy of insurance with A. as collateral security for both debts. A., by will, gave C. a legacy of 1,000*l.*, payable six months after the death of his widow. After A.'s death B. became bankrupt ; A.'s executors, without communicating with C., surrendered the policy, and proved against B.'s estate for the balance. After the death of the widow, A.'s executors claimed to set off so much of the legacy of 1,000*l.* as was necessary to make good the balance due on the 1,000*l.* note, in which C. joined as surety :—Held, first, that the legacy could be set off against the debt, although the debt was barred by the statute of limitations. Held, secondly, that the remainder of the surrender of the policy did not operate to release the surety. Held, thirdly, that the whole of the consideration money for the surrender of the policy ought to be applied in satisfaction of the debt for which the surety was liable. Ib.

A testator held 2,000*l.* belonging to his nephew, on which for eight years he paid interest, notwithstanding the nephew owed him 1,000*l.* on his promissory note, though the nephew had paid no interest on the note, and had given no acknowledgment of the debt :—Held, that although the remedy for recovering the 1,000*l.* was barred by the statute of limitations, still the right of the executors to set it off against the 2,000*l.* remained. Gee v. Liddell, 35 Beav. 629.

An administrator is entitled to set off against the share of one of the next of kin in the intestate's estate, the whole of a debt of which part had become barred by the statute of limitations. Cordwell, In re, White v. Cordwell, 44 L. J., Ch. 746 ; L. R. 20 Eq. 644.

Where Bequest to Wife of Debtor—No Set-off.]—A share of rent due from the occupying tenant of certain premises to the estate of a testatrix, who was one of several tenants in common of the same premises, allowed to be set off by her executors in a suit for a legacy bequeathed by the testatrix to the debtor; but not as against a legacy bequeathed by the testatrix to the wife of the debtor. M'Mahon v. Burchell, 3 Hare, 97. Varied, 2 Ph. 127.

Where a testatrix devised a freehold estate to trustees upon trust, to sell and to pay 140*l.*, part of the proceeds, to A., and the residue of the proceeds to B., and appointed the devisees in trust her executors:—Held, that in a suit by A. and her husband against the trustees, for payment of the 140*l.*, the latter were not entitled to set off the damages or costs of an action, brought by them as executors against the husband, to recover a deposit note in the hands of the wife, forming part of the testatrix's estate. Reeves v. Richer, 1 De G. & Sm. 624; 17 L. J., Ch. 86; 11 Jur. 960.

Upon the bill of a married woman, entitled to a share of the personal estate, as one of the next of kin of the intestate against her husband and administrator, the latter claiming to retain towards satisfaction of a debt by bond from the husband to him; it was declared he was not entitled to retain, but that the plaintiff's share was subject to a further provision in favour of her and her children; the settlement on her marriage being inadequate to the fortune she then possessed, and it was referred to the master to see a proper settlement made on her and her children; regard being had to the extent of their fortune, and the settlement already made upon her. Elibank (Lady) v. Montolieu, 5 Ves. 737; 5 R. R. 151.

—— Set-off under Particular Circumstances—Where Memorandum of Testator's Intention.]—Mrs. A., the wife of Mr. A., wrote a letter to her mother, B., strongly urging her to lend Mr. A. the sum of 2,000*l.* (the amount of an intended legacy from B. to Mrs. A.), at interest, to be paid to B. during her life. B. sold out 2,000*l.* consols, and remitted the proceeds to Mr. A., and made the following indorsement on the broker's receipts: "The enclosed sums were sold out for Mrs. A., with a promise on her part that I should receive interest at 5*l.* per cent. during my life, seeing that it was my intention to have left it to her at my death, but her application was too urgent." B. died intestate:—Held, that under these circumstances, the proceeds of the stock were lent, and not given to Mr. A., and that the amount was a debt due from him to B. at her death, and ought to be set off against the distributed share to which Mrs. A. was entitled in her mother's estate. Rannie v. Chandler, 23 L. J., Ch. 609; 2 W. R. 537.

—— Where Legacy payable to Husband.]—A legatee, who is also a debtor to the testator's estate, cannot claim payment of the legacy without paying the debt; and the legacy given to a wife, but payable by law to the husband, who is in the same position for this purpose as a legacy to the husband himself, subject to her right of survivorship where the interest is reversionary, and to her equity to a settlement when it becomes vested in possession. Where, however, the legacy to the wife is reversionary, and she, with her husband's concurrence, under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 57, assigns it to a purchaser for value, the deed acknowledged under the statute overreaches the jus mariti, and the purchaser takes the legacy discharged from all right of retainer which the executor might have asserted against the husband. Bachelor, In re, Sloper v. Oliver, 43 L. J., Ch. 101; L. R. 16 Eq. 481; 21 W. R. 901.

—— Where Legacy not Claimed by Wife.]—Legacy to wife of A., A. being indebted to testator: A. becomes bankrupt, and wife dies without having asserted her right over legacy:—Held, executor of testator might retain legacy against assignees of A., in discharge of debt due to testator. Ranking v. Barnard, 5 Madd. 32.

—— Where Husband Bankrupt.]—Executor allowed to set off a moiety of a legacy given by their testator to the wife of the bankrupt, against a debt due from the bankrupt to their testator. The other moiety ordered to be settled on the wife for life, with remainder to the issue of the marriage. O'Ferrall, Ex parte, 1 Glyn & J. 347.

—— Settled Legacy—Advances by Trustees to Husband set off against Wife's Interest.]—A grandfather having made a will of his real and personal estate in 1808, cancelled it in 1810, but wrote on the back of the will a letter addressed to his only daughter, stating that she was his heiress-at-law, and charging her to fulfil his wishes at her death, by a disposition of a specified freehold estate to her eldest son, and by an equal disposition of his "property" equally among his grandchildren, her eldest and youngest son and daughter, her three only children. The letter was unattested, and thought to be inoperative as to the grandfather's personal as well as real property. The daughter became his administratrix, and entered into possession of his real estate, and she and her husband received his personal estate in right of the daughter as sole next of kin. By a settlement in 1811, between the husband of the daughter and the daughter and two trustees, and the three children of the daughter, reciting the will, its cancellation, and the letter, and that the testator had died wholly intestate, but that the daughter was desirous of fulfilling the intention of the grandfather, his real estates were settled in accordance with the directions contained in the letter. The daughter died in 1827, and her husband became her administrator, and also administrator de bonis non of the grandfather. The husband of the daughter died in 1840, having previously by will, after reciting his wish to carry into effect the desires of the grandfather, disposed of the grandfather's and his own real and personal property, between the two grandsons and the grand-daughter (his children) accordingly. The grand-daughter, who had married, obtained in 1843, letters of administration to the grandfather with his letter to his daughter, which was then admitted as a will annexed, and instituted a suit against the personal representative of her father, claiming that the personal estate of the grandfather should be accounted for to her. The grand-daughter had received an allowance of 300*l.* a year from the time of her marriage in 1829 till the death of her father, and her husband was also greatly indebted for advances made to him on several occasions, and became bankrupt, and obtained his certificate and a disclaimer by the assignees of all interest under the grandfather's.

will in his favour :—Held, that the allowance must go towards satisfaction of interest on the grand-daughter's one-third of the grandfather's personal estate ; and that the debt due from the husband of the grand-daughter must be set off against the third of his wife, the grand-daughter to be received by him in right of his wife, against the estate of her father. Lee v. Egremont, 5 De G. & Sm. 348 ; 16 Jur. 352.

Where Gift to Debtor and Wife.]—Where there was a bequest of 300*l.* to A. and his wife for their own use and benefit, followed by a direction that if A. should be indebted to the testator at the time of his death, the debt should be deducted from the legacy, and A. died in the lifetime of the testator, owing to him 250*l.* which remained unpaid at the testator's death :—Held, that the wife was entitled to the whole of the 300*l.* Davies v. Elmes, 1 Beav. 131.

Gift to Wife of Debtor operating as Release of Bond.]—Mrs. W. made her daughter, Mrs. P., her sole executrix and universal legatee. At the death of Mrs. W., her son-in-law, P., was indebted to her on a bond conditioned for payment of a sum of money by yearly instalments, some of which did not become due till after her death ; but others which became due before her death remained unpaid. Mrs. P. proved the will, and about twelve months after her mother's death passed the residuary account, showing that the debts were all paid. P. took the bond into his possession and kept it till his death, which took place more than six months after passing the account, and applied to his own use all the other personal estate of Mrs. W. After the death of P. a decree having been made for administration of his estate, Mrs. P., as executrix of her mother, sought to prove as a creditor on the bond :—Held, that, as the debts of Mrs. W. had been paid and the residue had become a clear fund in the lifetime of P., the liability of P. on the bond was extinguished, and the proof could not be allowed. Price v. Price, 48 L. J., Ch. 478 ; 11 Ch. D. 162 ; 40 L. T. 668 ; 27 W. R. 698.

Set-off against Mortgagees of Legacy.]—A trustee or an executor, when he receives notice that a legatee has charged his legacy, is bound to withhold all further payments to that legatee. All right of set-off and adjustment of equities between the legatee and the executor existing at the date of the notice have priority over the charge, but the trustee can create no new charges or rights of set-off after that time. Stephens v. Venables, 30 Beav. 625.

One of the residuary legatees mortgaged his share ; after which a debt of the legatee, for which the testator was surety, was paid out of his estate :—Held, that the lien of the executors had priority over the mortgage. Willes v. Greenhill, 29 Beav. 376.

At the death of a testator A. owed him 350*l.* for the purchase of his business. After his death A. sold the business to a legatee for 350*l.*, and the legatee gave the executors his promissory note, as a collateral security for A.'s debt :—Held, that the executors had no right to set off the debt against the legacy, nor any right of retainer as against the mortgagee of the legacy. Smee v. Baines, 29 Beav. 661 ; 31 L. J., Ch. 63 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 902 ; 4 L. T. 573 ; 9 W. R. 802.

—— Against Assignees of Legatee.]—Legatee having become bankrupt since death of testator, and a large sum of money being due from him to the estate, his assignees were held not entitled to take any part of the personal estate bequeathed to legatee. Richards v. Richards, 9 Price, 219 ; 23 R. R. 665.

I., being indebted to his sister C., became a bankrupt ; shortly afterwards C. made her will, and thereby gave certain sums to her trustees and executors as pecuniary provisions for the benefit of I., in a form apparently intended to exclude the claims of creditors. She never proved her debt against the bankrupt's estate, and died before he obtained his certificate. On a bill by the assignee against the executors of C. for payment of the money bequeathed for the use of the bankrupt, the lord chancellor held, affirming the decree of the master of the rolls, that the executors were not entitled to set off the amount of the unproved debt against the demand of the assignee. Cherry v. Boultbee, 4 Myl. & Cr. 442 ; 9 L. J., Ch. 118 ; 3 Jur. 1116. Affirming, 2 Keen, 319.

A., one of the executors of the will of B., was entitled thereunder to a share of the estate. A., being at the time a debtor to B. for 500*l.*, was adjudicated bankrupt in the lifetime of B. :—Held, that the debt of 500*l.* could not be retained by way of set-off against the share payable to A., nor any dividend in respect thereof, but that the share must be paid over intact to A.'s trustee in bankruptcy, and the executors must put in their proof as ordinary creditors. Hodgson, In re, Hodgson v. Fox, 9 Ch. D. 673 ; 27 W. R. 38.

—— Of Next of Kin.]—One of the creditors of an insolvent died, leaving the insolvent one of his next of kin :—Held, that the insolvent's share of the personal estate must be paid to the assignees of the insolvent, without any retainer on account of the insolvent's debt. Bell v. Bell, 17 Sim. 127 ; 13 Jur. 1040.

Bequest of Release of Debt.]—A testator by his will, made in 1838, devised his real estates at M. to his nephew, and bequeathed legacies amounting to 8,000*l.* to other persons, which legacies were primarily charged on the moneys which might be in the bank to the credit of the testator at his death. In 1839 the nephew, in compliance with the express desire of the testator, became the purchaser of real estates at C. The testator, out of moneys standing to his credit in the bank, lent the purchase-money to the nephew, who shortly afterwards repaid it in part, but a balance of 7,700*l.* still remained due to the testator. By a codicil made in 1840, the testator, reciting that he had by his will devised certain real estates to his nephew, charged the same with a sum of 8,000*l.*, with interest at 5 per cent. from his decease, and directed that sum of 8,000*l.* and interest to be paid to his executors within six months from his decease, for the purpose of paying off certain legacies named in his will :—Held, that these facts amounted in equity to a release by the testator of the debt of 7,700*l.* due to him from his nephew ; and that the charge of 8,000*l.* upon the estates at M. must be considered as substituted for that debt. Semble, the dictum of Wigram, V.-C., in Cross v. Sprigg (6 Hare, 552 ; 18 L. J., Ch. 204 ; 13 Jur. 785), that if a debt be not released at law, it cannot be considered as released in equity, is not sustainable. Hedges v. Aldworth, 13 Ir. Eq. R. 406.

A testator mortgaged a mine as a collateral security for a debt of two of his sons, and took from them a bond as a counter security. He afterwards devised the mine to one of his sons, and directed his executors to pay out of his residuary estate his debts, and particularly the sums charged on the mine :—Held, that thereby the testator intended to give to the two sons the amount of the mortgage debt. Mushet v. Cliffe, 2 De G. & Sm. 243 ; 17 L. J., Ch. 269 ; 12 Jur. 739.

An annuity given by testator to his debtor shall not be withheld to discharge the debt, for it is extinguished by the devise. Gould v. Adams, Vern. & Scriv. 258.

Debt discharged by entry in the testator's hand that the debtor pays no interest nor should he (the testator) take the principal unless greatly distressed ; and upon evidence of his circumstances. Eden v. Smyth, 5 Ves. 350 ; 5 R. R. 60.

A., on death-bed, desires executor not to trouble B. for bond debt. Executor puts bond debt in suit. Bond ordered to be delivered up to be cancelled, and costs paid by executor of law and equity, but reversed as to costs. Wekett v. Raby, 2 Bro. P. C. 386.

Though a gift of a legacy may release a debt, yet where the bond remains uncancelled, it must clearly express the intention so to do. Wilmot v. Woodhouse, 4 Bro. C. C. 227.

Notwithstanding declaration of the testator to his executor, that he never meant to call for payment of a promissory note, it was held part of the assets which were insufficient for the legacies ; a charge on the real estate failing for want of a proper attestation of the will. Byrn v. Godfrey, 4 Ves. 6 ; 4 R. R. 155.

See also Fish v. Jesson, 2 Vern. 114.

Where Debt greater than Legacy.]—Testator bequeathed his residuary estate in trust for his son and daughter equally, and declared that certain sums which he had lent to his son should be deducted from his share of the residue, and that certain sums which he had lent to C. W., his daughter's husband, on bonds, should be taken and allowed in account as part of her share ; and, if the balance should appear to be against C. W., the trustees were to refrain from putting the bonds in force against him, and to take a security from him for payment of the balance by instalments :—Held, nevertheless, that C. W. was released from the debts due from him, and was answerable only for the excess (if any) of those debts beyond the amount of a moiety of the residue. South v. Williams, 12 Sim. 566 ; 11 L. J., Ch. 410 ; 6 Jur. 332.

A. proved a debt of 424*l.* against the separate estate of B., and died before B. had obtained his certificate, having bequeathed to him 200*l.* A.'s executor afterwards received a dividend under the commission upon the whole sum proved. Ordered, that the proof of A. be reduced to 224*l.*, and that his executor refund the excess of dividend. Man, Ex parte, Harvey, In re, Mont. & M'Ar. 210.

Testator gave J. P. and I. P. 10*l.* each for mourning, and 100*l.* to J. T. N. his executor, for the trouble he would have in the execution of the will. By a codicil he gave legacies to other persons, and directed that if they or any other person who had a legacy left them by any will should owe him any sum or sums of money at his decease, it should be considered as part of their legacy. At the testator's death, J. T. N. owed the testator 4,000*l.*, and two of the other legatees also owed him sums much greater than their legacies :—Held, that the testator intended to remit their debts as well as to give them their legacies. Hyde v. Neate, 15 Sim. 554 ; 11 Jur. 259.

Where Debt created after Date of Will.]—A will made since the statute contained the words, "I hereby exonerate my sister from all claims in respect of money laid out by me in improvements of the estates in Scotland being charged thereon" :—Held, that this exoneration only applied to moneys so charged at the date of the will, and not to money afterwards laid out and charged, nor even to money then laid out, but afterwards charged. Douglas v. Douglas, Kay, 400 ; 23 L. J., Ch. 732.

A. devised 100*l.* to B., and by will released to B. all debts and demands, and afterwards A. lends B. 100*l.* : whether this 100*l.* is released by the will, quære. Bentham v. Alston, 2 Vern. 136.

Where Condition implied.]—A testatrix advanced to the defendant 900*l.* on the security of an assignment by him of a covenant by F. to transfer 1,000*l.* stock, and to pay interest in the meantime. By her will she gave F. 3,000*l.*, and all sums due to her from him, and directed her executors not to require payment of the 900*l.* due from the defendant, but out of the 3,000*l.* given to F. to retain enough to purchase 1,000*l.* stock for the benefit of her estate, and if the stock was worth more than the 900*l.* and interest, the surplus to be paid to the defendant. F. having predeceased her, she, by a codicil, directed that the 3,000*l.* should form part of her residuary personal estate, but directed her executors not to call on F.'s representatives for transfer of the 1,000*l.* stock, nor to enforce payment of the 900*l.* from the defendant :—Held, that the defendant was not at liberty to enforce performance of the covenant to transfer the 1,000*l.* stock against F.'s estate, except as to the difference between the 900*l.* and the value of the stock. Synge v. Synge, L. R. 9 Ch. 128 ; 29 L. T. 855 ; 22 W. R. 227.

Release by Unattested Memorandum.] — J. was indebted to the testator for 550*l.* on a mortgage, with covenant for repayment, dated 1834, and on a promissory note for 100*l.*, dated 1836. J. paid interest on these sums to the testator down to his death in 1840, and subsequently to the executors of the testator to 1846. An administration suit being instituted, a memorandum was discovered in the handwriting of the testator (but which had never been propounded for probate), in which the two sums were mentioned in one sum, with the words in the margin, "not to be enforced" :—Held, that this was not sufficient evidence of a release by the testator to relieve J. from accounting for these sums to the testator's estate ; but liberty was given to J. to propound such document to the ecclesiastical court for probate, and it was offered that the cause should stand over till the result should be known. An enforceable instrument will not be set aside in equity in favour of the debtor, as against the executors of a deceased creditor, unless under circumstances which amount to evidence of a release at law.

An imperfect declaration of such a nature will not be enforced in equity, unless the person to be charged has been instrumental in causing the testator to omit perfecting the declaration in his lifetime. Peace v. Hains, 17 Jur. 1091.

A creditor bequeathed to his debtor 700*l.*, being part of a debt of 1,200*l.* owed by the latter to the former, which 1,200*l.* was secured by bond. He afterwards revoked the bequest, but on the same day he made an indorsement on the bond, by which he said he forgave the debtor 700*l.* part of the within-named sum of 1,200*l.*, and in consequence of this gift, he had revoked a former bequest to the amount of the said sum of 700*l.* The executors of the creditor afterwards brought an action on the bond:—Held, on a motion for an injunction, that having given no consideration, he was not entitled to relief. Tufnell v. Constable, 8 Sim. 69.

Power to Executor to Release Debt.]—Where, from construction of will, executor, who was residuary legatee, had power to release debtor of testator, and he waived the debt by writing, but did not formally release his executor, executor might, it seems, withhold annuity given in consideration of whole debt being paid. Hemming v. Gurrey, 2 Sim. & S. 311. See 25 R. R. 209.

Release against whom Good.]—Where a testator forgives a debt it will not be good against creditors, but against an executor it may, and if an action should be brought for it, the court will grant an injunction. Plaintiff's grandmother, by her will, forgave her son-in-law, C., a debt of 500*l.* due to her on bond, which she desired her executors to deliver up to be cancelled. The legatee died in the life of the testatrix:—Held, that plaintiff, as representative of C., should have the benefit of the discharge of this debt, and decreed that the bond should be delivered up to be cancelled. Sibthorp v. Moxon, 3 Atk. 581. And see S. C., 1 Ves. Sen. 49.

Release or Legacy.]—A testator bequeathed 1,000*l.* to A., who was indebted to him on a bond. He gave instructions for a codicil, and, in his own hand, wrote his wish that A.'s legacy should be made up 8,000*l.*, specifying the bond as part of that sum. The codicil was never executed, and the document was not proved as testamentary:—Held, that the bond debt was not released, and that A. took the legacy subject to the payment of the debt. Chester v. Urwick, 23 Beav. 404.

A testatrix, after giving various sums to trustees for her children and grandchildren, directed the sale and conversion of her real and personal estate, the proceeds to go to her children as tenants in common, and she declared that her son, for reasons stated, should receive 1,000*l.* less than what one-fifth of her "entire estate and property when she died would amount to." This by a codicil she reduced to 500*l.*, and also gave to her son-in-law, who owed her a debt on bond, all sums owing by him to her:—Held, that the gift of the "entire estate and property" excluded debts and legacies, and that the forgiveness of the debt did not constitute a legacy. Higgins v. Smith, 17 L. T. 29.

A. devises to B. 400*l.* which he owed him, provided he should thereout pay several sums to his children; the rest he freely gives him, and directs his executors to deliver up the security, and not to claim any part of the debts, but to give such release as B., his executors, &c., should require. B. died in the life of A. Decreed, this was a lapsed legacy. Elliot v. Davenport, 1 P. Wms. 83; 2 Vern. 521.

"I return to A. his bond," in a will, is not a release, but a legacy, and, having lapsed, the bond remains in force against a surviving co-obligor. Maitland v. Adair, 3 Ves. 231.

Bequest by obligee to one of joint obligors of debt, due on bond in these terms:—"I remit and forgive to A. the sum of 500*l.* in which he stands indebted to me on his bond, and I direct said bond to be delivered up to him and cancelled":—Held, merely a personal bequest to A., and lapses by his death before testator; therefore, surviving obligor and A.'s representatives are not released from bond. Ixon v. Butler, 2 Price, 34.

J. bequeathed in these words, "I give to N. the sum of 400*l.* which he owes me on mortgage of his estate in Shropshire, and I further order my executor to give him up all bonds owing from him to me, and which shall be found in my custody at my decease, with all interest due thereon." N. had given the testator a bond as a collateral security for the mortgage money: N. died before the testator. This is a lapsed legacy, and the executor of N. must pay the money. Toplis v. Baker, 2 Cox, 118; 2 R. R. 21.

A testatrix by her will gave all her real and personal estate to be converted into money, in trust, to pay debts and "the following legacies"; then followed a legacy of 10*l.*, and a legacy of 5*l.*, and the will proceeded thus: "Also I give to my nephew S. the sum of 2,000*l.*, in which sum, or thereabouts, he now stands indebted to me, subject nevertheless to, and I hereby charge the same with, payment of the following annuities and sums of money, that is to say to," &c. The will, after declaring when these legacies were to be paid, went on thus: "Provided always, and I hereby declare, that I do not intend, by the legacy of 2,000*l.* bequeathed to my nephew, to exonerate or release him from the debt which may be due from him to me at the time of my decease; but I direct that whatever sum or sums of money shall be due or owing from him to me at the time of my decease, shall be taken and considered in trust or in satisfaction (as the case may be), of the legacy or sum of 2,000*l.*, and shall be reckoned and accounted for by him accordingly." S. became insolvent, and was never able to satisfy the debt due to the testatrix's estate:—Held, that the deficiency to meet the annuities and legacies charged on the 2,000*l.* must be made out of the general assets. Vickers v. Pound, 6 H. L. Cas. 885; 28 L. J., Ch. 16; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 543; 6 W. R. 580.

Amount.]—Bequest to C. G. of all moneys due by her or her husband M. G. to the testatrix at the time of her death. M. G., at the death of the testatrix, owed her 50*l.* and 120*l.*, but she at the same time was his debtor to the extent of 32*l.* 12*s.* and 45*l.* 13*s.* 2*d.*:—Held, that the executors of the testatrix, in ascertaining the amount of the bequest payable to C. G. were entitled to deduct the latter sums from the former, and that C. G. was only to get the balance. Ganly v. Dowling, 5 L. R., Ir. 628.

One of the residuary legatees of a testator owed his estate three bond debts, under heavy penalties. One of the bonds was in the penalty of 8,000*l.* to secure 4,000*l.* with legal interest, to be paid within three months next after the legatee should take an absolute interest in one moiety of the testator's residuary personal estate. The testator charged the legatee's share of the residue with the payment of all debts at that time due from him, and of all interest thereon, and directed the same to be deducted from his share of the residue. The testator died in 1821, and the bond debtor obtained the prescribed interest in the residuary estate in 1864. At that time the principal and interest on the bond debts far exceeded in amount the penalties in each case:—Held, that in settling the amount due to the bond debtor, or his representatives, in respect of his moiety of the testator's residuary personal estate, there was to be deducted the full amount of the penalties of the bonds, and no more for the interest. Mathews v. Keble, 37 L. J., Ch. 8; 15 W. R. 1193. Affirmed, 37 L. J., Ch. 657; 16 W. R. 1213.

At a testator's death J. N. owed him 4,000*l.*, but claimed to be entitled to it as bequeathed to him by the will. By an order on motion he was ordered to pay the 4,000*l.* into court to an account intituled "the disputed legacy account of J. N.," and that sum was to be invested in stock, and the dividends were to be accumulated. At the hearing, the court decided in favour of his claim:—Held, nevertheless, that he was entitled, not to 4,000*l.* sterling, but only to the stock and the accumulations, although, owing to a fall in the funds, they together were of less value than 4,000*l.* Hyde v. Neate, 15 Sim. 558.

—— Where Recital in Will.]—Where a testator recites that a legatee is indebted in a certain sum, the recital binds the legatee, except in case of a clear mistake of figures. Robinson v. Bransby, 6 Madd. 348.

A testator, by his will, gave a legacy, and by a codicil, after reciting that he had advanced to the legatee a certain sum, he directed that sum to be considered as a payment on account of the legacy:—Held, that the sum mentioned would be deducted from the legacy, though the advance in fact made was less than that sum. Aird's Estate, In re, Aird v. Quick, 48 L. J., Ch. 631; 12 Ch. D. 291; 41 L. T. 180; 27 W. R. 882.

A testator gave a legacy of 7,000*l.* in trust for his daughter, the wife of J. T., and her children, and after reciting that he had given a bond for 3,000*l.* for J. T., he directed that what should remain due on the bond at his death should be paid out of the legacy. By a codicil made about a year afterwards he recited that he had paid the 3,000*l.* and other sums for which he was bound for J. T. to an amount exceeding 5,000*l.* in the whole, and directed that if J. T. should not before his death have repaid to him 5,000*l.*, at least the sum of 5,000*l.* should be taken in part payment of the 7,000*l.*, and to that extent he revoked the legacy. It was admitted that J. T. had not repaid the 5,000*l.*, but the legatees disputed the fact that the testator had paid so much as 5,000*l.* for J. T.:—Held, by the vice-chancellor, that the legacy must be reduced by 5,000*l.*, for that the legatees could not dispute the statements made by the testator as to the payments made by him. But held, by the court of appeal, that the legacy must be reduced only by the amount remaining unrepaid of sums advanced by the testator for J. T., and that an account must be directed. Aird's Estate, In re (supra), not followed. Taylor's Estate, In re, Tomlin v. Underhay, 22 Ch. D. 495; 48 L. T. 552—C. A.

But see Wood, In re, ante, col. 674.

Parol Evidence.] — A legatee, son-in-law to the testator, was held entitled to his legacy, discharged from debts due by him to the testator, and a debt for which the testator was his surety, upon evidence from the testator's accounts, letters, and memorandums in his handwriting. Parol evidence of declarations in conversation was produced for the same purpose, but the court appeared to rely on the evidence in writing. Eden v. Smyth, 5 Ves. 341; 5 R. R. 60.

It being admitted, or proved, that advances had been made by the testator to the legatee:—Held, that cheques drawn by the testator on his bankers in favour of, and paid by them to the legatee, were evidence on the question of the amount of such advances; and that an admission of a debt to the testator, made by the legatee in his balance sheet, and examination under his bankruptcy (though it did not charge himself so as to take the debt out of the statute of limitations), was evidence of the character of the advances which had been made, on the question whether such advances were loans or gifts. Courtenay v. Williams, 3 Hare, 539; 13 L. J., Ch. 461; 8 Jur. 844.

A testator bequeathed 1,200*l.* to his son J., which legacy "shall be in lieu of and full satisfaction of all claims and demands my son may have upon me; but in case my son shall make any claim upon my estate after my death, then such legacy shall not be paid to him, and it shall sink into the residue." J.'s wife was entitled under the will of C. to C.'s residuary estate to her separate use, with limitations to her children. C. died before the testator, who was indebted to her estate in 1,100*l.*, which remained unpaid at his death:—Held, that parol evidence was inadmissible to show that the testator intended the debt to be set off against the legacy, and that the assertion by J.'s wife of her claim under C.'s will to this debt did not preclude her from taking the 1,200*l.* as legal personal representative of J. Parmiter v. Parmiter, 1 John. & H. 1; 8 W. R. 578. Affirmed, 30 L. J., Ch. 508; 3 L. T. 799.

14. Legacy to Creditor—Satisfaction.

General Rule.]—The rule of ademption by length of time is become the fixed rule of property, and it is admitted that where a legacy either exceeds the debt, or is equal to it, i.e. where there is a debt due in the testator's lifetime, and nothing but a plain general legacy given to the creditor, it shall prevail. This rule is too well established to be disputed, and the court will not break through it, though they will not go a jot beyond it, for it is said, that if the maxim debitor non presumitur donare were to be reconsidered, the doctrine would not now hold, and distinctions from the rule must arise from circumstances, not in the will, but of the legatee. Richardson v. Greese, 3 Atk. 68.

Circumstances rebutting Presumption.] — Slight circumstances are laid hold of to get rid of the rule that a legacy to a creditor extinguishes the debt, but a little difference between a portion and a legacy to a child, and as to the time of payment, will not prevail against the presumption of satisfaction. Barclay v. Wainwright, 3 Ves. 466 ; 9 R. R. 245.

Where a debtor gives a legacy to his creditor, the court will lay hold of minute discrepancies between the debt and the thing given to rebut satisfaction. Thus, when a debtor gave 400*l.* to a creditor to whom he owed 145*l.*, and gave him also other large benefits by way of life estates, and remainders in real and personal estate, and expressly directed his debts and legacies to be paid :—Held, that the debt was not satisfied by the legacy, or any others of the benefits given. Hassell v. Hawkins, 4 Drew. 468.

Mere difference of amount, or slight circumstances of difference in the times of payment, between provisions made by a will and subsequent gift, would not prevent the presumption of the one being an ademption of the other ; but the principle does not extend to devises of real estate, which would be to repeal the statute of frauds, nor does the bequest of a residue fall within the rule. Davys v. Boucher, 3 Y. & C. 397.

Though it is a rule that a legacy greater or as great as the debt shall be taken to be a satisfaction, yet where there is a presumption the testator's intention was otherwise, the courts, in late cases, have leant against the rule. Nicholls v. Judson, 2 Atk. 300.

Equity leans against satisfaction of debt by legacy, but in favour of a provision by will being in satisfaction of a portion by contract. Small differences between the debt and the legacy negative the presumption of satisfaction, but are disregarded in the case of portions. So in case of debt a smaller legacy is not a satisfaction of a larger debt, but may be a satisfaction of a portion pro tanto. A gift of residue cannot be a satisfaction of a debt, because, the amount being uncertain, it may be less than the debt ; but as a portion may be satisfied by a smaller legacy pro tanto, so on principle a residue ought to be considered as satisfaction of a portion altogether, or pro tanto, according to the amount. Thynne (Lady) v. Glengall (Earl), 2 H. L. Cas. 131 ; 12 Jur. 805. Affirming, 1 Keen, 769 ; 6 L. J., Ch. 25.

By a separation deed, dated the 7th of September, 1844, the husband covenanted that his executors or administrators should on his decease pay to his wife, if she survived him, 100*l.*, with a proviso that if 6*l.* per month was paid her for six months from his death, the balance should only be paid at the end of that period. By his will dated the 5th of September, 1844, but alleged to have been signed on the 9th, "after all my just debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, are paid, I bequeath to my wife 100*l.*, payable within six months after my decease, 6*l.* to be paid to her or her order until my estate is finally settled, the same to be deducted from the said 100*l.* as per indenture stated in our mutual separation" :—Held, that the legacy was not in satisfaction of the sum covenanted by the deed to be paid, but that the widow was entitled to both sums. The circumstance that two documents are contemporaneous, so that both are present to the mind of the donor when he executes each of them, is a strong reason against holding a gift in one to be a satisfaction of an obligation under the other to pay a like sum. Horlock v. Wiggins, 58 L. J., Ch. 46 ; 39 Ch. D. 142 ; 59 L. T. 710—C. A.

Effect of Direction for Payment of Debts.]—M., being indebted in 25*l.*, the balance of a larger sum, to a female, E., directed by his will all his just debts and legacies thereinbefore mentioned to be paid. Afterwards E. married, and then M., by codicil, gave E. a legacy of 100*l.* :—Held, that the charge in the will of legacies "thereinbefore" mentioned could not be extended to the legacy given by a codicil, and that the legacy was to be taken in satisfaction of the debt. A direction by a testator that all his just debts shall be paid will not by itself suffice to prevent the application of the general rule, that a legacy to a creditor is to be taken as a satisfaction pro tanto of a debt. A running account, to prevent the application of such general rule, must be an account in which there are payments in and out on both sides, not where all the payments are in one direction, viz. in diminution of the debt. Edmunds v. Lowe, 3 K. & J. 318 ; 26 L. J., Ch. 432 ; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 508 ; 5 W. R. 444.

When a testator directs debts to be paid without mentioning legacies, the presumption of satisfaction of a debt by a legacy is rebutted. A lady gave a bond to her nephew for 1,000*l.*, to be paid within twelve calendar months of her death, if he should then be living or should have died leaving issue him surviving, but not otherwise, with interest at 5 per cent. from her death. The bond was given on his marriage, and assigned to the trustees of his marriage settlement. There was evidence that the aunt knew this. She was not in loco parentis to her nephew. By her will she bequeathed 3,000*l.* to this nephew. In a codicil she directed that "all just and lawful debts" should be paid at once :—Held, that there was no satisfaction of the bond by the legacy, but that both were payable. Edmunds v. Lowe (supra) disapproved. Huish, In re, Bradshaw v. Huish, 59 L. J., Ch. 135 ; 43 Ch. D. 260 ; 62 L. T. 52 ; 38 W. R. 199.

"After payment of his debts" a testator gave certain legacies, one of 150*l.* to E. B., and he directed his executors to pay "my bequest only to the individuals herein named." The testator owed E. B. 150*l.* :—Held, that the legacy was not a satisfaction of the debt, but that E. B. was entitled to both. Jefferies v. Michell, 20 Beav. 15.

A testator bequeathed 250*l.* to his son, and directed that his debts of every kind, including specialty debts, should be paid out of his personal estate :—Held, that the legacy was not a satisfaction of a debt of 92*l.* due by the testator to his son for business advances on a current account. Buckley v. Buckley, 19 L. R., Ir. 544.

Creditors named whether to take as Creditors or Legatees.]—Testator by his will declared that one-fifth of the residue of his personal estate should be divided amongst certain of his creditors named in a schedule to his will. The schedule contained both the names of the creditors and the debts due to them respectively :—Held, that the parties so named in the schedule were not to be considered as legatees, but strictly as creditors, and consequently that the representatives of such as died in the testator's lifetime were entitled to the benefit of the will. Williamson v. Naylor, 5 Y. & C. 208.

A. and B. having been bankrupts in 1822, B., the survivor, in 1851, by his will directed his executors and trustees to pay his just debts, including the unpaid-in full debts proved under the bankruptcy; and he directed his executors to pay to the official manager of the bankruptcy, or to some authorised person to be appointed by the court of chancery, in trust for all the creditors under the commission, so much money as would make the dividend on the estate equal to 20*s.* in the pound on all the debts so proved:—Held, that the direction to pay must be regarded as a bounty, not only in favour of those creditors who survived B., but of the representatives of those who predeceased him, and that the official assignee and the joint estate was entitled to receive the amount found due to all the creditors, less the amount of legacy duty. Turner v. Martin, 7 De G. M. & G. 429; 26 L. J., Ch. 216; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 397; 5 W. R. 277.

Amount bequeathed — Legacy greater than Debt.]—A debt is not satisfied by a legacy of a less amount bequeathed by the debtor to the creditor. Gee v. Liddell, 35 Beav. 621.

If a testator is chargeable with two annuities, and devises an annuity equal but to one, it will not be a satisfaction for either. Contra where he is not a general debtor for both. Graham v. Graham, 1 Ves. Sen. 262.

Where legacy is left by will smaller than debt, accompanied with annuity, they are never considered as a satisfaction of debt, unless so expressed in will. Stanway v. Styles, 2 Eq. Abr. 355.

A debtor wrote to her creditor, that she was unable to pay the debt in full, but would pay interest, and leave the creditor a legacy of 300*l.* by her will. The creditor wrote an answer, not acceding to the proposition in terms, but asking to have the 300*l.* secured. The debtor shortly afterwards made her will, leaving her creditor a legacy of 200*l.*:—Held, that the creditor took the legacy in trust, in part payment of his debt. Hammond v. Smith, 33 Beav. 452; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 117; 9 L. T. 746; 12 W. R. 328.

—— Legacy less than Debt.]—S. devised 10*l.* per annum to A. for life, chargeable on leasehold estate, and made his wife sole executrix, and died. Afterwards she (the wife) made her will, and B. executor, and thereby also devised 10*l.* a year to A. for life. B. being afterwards seised in fee of other lands, settled his estate on himself for life, remainder to his first, &c., son in tail, remainder to trustees for ninety-nine years, to pay his debts and legacies, and afterwards that A. should have and receive 20*l.* a year for life, and then died without issue, whereby term vested in trustees to execute trust. Lord chancellor decreed gifts by wills good; and said that where a man is debtor in 10*l.*, and gives 20*l.*, it shall be satisfaction, not a legacy; and that he believed in his own private opinion, that the 20*l.* annuity was intended for satisfaction, and that there was no case like this in print; yet it was agreed costs should be decreed against A., plaintiff, because he knew in his conscience that B. intended satisfaction. Davidson v. Goddard, Gilb. Eq. R. 65.

A testator, under his wife's appointment, was entitled to her residuary estate, charged with her pecuniary legacies, including one of 100*l.* to T., and another of 100*l.* to M., who was a married woman, to her separate use, independent of her husband, and it was left to his discretion either to pay the charges in his lifetime, or direct them to be paid by his executors. He did not pay them in his lifetime, but amongst other legacies, which by his will he directed his executors to pay, was a sum of 500*l.* to T., and a sum of 100*l.* to M., not limited to her separate use:—Held, that the sum of 100*l.* given to T. by the appointment of the wife was satisfied by the 500*l.* bequeathed by the testator, and that the sum of 100*l.* bequeathed to M. was in addition to, and not a satisfaction of, the 100*l.* given to her separate use by the wife. Fourdrin v. Gowdey, 3 Myl. & K. 383; 3 L. J., Ch. 171.

Debt of 200*l.* held satisfied by legacy of 500*l.* Gaynon v. Wood, Dick. 331.

On construction, greater legacy held not a satisfaction of lesser debts. Field v. Mostin, Dick. 543.

—— Legacy exactly equal to Debt.]—A testator bequeathed his wife a legacy of 625*l.* He then owed her that exact amount. The debt was paid off in his lifetime:—Held, that the sum was not payable as a legacy. Fletcher, In re, Gillings v. Fletcher, 57 L. J., Ch. 1032; 38 Ch. D. 373; 59 L. T. 313; 36 W. R. 841.

Error as to Amount of Debt.]—A testator reciting the amount of a debt he owed A., according to his own computation of it, directs such amount to be paid out of his real and personal estate, and bequeaths an annuity to A. for life out of his real and personal estate; such creditor may enjoy the annuity, and be at liberty to dispute the testator's calculation of the debt. Clark v. Guise, 2 Ves. Sen. 617.

A., by will, devised to B. 400*l.* in full satisfaction of all the moneys which he owed B., and subjects his real estate to the payment of his debts. The debt which A. owed B. was in all 800*l.*, but was barred by the statute of limitations. Court will suppose the testator mistaken in his computation, and the whole debt of 800*l.* shall be paid. Gofton v. Mill, 2 Vern. 141; Pre. Ch. 9.

Testatrix bequeaths all her personal estate to trustees in trust to sell, and out of the produce to pay all debts, "and in the next place to pay to A. 300*l.* due on bond." The testatrix owed only 120*l.* to A. upon bond; but the court decreed payment of the whole 300*l.* Whitfield v. Clement, 1 Mer. 402; 15 R. R. 143.

A sum of 200*l.* was charged on a brother's estates in favour of his sister. By his will he devised the estate in trust to raise 950*l.* for his sister, owing (as he expressed himself) to her by him:—Held, that the 200*l.* was thereby satisfied. Shadbolt v. Vanderplank, 29 Beav. 405.

A father directed his debts, including 300*l.* due to his daughter, to be paid immediately. He owed his daughter 150*l.* only:—Held, there was no legacy given by this direction. Wilson v. Morley, 46 L. J., Ch. 790; 5 Ch. D. 776; 36 L. T. 731; 25 W. R. 690.

Nature of Property bequeathed.]—Money and lands being things of a different kind, the one, though of greater value, shall never be taken in satisfaction of the other, unless so expressed; whatever is given by a will is primâ facie to be intended a benevolence. Eastwood v. Vinke, 2 P. Wms. 616.

Money and land go in a quite different channel, and therefore the one not to be taken in satisfaction of the other. Chaplin v. Chaplin, 3 P. Wms. 247.

Land not a satisfaction for money, nor money for land, not being ejusdem generis. Bengough v. Walker, 15 Ves. 512 ; 10 R. R. 106.

One, on the marriage of his daughter, gives a bond to the husband for the daughter's portion, and afterwards, by will, devises land of much greater value to the husband and the wife, and their heirs. The devise no satisfaction of the bond, though there be a defect of assets to pay the testator's debts. Goodfellow v. Burchett, 2 Vern. 298.

When a bequest is made in satisfaction for that to which the legatee is previously entitled, the thing given in satisfaction must be of the same nature, and attended with the same certainty, as the thing in lieu of which it is given, as land for land, money for money. If personal estate be given for personal estate, one shall not be with a contingency, and the other without, for here the same certainty is wanting. Bellasis v. Uthwatt, 1 Atk. 428.

A testatrix devises leaseholds to A., subject to the yearly sum of 12*l.* for the sole use of Mrs. B., to be paid half-yearly ; and this annuity was payable on the 27th of January and 27th of July ; many years afterwards, A. devises to R. all his lands (in which these leaseholds were included), paying Mrs. B. 12*l.* per annum, by half-yearly payments, to be made on the 27th of January and the 27th of July : Mrs. B. is entitled under A.'s will to a second annuity, distinct from and in addition to the annuity given her by the will of the testatrix. Bartlett v. Gillard, 3 Russ. 149 ; 6 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 19 ; 27 R. R. 45.

Covenant in marriage articles by the husband to pay his wife, if she should survive, 200*l.* as jointure, and 50*l.* to provide herself with a house, yearly for life ; afterwards by will he gave her for life an estate and house above the yearly value of 100*l.* a year, with the household goods, &c., and an annuity of 100*l.*, commencing and payable at different times from those in the articles :—Held, not a performance, nor intended as a satisfaction, no such intent being expressed. Richardson v. Elphinstone, 2 Ves. J. 462.

Devise of residue of real and personal estate for life not a satisfaction for a sum to be laid out in lands in fee by articles. Alleyn v. Alleyn, 2 Ves. Sen. 409.

F., by will, dated in 1843, devised to his brother W. and his heirs an estate which he had conveyed to him in fee to secure 3,476*l.*, and he directed that it should be freed and discharged of and from all equity of redemption, and be in part discharged of 3,476*l.* and upwards, in which he was indebted to his brother. F. also devised to W. in further part discharge of the said sum an additional strip of land. W., by will, dated in 1845, after a general devise of all his freehold estates, recited the devise in F.'s will, and declared that the arrears of interest on 3,476*l.* should not be claimed by his executors, and he bequeathed such arrears to his nephews and nieces. W. also bequeathed the future arrears of such interest to his wife for life, then to his daughter L. for life ; and after her decease, he gave the said sum to L.'s children, "after deducting a fair and reasonable sum of money as the value" of the mortgaged estate, and the strip of land so devised to him by his brother "as aforesaid" ; and in default of such issue, W. gave and bequeathed the sum of money so due to him from the estate of his brother "to his nephews and nieces" :—Held, that the devise by F. of the mortgaged estate in part discharge of the debt, and of the strip of land "in further part discharge of the same," was to go, pro tanto, in diminution of the debt due from him to his brother. Davie v. Messiter, 7 Jur. (N.S.) 349 ; 3 L. T. 874—L. C.

A. mortgaged lands situate at R. for 1,000*l.* The mortgagees resided with A. for two years prior to his death, and by his will he directed that they should remain for a year after his death. He also made them joint residuary legatees and executors :—Held, that there was no satisfaction of the debt. Keogh's Estate, In re, 23 L. R., Ir. 257.

—— Of Debt.]—A negotiable bill of exchange not satisfied by a legacy. Carr v. Eastabrooke, 3 Ves. 561.

If a testator is indebted to his executor for goods in the way of trade, a devise to the executor of a much larger sum than the debt amounts to shall not extinguish the debt. Mortimer v. Powell, 10 Mod. 398.

A legacy of 100*l.* was in 1818 bequeathed to C., to invest for the benefit of E. to apply the interest towards maintenance and education, and to pay the residue on his attaining twenty-one. C. received the legacy, but did not invest it ; but the maintenance and education of E., who resided with him, were paid for by him ; and he bequeathed 2,200*l.* to E. or for his benefit. C. died in 1829, and his executors thereupon invested 100*l.* (which had accumulated to the amount claimed) to meet the payment of the legacy of that amount, if claimed. E. died in 1859. On a question whether the 2,200*l.* was in satisfaction of the legacy or not :—Held, that the legal personal representative of E. was entitled to the accumulative fund. Clare's Trust, In re, 7 Jur. (N.S.) 769 ; 4 L. T. 789.

A testatrix, after referring to a debt due from her to a partnership of A. and B., deceased, bequeathed a fund "upon trust to pay and divide the produce of stock to and for the benefit of their respective estates." A. and B. were not partners, but one was the successor of the other. The sum of 4,517*l.* was claimed by A., and 197*l.* by B., against the testatrix's estate :—Held, that the fund was divisible between their estates equally, and not in proportion to the debts due to A. and B. respectively. Greville v. Greville, 27 Beav. 594.

Debt subsequent to Date of Will.]—A legacy given to J. S. shall not be taken to be a satisfaction of a subsequent debt. Thomas v. Bennet, 2 P. Wms. 343.

Particular Persons as Creditors—Testator's Child.]—As to a presumed satisfaction of a debt by a legacy, there is no distinction between the cases of parent and child and of strangers ; therefore circumstances of difference, as that the legacy given by the parent is contingent, are laid hold of to prevent the application of the rule of satisfaction. Tolson v. Collins, 4 Ves. 483 ; 4 R. R. 264.

A son placed by his father in business, accounting to his father for all profits, deducting only the expense of his board, having made no demand for wages during his father's life, was held not entitled as a creditor after his father's death, or if he had a demand, it was held satisfied by a will giving him a legacy to a greater amount, and other benefits. Plume v. Plume, 7 Ves. 258.

A testator, who had received two legacies, bequeathed to his infant daughters, gives them, by his will, great contingent benefits, and specifies, by a memorandum, that he had received their legacies. These contingent benefits are not a satisfaction of the demand which the daughters have against their father's assets in respect of his receipt of their legacies. Sandford v. Toby, 4 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 23.

A. devised to each of the children of B. 50*l.* to be paid to B. for their use; B. left each of them 260*l.* if they attained twenty-one:—Held, no satisfaction. Pullen v. Cresy, 3 Anstr. 830. S. P., Field v. Mostyn, Ib., 831, n.; Dick. 543.

By the settlement on the second marriage of A. his intended wife's father settled estates on himself for life, remainder for the separate use of his daughter for life, remainder for the children of the marriage, and the trustees were directed to apply the rents, after the death of the survivor of the tenants for life, in the maintenance and education of the children during their minorities; and A. covenanted to permit his intended wife to enjoy any future property that might accrue to her for her separate use; and her father covenanted that all personal property he should die possessed of should be settled on his daughter and her children, in the same manner as the property comprised in the settlement, subject to any other dispositions, qualifications, or charges that he might make by his will. The father died, having bequeathed his residuary estate to A., and appointed him his executor. A. entered into possession of the settled estates, and received the rents, and mixed them with his own moneys. There was issue of the marriage two children. A. maintained them at his own expense, and died, having by his will given them benefits in real estates, which it was alleged he had purchased, in part, with the rents of the settled estates:—Held, that A. was a purchaser of the trust for the maintenance and education of the children, and that the executors were entitled to be allowed, on account, the sums which it would have been proper to apply for those purposes; that the covenant by the father of the wife was a provision against intestacy only; that the sums due from A. to his children, being a debt, were not satisfied by the benefits given them by his will; but an inquiry was directed as to what part of the real estates, devised for their benefit, had been purchased by A. out of the rents of the settled estate. Stocken v. Stocken, 4 Sim. 152; 2 Myl. & K. 489; 4 Myl. & Cr. 95; 4 L. J., Ch. 278; 7 L. J., Ch. 305; 2 Jur. 693.

A father, upon the marriage of his daughter, executed to the intended husband his bond, with warrant of attorney for confessing judgment thereon, conditioned for the payment of 800*l.* by instalments. He afterwards, by his will, bequeathed to his said daughter 800*l.*:—Held, that this legacy could not be considered as a satisfaction of the debt due to the husband. Hall v. Hill, 1 Dr. & War. 94; 1 Con. & L. 120; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 27.

A testator, by his will, gave to his married daughter 2,000*l.* for her separate use, "to be in bar and full discharge of all other claims which she or her said husband might have or make on his estate":—Held, that this was not like a case of election properly, nor a condition of forfeiture; but that the legacy was a discharge, pro tanto, of any rights which the wife, or her husband in her right, might have against the estate. Hardingham v. Thomas, 2 Drew. 353; 23 L. J., Ch. 910.

Trustees of a marriage settlement transferred, contrary to the trusts, 2,000*l.* stock, part of the trust fund, to the husband; two of the trustees became bankrupt; the remaining trustee (who was the father of the wife) by his will gave to the trustees of the settlement 6,000*l.* like stock, without declaring any trust of it, but directing certain bonds to be sold for giving his daughter "her legacy of the above-mentioned 6,000*l.* stock":—Held, that the 6,000*l.* was not given to the trustees beneficially, nor to the daughter exclusively, but was given upon the trusts of the settlement, and in satisfaction of the breach of trust. Bensusan v. Nehemias, 4 De G. & Sm. 381.

Where a testator has covenanted to give a fund to the trustees of his son's marriage settlement to be held on the trusts of that settlement, which include a reservation to himself of a contingent reversionary interest in the fund, and subsequently by will gives to his son half his residuary estate, and directs that all sums which he has covenanted to give to or with his son shall be taken in or towards satisfaction of his share, the whole of the fund must be brought into hotchpot, and the words "taken in or towards satisfaction" operate as a gift of the testator's contingent reversionary interest to the son. Cosier, In re, Humphreys v. Gadsden, 66 L. J., Ch. 236; [1897] 1 Ch. 325; 76 L. T. 31; 45 W. R. 376—C. A.

—— As to Portions.]—See PORTION.

—— Testator's Wife.]—A wife parts with 14*l.* per annum of her jointure, and the husband gives her a note that his executors should pay her that sum during life, and he after by will gives her 14*l.* per annum out of certain lands for life:—Held, a satisfaction of the note. Brown v. Dawson, Pre. Ch. 240; 2 Vern. 498.

Husband, on marriage settlement, settled 100*l.* per annum pin-money in trust for wife for her separate use, which becomes in arrear, and then the husband by will gives the wife a legacy of 500*l.*, after which there is a further arrear of pin-money, and then the husband dies. This legacy being greater than the debt, decreed, even in the case of the wife, to be a satisfaction of the arrears of pin-money due before the making of the will. Fowler v. Fowler, 3 P. Wms. 353.

Bond upon marriage to secure 300*l.* (the wife's fortune) to the wife within one month after husband's decease: by will, the husband gave her 500*l.*, payable within six months after his decease, together with other legacies; the bequest of 500*l.* is not a satisfaction for the 300*l.* secured by the bond. Haynes v. Mico, 1 Bro. C. C. 129.

A sum of 600*l.*, to which a married woman was entitled for her separate use, was paid to her husband, who, by his will, gave her 2,800*l.*, and directed his executor to pay all his debts, and to take all the residue of his property. The husband died, and his widow received the legacy of 2,800*l.*, and executed a general release to the executor as to all matters under the will. The widow filed her bill for payment of the 600*l.*:—Held, that the 600*l.* existed as a debt, and that the legacy of 2,800*l.* was not intended to be in satisfaction of it, and that the plaintiff was entitled to payment, notwithstanding the execution of the release. Rowe v. Rowe, 2 De G. & Sm. 294; 17 L. J., Ch. 357; 12 Jur. 909.

Bond by husband to pay to trustees in his lifetime or immediately after his death 500*l.* in trust (subject to their own charges, &c.) for his wife for life, and after her death to issue, and in default of issue for wife absolutely. Bequest after payment of debts of 1,000*l.* to wife absolutely within six months of death held not a satisfaction of bond. Adams v. Lavender, 1 M'Cle. & Y. 41.

By a marriage settlement, a rent-charge of 200*l.* a year was secured to the wife for life, payable quarterly, with powers of distress, &c. To enable the husband to mortgage, the wife relieved her rent-charge to the mortgagee. The equity of redemption was reserved to the husband, who covenanted to convey other land on the trusts of the settlement. The husband by his will gave his real and personal estate to his brother, on condition that he would allow his wife 300*l.* a year for life:—Held, that the 200*l.* a year remained a valid charge on the equity of redemption; and, secondly, that it was not satisfied by the 300*l.* a year. Wood v. Wood, 7 Beav. 183.

A bond to secure 2,000*l.* to be paid to trustees within three months after the death of the obligor for the benefit of A., his intended wife for life, and then over. The obligor, by will, after directing payment of his debts, gave to A., whom he had married in the meanwhile, an annuity of 200*l.*:—Held, that the annuity was not a satisfaction of A.'s interest under the bond. Cole v. Willard, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 988; 6 W. R. 712.

A married woman, being entitled under the wills of her father and brother to sums of money bequeathed by them to trustees for her sole and separate use, entered into an arrangement with her husband, that the money should be paid to him, and that he should hold the same in trust for her, and that certain railway stock should be transferred into his name also in trust for her, and that he should allow her an annual sum as interest in respect of the whole. Afterwards the husband made his will, and bequeathed to his wife a legacy considerably larger than her separate property in his hands:—Held, that the legacy was not a satisfaction of the debt, and that he held the property as a trustee for his wife. Taylor v. Taylor, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1218.

—— Brother or Sister.]—Where A. sold an annuity of 92*l.* for his own life to his brother B. for 500*l.*, and agreed by letters to bequeath him a sum of 500*l.* by will, if B. were then living; and, in the course of the negotiations, B. agreed to take this 500*l.*, or 50*l.* annually if A. should die before him, A. died, and, by his will, directed his debts to be paid, and then left an annuity of 50*l.* to B.:—Held, that this was a fraternal transaction, the agreement contained in the letters was good, and that the 500*l.* was payable under the direction in his will for payment of debts, and that B. was also entitled to the 50*l.* a year under the will. Fitzgerald v. Coote, Wall. Lyn. 297.

A brother who had two sums of 1,000*l.* and 500*l.* in his hands upon trust for his sisters E. and A. respectively for life for their separate use, and after their deaths for their children equally, by his will desired that his real estate should be sold, and that two sums of 1,000*l.* and 500*l.* should be paid to his sisters out of the proceeds of sale, and desired that the remainder of the proceeds of sale might be equally divided amongst other persons named:—Held, that the gifts to the sisters were not a satisfaction of the moneys held by the testator as trustee for his sisters and their children. Fairer v. Park, 45 L. J., Ch. 760; 3 Ch. D. 309; 35 L. T. 27.

—— Servant.]—One being indebted to his servant for wages in 100*l.*, gives her a bond for this 100*l.* as due for wages, and afterwards, by will, gives her 500*l.* for her long and faithful services. This is not a satisfaction of the bond. Chancey's Case, 1 P. Wms. 408; 10 Mod. 399.

A. gives bond to B., her servant, to pay her 20*l.* per annum quarterly for her life, free from taxes, and by will, without taking notice of the bond, gives B. 20*l.* per annum for her life, payable half-yearly, but not said free of taxes; decreed the annuity by the will not to be a satisfaction of the bond, and that B. should have both the annuities. Atkinson v. Webb, 2 Vern. 478; Pre. Ch. 236.

—— Execution.]—Legacy to executor excluded him from the undisposed surplus, but is not at the same time a satisfaction for debt. The rule of constructive satisfaction is not carried so far as to answer a double purpose. Mathews v. Mathews, infra, col. 1576. And see Binns v. Nichols, 35 L. J., Ch. 635; L. R. 2 Eq. 256; 14 W. R. 727.

—— Husband of Legatee under Will of Creditor.]—A testator bequeathed a legacy to A., "in full satisfaction of all claims he may have upon me." The testator was at the time indebted to the executors of B., whose residuary estate was bequeathed upon trust for B.'s daughter, the wife of A., her issue and next of kin:—Held, that this debt was not a claim within the meaning of the conditions attached to the legacy. Parmiter v. Parmiter, 1 J. & H. 135; 8 W. R. 578. Affirmed, 30 L. J., Ch. 508; 3 L. T. 799—L. C.

—— Legatee under Will of which Testator was Executor.]—Legacy at twenty-one, the interest for maintenance; the debt is not satisfied by advancements during minority for the infant's benefit, nor by a legacy larger, but of a different nature, received under the will of the executor, there being no positive relinquishment, though no demand for ten years. Lee v. Brown, 4 Ves. 362; 4 R. R. 208.

Where Gift Contingent.]—A legacy left to a creditor is a satisfaction, if it be equal or exceed the debt, otherwise if given upon a contingency. Spinks v. Robins, 2 Atk. 493.

A debtor, without taking notice of the debt, devises a sum as great or greater than the debt to his creditors. This shall be a satisfaction. Secus if it were devised on a contingency, or if it were less than the debt. Talbot v. Shrewsbury, Pre. Ch. 394; Gilb. Eq. R. 89.

Where testator gave bond for 200*l.* to A., and afterwards, by his will, devised certain lands for a term of years upon trust to raise and pay, within two years after his death, to A. 200*l.*, and also devised other lands to the same trustee for three hundred years on trust to pay 200*l.* to A. within one year after his death:—Held, that this was a contingent legacy, for if the legatee had died before the time of payment, it would have sunk in the land, and that, the rule of ademption not extending so far as to take in a contingent legacy, this is not a satisfaction of the bond. Nicholls v. Judson, 2 Atk. 300.

Husband, by will, gives an annuity of 10*l.* per annum to his niece A., an annuity of 10*l.* per annum to his niece B., and makes his wife his executrix. The wife, by will, gives 10*l.* per annum annuity to the said A., and 10*l.* per annum to the said B., to begin upon the contingencies of their surviving their respective mothers; these must be intended additional annuities, and not in satisfaction of those given by the husband's will. So, though not given upon such contingencies and greater in point of duration, yet, if not expressed by the wife to be in satisfaction of the annuities given by the husband's will, the court will allow them the annuities given by both wills. Crompton v. Sales, 2 P. Wms. 553.

Bond conditioned that executors to pay 5,000*l.* to a natural son at twenty-one if he should attain that age; by will afterwards, the father gave 15,000*l.* to trustees to pay 200*l.* per annum for the maintenance of the son till twenty-five, and then to pay him the principal, and if he should marry between twenty-two and twenty-five, and die, to pay the whole to the issue; but if he died unmarried before twenty-five, the whole over: the devise is not a satisfaction of the bond. Jeacock v. Falkener, 1 Bro. C. C. 295.

Wife entitled, under bond by the husband upon the marriage, to a sum payable three months after the death for her life, then for the children; if none, for her absolutely. By will he gave all real and personal estate he then had, or might die possessed of, upon trust to pay her the rents and interest for life, then the whole equally to the children; if none, over; and revoked all former settlements and wills: there were no children; the widow entitled to both. Forsight v. Grant, 1 Ves. 298; 3 Bro. C. C. 242.

Where Gift uncertain—Gift of Residue.]—On marriage, the husband covenanted that if the wife should survive him, and there should be no issue, his executors should, within nine months after his death, pay to the wife 800*l.* for her own use; but if there should be issue, then the 800*l.* should be laid out by the trustees, and the interest paid to the wife for life, and after her death the principal divided amongst the children. There was no issue of the marriage. The husband, by will, bequeathed one moiety of certain articles of his personal estate to his wife, which moiety greatly exceeded in value the sum of 800*l.*:—Held, not a performance or satisfaction of the covenant in settlement. Gift of residue is never considered a satisfaction of a certain provision made for wife on marriage, although much more beneficial. Derese v. Pontet, 1 Cox, 188; 1 R. R. 15. And see Thynne (Lady) v. Glengall (Earl), supra, col. 1565, and Alleyn v. Alleyn, supra, col. 1569.

—— Gift after Payment of Debts.]—Bond by husband to pay to trustees in his lifetime or immediately after his death 500*l.* in trust (subject to their own charges, &c.) for his wife for life, and after her death to issue, and in default of issue for wife absolutely. Bequest after payment of debts of 1,000*l.* to wife absolutely within six months of death:—Held, not a satisfaction of bond. Adams v. Lavender, 1 M'Cle. & Y. 41.

—— Upon Condition.]—A debtor bequeaths a much larger legacy upon a condition which by a subsequent deed it becomes impossible to perform; by the will, it would not have been a satisfaction, as it was for another purpose, but being freed from the condition by the deed, it is a satisfaction. General rule, that a legacy larger than, or equal to a debt, is a constructive satisfaction; but any minute circumstance is laid hold of to take it out of that rule; it must be certain as to duration and commencement. Mathews v. Mathews, 2 Ves. Sen. 635.

—— Payable at Later Date.]—Bond upon marriage to secure 300*l.* (the wife's fortune) to the wife within one month after husband's decease: by will, the husband gave her 500*l.*, payable within six months after his decease, together with other legacies; the bequest of 500*l.* is not a satisfaction for the 300*l.* secured by the bond. Haynes v. Mico, 1 Bro. C. C. 129.

—— No Time fixed for Payment.]—A legacy to a creditor as to which no time is fixed for payment is not a satisfaction of a debt for a smaller amount payable within three months after the testator's death. Atkinson v. Littlewood (L. R. 18 Eq. 595) discussed; Dowse, In re, Dowse v. Glass (50 L. J., Ch. 285), followed. Horlock, In re, Calham v. Smith, 64 L. J., Ch. 325; [1895] 1 Ch. 516; 13 R. 356; 72 L. T. 223; 43 W. R. 410.

Parol Evidence of Intention.]—Parol proof allowed as to a man's intention in a will where the question was, whether a legacy should go in satisfaction of a debt due from the testator to the legatee. Cuthbert v. Peacock, 2 Vern. 593.

On presumption of satisfaction by will, evidence admissible, first, to constitute the fact that testator was debtor; secondly, to meet or fortify the presumption. Pole v. Somers (Lord), 6 Ves. 321. See 12 R. R. 36, n.

Parol evidence admitted, and prevailed against the presumption, that a debt is satisfied by a legacy of a greater amount; the will also affording an inference in favour of that presumption. Wallace v. Pomfret, 11 Ves. 542; 8 R. R. 241.

Legacy to A. in satisfaction of all claims which she then had or might have upon the estate at testatrix's decease; legatee having a claim against testatrix as executrix of a deceased party, but no other, parol evidence of that fact was refused. Dixon v. Samson, 2 Y. & C. 566; 1 Jur. 495.

Quære, whether parol evidence is admissible to explain a testator's intention as to a legacy being in satisfaction of an existing claim. Hales v. Darell, 3 Beav. 324; 10 L. J., Ch. 10.

A testator bequeathed a legacy to A. "in full satisfaction of all claims he may have upon me." The testator was indebted to the executor of B., who held B.'s residuary estate on trust for the wife of A. Parol evidence to shew that the testator regarded the debt as belonging to A.'s wife, or to A. in her right:—Held, not admissible. Parmiter v. Parmiter, 1 J. & H. 135; 8 W. R. 578. Affirmed, 30 L. J., Ch. 508; 3 L. T. 799—L. C.

See also Cuthbert v. Peacock, 1 Salk. 155; Canner's Case, 2 Salk. 508.

15. Ademption.

Principles—Specific Gift Adeemed by Disposal in Lifetime.]—Where a particular chattel is specifically described and distinguished from all other things of the same kind, and is not found among the testator's effects, it fails; if given first to A. and then to B., they must divide it; and if disposed of in the testator's lifetime, it is an ademption of such legacy. Purse v. Snaplin, 1 Atk. 417.

Where specific bequest does not remain in specie at the time of the testator's death, it is regarded as adeemed, without considering the animus adimendi. Barker v. Rayner, 5 Madd. 208 ; 26 R. R. 18.

A testator by his will bequeathed to his trustees therein named, in trust for two persons, the sum of 4,000*l.*, "at present secured by a mortgage of certain landed property at Podington, Beds." During the lifetime of the testator the mortgage was paid off. The question therefore was, whether the legacy must be treated as adeemed, or whether it was a general legacy, having regard to the words "at present" in the gift:—Held, that the legacy was specific, and that the gift failed. Robe, In re, Slade v. Walpole, 61 L. T. 497.

—— But not by Inchoate Disposition only.]—An offer by an agent to sell the subject-matter of a specific legacy, made before but accepted after the testator's death, does not operate as an ademption. Pearce, In re, Roberts v. Stephens, 8 R. 805.

A testator resident in Jamaica bequeathed to A. B. 2,000*l.*, part of a sum of 7,000*l.* in the hands of his agents in England, and received by them from the transport board on his account. The testator afterwards went to Philadelphia, where he died; seven days before his death he wrote to his agent in Jamaica, desiring him to order his agents in England to invest all his moneys in their hands received from the transport board in any stock most beneficial to his estate. The agent wrote accordingly, but some time before his letter arrived in England, the agents there had of their own accord invested the whole of the testator's moneys in their hands in the 4*l.* per cents.:— Held, that the legacy was not adeemed. Bason v. Brandon, 8 Sim. 171.

A testator resident in Jamaica, by his will, dated the 30th March, 1843, gave all his moneys in the 3 per cents. and bank stock to A. On the 20th June, 1846, the testator by a letter directed his London agent (who had a power of attorney to sell out the stock) to sell such a sum as would produce 800*l.*, and apply it in the manner mentioned in the letter. The testator died on the 29th of June. On the 24th of July a part of the stock was sold out by the London agents in pursuance of the directions given them:—Held, that neither the direction to sell, nor the sale after the testator's death, adeemed any of the legacy. Harrison v. Asher, 2 De G. & Sm. 436; 17 L. J., Ch. 452; 12 Jur. 833. And see Hughes v. Walmesley, 12 Jur. 834, n.

—— Effect of Parental Relation.]—Difference of the legal presumption where the legacy and gift are by a stranger, and where they are by one standing in a parental relation. Griffith v. Bourke, infra, col. 1582.

Gift by a brother standing in loco parentis is an ademption of a legacy in his will. Monck v. Monck (Lord), infra, col. 1582.

—— Moral Obligation other than Parental.]—The doctrine of ademption of legacies founded on parental or quasi-parental relation applies also to cases where a moral obligation other than parental or quasi-parental is recognised in the will, though without reference to any special application of the money. A testatrix by her will bequeathed to a niece of her deceased husband 500*l.* with these words, "according to the wish of my late beloved husband," and she afterwards in her lifetime paid 300*l.* to such legatee, with a contemporaneous entry in her diary that such payment was a "legacy from" the legatee's "uncle John":—Held, that the presumption was that such legacy was adeemed to the extent of 300*l.*, and that such presumption of ademption pro tanto only was not displaced by evidence that more than a year before the 300*l.* was given the testatrix had said that the legatee, when asked by the testatrix whether she would rather receive 300*l.* down than a larger sum after the testatrix's death, had replied that she would prefer 300*l.* down. Pollock, In re, Pollock v. Worrall, 54 L. J., Ch. 489; 28 Ch. D. 552; 52 L. T. 718—C. A.

—— Where Gift not Specific.]—Where a legacy is of the value of securities, &c., though the specification be varied, the legacy is not adeemed. Pulsford v. Hunter, 3 Bro. C. C. 416.

A testator, by his will, stated that he had lent his money to various persons named on their notes of hand, and to sundry other persons whose names and notes would be found among his papers. He then said, "Now my will is that the moneys as aforesaid be disposed of as follows"; he then gave legacies to the amount of 9,900*l.* At his death, none of the enumerated investments existed:—Held, that the legacies were not specific, but general legacies. White v. Wakley, 28 L. J., Ch. 79.

One devises 500*l.*, "viz. 400*l.* due on bond and 100*l.* in money"; afterwards the testator receives part; this no ademption of the legacy. Orm v. Smith, 2 Vern. 681; Gilb. Eq. R. 82.

—— Charge on Estate.]—A testator, by his will dated the 23rd June, 1869, after reciting that he was entitled as against the M. estates to the sum of 7,966*l.* 11*s.* 4*d.*, being the amount ascertained to be paid by him in his character of executor of the late R. H. E., in discharge of the residue of liabilities to which the inheritance in the M. estates was liable, bequeathed to his son W. the sum of 7,966*l.* 11*s.* 4*d.*, or such other sum as he might be entitled to raise off the M. estates. The testator was tenant for life of the M. estates, with remainder to W. in tail male. By deed, dated the 9th day of July, 1875, the M. estates, and also the B. estates, of which the testator was tenant for life, with remainder to W. in tail, were resettled. This deed recited that, upon the winding up of the testamentary estate of R. H. E. (under whose will the M. estates were limited), an account was settled between the several devisees of the respective estates of R. H. E., with a view to ascertain their liability, and that the testator had been ascertained to be entitled to stand against the M. estate for the sum of 8,329*l.* 0*s.* 2*d.*, and that it had been agreed that the said sum of 8,329*l.* 0*s.* 2*d.* should be charged on the inheritance of the said several estates; and by the said deed the M. estates and the B. estates were granted to trustees for 500 years, in trust to raise the sum of 8,329*l.* 0*s.* 2*d.*, and pay the same as the testator should appoint:—Held, that there was no ademption of the bequest to W. of the charge on the estates. Longfield v. Bantry, 15 L. R., Ir. 101.

Case where, from the general tenor of will, legacies which were charged on certain funds not existing at time of death were held not adeemed. Wingfield v. Newton, 9 Mod. 428.

A testator gave a number of legacies, adding, "I guarantee my estates at C. for the payment of the above legacies"; and, in the subsequent part of his will, he gave many other legacies. The first class of legacies are not specific, and, failing the estates at C., are to be borne by the general personal estate. Willox v. Rhodes, 2 Russ. 452.

A pecuniary legacy, given with a particular security, is a demonstrative legacy. Such a legacy does not fail by the failure of the security upon which it is given. Fowler v. Willoughby, 4 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 72.

A testator, domiciled in Jamaica, gave legacies in Jamaica currency to J. C., H. C. and M. C., persons also domiciled in that island, and desired them to be paid out of money due to him on certain bonds which the will specified. At his death, which happened in Scotland in 1790, no such bonds were to be found, but J. C. was then indebted to his estate upon other bonds in a sum which exceeded the value of his legacy, and which, a year after the testator's death, including interest, was equal to the amount of the penalties. In 1794 actions were brought in Jamaica upon those bonds by the testator's personal representative there, and judgments recovered against J. C. for the full penalties and costs; but no attempt was made to levy execution upon the judgments, and they remained unsatisfied. About the time of the testator's death the legatees came to England, and never returned to Jamaica, nor did any of them set up a claim to their legacies prior to the year 1817. In the year 1818 H. C. and M. C. assigned their respective legacies to the plaintiff, who was the personal representative of J. C., the other legatee; and he, in the year 1821, when administration was for the first time taken out to the testator's estate in England, filed the bill for the purpose of enforcing payment:—Held, that the legacies were demonstrative only, and were not to be considered as having been adeemed. Campbell v. Graham, 1 Russ. & M. 453; 9 L. J., Ch. 234.

A testator devised his estate X. to trustees for sale, for payment of his debts and legacies, in exoneration of his personal estate; and after reciting that he became entitled on his marriage to a sum of 7,442*l.*, of which he had received 2,442*l.*, and the 5,000*l.* remained due, he bequeathed 2,442*l.*, to be paid out of the produce of the estate X., and the sum of 5,000*l.*, when and if the same should be received and got in, but not otherwise, to A., B., C. and D., equally, and, in case the 5,000*l.* should be received by him in his lifetime, he directed the same to be raised out of the estate X. The testator received the 5,000*l.*:—Held, that the legacy was demonstrative, and that it was a charge upon the general personal estate as well as on the estate X. Colville v. Middleton, 3 Beav. 570.

A gift of a sum of money to one, to be paid out of the produce of a real estate directed to be sold, followed by a gift to others of the residue of that produce, is substantially a gift of the whole estate, and not a gift of legacies, with a collateral charge upon the estate, and these gifts are adeemed, if the testator sell the estate in his lifetime. Newbold v. Roadknight, 1 Russ. & M. 677; Tam. 492.

—— Intention — Separate Gift.]—Where there is a fixed, independent, separate, and distinct intent to give the legacy, the legacy will stand though the fund out of which it is directed to be paid does not exist. Mann v. Copland, 2 Madd. 223.

—— Where Purpose of Gift Fails.]—A testator gave to his brother absolutely certain collieries, and all debts which might be due to him at the time of his decease in respect of such collieries and works, but subject to the payment of all debts and engagements due and payable in respect of or connected with the works; and for the better enabling his brother to carry on the collieries, the testator bequeathed to him 10,000*l.* Shortly before his decease, the testator sold all his property in the collieries to his brother:—Held, that there was no ademption of the legacy of 10,000*l.*, and that the direction as to receiving and paying debts could not be carried into effect. Parsons v. Coke, 27 L. J., Ch. 828; 6 W. R. 715.

Devise failing as to one part of property devised, being the effect of a paramount title, established as to the other premises devised, against the express intention that they should go together. Southey v. Somerville (Lord), 13 Ves. 486.

A. bequeathed 200*l.* to trustees, to accumulate for twenty-one years, and then to lay out the accumulated fund in repairing certain premises, and to pay the surplus to the same persons to whom the premises were devised, and then devised the premises in strict settlement. She afterwards sold the premises, and by a codicil bequeathed the purchase-money to the original devisee for life absolutely, and the codicil contained no reference to the 200*l.*:—Held, that it was adeemed. Whiteway v. Fisher, 9 W. R. 433.

—— Where Purpose Satisfied by Gift inter vivos.]—Legacy to the parish priest of the parish K., for the erection of a new chapel in the town C.:—Held, adeemed by the gift of a like sum, for the same purpose, to the Roman Catholic archbishop of the diocese by the testator in his lifetime. Griffith v. Bourke, infra, col. 1582.

Ademption or satisfaction of legacy charged on land by loan to legatee's husband. Higginson v. Wilson, 2 W. R. 217.

Devise of 400*l.* to be laid out in finishing a house. Testator lives to lay out as much himself, but leaves the house unfinished. The 400*l.* shall not be laid out. Husbands v. Husbands, 1 Vern. 95; 2 Ch. Cas. 127.

Different construction of a bequest to persons who had been creditors, but had been paid in full, where the payment had been made before, and where after, the date of the will. Philips v. Philips, 3 Hare, 298; 13 L. J., Ch. 445.

Whether the right of a creditor to a share of the residue would not be sustained, if the principal of his debt had been paid, but he had not received interest upon the debt for the time that the payment was delayed, quære. Ib., 303.

One having, by his will, given his wife 600*l.* in money on his death-day, ordered his servant to deliver to his wife, then present, two bank notes, payable to bearer, amounting to 600*l.*, saying he had not done enough for his wife. This gift is additional, and shall not be construed a payment of the former legacy in the testator's lifetime. Miller v. Miller, 3 P. Wms. 356.

A testator, by will dated the 17th December, 1862, gave to his wife a legacy of 200*l.*, to be paid within ten days after his death. On the 28th November, 1867, during his last illness, he, at the request of his wife, who did not know the contents of his will, gave her 200*l.*, that she might have a sum of money which she could control immediately on his death, without the interference of the executors. He died on the 8th December, 1867:—Held, that the legacy was not adeemed or satisfied by the gift of the 200*l.*, for that the providing the wife with ready money immediately after the testator's decease was not such a particular purpose as to bring the case within the rule that, where a testator gives a legacy for a particular purpose, and afterwards accomplishes that purpose himself, the legacy is satisfied. Pankhurst v. Howell, L. R. 6 Ch. 136; 19 W. R. 312. And see Armstrong, In re, Marescaux v. Armstrong, ante, col. 733.

—— Contrary Intention.]—J. made his will, dated the 6th March, 1879, and thereby bequeathed all his real and personal estate to his executors, in trust to pay certain legacies which he set forth. The will then proceeds as follows:—"And inasmuch as my property almost exclusively consists of United States securities, which are to be redeemed by that government at specified times, my will is that they be not disposed of or realised until they are redeemed by the said government. I direct that, in case I shall die before the time for such redemption shall arrive of the said securities, the interest to accrue due thereon shall be divided equally" between certain charities which the testator specified. At the date of the will the testator's property consisted of two United States 5-20 bonds of 1869 loan for 1,000 dollars each, four bonds of the same loan for 500 dollars each, and three bonds of the United States 6 per cent. 1861 loan for 1,000 dollars each. Shortly after the date of the will he sold these bonds, and purchased in lieu of them four United States bonds for 1,000 dollars each, and one bond of the Victoria government for 500*l.* The testator died on the 11th May, 1883, the last-mentioned securities being then in his possession:—Held, that the bequest to the charities was adeemed. Murphy v. Cheevers, 17 L. R., Ir. 205.

—— Confirmation of Will—Adeemed Legacy, when Set Up.]—An adeemed bequest is not set up again by a subsequent confirmation of the will. A testator charged a leasehold with an annuity of 60*l.* in favour of J. He afterwards assigned the estate upon the trusts of a marriage settlement, reserving to himself a power, by any writing, or by will or codicil, to charge the same with an annuity of 60*l.* in favour of J. The testator afterwards made a codicil, whereby he expressly confirmed and ratified his will:—Held, that the annuity charged by the will was adeemed, and that the codicil did not operate as an execution of the power reserved by the settlement. Cowper v. Mantell, 22 Beav. 223; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 745; 4 W. R. 500.

Codicil ratifying the will does not set up an adeemed legacy. Monck v. Monck (Lord), infra.

Where a testator, having given a general legacy, by a subsequent instrument makes it specific, the ademption of the specific legacy, without more, will not set up the general legacy. A testator bequeathed as follows: "To M. C. B., besides Austrian metalliques for 104,000 florins, I give 5,000*l.*" By a subsequent codicil he bequeathed as follows: "Whereas I have, by indorsement on two little parcels containing 104 Austrian bonds of 1,000 florins each, given them to M. C. B., I confirm the said disposition, and add to it 20,000*l.*":—Held, first, that the testator, as to the Austrian securities, referred to the same subject-matter; and the testator not possessing such securities at his death, that the gift of them failed; and, secondly, that the gift of the two sums of 5,000*l.* and 20,000*l.* (though both were connected with the gift of the same Austrian securities) was cumulative, and not substitutional. Hertford (Marquis) v. Lowther (Lord), Berchtoldt's (Countess) Case, 7 Beav. 107; 13 L. J., Ch. 41; 7 Jur. 1098. Affirmed on appeal by Lord Chancellor, 11th February, 1845.

A testator gave to M. F., whom he afterwards married, among other bequests, 50*l.* long annuities, which he had purchased with 1,000*l.* left him by the will of J. T. After his marriage he made a codicil, by which he confirmed to his wife the benefits given to her by his will, in addition to the provision made for her by her marriage settlement. He afterwards sold his long annuities, and with the produce purchased new annuities, which differed only from the long annuities by being terminable a quarter of a year sooner. Subsequently to this transaction, he made another codicil, by which he confirmed his will and former codicil:—Held, that the legacy of 50*l.* long annuities was adeemed. Pattison v. Pattison, 1 Myl. & K. 12; 2 L. J., Ch. 15. And see Coppin v. Fernyhough, ante, col. 1269; Porter v. Smith, ante, col. 1270.

—— Parol Evidence, when Admitted.]—Parol evidence admissible to fortify the presumption of a legacy being adeemed. Monck v. Monck (Lord), 1 Ball & B. 298; 12 R. R. 33.

Parol evidence and declarations of the testator contemporaneous, or subsequent, are admissible to rebut or to confirm the legal presumption of ademption, but they must be directed to the very transaction relied on as an ademption. Griffith v. Bourke, 21 L. R., Ir. 92.

Legacy of interest then due on mortgage. After making will, testator survives eleven years, and receives interest on mortgage. Evidence admissible to prove interest was received as accruing since the making of will, and not on account of what was due before; therefore legacy was held not adeemed. Graves v. Hughes, 4 Madd. 381.

Testatrix bequeathed 200*l.* reduced annuities standing in her name to her nephew. That bequest was copied from a former will, at the date of which she had 200*l.* reduced annuities standing in her name. Afterwards she sold out, and invested in long annuities, and this latter was all the stock she had at her death:—Held, it passed to the nephew. King v. Wright, 14 Sim. 400; 14 L. J., Ch. 214.

Where Disposition made under Compulsory Powers.]—A testator bequeathed two leasehold houses to A., and subsequently notice to treat for the sale was served upon him by a railway company. The purchase-money was ascertained by surveyors, but no written agreement for sale was made. After the death of A. the property was conveyed to the company by his executrix and residuary legatee, down to which time the rents had been received in lieu of interest on the purchase-money:—Held, that the bequest of the leaseholds had been adeemed, but that A. was entitled to the rents received from the testator's death to the date of conveyance. Watts v. Watts, L. R. 17 Eq. 217 ; 22 W. R. 105.

—— In Lunacy.] —Testator gave to wife ready money, &c., which he should have in house at time of death ; he gave specifically to others his exchequer bills, stock, &c. Becoming insane, 3,000*l.* paid into his house was laid out in stock and exchequer bills ; specific legatees of exchequer bills, &c., entitled. Browne v. Groombridge, 4 Madd. 498 : 20 R. R. 326.

A testator devises Blackacre to A., and Whiteacre (which is of equal value) to B. ; afterwards a commission of lunacy having issued against him, Whiteacre is sold by the order of the Lord Chancellor for the payment of the lunatic's debts :—A. is not entitled to have any compensation out of the lands devised to B. for the loss of lands devised to him (A.). Holmes v. Goodworth, 7 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 128.

After the testator, who was a shopkeeper, had made a will, bequeathing his leasehold house and shop, and the stock-in-trade therein, to his wife (subject to certain trusts which failed), and giving his residuary estate in another manner, he became insane. No commission of lunacy was taken out, but his wife, not being disposed or competent to carry on the trade, joined with the persons whom he had named executors, and also with the residuary legatees, in an agreement for the sale of the leasehold premises and stock-in-trade therein for a gross sum, to be paid by instalments. After this agreement was made, and possession of the property delivered to the purchaser, the testator died. The court, in an administration suit, approved of the agreement as beneficial to the estate, and directed it to be carried into effect :—Held, that, notwithstanding the agreement for sale, and the transfer of the possession of the property specifically bequeathed, none of the parties having any lawful authority to effect such a sale, both the leasehold estate and the stock-in-trade must be taken as unconverted at the death of the testator, and passed to the specific legatee. Taylor v. Taylor, 10 Hare, 475.

A testator made a will, containing a specific bequest of the farming stock which should be in his possession at the time of his decease, and afterwards became of unsound mind. He remained of unsound mind until his death. A short time before his death the farming stock was sold, and the money resulting from the sale was placed to a separate account :—Held, that there was no ademption, and that the money passed to the specific legatee of the farming stock. Jones. In re, Jenkins v. Jones, 35 L. J., Ch. 520 ; L. R. 2 Eq. 323 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 368 ; 14 L. T. 540 ; 14 W. R. 665.

A testator having specifically bequeathed by his will certain shares in a company, was found a lunatic by inquisition, and by an order in lunacy the shares were sold, and the proceeds invested in consols :—Held, in the absence of any provisions in the Lunacy Regulation Act (16 & 17 Vict. c. 70) affecting the case, that the shares were converted for all purposes by the order, and the bequest of them was adeemed accordingly. Jones v. Green, 37 L. J., Ch. 603 ; L. R. 5 Eq. 55 ; 16 W. R. 603.

A testator made a specific bequest of stock in the G. railway company. After the date of his will he was found a lunatic. Under an order in the lunacy, the stock was sold, and the proceeds were invested in a sum of consols, which was carried to the credit of the lunatic to an account intituled "Proceeds of the sale of stock in the G. railway company." In an action for the administration of the testator's estate :—Held, that the specific legacy was adeemed by the sale in the lunacy, and that the consols therefore fell into the residue. Observations on Jones v. Green (supra) and Leeming, In re (3 De G. F. & J. 43). Freer, In re, Freer v. Freer, 52 L. J., Ch. 301 ; 22 Ch. D. 622 ; 31 W. R. 426.

A testator bequeathed a policy on his own life on trust to pay two debts due from him, and to pay the balance of the money to be received on the policy, if any, to his daughter J. The testator paid off one debt ; he became lunatic ; his committee paid off the other debt :—Held, that J. was entitled to the money received on the policy, less the debt paid by the committee. Larking, In re, Larking v. Larking, 57 L. J., Ch. 282 ; 37 Ch. D. 310.

—— By Person under Disability.]—By a marriage settlement funds were settled to the separate use of the wife for life, with restraint on anticipation, and with power to her, in events which happened, to appoint by will. By her will she bequeathed specific parts of the funds to a charity. After the date of her will the trustees of the settlement, with her consent, sold out the stock and advanced part of the proceeds to her and her husband. The husband died, and she by a codicil appointed that all funds, subject to the settlement, should be held upon trust to indemnify the trustee in respect of the amount he had advanced to her and her husband, and confirmed her will :—Held, that as she was, during coverture, incapable of consenting, there had been no ademption of the bequest to the charity, but that after her husband's death sh had adopted the breach of trust, and that the bequest was, therefore, decreased by the amount of the advances. Kitchen, In re, 31 L. T. 642.

—— Conversion of Stock by Act of Legislature.]—A legacy of 7,000*l.* 5 per cent. stock (converted by statute, passed between the making the will and the death of the testator, into 4 per cent. stock) not adeemed by the conversion. For the statute did not destroy the identity of the stock ; it was a debt due by the public to the testator, who had the option either to reduce the interest or to be paid the principal, and he chose the former. The legatee decreed entitled to the 4 per cent. stock, together with the dividends from the death of the testator. Browne v. M'Guire, Beat. 358.

If a person has 1,800*l.* stock in funds, and devises 1,000*l.* of it, and afterwards sells 1,600*l.*, and then buys 1,400*l.*, and, between the making of the will and the testator's death, the legislature changes that kind of stock into annuities, these circumstances make no alteration in the legacy. Partridge v. Partridge, 9 Mod. 269 ; Cas. t. Talb. 226.

Bequest of all the testator's Great Western Railway shares and all other the railway shares of which he might be possessed at the time of his decease : — Held, to pass Great Western Railway shares which he had at the date of his will, and which were afterwards, by a resolution of the company made under the authority of an act of parliament, converted into consolidated stock ; but held not to pass consolidated stock in the same company purchased by the testator after the date of his will. Oakes v. Oakes, 9 Hare, 666.

A testator by will, dated 25th September, 1860, made a bequest of all his Lake Erie bonds and debentures and other property, to certain persons according to the nature and qualities thereof respectively. At this date he was possessed of some bonds of a company called "The New York and Erie Railway Company," but an exchange was then being carried out by the holders of the bonds of this company for shares to a like amount in a company to be called "The Erie Railway Company," and a contract for such transfer had been signed in October, 1859. It did not appear that the testator knew of the negotiations or contract at the date of his will; but he became acquainted with them on or before the 20th July, 1861. On the 5th October, 1861, he made a codicil, which did not refer in any way to the bequest, and on the 27th November, 1861, he died:—Held, that the shares of the Erie Railway Company, of which the testator was possessed at the time of his decease, passed under the specific devise of the testator's Lake Erie bonds and debentures. Pilkington, In re, 13 L. T. 35.

Testatrix bequeathed all her shares in the Imperial Gas Light and Coke Company. After the date of her will all the testatrix's shares of the above description were, by a statutory scheme of amalgamation of the Imperial and other companies, converted into stock of the Gas Light and Coke Company:—Held, that a provision in the scheme, transferring to the substituted stock the trusts and limitations affecting the old shares, "so as to give effect to and not revoke any testamentary disposition," was effectual to prevent ademption. After the amalgamation the testatrix purchased other stock of the Gas Light and Coke Company:—Held, that these also passed by the bequest. Loveman, In re, Watson v. Watson, 48 L. J., Ch. 565.

Sale of Stock by Testator—Where Gift Specific.]—Legacy of my 1,000*l.* East India stock is specific, and adeemed by the testator's having sold the stock. Ashburner v. Macquire, 2 Bro. C. C. 108.

Testator, being indebted on mortgage, and being possessed of 5,000*l.* stock, by will gave to A. and B. all the stock he had in the 3 per cents., being about 5,000*l.*, except 500*l.*, which he gave to C., and he devised other specific parts of his property to be sold and the produce to be applied in discharge of the mortgage. Testator himself afterwards sold out 2,000*l.* part of the 5,000*l.*, and paid off the mortgage with it: this adeemed the legacy pro tanto, and the specific legatees can have no relief from the funds by the will appropriated for payment of the mortgage. Humphreys v. Humphreys, 2 Cox, 185.

A., by will, bequeathed to his two daughters, B. and C., 2,702*l.* bank stock, and 2,000*l.* East India stock, to be equally divided; after making his will, he sold a part of the bank stock. As testator had the stock when he made his will, it was held that he meant to give that individual stock, and the sale of part only was an ademption pro tanto; but where a man bequeaths such a quantity of corn, or number of sheep, generally, it is a devise of quantity only. Jeffreys v. Jeffreys, 3 Atk. 120. And see Abney v. Miller, 2 Atk. 599; Purse v. Snaplin, 1 Atk. 414, and n.

A testator gave to his wife, F. H., the interest of all his property in the public funds, during her life, the principal being placed in the names of the undermentioned trustees for that purpose; and he also gave to his wife all his other property which he might be possessed of at his decease, after paying his funeral expenses and debts, part of his funded property being applied for that purpose, if necessary. On the death of his wife, he gave to his daughter J. H. 200*l.* stock 3 per cent. reduced annuities, and to two other persons 50*l.* 3 per cent. reduced annuities respectively; and to his son the residue of his property, after paying those legacies; and he appointed two persons his executors and trustees. At the date of his will the testator had 700*l.* 3 per cent. reduced annuities, but he afterwards sold out that stock, and invested part of the produce on mortgage:—Held, that the gift to F. H. of the interest of the testator's property in the funds was specific, and was consequently adeemed by the sale of the stock; but that the other legacies were general, and that F. H. took only a life interest in the testator's residuary estate. Hayes v. Hayes, 1 Keen, 97; 5 L. J., Ch. 243.

A testator specifically bequeathed railway stock which he afterwards sold. At his death he was entitled to similar stock which the description in the will was probably sufficient to comprise:—Held, that as there had been a specific thing existing at the date of his will to which the description applied, this circumstance was sufficient to exclude the application of the general rule contained in 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26. s. 24, that a will shall be construed to speak from the time of the testator's decease. Gibson, In re, Matthews v. Foulsham, 35 L. J., Ch. 596; L. R. 2 Eq. 669; 14 W. R. 818.

A testator bequeathed to his daughter his twenty shares in the S. office, or in any other office in which the same had been or should be transferred, and all his right therein, or in the moneys arising, or that might arise, from the sale thereof. Negotiations, of which the testator was aware, were then pending, for the transfer of the business of the S. office to the A. office, which were afterwards concluded, and, in lieu of the S. shares, the testator received a number of A. shares, and a sum of 1,200*l.*:—Held, that the A. shares passed under the bequest, but the money did not. Phillips v. Turner, 17 Beav. 194.

—— Where Gift not Specific.]—One devises the sum of 2,000*l.* S. S. stock: at the time of making his will he had just 2,000*l.* S. S. stock; he afterwards sold 1,500*l.* of it, and three-fourths of the residue was turned into annuities by act of parliament:— Held, the bequest was not specific nor adeemed. Brondson v. Winter, Ambl. 57.

A testator, amongst various specific bequests, gave "1,500*l.* of my Egyptian 9 per cent. bonds" to H., and "500*l.* Egyptian 9 per cent. bonds" to L. Before his death he sold his Egyptian 9 per cent. bonds, and purchased with the proceeds Khedive 7 per cent. bonds:—Held, that the gift of "my" Egyptian bonds was specific and adeemed, but that the gift of Egyptian bonds to L. was not specific and not adeemed. Macdonald v. Irvine, 47 L. J., Ch. 494; 8 Ch. D. 101.

Testator, having at the date of his will fifteen and a half shares in the Leeds and Liverpool Canal, which by act of parliament were to be deemed personal estate, bequeathed "five and a half shares in the Leeds and Liverpool Canal to A., five to B., and five to C." There was no reference or description in the will to shew that he meant the particular shares he then held. He afterwards parted with them :—Held, that the legacies were general and not specific. Robinson v. Addison, 2 Beav. 515 ; 9 L. J., Ch. 369 ; 4 Jur. 647.

Transfer into Testator's Name of Stock devolving under Settlement.]— Stock was, in contemplation of a marriage, vested in trustees for the separate use of the wife for life, and with full power for her to dispose of it by will. She made her will during coverture. She survived the husband, and afterwards took a transfer of the stock into her own name. This does not operate as a revocation of the will, or an ademption of the bequest of the stock. Dingwell v. Askew, 1 Cox, 427.

A testator bequeathed all the personal estate of which he should die possessed, except such share as he should become entitled to in the property of A., to his wife absolutely ; and he bequeathed all his share in A.'s property upon certain trusts mentioned in his will. A.'s estate, which consisted of two separate sums of stock, came into the testator's possession after the date of his will, and the sums were transferred into his name. One of such sums of stock remained in his name at his death, but the other sum was sold out by him and applied for his own purpose : —Held, that there was an ademption of the legacy in respect of the stock sold out, it having been mixed with the testator's property and spent ; but the stock transferred to him, and continuing to stand in his name, passed under the bequest. Lee v. Lee, 27 L. J., Ch. 824 ; 6 W. R. 846.

Revocation of Voluntary Settlement—Reinvestment of Funds.]—Upon an intended marriage between B. and C., which, under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 54, was void in its inception as being contracted with the husband of a deceased sister, C. assigned various mortgage debts, stocks, and securities to trustees by way of settlement. She afterwards, by will, directed her trustees to hold all the moneys and the securities in the proportions mentioned for the several persons named who should be living at the decease of B. ; she then gave several legacies to persons by name. C. survived B. ; she destroyed the settlement, and also the assignment of some of the securities to the trustees, and took re-transfers of stock into her own name, and died without altering her will :—Held, that the legacies were not adeemed by the destruction of the deeds, but that they were adeemed to the extent to which she had called in, received, and reinvested the moneys on new securities. Jones v. Southall, 32 Beav. 31 ; 32 L. J., Ch. 130 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 93 ; 8 L. T. 103 ; 1 N. R. 152 ; 11 W. R. 247.

Change of Investment.]—Testator enumerates mortgages, bonds, and notes, due to him, and gives out of the interest an annuity to A. for life, and after her death directs the securities to be vested in trustees for charitable uses ; some of the securities are paid off and new securities taken after the will :—Held, a general bequest of the amount of the value of the securities, to be made good out of the general assets. Att.-Gen. v. Parkin, Ambl. 566.

D. by will "reciting that it was the wish of her mother and herself that the 500*l.* then out upon mortgage should be given to G. and her family," bequeaths "the said 500*l.* with interest" accordingly. The testatrix, at the time of making her will, had a sum of 500*l.* out in mortgage, which she afterwards called in and applied to different purposes. The mother being dead, the testatrix took out administration, and, upon her death, without having altered or revoked her will, held no ademption. Le Grice v. Finch, 3 Mer. 50 ; 17 R. R. 10.

If a mortgagee were required to reduce the rate of interest, or to receive payment of his mortgage money, it could hardly be argued, that his assent to reduce the interest, changed the nature of his property, or could operate a revocation or ademption of a prior bequest of the mortgage. Browne v. M'Guire, Beav. 364.

Testator bequeathed 7,000*l.* secured on mortgage of an estate at W., belonging to R. T. The 7,000*l.* and interest were received after the date of the will, by the testator's agent, on his account, and, immediately afterwards, 6,000*l.* part of it, was invested on another mortgage, and the remainder was paid into a bank in which the testator had no other moneys, but was afterwards drawn out by a person to whom the testator had given a cheque for the amount : —Held, that the legacy was specific, and notwithstanding the 6,000*l.* remained due on the second mortgage at the testator's death, that the legacy was wholly adeemed. Gardner v. Hutton, 6 Sim. 93.

A testator bequeathed to trustees a sum of 15,000*l.* in the 3 per cent. consols, to be deemed a legacy of quantity, and to be due at his death, as if the same were a specific legacy, and he directed that, if he should not die possessed of 3 per cent. consols sufficient to satisfy the said sum, his executors should within two months after his decease purchase so much consols as should make up the deficiency or full amount thereof, as the case might require ; and he created a term in his real estates, one trust of which was to raise the full amount or deficieney of the said sum of consols in case he should not have at his decease a sufficient sum in that fund to answer the legacy. The will was dated in 1832 ; the testator died in 1835, having only 3,000*l.* 3 per cent. consols, which had been purchased in 1834 ; he had in 1834 sold out 12,000*l.* consols, which then stood in his name, and paid the produce to his brother upon mortgage of freehold estates, subject to redemption by transferring or replacing on request 12,000*l.* consols into the names of the testator or his executors, and on payment of interest equal to the dividends until replaced : — Held, that the 12,000*l.* consols secured by the mortgage to be replaced were well bequeathed to make up the legacy of 15,000*l.* 3 per cent. consols. Collison v. Curling, 9 Cl. & F. 88 ; 6 Jur. 673. Affirming 4 Myl. & Cr. 63.

A testator, reciting that he was entitled, after the death of his sister, to 5,602*l.* consols, bequeathed to his son 2,000*l.* consols, part thereof, or a sum equal thereto, to be transferred or paid to him when the same should be received by his executors. After the date of his will his sister died, and he received the 5,602*l.* consols, which he sold out and mixed with his other moneys. He afterwards confirmed his will by a codicil, but died without having any sum of consols :— Held, that the legacy was specific ; and that the particular fund, part of which was given to the son, being no longer in existence, the legacy failed. Oliver v. Oliver, 40 L. J., Ch. 189 ; L. R. 11 Eq. 506 ; 24 L. T. 350 ; 19 W. R. 432. And see Puttison v. Puttison, supra, col. 1582.

—— Unknown to Testator.]—Bequest of a note for 500*l.* "in the hands of F.," when F. had laid it out in stock unknown to the testatrix; though the bequest of the note is specific, the legatee shall have the stock in which it is vested. Drinkwater v. Falconer, infra, col. 1591.

—— By Trustees of Settlement.]—By a post-nuptial settlement a specific sum of bank annuities was settled so as to give the wife a general power of appointment by will. Three days after the settlement the wife made her will in execution of the power, and apportioned the sum of bank annuities between three appointees. Subsequently a portion of the bank annuities was, with the consent of the wife and her husband, sold out under a power of varying securities, contained in the settlement and invested in railway stock:—Held, that the legacies appointed by the will were not adeemed by the subsequent change in the investment of the fund, but that the appointees took the railway stock in the proportions in which the bank annuities were appointed to them by the will. Johnstone's Settlement, In re, 49 L. J., Ch. 596; 14 Ch. D. 162; 28 W. R. 593.

By marriage settlement a sum of 1,000*l.* lent on mortgage to A. was settled so as to give the wife a life interest in the event of her husband's death or bankruptcy, but with restraint on alienation during marriage, and a general power of appointment by will. The wife, by her will, directed the 1,000*l.* A. had to go to C. D. Subsequently the 1,000*l.* was repaid, and expended by the trustees, with the concurrence of husband and wife, in the purchase of land (which was not an authorised investment), after the wife's death:—Held, that the gift of the 1,000*l.* was not adeemed by the change of investment. Willett v. Finlay, 29 L. R., Ir. 497—C. A.

A testator bequeathed 1,000*l.* D. stock of the London and North-Western Railway Company, then standing in the names of the trustees of his marriage settlement, and which had been bequeathed to him by his late wife under a power enabling her so to do, contained in the marriage settlement (and which stock it was his intention to have transferred into his name as soon as conveniently could be done), to H. if he should be living at the testator's death. The stock was redeemed and paid off at par in the life of the testator, and reinvested in the names of the trustees in Lancashire and Yorkshire preference shares, and a cheque for 8*l.* 18*s.*, the balance, was sent to the testator, but was not cashed to him:—Held, that the legacy was adeemed, and that the Lancashire and Yorkshire shares and the 8*l.* 18*s.* did not pass to H. Harrison v. Jackson, 47 L. J., Ch. 142; 7 Ch. D. 339.

Receipt of Legacy by Testator, and Reinvestment.]—A testator bequeathed all the property to which he was or should be entitled under his uncle's will to trustees upon trust for the benefit of the defendant. After the date of his will he received a sum in cash from his uncle's estate, part of which sum he invested in the purchase of stock in a railway company:—Held, that the railway stock passed under the bequest. Morgan v. Thomas, 46 L. J., Ch. 775; 6 Ch. D. 176; 37 L. T. 689; 25 W. R. 750.

A testatrix by her will, after directing the payment of her debts, and giving certain legacies, gave a sum of 7,500*l.*, "which I believe is left under uncle Price's will to me," in various legacies to several persons. At the date of her will she was entitled in reversion to shares in two sums of 25,000*l.* and 20,000*l.*, which together amounted to 7,500*l.* under her uncle's will and a settlement which contained the usual power to change investments made by him. When the reversion fell into possession the testatrix received the money representing her share, which she invested and the investments could be traced:—Held, that the gift of the 7,500*l.* was not adeemed, but was effectual so far as the funds representing the shares of the testatrix under her uncle's will and settlement could be traced. Kenyon's Estate, In re, Mann v. Knapp, 56 L. T. 626.

Gift of Debt—Receipt by Testator.]—One by will gives 100*l.* due to the testator for rent, from B., and now in B.'s hands, afterwards the testator sues B. for this rent, and recovers it; yet this is no ademption of the legacy. Ford v. Fleming, 2 P. Wms. 469; 2 Stra. 823.

Where the testator devises a debt, and afterwards receives it, or even calls it in, in neither case is this an ademption of the legacy. Ashton v. Ashton, 3 P. Wms. 385; Cas. t. Talb. 152.

Bequest of two navy bills, describing them and the money due thereon. Testator afterwards received the navy bills in the course of payment. Decreed the value of the bills to be answered out of his personal estate. Bronsdon v. Winter, Ambl. 59.

Testator gave the interest of a bill of exchange on the East India Company to his wife for life, and directed that after her death the bill should be sold, and the money divided among certain persons, with survivorship in case of the death of any in her life. This bill, which constituted the bulk of the testator's property, was paid in his life. That was not an ademption of the legacy. Coleman v. Coleman, 2 Ves. 638.

A legacy of a horse or a debt is adeemed if the testator call in the debt, or sell the horse. Ellis v. Walker, Ambl. 310.

A., having a debt due to him from J., devises 500*l.* of it to B., and the residue of it to C., but does not mention what the debt is which is owing from J. A. receives the whole debt in his lifetime; B. dies in the testator's lifetime; testator's receiving the debts in his own lifetime is an ademption of the legacy as to the devise of the residuum, but it may be otherwise as to the certain legacy given to B. if B. had survived the testator. Rider v. Wager, 2 P. Wms. 330.

B. owes A. a debt; A. by will gives the debt to B., and afterwards receives it himself in his lifetime; this is an ademption of the legacy. Ib., 331.

One placed 500*l.* in goldsmith's hands on his note, and afterwards orders part out again, and then devises the 500*l.* in the goldsmith's hands to J.; this good for the whole 500*l.*; secus, if the testator had, after making the will, drawn out part of this money, for this had been an ademption pro tanto. Crockat v. Crockat, 2 P. Wms. 164.

Specific legacy of money due on a note, received afterwards by testatrix, and paid to banker with whom she had no other money; where it remained till testatrix's death, except 10*l.*, which she had drawn out:—Held, an ademption. Fryer v. Morris, 9 Ves. 360; 7 R. R. 222.

Bequest of a sum of money due on bond, the amount afterwards paid voluntarily by the debtor to the testator, and by him invested with other money in government stock:—Held, that the legacy was adeemed, by the testator having received payment of the debt. The bill by the legatee dismissed, but the suit having been instituted by order of the court to ascertain whether the legacy had been adeemed, the costs of all parties paid out of the fund. Ashe v. Berry, Beat. 255.

A legacy of a sum of money owing to a testator by A. upon a mortgage of premises therein mentioned, and which mortgage was paid off in the testator's lifetime, after the date of the will:—Held, to be a specific and not a merely demonstrative legacy, and to be adeemed by such payments. The testator placed part of the mortgage money received by him from A. in a bank, and afterwards drew out a part of such deposit, leaving in the bank at the time of his death a balance amounting to a moiety of the sum which had constituted the mortgage debt; but it was held that the specific legatee of the mortgage debt was not entitled in respect of such legacy to the money so remaining in the bank. Sidebotham v. Watson, 11 Hare, 170; 1 W. R. 303.

A testator bequeaths "the principal sum" secured to him by a mortgage in fee. It was afterwards voluntarily paid off in the testator's lifetime:—Held, that the legacy was adeemed. Phillips v. Turner, 17 Beav. 194.

A testatrix bequeathed all her property, real and personal, to her son; and in the event of his receiving 450*l.*, or thereabout, to which she considered herself entitled, she requested that he would add to that sum 50*l.*, to make up 400*l.*, which she left to her grand-daughter. The testatrix received the 450*l.* in her lifetime:—Held, that the legacy, as to the 450*l.*, was not specific or demonstrative, but conditional on the son receiving 450*l.*, and that the grand-daughter was not entitled to be paid that sum out of the general assets of the testatrix:—Held, also, that 400*l.* should be read "500*l.*" by construction. Taylor v. Creagh, 8 Ir. Ch. R. 281.

Testatrix gives legacies to be paid within three months out of a bond debt due to her; the obligor afterwards, in the lifetime of testatrix, paid the debt and took up the bond; the legacies are thereby adeemed. Badrick v. Stevens, 3 Bro. C. C. 431. And see Manton v. Tabois, infra.

—— As to Distinction between Voluntary and Compulsory Calling in.]—Specific legacies, if existing, the whole paid, though nothing left for pecuniary, but if not existing the right is gone. A debt specifically bequeathed, and afterwards voluntarily paid, is no ademption of the legacy; if a compulsory payment, it may or may not be an ademption, according to circumstances, for if a particular reason is given, or replaced on some fund, or so ordered, it is no ademption. Sed quære. Drinkwater v. Falconer, 2 Ves. Sen. 623.

Where a particular debt is bequeathed and afterwards recovered by testator in an adverse way, it is an ademption of a legacy. Lawson v. Stitch, 1 Atk. 508.

There is no reason in the distinction between a voluntary and a compulsory payment of debts as to ademption. Att.-Gen. v. Parkin, Ambl. 569.

A bequest of a debt is adeemed by the debt being paid to the testator in his lifetime, whether the payment be compulsory or voluntary, or whether the sum be expressed in the bequest or the debt bequeathed generally. Stanley v. Potter, 2 Cox 180; 2 R. R. 26.

The Master of the Rolls was of opinion that, upon the bequest of a debt, there is no distinction between a voluntary and compulsory payment to the testator as to the question of ademption. Innes v. Johnson, 4 Ves. 574.

—— As to Testator's Intention.]—A debt specifically devised, and afterwards called in, whether it is an ademption is a question of intention, if no account can be given why it was called in; it is otherwise if a reason can be given, as in this case it is not an ademption. Hambling v. Lester, Ambl. 401.

T. S., having a claim upon the estate of Sir C. B., gave and bequeathed "a third part of the amount of whatever sum or sums of money might arise and be received from his claim in respect of Sir C. B.'s estate" to his son A. B.; another third of the same amount T. S. gave to trustees, in trust for his daughter M. C. (who died in his lifetime) for life, remainder to her husband for life, and in default of issue (which happened), to his son A. B. absolutely; the remaining third was given in trust for his wife, R. S., for life; and after her death, in moieties in the same manner as the two former shares were given. T. S. appointed his wife, R. S., residuary legatee. After the date of the will, but during T. S.'s lifetime, the greater part of the money due in respect of the claim upon Sir C. B.'s estate, was paid to and invested by T. S. This fund, slightly varied, was standing in the name of T. S. at his death. After T. S.'s death, R. S., who was his executrix, transferred one-third of the fund to A. B., and the remaining two-thirds to the trustees of T. S.'s will, upon certain trusts, as it was alleged, for the benefit of herself and the husband of M. C. for their lives, which trusts were never declared. The proceeds of the two-thirds were, during thirty-two years, paid in moieties to R. S. and the husband of M. C., who survived R. S. Upon the death of the survivor, the plaintiff, representing the estate of R. S., claimed the fund, on the ground that the bequest to the trustees was specific, and was adeemed in the testator's lifetime, and fell into the residuary estate, and that after the life estates of R. S. and the husband of M. C. there was a resulting trust in favour of the estate of R. S.:—Held, that the bequest to the trustees of the will of T. S. was not specific, but that if it had been specific it would have been adeemed. Held, further, that upon a principle of the civil law, recognised in Barker v. Rayner (5 Madd. 208; 26 R. R. 18), the acts of the testator, shewing an intention to preserve the fund for the legatees, prevented any extinguishment of the subject-matter of the bequest. Held, also, that the acts and course of dealing, for a period of thirty-two years, with the fund as appropriated to answer the legacy, was a circumstance of great weight in rebutting the case of ademption, and the claim on the footing of a resulting trust. Clark v. Brown, 2 Sm. & G. 524; 18 Jur. 903; 2 W. R. 665.

Testator devised "all my interest in the C. estate" after the death of his wife, to M. Previously to his death the C. estate was sold and the proceeds of sale paid into court. The money was then paid out to the testator, and part of it was paid into a deposit account and part into his current account with other moneys:—Held, that there was an ademption of the C. estate, and that nothing passed to M. Clark v. Brown (supra) not followed. Moore v. Moore (29 Beav. 496) distinguished. Manton v. Tabois, 54 L. J., Ch. 1008 ; 30 Ch. D. 92 ; 53 L. T. 289 ; 33 W. R. 832.

—— Receipt by Testator of Dividend in Bankruptcy.]—Legacy of a debt is not adeemed by the testator having received dividends on a bankruptcy. Ashburner v. Macquire, 2 Bro. C. C. 108.

—— Release of Debt by Testator.]—One devises to her grandchild a debt of 4,000*l.* owing to the testatrix by J. S. ; provided, if any part of the debt should be paid in before the testatrix's death, then so much as should be paid in to be made good to the grandchild out of the surplus of her estate : afterwards the testatrix released 2,000*l.* of the said debt to J. S. without having received any of the money : decreed, that this was no ademption of the legacy, pro tanto, but that the legatee or her representative was entitled to the whole 4,000*l.* as much as if same had been paid in to the testatrix. Thomond (Earl) v. Suffolk (Earl), 1 P. Wms. 461.

A testator by his will, after reciting that there was due to him from his son 1,440*l.* or thereabouts, secured to him by bills or notes, or otherwise, released his son from payment of any interest up to the time of his death, and directed that he should have time for payment of the principal by instalments. Some years after he made a codicil not containing any reference to the release. At the date of the will the son was indebted to his father in 1,400*l.*, and between the dates of the will and codicil that sum was paid off and a subsequent advance of 1,291*l.* was made to the son by the testator, which was owing at the time of his death :—Held, that the release of interest was equivalent to a specific legacy of the interest on the debt due at the date of the will ; that the legacy had been adeemed, and that the release did not extend to the interest on the subsequent debt due at the date of the codicil. Sidney v. Sidney, 43 L. J., Ch. 15 ; L. R. 17 Eq. 65.

—— Receipt and Investment of Insurance Moneys by Testator.]—A testator bequeaths all his right, title, and interest in two policies of insurance which he had effected on the life of his wife, together with all benefit and advantage thereof, to his executors, upon trust, after the death of his wife, to receive the amount of the policies, and thereout to pay or provide for certain legacies ; his wife having died he received the money, and invested it in securities of which he continued possessed at his death :—Held, that the legacies failed. Barker v. Rayner, 2 Russ. 122 ; 26 R. R. 18.

Gift of Interest—Partnership—Where Specific.]—A testator gave to A. all balances of profits due to him from the firm in which he was a partner, up to the month of June, 1869, and gave all his share and interest in the firm and profits from June, 1869, to other persons. Between that date and the time of his death the testator had drawn from the partnership, on account of profits, nearly the whole amount due to him in June, 1869 :—Held, that the legacy to A. was adeemed pro tanto by the drawings. Aston v. Wood, 43 L. J., Ch. 715 ; 31 L. T. 293.

The court leans against considering legacies specific. One partner by will gives to the other 2,000*l.* which appears to be due to him on the last settlement, in trust, &c., if he did not draw it out of trade :—Held, these last words made it a specific bequest ; without them it would not have been specific. Ellis v. Walker, Ambl. 309.

Where Partnership Insolvent.]—A testator bequeathed all his share of the leasehold premises in which his business was carried on to his partner. The leasehold premises were assets of the partnership between the testator and his partner held by them as joint tenants. The partnership assets proved insufficient to pay the partnership debts. The estates of both partners being however solvent :—Held, that the partner was not entitled to the value of the testator's share of the leasehold premises out of his general estate, but that the bequest in fact conferred no benefit on him. Farquhar v. Haddon, 41 L. J., Ch. 260 ; L. R. 7 Ch. 1 ; 25 L. T. 717.

—— Where Partnership determined in Lifetime of Testator.]—A testator bequeathed to his two sons, who had been in partnership with him as traders, 3,000*l.* equally to be divided between them, such legacy to be paid out of a portion of his capital in the co-partnership business, which had been subsequently reduced, but which at the time of his death remained to his credit in the firm. On a dissolution of the partnership, a short time before the date of the testator's will, and the commencement of a new partnership with an added member to it (the father not being one), it was arranged that 12,000*l.*, which represented the father's capital, should remain in the new firm during his life, the sons paying him the interest on that sum during such period, and to give bond as security for the repayment after his death of the principal, with interest, to his executors, administrators, or assigns by certain instalments of 2,000*l.* annually :—Held, that the legacy of 3,000*l.* to the sons had not been adeemed by the circumstances which had, subsequently to the dissolution of the partnership, taken place. Penny v. Penny, 13 L. T. 496.

One partner by will gives one-ninth of one-twelfth of the profits reserved to him by his partners ; he afterwards, on the expiration of the partnership, renews it with the same partners, giving them a greater interest than they had under the former articles :—Held, they were entitled to one-ninth of the testator's interest in the partnership, at his death, and that the renewal of the articles was not an ademption nor revocation of the devise. Backwell v. Child, Ambl. 260.

See also Russell, In re, Russell v. Chell, ante, cols. 1265–6.

Removal of Chattels—From House.]—Bequest of furniture in one house which is afterwards removed to another house is adeemed. Heseltine v. Heseltine, 3 Madd. 276.

Testator gave to his wife his house in B., and the furniture in the said house. The lease of the house expired in the testator's lifetime, and he took another house and removed his furniture to it :—Held, that the legacy was adeemed. Colleton v. Garth, 6 Sim. 19 ; 2 L. J., Ch. 75.

A testator, after describing himself as "of Broomfield Place," gives "all the household furniture, &c., which shall be in my said dwelling-house or belong to me at the time of my decease." He was living at Broomfield Place at the time of making his will, but afterwards removed, and took the furniture, &c., to Battersea :—Held, that this operated as an ademption of the gift. Haulding v. Cross, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 250 ; 3 W. R. 334.

A. bequeathed to B. his furniture, &c., which at the time of his death should be in the house he then occupied at X. The testator, at his death, had ceased to occupy that house, and had no furniture, &c., therein :—Held, that the bequest failed. Spencer v. Spencer, 21 Beav. 548.

A testator directed his furniture in Gloucester Square to be applied in payment of his debts, and in a subsequent part of his will, he bequeathed his furniture in England to his sisters. The testator removed the furniture in Gloucester Square to another residence :—Held, that it did not pass to his sisters. Blagrove v. Corre, 27 Beav. 138.

The testator by will gave to B. all his goods, &c., in his study, except his books and writings. He gave to C. all his books at his chambers in the Temple. He removed the books into the country before his death :—Held, that C.'s legacy was adeemed. Green v. Symonds, 1 Bro. C. C. 129, n.

—— Exception where for necessary Purpose.]—Goods removed for a necessary purpose, the legacy of them is not adeemed, as from fire, or sent to be repaired, &c. Testator gave all his plate and linen in his house in S. (with the lease) to his wife ; he had but one set of plate and linen, which was usually removed with the family from house to house. The plate happened to be at B., the country house, at his death, yet it passed to the wife. Land v. Devaynes, 4 Bro. C. C. 537.

—— Or without Privity of Testator.]—J. devises all his household goods and furniture which should be in his house at R., at his death, to his wife, and afterwards going beyond sea, his steward gets the landlord of the house to accept a surrender of the house and removes the goods to another house, and writes an account of this to J., who approves of it. The goods will not pass by the will to the wife ; otherwise if they had been removed by fraud to defeat the legacy, or by any fortuitous act without the privity of the testator. Shaftesbury v. Shaftesbury, 2 Vern. 747.

—— Ambiguous Words Construed in Favour of Legatee.]—Testator bequeathed to his wife as follows : "All my interest in my house at Lavender Hill, furniture, books, pictures, wines," &c., &c. After the date of his will the testator removed from Lavender Hill to Spencer Lodge, taking with him furniture, books, pictures, wines, and plate. He afterwards purchased more of these articles, and died at Spencer Lodge :—Held, that his wife was entitled to the furniture, books, pictures, wines, and plate which he had at the time of his death. Norris v. Norris, 2 Coll. C. C. 719 ; 15 L. J., Ch. 420 ; 10 Jur. 629.

A testator, by his will, said, "I give to my wife all my household furniture, plate," &c., "and other effects of the like nature, and all wines," &c., "which shall, at my decease, be in or about my dwelling-house, then occupied by me" :—Held, that in construing the bequest, the sentence ought to be divided into two, and that the qualification as to his dwelling-house applied only to the latter part, and therefore that it passed plate at the testator's bankers, family plate in the possession of the testator's father as tenant for life, and to which the testator was entitled absolutely in remainder, and also the produce of family plate wrongfully sold by the tenant for life, and furniture, &c., deposited for safe custody at a warehouse. Domvile v. Taylor, 32 Beav. 604.

—— Chattels on Ship.]—Bequest of goods on board a ship is good, though they may have been afterwards removed, and were not on board at the testator's death. Chapman v. Hart, 1 Ves. Sen. 271.

—— Where Ship Lost at Sea—Insurance Money.]—A testator bequeathed certain chattels to A., and afterwards insured them from loss by sea. The testator embarked with these goods in a ship, which was totally wrecked, and he and the chattels perished together :—Held, that A. had no interest in the money recovered by the executors from the insurance office. Durrant v. Friend, 5 De G. & Sm. 343 ; 21 L. J., Ch. 353 ; 16 Jur. 709.

16. LAPSE AND INTERESTS UNDISPOSED OF.

a. Lapse.

Principles.]—No difference between a lapse and what is not disposed of, except for construing intention. Bennet v. Batchelor, 1 Ves. 67 ; 3 Bro. C. C. 28.

To prevent the lapse of a legacy a will ought to be specifically penned. Sibthorp v. Moxom, 3 Atk. 582. S. P., Elliot v. Davenport, 1 P. Wms. 86 ; 2 Vern. 521.

A testator has an undoubted right and power to prevent a legacy from lapsing, but to be effectual it must be exercised by express terms. Bone v. Cook, M'Cle. 177 ; 13 Price, 333 ; 28 R. R. 679.

By the law of Scotland, as well as of England, a legacy lapses by the death of the legatee in the testator's life. Rose v. Rose, 17 Ves. 351. See also Williams v. Jones, 1 Russ. 517.

—— Death of Legatee before Testator.]—A testator, having an absolute power of disposition over a fund subject to the interest of a tenant for life, directed that at the death of the tenant for life, 1,000*l.* of the fund should be invested in the purchase of a life annuity for the benefit of D., and that in the event of insolvency or alienation by D., the annuity fund should fall into residue. and he gave his residuary estate to the aforesaid tenant for life. The annuitant predeceased the tenant for life :—Held, that the gift of the annuity fund failed, and the fund fell into the residue. Power v. Hayne (L. R. 8 Eq. 262) followed. Day v. Day (1 Drew. 569) not followed. Draper's Trusts, In re, 57 L. J., Ch. 942 ; 58 L. T. 942 ; 36 W. R. 783.

—— Simultaneous Death of Testator and Legatee.]—A testator and two of the legatees in his will perished in a ship which was supposed to have foundered. There being no evidence of survivorship :—Held, that the bequest failed. Barnett v. Tugwell, 31 Beav. 232.

—— Where Legatee a Society.]—A legacy of 1,000*l.* was bequeathed by the testatrix to a clergyman for the benefit of the "Society for Suppressing Cruelty by United Prayer," and for accomplishing its purposes and objects. The so-called society had been originated by the testatrix herself in 1876, and had, at various times, had some thousands of members. The society had no rules, but the members were required to buy a card at the cost of twopence, and to use a prayer which was printed on the card. The testatrix caused the cards to be printed at her own cost, and received the money for the cards, but published no accounts:—Held, that on the face of the will, the gift was to a particular society; that, therefore, if at the date of the death of the testatrix the society had ceased to exist, the ordinary doctrine of lapse would apply, unless the gift could be shewn to be to a society which was a charity:—That the evidence shewed that the testatrix was in truth the society itself, and that consequently at her death the society came to an end; and further, that the legacy was rather for the improvement of the persons praying privately for the objects stated under the name of the society than for the suppression of cruelty by ordinary means, which was not a purpose of general utility; and that therefore the legacy lapsed and fell into the residue. Joy, In re, Purday v. Johnson, 60 L. T. 175.

—— Gift to Benefit A. and Others.]—One devises to his sister 350*l.* on condition that at or before her death she gives 200*l.* thereof to her children. The sister dies in the life of the testator. The whole legacy is lapsed. Birkhead v. Coward, 2 Vern. 116.

Testator gave his sister M. and his brother W. the interests of the residue equally; at the death of M. one-half of the principal to her children, her husband by no means to have any part of it, but to be entirely for the children; if none, to W.'s children; and after the death of W. and his wife the other half to his children; and he excluded his eldest brother from any benefit. M.'s life interest is not to her separate use; the interest of the other moiety during the lives of W. and his wife would have vested in W., and therefore lapsed by his death in the lifetime of the testator. Brown v. Clark, 3 Ves. 166.

—— Gift to Legatee, in what Capacity—Peer.]—A testatrix, after bequeathing diamonds and china to L., Baron I., declared that she made "the bequest to Lord I. as head of the existing family," and so far as she lawfully could directed that the diamonds and china should be "deemed heirlooms in the family of I., and be held and enjoyed by the person for the time being bearing the title of Baron I." She then made a further bequest to "the said Baron I." L., Baron I., died in the lifetime of the testatrix, being succeeded in the title by E.:—Held, that, although the first bequest was not executory, L., if he had survived the testatrix, would only have taken a life interest in the diamonds and china, with remainder to the person who should succeed him, and that consequently E. was entitled to have the chattels delivered to him, but without prejudice to the question whether he was entitled for life or absolutely. Held, also, that the second bequest was to L., and lapsed by his death in the lifetime of the testatrix. Montagu v. Inchiquin (Lord), 32 L. T. 427; 23 W. R. 592.

—— Gift upon Condition already Broken or Impossible]—If a testator bequeaths a legacy to A. so long as A. shall remain unmarried, and A. marries in the testator's lifetime, the legacy as regards A. is in the nature of a lapsed legacy. Andrew v. Andrew, 1 Coll. C. C. 690.

Testator bequeathed a bust, after his wife's death, to "J., now Duke of B.," on condition that he caused it to be placed and remain in W. Abbey, and at the time of the delivery of it to him settle it so as to be held as an heirloom by the persons who under the limitations to which the abbey should be subject should then be entitled to the possession thereof, with a gift over in case J. should neglect to do so for twelve months after request by the trustees. J., Duke of B., had died in 1839. F. was Duke of B. at the time of the testator's will and death, and was owner in fee of W. Abbey. F. died during the lifetime of the tenant for life, and consequently never received the bust. The present Duke of B. was willing to allow F.'s executors to place the bust in the abbey:—Held, that the condition could not be performed by the duke's executors, and that the bequest fell into the residue of the testator's personalty. Patching v. Barnett, 51 L. J., Ch. 74; 45 L. T. 292—C. A. Reversing 28 W. R. 886.

A testator devised all his real and personal estates to trustees, their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, upon trust to sell the same as soon as conveniently might be (except his advowson of the rectory of C. and certain land in the parish, which he directed should be sold immediately after the decease of the then incumbent, his son, J.). The trusts of the proceeds were declared to be for his children therein named. J. had lately died:—Held, that the right of presentation did not revert to the heir-at-law of the testator, but passed by the will. Held that the right of the parties beneficially entitled under the will to present to the rectory should not be successive, but should be decided by lot. Johnstone v. Baber, 6 De G. M. & G. 429; 25 L. J., Ch. 899; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1053; 4 W. R. 827.

Where Express Substitution.]—Testator gave 1,000*l.* to D.; but if D. should not be alive, and there be certain intelligence thereof, the testator willed that the same should be divided between A. and B. D. appeared to have been alive at the time of the will, but died in the lifetime of the testator. A. and B. are entitled to the 1,000*l.* Parry v. Boodle, 1 Cox, 183.

Where Express Declaration against Lapse.]—A. gave several legacies, and declared that if any of the persons should die before they became due, they should not be deemed lapsed legacies; and then said "to B., the wife of R., and to her executors or administrators, I give 50*l.*" B. died in testator's lifetime, and her husband administered:—Held, not a lapsed legacy, but shall go to the husband. Sibley v. Cook, 3 Atk. 572.

If a man devises his real estate to S. and his heirs, signifying his intention, that if S. die before him, it should not lapse, the heir is not excluded, unless the testator nominates another devisee. Ib., 573.

By will a testator gave a legacy "equally between my brothers and sisters now living"; and he directed that their shares should not lapse by their deaths in his lifetime, but should go to their executors. By a codicil of the same date he bequeathed another legacy, "between my brothers and sisters, in like manner, as I have directed by my will":—Held, that the class mentioned in the codicil were not the same as that in the will; that the "manner" referred to the mode in which the class was to take, and not to the class itself; and consequently that the representatives of a sister who predeceased the testator took no interest in the second legacy. Wilder, In re, 27 Beav. 418.

A father gave property to trustees for sale and investment, and directed that the proceeds should constitute a general trust fund; and he directed that his trustees should appropriate one-sixth of this fund as a maintenance fund for his son J., which on his death was to fall into and again become part of the general trust fund, and that subject thereto the fund should be held upon trust as to one moiety for his wife for life, and upon her death upon the trusts and subject to the provisions contained relative to the other moiety, and as to the other moiety as to three fifths for his daughters, E., C. and S., each to take one fifth part, and as to the remaining two fifth parts for his son A., provided that if any of his daughters should die in his lifetime, without leaving issue living at the death of the testator, the shares in the general trust fund for each daughter so dying should not lapse, but should sink into and form part of the general trust fund and maintenance fund in the same manner as if the same share had never been so provided, and the name of the daughter had accordingly been omitted in the gift and disposition and trusts of the general trust fund. One of the daughters died in the lifetime of the testator:—Held, that the one fifth was undisposed of by the will. Smith v. Stone, 25 L. T. 893.

A testator bequeathed his residue to B. and six others "and their respective executors, administrators, and assigns, to whom I bequeath the same accordingly, and I declare that such shares shall be vested interests in each of my residuary legatees immediately upon the execution hereof":—Held, that on B.'s death before the testator died her share lapsed, and did not go to her personal representatives. Browne v. Hope, 41 L. J., Ch. 475; L. R. 14 Eq. 343; 27 L. T. 688; 20 W. R. 667. And see Featherstone's Trusts, In re (infra, col. 1613), and Aspinall v. Duckworth, infra, col. 1605.

Wills Act, Sect. 33—Principles.]—The 33rd section of the statute 1 Vict. c. 26, which provides that where a child or other issue of the testator, to whom any real or personal estate shall be devised or bequeathed, shall die in the lifetime of the testator, leaving issue, and any such issue shall be living at the time of the death of the testator, such devise or bequest shall not lapse, but shall take effect as if the death of such person had happened immediately after that of the testator, does not substitute for the predeceased devisee or legatee the issue whose existence is the event or condition which excludes the lapse, but renders the subject of the gift the absolute property of the predeceased devisee or legatee, and therefore disposable by his will, notwithstanding his death before the death of the testator. Johnson v. Johnson, 3 Hare, 157; 13 L. J., Ch. 79; 8 Jur. 77.

The fiction introduced by s. 33 of the Wills Act is not to be extended further than is necessary to prevent a lapse. Pearce v. Graham, 1 N. R. 507; 32 L. J., Ch. 359; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 568; 8 L. T. 378; 11 W. R. 415.

The fiction, by which the 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, prolongs the life of a legatee who dies before, but leaves issue surviving, a testator, does not prolong the coverture for any other purpose than to prevent a lapse of the legacy. Accordingly, where the husband of such a legatee had covenanted to settle property which should come to or be vested in her during the coverture:—Held, that the legacy was not within the covenant. Ib.

The provisions in the Wills Act against the lapse of legacies given to children, renders it necessary for a testator, intending that a legacy to one child shall go over to another in the event of the death of the first legatee, to express that meaning by his will. More's Trust, In re, 10 Hare, 178.

—— Effect of.]—A testator, by a will made since the Wills Act, 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, gave to his son a residuary share of his estate. The son died after the act came into operation, and before the date of the will, leaving children:—Held, that under s. 33 of the Wills Act the gift took effect, although, according to the law prior to the statute, there would have been no actual devise or bequest. Mower v. Orr, 7 Hare, 473; 18 L. J., Ch. 50, 361; 12 Jur. 997. And see Wild v. Reynolds, 5 Romilly's Notes of Cases, 1.

A bequest to a child of a testator, which child is dead, leaving issue at the time of making the will, is valid under the 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26. Barkworth v. Young, 4 Drew. 1; 26 L. J., Ch. 153; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 34; 5 W. R. 156.

J. W., a devisee, died in his father's (the testator's) lifetime, and before the date of the will, leaving an only son, who was his heir-at-law:—Held, that upon the construction of statute 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 33, the estate devised to J. W. descended to his son. Wisden v. Wisden, 2 Sm. & G. 396; 18 Jur. 1090; 2 W. R. 616.

A testator gave his residuary personal estate to his children in equal shares, and directed that the share of his daughter, Mrs. B., if she survived him, should be subject to the trusts of her marriage settlement and paid to the trustees thereof. Mrs. B. died in the testator's lifetime, but left children surviving him. Her husband having taken out administration to her, he claimed her share:—Held, that under s. 33 of the Wills Act (1 Vict. c. 26) Mrs. B. must for all the purposes of the will be taken to have survived the testator, and that the share must be paid to the trustees of the marriage settlement and not to the administrator. Hone's Trusts, In re, 52 L. J., Ch. 295; 22 Ch. D. 663; 48 L. T. 266; 31 W. R. 379.

A father by his will devised a freehold house to a son, and his residuary real estate to trustees in trust for other persons. The son died in his father's lifetime leaving issue living at his father's death, and having by his will devised all his real estate to his father:—Held, that as, under the 33rd section of the Wills Act, the son must be deemed to have survived the father, the property passed to the son absolutely under his father's will, and became subject to testamentary disposition by the son. But that as by the will of the son the property was devised to his father, the devise by the son failed, and his heir-at-law was entitled to the property. Hensler, In re, Jones v. Hensler, 51 L. J., Ch. 303; 19 Ch. D. 612; 45 L. T. 672; 30 W. R. 482.

Under s. 33 of the 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, which excludes from lapse a bequest to the issue of a testator, "where the legatee shall die in the lifetime of the testator, leaving issue, and any such issue shall be living at the time of the death of the testator," it is not necessary to prevent a lapse that the issue living at the time of the death of the testator should have been living when the legatee died. The legacy in such case must be considered the property of the deceased legatee, and passes to his representatives and not to the issue. Parker, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 523 ; 31 L. J., P. 8 ; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 354.

A. bequeathed all her personal estate to her daughter B., who died a widow and intestate in the lifetime of the testatrix, leaving a daughter C. C. also died in the lifetime of the testatrix, intestate, leaving a husband and a daughter, D., her surviving. Upon the death of the testatrix, in the lifetime of D., C.'s husband took out the administration to his wife, and applied for administration with the will of the testatrix annexed, as representative of B., his wife's mother :—Held, that as D., a grandchild of the legatee, was living at the time of the death of the testatrix, the legacy had not lapsed, and that C.'s husband was entitled to the grant as the representative of the legatee. Ib.

Held, that although "the issue" left by the legatee was not the issue living at the time of the death of the testatrix, there was issue of the legatee "living at the time of the death of the testatrix" ; so that the legacy did not lapse, and that it was payable to the person who would have been entitled thereto had the legatee died immediately after the testatrix. Ib.

M. by her will gave to her daughter, a married woman, a legacy of 1,000*l.* and half her residue, which was settled to the daughter's separate use. The daughter died in the lifetime of the testatrix leaving her husband her surviving, who died before the testatrix :—Held, that the fund thus bequeathed passed by the daughter's will ; but, quære, whether, in construing the 33rd section of the Wills Act, the gift is to be considered as taking effect immediately before the actual death of the legatee, or as taking effect immediately after the actual death of the testator. The daughter's will appointed two specific sums of money, and all other her "moneys or securities for money" on a certain trust, and gave all personal estate not thereinbefore disposed of to S. and W. :—Held, that the legacies given by M.'s will passed to S. and W. under the general residuary gift. Mason's Will, In re, 6 N. R. 193 ; 13 W. R. 799.

A testator died in 1875, having by his will, dated in 1872, devised a freehold estate to his daughter (the plaintiff's wife), her heirs and assigns, for her separate use. The daughter died in 1874, in the lifetime of the testator, leaving an only child, who was her heiress-at-law. The plaintiff claimed to be entitled for his life as tenant by the curtesy :—Held, upon demurrer, that the plaintiff was entitled for his life to the property devised by the testator as tenant by the curtesy. Eager v. Furnivall, 50 L. J., Ch. 537 ; 17 Ch. D. 115 ; 44 L. T. 464 ; 29 W. R. 649.

—— Where Gift to Children as a Class.]—The 33rd section of the 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, does not apply where the devise or bequest is to the testator's "children" as a class. A devise or bequest over, in terms made dependent upon the marriage of the donee of the preceding estate, will be extended by implication, so as to take effect on the determination of that estate by death. Browne v. Hammond, Johns. 210.

The 33rd section of the Wills Act applies only to cases of strict lapse, not to the case of gifts to a class. Testator gave real estate to his wife for life, and after her death on trust to sell twelve months after her death, the proceeds to go "equally between all his children ; but if any of them should be then deceased, leaving lawful issue surviving them, then the respective share or shares of such deceased child or children should be given to such issue, if more than one, in equal proportions." The widow died, leaving the testator ; one of the children of the testator survived the widow and died, living the testator, leaving a husband and children :—Held, that her share went to the surviving children of the testator, and not to her issue, nor to her personal representatives under the Wills Act. Olney v. Bates, 3 Drew. 319 ; 3 W. R. 606.

—— Where express Gift to Children living at Testator's Death.]—Devise and bequest to all the testator's children living at his decease (without naming them). A subsequent codicil confirmed the gift, as mentioned in his will, "to his surviving children" (naming them all). One died in the testator's lifetime, leaving children who survived the testator :—Held, the survivorship had relation to the testator's death, and not to the date of the will, and that the representatives of the deceased child took nothing under the 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 23. Fullford v. Fullford, 16 Beav. 565 ; 1 W. R. 315.

—— Gift whether to Class or Personæ designatæ.]—Testator directed that at the decease of his wife (who died in his lifetime) his real estate and household furniture should be sold, and the moneys equally divided "between my nine children." He then bequeathed his personal estate not thereinbefore bequeathed to his trustees, upon trust to get in and convert the same into money, and pay and divide the same "equally to and between all my children," except that his eldest son John, by reason of his becoming entitled to a piece of property by a different title, should receive 30*l.* "less than each of my other children" :—Held, that the gift of residuary personalty was a gift to the testator's nine children as persons designated ; and hence that the representative of a child who died in the testator's lifetime was entitled to participate by virtue of the 33rd section of the Wills Act, 1837. Stansfield, In re, Stansfield v. Stansfield, 49 L. J., Ch. 750 ; 15 Ch. D. 84 ; 43 L. T. 103 ; 29 W. R. 72.

—— Section 34—Effect of.]—The testator, by a will made before the Wills Act, 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, came into operation, bequeathed a share of his residuary estate to one of his sons, who was also thereby made one of the devisees in trust and executors of his estate ; the son died after the Wills Act came into operation, leaving issue, and after his death the testator made a codicil to his will altering a bequest to another child, but in other respects confirming his will :—Held, that the gift to the son did not lapse, but that the same, so far as it was real estate descended to the heir-at-law of the son, and so far as it was personal to his executrix under a will made before the Wills Act came into operation ; and that, under the 34th section of the Wills Act, the effect of the republication of the will by the codicil was the same as if the testator had at the date of the codicil made a will in the words of the will so republished. Winter v. Winter, 5 Hare, 306.

Lapse of Particular Gifts—To A. or his Heir.]—Legacy to A. of 600*l.*, to be paid at the end of one year after testator's death, or to her respective heir :—Held, lapsed by death of A. in lifetime of testator. Tidwell v. Ariel, 3 Madd. 403 ; 18 R. R. 259.

—— To A. or his Heirs.]—On a gift to "S. or his heirs," the question of lapse or no lapse, which arises in the event of the decease of S. in the lifetime of the testatrix, is to be answered by reference to the question, "substitution or no substitution." If the gift is substitutionary, then there is no lapse. If there is no substitution, then there will be a lapse in the event of S. predeceasing the testator. A testatrix gave the whole of her residuary estate to her sister P. for life, and on the decease of P. gave the legacy to her brother S. "or his heirs." S. died in the lifetime of the testatrix :—Held, that the legacy did not lapse, but went by substitution to the heirs of S. Porter, In re, 4 K. & J. 188 ; 27 L. J., Ch. 196 ; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 20 ; 6 W. R. 187.

A testator gave to the children of his sister, the late E. W., whose names he enumerated, "or to their heirs," certain legacies. Three of the children died in the lifetime of the testator :—Held, that the legacies to these children did not lapse, but that their next of kin took by substitution at the death of the testator. Gittings v. M'Dermott, 2 Myl. & K. 69 ; 2 L. J., Ch. 212.

A testator gave the sum of 500*l.* to each of three persons, and gave his further surplus to be equally divided between the same three persons or their legal heirs and successors. One of the three died in the testator's lifetime :—Held, that the testator was intestate as to the legacy of 500*l.* and as to the share of surplus expressed to be given to that one who died. Gibson v. Hale, 17 Sim. 129 ; 14 Jur. 27.

Testator, by a will made since the statute 1 Vict. c. 26, after directing payments of his debts, and bequeathing several specific articles of plate to his sister L., desired that all his other plate, jewellery, books, pictures, and other property, except freehold and leasehold property, should be sold, and the produce, after deducting funeral and other expenses, be divided in equal parts amongst L., M., N., O. and P. He then directed that his freehold house and his leaseholds, some of which were held for years, and others for years determinable on lives, should be kept in hand and let to the best advantage, and the produce be divided every half year among the above-named L., M., N., O. and P., or to their lawful heirs ; and in case of there being no heirs, the share or shares to be divided in equal parts among the surviving legatees. The testator at his death left L., his heiress-at-law and sole next of kin ; M., N., O. and P. were not related to L., but were related to and capable of inheriting from each other ; M. died unmarried in the testator's lifetime :—Held, first, that M.'s share of the residuary personal estate lapsed for the benefit of the next of kin ; secondly, that M.'s share of the freehold property did not lapse, but went to the surviving devisees, the words "heir and lawful heirs" referring to heirs of the body, and "or" being construed "and" ; thirdly, that M.'s share of the leaseholds for years lapsed and fell into the residue, the words "there being no heir" referring to an indefinite failure of issue, and the word "surviving" meaning "other." Harris v. Davis, 1 Coll. C. C. 416 ; 9 Jur. 269.

—— To A. and his Issue, Remainder to Heirs of A.]—Devise to A. and his issue, remainder to B. and his issue, remainder to the heirs of A. A. dies without issue in the life of the testator ; B. dies in the life of the testator, leaving issue, who is also the heir of A. The issue shall not take an estate tail as issue of B., nor the remainder in fee as heir of A. Goodright v. Wright, 1 P. Wms. 397.

—— To A. and the Heirs of his Body.]—Lands are devised to A. and the heirs of his body. A. dies in the lifetime of the testator :—Held, that the devise thereby became void, and that the only son of A. could derive no title under it. Wynne v. Wynne, 3 Bro. P. C. 95.

Devise of lands to A., and the heirs male of his body. A. dies in the life of the testator, leaving issue. The devise is void, and the issue cannot take. Hutton v. Simpson, 2 Vern. 722 ; Pre. Ch. 439 ; Gilb. Eq. R. 115, 120.

A. devises lands to her sister B. for life, remainder to trustees to preserve, &c., remainder to the heirs of the body of B., remainder to her other sister C. for life, with remainders to trustees to preserve, &c., remainder to the heirs of the body of C., remainders over. B. died in testatrix's lifetime ; C. suffered a recovery, and then contracted to sell estate. On a bill by C. against the purchaser :—Held, that B. would have taken an estate tail in the premises if she had survived testatrix ; and that having left an only daughter, C. could make no title, and therefore bill was dismissed. Ambrose v. Hodgson, 3 Bro. P. C. 416.

—— To A. or his Executors, &c.]—A legacy given out of the personal estate of the testator, in trust, to pay the interest to a legatee for her life, and after her death to pay the principal absolutely in certain shares to and amongst several legatees, and in case of the death of such legatees (naming them) or any or either of them before such their respective legacies should or might become payable, then the legacy, or part, of him, her, or them so dying, to go to his, her, or their executors or administrators, as part of his, her, or their personal estate :—Held, as to one of such shares to have lapsed, notwithstanding the intervening life estate, on the death of one of the legatees in the lifetime of the testator, and that the mention of the executors and administrators in the clause of the will did not amount to a substitution, so as to vest any interest in them and prevent the lapse. A legacy bequeathed out of personal estate, also, after the death of a legatee, of the interest and dividends thereof for life, in precisely the same words, except that there was this further provision introduced after the bequest to the several legatees : "And in case of the death of any of the said legatees before their legacies should become payable, then the said testatrix willed and directed that the legacy of each of them so dying should go to be paid amongst his, her, or their children, share and share alike, and in case of such decease of any of the said legatees without leaving a child or children, the legacy of him or her so dying should go to her or his executors or administrators, as part of his or her personal estate" :—Held, also, to be lapsed as to the share of a legatee dying unmarried in the lifetime of the testatrix, and of the tenant for life, and consequently that the executors and administrators of the legatee so dying were not entitled to it. Such a legacy so lapsing lets in the next of kin of the testator. Bone v. Cook, 13 Price, 332; M'Cle. 168; 28 R. R. 697.

Legacy to a person, dead in the lifetime of the testator, lapsed, although the words are, "to M., his executors, administrators, and assigns"; and parol evidence inadmissible that the testator knew, at the time of making the will, that the legatee was dead. Maybank v. Brooks, 1 Bro. C. C. 84.

Gift of residue to the widow for life, and afterwards to fifteen designated persons, or their executors, administrators, or assigns, and to be absolutely vested on the testator's death, and to be payable at twenty-one, provided the widow had died :—Held, that the shares of two of the fifteen, who predeceased the testator, lapsed. Leach v. Leach, 35 Beav. 185.

Testator gave the residue of his estate to his executrix, or her heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns. She died in his lifetime :—Held, it was given her as executrix; and she dying before him, he is dead intestate as to the residue. Stone v. Evans, 2 Atk. 86.

Bequest of the residue to A. for life, and after her death legacies were given to B., or to her proper representative, in case she should not be living at the decease of A., and four other persons, or their representatives or representative. One of the four died in the life of A., the former lapsed, and the last vested. Corbyn v. French, 4 Ves. 419; 4 R. R. 254.

A testator bequeathed a fund to his nephew A. and the children of his late sister B., as tenants in common; but in case any died before the testator leaving issue, his share was not to lapse, but to go to his executors as part of his personal estate. Three of the children of B. died before the testator, and left no issue :—Held, that there was no lapse, but that the whole went to the other members of the class. Aspinall v. Duckworth, 35 Beav. 307.

A testator gave a legacy to each of his brothers and his sisters, "or to their legal representatives," to be paid to them two years after his death, and legacies to his nephews. He then gave the residue of his property to his widow absolutely, except 4,100*l*., which she was only to take for life; and after her death it was to be divided among his relations before mentioned. One of the sisters to whom a legacy was given died in the interval between the date of the will and the death of the testator, and after the death of the widow a petition was presented for determining as to who was entitled to the share of such deceased sister in the sum then to be divided :— Held, first, that the share of the deceased sister in the 4,100*l*. had, notwithstanding the words "or to their legal representatives" attached to the former gift, lapsed; held, secondly, that as the sum of 4,100*l*. was given not as a part of his residue, but as an exception out of it, the personal representatives of his widow, and not his next of kin, were entitled to the share of his deceased sister, which had lapsed. Thompson v. Whitelock, 4 De G. & J. 490; 28 L. J., Ch. 793; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 994; 7 W. R. 625.

A testator directed real estate to be sold, the proceeds to go in equal moieties between A. and B. as tenants in common, and their respective heirs or representatives :—Held, that these were words of limitation, and that the share of A., who predeceased the testator, lapsed. Appleton v. Rowley, 38 L. J., Ch. 689; L. R. 8 Eq. 139; 20 L. T. 600.

—— To several as Joint Tenants.]—A. devises the surplus of his estate to his two nephews, equally to be divided between them, and appoints his executor to lay it out for their benefit. One of them died in the testator's lifetime. The whole decreed to the survivor, not to the executors, the testator not intending them any benefit. Cock v. Burrish, 1 Vern. 425.

Where testator devises four parts of his personal estate to B. and the children born of her body, and B. had no child at the date of the will, but had one child born afterwards, and B. died in testator's lifetime :—Held, that the legacy was not lapsed; for B. did not take an estate tail, but as a joint tenant with the child, and that the child took the whole by survivorship. Buffar v. Bradford, 2 Atk. 220.

One joint legatee being outlawed, a codicil revoked his share. The other takes the whole. Alexander v. Alexander, 2 Ves. Sen. 645.

Devise of residue to A. and B. Codicil revokes every legacy, thing, and part as to A. B. shall take the whole. Humphrey v. Tayleur, Ambl. 138; Dick. 161. And see Dowsett v. Sweet, Ambl. 175.

If an estate is limited to two jointly, the one capable of taking and the other not, he who is capable shall take the whole. Id. 138.

If a man devises lands to A. and B. and their heirs, and A. dies in the life of the devisor, B. shall take the whole land. Davis v. Kemp, 1 Eq. Abr. 216.

Where there is a joint tenancy under a will, and one of the joint tenants witnesses the will, the others take the whole. Young v. Davies, 2 Dr. & Sm. 167; 1 N. R. 419; 32 L. J., Ch. 372; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 399; 8 L. T. 80; 11 W. R. 452.

A testatrix by her will bequeathed (inter alia) the interest of certain money invested in the Belgravian Dairy Co. to C., D., and E. in equal sums for life, and "on their deaths I will that the whole sum invested as above be used for the purpose of erecting an east window in St. Martin's Church, Epsom." The testatrix died on March 5, 1895, having survived the above-mentioned legatee C., who died after the date of the will :—Held, that the whole of the income arising from this bequest was payable to D. and E. in equal shares during their joint lives, and to the survivor of them for her life. Buller, In re, Buller v. Giberne, 74 L. T. 406.

—— To several as Tenants in Common.]—Testator directed his residue to be divided amongst the children of L. D., to wit, I. D., E. D., and A. D. :—Held, that the gift was not made to the children as a class, but as individuals; and that one of them having died in the testator's lifetime, the share intended for that child was undisposed of. Bain v. Lescher, 11 Sim. 397.

Bequest of a moiety between two. One of them dying in testator's lifetime, no survivorship, and his moiety is undisposed of. Peat v. Chapman, 1 Ves. Sen. 542.

One devises the surplus of his personal estate to four equally, and leaves J. S. executor in trust. One of the four dies in the life of the testator; his share, as so much of the testator's estate undisposed of by the will, shall go according to the Statute of Distributions. Bagwell v. Dry, 1 P. Wms. 700.

Bequest of residuary estate to accumulate for ten years, and then to be distributed in seven equal shares unto seven persons, named in the will, and appointment of the same seven persons residuary legatees, creates a tenancy in common, and the share of one dying in the testator's lifetime belongs to the next of kin of the testator. Norman v. Frazer, 3 Hare, 84; 7 Jur. 763.

Gift of share to the children of my late cousins W. and J., share and share alike, at their respective ages of twenty-one. This is a tenancy in common among those then living, and one of them dying in the lifetime of the testator, that share is lapsed. Martin v. Wilson, 3 Bro. C. C. 324.

Bequest (charged upon land) to each and every the younger child or children of testator living at his decease, to be paid to sons when they shall severally and respectively attain the age of twenty-one, and to daughters at that age or marriage; some not to vest until the time aforesaid, but interest on the shares to be paid from the testator's death, provided that, in the event of any of the sons becoming an eldest son, his share should be divided amongst his brothers and sisters:—Held, that the shares of two daughters who died under the age of twenty-one and unmarried did not survive to the others, but merged for the benefit of the inheritance, the gift not being to the younger children as a class. Carroll v. Barry, 15 W. R. 212.

A testator gave a sum of money to be divided between the relations of his late wife, in such shares as if she had died a spinster and intestate. The wife had sixteen next of kin at her death, five of whom died in the lifetime of the testator:—Held, that those living at the death of the testator each took a share, and that five shares went to the residuary legatees. Ham's Will, In re, 2 Sim. (N.S.) 106; 21 L. J., Ch. 217; 15 Jur. 1121.

A testator by his will gave several pecuniary legacies, including one to his son E., and devised his freehold, copyhold, and leasehold estates to his sons T. and A. as tenants in common, and he appointed them as his residuary legatees and executors. T. died, and by a codicil the testator appointed E. executor in the room of T., and revoked the legacies given to A. and E. by the will, and he appointed them "residuary legatees," and he declared that the freehold and leasehold property comprised in his marriage settlement, and which he had power to appoint, should go to the residuary legatees, his sons A. and E.:—Held, that the moiety of the real estate devised by the will to T. had lapsed and descended on A. as the testator's heir-at-law, he taking also the other moiety as devisee under the will. Windus v. Windus, 6 De G. M. & G. 549; 26 L. J., Ch. 185; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 269, 1101.

A testator bequeathed several sums of money to several pecuniary legatees by name, including one of 500*l.* to his sister, and the residue of his personal estate "unto all the before-mentioned pecuniary legatees (with certain exceptions), to be divided among them in proportion to their respective pecuniary legacies:—Held, that the residue was not given to the pecuniary legatees as a class; and that, the testator's sister having died in his lifetime, the surviving pecuniary legatees were not entitled to her share. By a codicil the testator, after reciting his sister's death, bequeathed 500*l.* to a trustee for her children, but was silent as to the residue:—Held, that the children were not entitled to their mother's share of the residue, and that there was an intestacy as to that share. Gibson's Trust, In re, 2 J. & H. 656; 31 L. J., Ch. 231.

A. by will devises lands to trustees and their heirs, in trust that the profits should be equally divided between his wife and daughter during the wife's life, and after her death he devised the same to the use of his daughter in tail, with remainders over. The daughter died during the mother's life:—Decreed, this to be a tenancy in common between the mother and daughter; and that during the mother's life the daughter's moiety did not descend or result to the heir, but was an interest undisposed of, and in nature of a tenancy pur autre vie, and should go to the administrator of the daughter. Phillips v. Phillips, 2 Vern. 430; Pre. Ch. 167; 1 P. Wms. 34.

Gift to A. for life, and afterwards to seven named persons equally, "the share of each who shall happen to die to be equally divided amongst the survivors, unless A. (one of them) should die leaving children; in that case, I mean that her children should inherit the share of the parent." The seven all died before the tenant for life, A. being the survivor of them:—Held, first, that the seven took equally; secondly, that the children of A. took no more than one-seventh; and thirdly, that the share of one of the seven, who predeceased the testatrix, was undisposed of. Cambridge v. Rous, 25 Beav. 409. And see Stansfield, In re, Stansfield v. Stansfield, supra, col. 1602.

—— To a Class.]—In gifts to a class the true rule is that those members take the whole who are capable of taking, however the incapacity of the others may arise. Where there was a devise to the children of the testator's late brother who should be living at his decease, or who should have died in his lifetime leaving issue living at his death as tenants in common:—Held, that the survivors took to the exclusion both of the issue of a child dying in the testator's lifetime and of the testator's heir-at-law. Coleman v. Jarrom, 35 L. T. 614; 25 W. R. 137.

A testator devised five freehold houses to "all and every the children of my late brother J. C. who shall be living at my decease, or who shall have died in my lifetime leaving issue living at my death, in equal shares." By a codicil, after reciting that some of the children of his late brother J. C. had lately died without issue, he revoked his previous devise, and devised one of the houses to A., and the remaining four in the same terms as the original devise. Four children of his late brother were living at the testator's death, and one other child died in his lifetime leaving children living at the testator's death:—Held, that the four children who survived the testator took the whole property. Coleman, In re, 46 L. J., Ch. 33; 4 Ch. D. 165.

A father directed the residue of his estate to be divided into fourteen equal parts, and gave one such part to the daughters of his late niece, and one other part to each of thirteen persons or such of them as should be living in England at his death:—Held, that there was an intestacy as to the shares of the persons who were not living in England at the time of his death. Ross v. Iles, 20 W. R. 858.

Gift to B. for life, with remainder to the children of B. living at his decease equally between them. B. died in the lifetime of the testatrix, leaving three children, one of whom afterwards died in the lifetime of the testatrix:—Held, that there was no lapse of the third part of the legacy by the death of one of the children of B. after him and before the testatrix, and that the two surviving children were entitled to the whole legacy. Lee v. Pain, 4 Hare, 250; 14 L. J., Ch. 346; 9 Jur. 247. And see id. 24.

The testatrix bequeathed 1,500*l.* to Mrs. B. for life for her separate use, with remainder to her husband for his life, and with remainder to all and every the child and children of Mrs. B. living at her decease in equal shares; afterwards, by a codicil, the testatrix revoked the said legacy of 1,500*l.* given by her will to Mrs. B., her husband and children, and instead thereof gave 1,000*l.* to each of them upon similar trusts for the said Mrs. B., her husband and children, as were contained in her will as to the 1,500*l.* The legatee, Mrs. B., died in the lifetime of the testatrix, leaving her husband and seven children. One child afterwards died in the lifetime of the testatrix:—Held, that the husband and six children who survived the testatrix were entitled to 8,000*l.* to be settled for the benefit of the husband, with remainder to the children. As to the legacy in respect of any child of Mrs. B. who (if Mrs. B. had herself survived the testatrix) should have survived the testatrix, and died in the lifetime of Mrs. B., quære. Id. 4 Hare, 225.

Bequest to A. B. for life, and after his death to "all the present born children of A. B. equally." One of them died between the date of the will and the death of the testatrix:—Held, that his share did not lapse, but that the bequest being to a class, the whole was divisible amongst those who survived the testatrix. Leigh v. Leigh, 17 Beav. 605; 23 L. J., Ch. 287; 18 Jur. 115; 2 W. R. 205.

Under a devise of freehold property, among all such children of the testator as should be living at his death:—Held, that the testator having by a codicil revoked the devise as to one child, that revoked share went among all the other children, and did not descend to the heir. Shaw v. M'Mahon, 2 Con. & L. 528; 4 Dr. & War. 431.

Devise to five in fee, to be equally divided between them, "if more than one." One died in the testator's life:—Held, that there was no lapse, but that the four survivors took equally. Sanders v. Ashford, 28 Beav. 609.

A testatrix, having a general power of appointment over a fund which was settled on her husband for life, by her will bequeathed legacies thereout; and the remainder or residue of the fund, share and share alike, to her sisters; and as to "any other" residue of moneys or property not specified and disposed of, she directed it to be given, share and share alike, to her then surviving sisters, who might be living when her will and the bequests therein might become available. One of the sisters died in the lifetime of the testatrix, who died before her husband:—Held, first, that the lapsed share of a deceased sister passed under the general residuary clause to the surviving sisters:—Held, secondly, that those sisters only who survived the husband took under the general residuary clause. Hickson v. Wolfe, 9 Ir. Ch. R. 144.

Testator gave 300*l.* to A. if living, and if dead the 300*l.* to become part of the residue. The will contained a gift of the residue to B., C., D., and A. if living. A. was dead at the date of the will:—Held, that the gift to A. had not lapsed, but was contingent upon his being alive, so that the residuary legatees, and not the next of kin, took the share to which he would have been entitled. Hornby, In re, 7 W. R. 729.

The wife of F. S. was the only child of a person who was entitled to certain shares in the N. canal, which, upon that person's death, were transferred into the names of "F. S. and wife," the wife having been her father's administratrix. F. S. was ever afterwards, until his death, treated by the canal company as proprietor of the shares, and received the dividends upon them, and was a member of a committee which, by the company's act of parliament, was required to consist of proprietors of two or more shares. F. S. bequeathed "all my shares in the canal navigation," and all other his personal estate, to trustees, in trust for his wife for life; and after her death, if he should leave no issue (which happened), in trust to apply the same equally between all and every his brothers and sisters, their respective executors, administrators, and assigns, absolutely and for ever. The testator had no canal shares at all, unless those so transferred into the names of himself and his wife could be considered his. Two of his brothers and a sister, who were all living when he made his will, died in his lifetime:—Held, that the representatives of the brothers and sister who died in the testator's lifetime were not entitled to any share of his personal estate under his will, but that the whole vested in the brothers and sisters who survived him. Shuttleworth v. Greaves, 4 Myl. & Cr. 35; 8 L. J., Ch. 7; 2 Jur. 957.

By a marriage settlement funds were settled upon the wife for life, with remainder to the children of the marriage in equal shares, "to be a vested interest at their ages of twenty-one years," with a gift over to the husband in the event of all the children dying under twenty-one, and a reversion to the settlor in the event of there being no child born, but no clause of survivorship and accruer as to shares of children dying under twenty-one. There were five children, of whom four attained twenty-one, and the fifth died an infant:—Held, that the whole fund vested in the four children who attained twenty-one. Colley, In re, L. R. 1 Eq. 496; 14 W. R. 528.

A testator bequeathed his residuary estate in trust for all and every his children and child then born and thereafter to be born, who being a son or sons should attain twenty-one, or being a daughter or daughters should attain or marry under that age, in equal shares as tenants in common; and if there should be but one child, then the whole in trust for that one child. And he declared that the share to which each of his daughters, on her attaining twenty-one, or marrying under that age, should become entitled under the trusts aforesaid should be held by the trustees in trust for such daughter for her life, and afterwards for her children:—Held, that the children of a daughter who died in the lifetime of the testator did not take any interest. Stewart v. Jones, 3 De G. & J. 532; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 229; 7 W. R. 184.

A father made a general gift by will of his real and personal estate to trustees upon trusts for sale and conversion, and to hold the proceeds in trust for all his children who being sons should attain twenty-one, or being daughters should attain that age or marry, the share of each of his sons to be for his own absolute use and benefit. And he directed that the share of each of his daughters should be held upon trusts in effect for herself for life for her separate use, and after her death for her children. The will contained provisions for substituting the issue of sons dying in the lifetime of the testator for the sons, but no similar provision for the case of daughters. A daughter having died in the testator's lifetime leaving children who survived him :—Held, that the gift of the daughter's share did not fail, and that her children were entitled. Speakman, In re, Unsworth v. Speakman, 46 L. J., Ch. 608 ; 4 Ch. D. 620 ; 35 L. T. 731 ; 25 W. R. 225.

A testator bequeathed the residue of his personal estate to trustees upon trust for a nephew and three nieces by name, equally between them ; and he declared that his trustees should retain the share of each of his nieces, upon trust to pay the income to her during her life, for her separate use without power of anticipation, and after her decease, as to the capital thereof, upon trust as she should by will appoint, and in default of appointment, upon trust for her child or children, sons at twenty-one and daughters at twenty-one or marriage, equally between them if more than one. One of the nieces married, and died before the testator, leaving an infant daughter her surviving :—Held, that the share of the deceased niece had lapsed, and that there was an intestacy in respect of it. Stewart v. Jones (supra) followed, Unsworth v. Speakman (supra) disapproved. Roberts, In re, Tarleton v. Bruton, 53 L. J., Ch. 1023 ; 32 W. R. 986. Affirmed 30 Ch. D. 234 ; 53 L. T. 432—C. A. And see Aspinall v. Duckworth, supra, col. 1605, and Fullford v. Fullford, supra, col. 1602.

Gift whether to Class or to Personæ Designatæ.]—A testator gave after the death of A., one of his children, to such of his other children as should be living at the death of A. :—Held, this was a gift to a class, and that one of the children having died before the testator, the survivors took the whole. Cruse v. Howell, 4 Drew. 215 ; 6 W. R. 271.

An aunt gave personal estate in trust for all the nephews and nieces of her late husband who were living at the time of his decease, except A. and B. as tenants in common. Two nephews, who would otherwise have taken under the bequest, died before the testatrix, one before and the other after the will :—Held, that the gift was to a class, and not to designated persons, and therefore that there was no lapse, but the fund was divisible among those of the class who survived the testatrix. Diamond v. Bostock, L. R. 10 Ch. 358 ; 33 L. T. 217 ; 23 W. R. 554. And see Stansfield, In re, supra, col. 1602.

A testator directed that his debts should be paid by his executors ; he then gave two legacies, one to one of his executrices, to be paid to her in addition to what was afterwards devised to her ; and gave the residue of his personal estate and all his real estate to five persons, whom he appointed executors, in equal shares, as tenants in common :—Held, one of the five devisees having died in the testator's lifetime, that as between the heir and devisees the lapsed share was in the hands of the heir, liable to bear a rateable proportion only of the debts and legacies. Peacock v. Peacock, 34 L. J., Ch. 315 ; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 280 ; 12 L. T. 299 ; 13 W. R. 516.

Gift to a Class and Named Individuals.]—Bequest of residue to the children of A., the children of B., to C., to the children of D., and to E., in equal shares. Revocation by codicil of the gifts to C., and to the children of A., with a declaration that they should not be residuary legatees :—Held, the gift of residue was to the residuary legatees as a class, notwithstanding that some of the individuals to take were named ; and that the effect of the will and codicil, taken together, was to give all the residue to the legatees whose bequests were not revoked. Clark v. Phillips, 17 Jur. 886.

A testator bequeathed the residue of his property equally to all and every the children of R. B. and B. B. who should be living at his decease, and to ten other persons by name ; and one of the latter died in the testator's lifetime :—Held, that the ten persons named were not members of a class, and that the share of the deceased legatee lapsed. Clark v. Phillips (supra) commented on. Chaplin's Trust, In re, 33 L. J., Ch. 183 ; 3 N. R. 289 ; 9 L. T. 677.

Bequests to a brother for life, and at his death to be equally divided amongst his surviving children "and my niece R.":—Held, that this was not a gift to a class ; and, R. having died in the life of the testator, that R.'s share lapsed. Drakeford v. Drakeford, 33 Beav. 43. And see Aspinall v. Duckworth, supra, col. 1605.

A gift in a will "equally amongst all the children of R. W., the child of W. W. and L., his wife, and A. W., the widow of H. S. W., share and share alike," is not a gift to a class :—Held, therefore, that there was an intestacy as to a share of the child of W. W. and L., his wife, such child having predeceased the testator. Allen, In re, Wilson v. Atter, 44 L. T. 240 ; 29 W. R. 480.

Where there was a gift of residue among such of the children of A. as are now alive, and fourteen named persons, and there were no children of A. :—Held, that there was no lapse, but the residue was divisible among the fourteen persons named. Spiller, In re, Spiller v. Madges or Madge, 50 L. J., Ch. 750 ; 18 Ch. D. 614 ; 45 L. T. 41 ; 29 W. R. 782.

Testator devised, that in case of failure of issue descending from himself and his wife, a trustee and his heirs should stand seised of freehold lands, for the use and benefit of B. W. and his children, share and share alike, at his disposal. B. W. died in testator's lifetime :—Held, that the children of B. W. took the entire interest in those lands as tenants in common. Hayes v. Ward, 2 Ridgw. P. C. 85.

A testator gave freeholds and leaseholds to trustees, upon trust to pay the income to C. for life, or at their discretion to invest it, with remainder to his children, and in default of children, on trust to sell and divide the produce in manner afterwards directed. He made similar gifts for the benefit of his other children and their issue, and directed the trustees to divide the produce in sixths, and apply one-sixth to the purchase of an annuity to C. C. died without children, and the trustees sold :—Held, that the one-sixth of the product of the sale was undisposed of, and went to the next of kin of the testator. Walters v. Corpe, 16 Jur. 764.

A testator having five daughters gave a legacy to one, and the residue to the remaining four (by name) "and their issue" ; but he afterwards directed that any subsequent born daughters and their issue should be entitled to equal shares with the four daughters. One of the four died without issue in the life of the testator:—Held, that there was no intestacy, that the daughters took as a class, and that those who survived took absolutely. Stanhope's Trusts, In re, 27 Beav. 201.

A testator by his will gave his residuary estate to trustees in trust for five of his children (naming them), and such of my child or children, if any, hereafter to be born as shall attain the age of twenty-one years or marry, in equal shares as tenants in common, but subject as to the share of any daughters, whether now living or a child hereafter to be born, to the trusts following. The testator had six children only—viz., the five named and one other—all of whom had attained twenty-one at the date of the will. Two of the five named died in the testator's lifetime without issue:—Held, that the gift was a gift to a class, and not to individuals. Stanhope's Trusts, In re (supra), followed. Jackson, In re, Shiers v. Ashworth, 32 W. R. 194.

Testator gave to trustees all his estates upon trust to sell and directed that the proceeds of sale should be part of his personal estate and be subject to the dispositions concerning his residuary estate, and after giving legacies—one to R. A., and another to the children of J. D.—he gave the residue unto and equally amongst all the children of his brother-in-law, J. D., and the said R. A., and directed that the same should be vested legacies at the time of his decease. R. A. died before the testator, leaving children living at the testator's death. Three children of J. D. were living at the testator's death:—Held, that R. A. would, if living, have taken a share of the residue and not his children, and that, as he died before the testator, the share which he would have taken belonged to the three surviving residuary legatees, not as a class with R. A., but under the special term of this will. Featherstone's Trusts, In re, 52 L. J., Ch. 75; 22 Ch. D. 111; 47 L. T. 538; 31 W. R. 89.

—— To Creditors.] — Testator by his will declared that one-fifth of the residue of his personal estate should be divided amongst certain of his creditors named in a schedule to his will. The schedule contained both the names of the creditors and the debts due to them respectively:—Held, that the parties so named in the schedule were not to be considered as legatees, but strictly as creditors, and consequently that the representatives of such as died in the testator's lifetime were entitled to the benefit of the will. Williamson v. Naylor, 3 Y. & C. 208.

The testator gave the residue of his estate to trustees, upon trust to divide the same amongst the several persons who were his creditors at the time he executed a certain conveyance for their benefit, their executors and administrators; such payment and provision to be made to and amongst such persons respectively, their respective executors or administrators, rateably and in proportion to the quantum or amount of the original debt or debts due from him to such person or persons respectively: and if any person or persons claiming under such bequest should not give notice of such claim to the trustees within two years of the testator's decease, such share or shares of the residue to go to certain residuary legatees:—Held, that the residue was to be divided into parts corresponding in number and proportion with the original debts; that the shares attributed to the debts of executors who died in the lifetime of the testator did not lapse by their death; that the surviving partners were the persons to receive and give receipts for the share of the residue attributed to a joint debt, and that it was not necessary, before carrying over the shares in this suit, to inquire into the state of the accounts as between the surviving and the representatives of the deceased partners; that a claim made by the representatives of a partner beneficially interested in a joint debt was a sufficient claim, although such partner was not the last survivor of the partners in the firm to which the debt was owing; that the share of the residue attributed to a debt, in respect of which no claim was made, belonged to the residuary legatees; that the amount of the residue, whether as exceeding or falling short of the amount of the unpaid debts, did not affect the construction of the will. Philips v. Philips, 3 Hare, 281; 13 L. J., Ch. 445.

Testator bequeathed 1,000*l.* to the trustees of a chapel "towards the reduction of their debt on the chapel," and after certain other gifts he bequeathed the residue of his personal estate to the treasurer of the fund called the S. fund. He then charged all his legacies bequeathed to charitable purposes on his bank and India stock, &c., and gave all his real estate to trustees upon trusts for sale, with a direction to apply the proceeds in part payment of the legacies bequeathed by his will and not being charitable. On a suit instituted for the administration of the testator's estate, and the usual inquiries having been directed, the chief clerk found that the testator had no real estate, but was possessed of some Tothill Fields Improvement bonds, leaseholds, and considerable personal estate. That there had been a debt on the chapel which had long before the date of the testator's will been paid off. That there was no fund answering to the exact description of the S. fund; but there were two funds, the W. fund and the T. fund, the names of which were nearly resembling the S. fund, and the objects of which were somewhat similar. On the several questions arising in the suit:—Held, that though the debt on the chapel was discharged, the gift to the trustees was good. That as there was no contest between the W. fund and the T. fund, there was no intestacy; but that the T. fund, as the W. fund did not dispute it, was entitled to the gift to the S. fund, although the leaning of the court was in favour of the W. fund. That the leaseholds must be applied as far as they would extend in paying the legacies not charitable, that the deficiency must be made up and out of the residuary personal estate, and that the Tothill Fields Improvement bonds were not within the Statute of Mortmain. Bunting v. Marriott, 19 Beav. 163.

A testator, who had been bankrupt, and had obtained his certificate thirty years before the date of his will, directed by his will that all his debts should be paid, including the debts proved and not paid in full in the bankruptcy, and directed his executors to pay to the official assignee in the bankruptcy, in trust to pay all such creditors, so much money as would make the dividend in the bankruptcy equal to 20*s.* in the pound: — Held, that the benefit thereby intended to be conferred on a creditor did not lapse by his death in the testator's lifetime. Somerby's Trust, In re, 2 K. & J. 630; 7 De G. M. & G. 429.

A testator by his will directed his just debts to be paid, including "the unpaid-in-full debts proved on the estate of" himself and his father, who were bankrupts in 1822: and he directed his executors to pay to the official assignee, in trust for all the creditors under the commission, so much money as would make the dividend equal to 20*s.* in the pound on the debts so proved: —Held, that the official assignee was entitled to receive the amount found to be due to the creditors, less legacy duty; and that the shares of those who died before the testator did not lapse, but were payable to their representatives. Turner v. Martin, 26 L. J., Ch. 216; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 397; 5 W. R. 277.

—— To Debtor.]—A. devises to B. 400*l.* which he owed him, provided he should thereout pay several sums to his children; the rest he freely gives him, and directs his executors to deliver up the security, and not to claim any part of the debts, but to give such release as B., his executors, &c., should require. B. dies in the life of A.:—Decreed, this was a lapsed legacy. Elliot v. Davenport, 1 P. Wms. 83; 2 Vern. 521.

"I return A. his bond," in a will is not a release, but a legacy; and having lapsed, the bond remains in force against a surviving co-obligor. Maitland v. Adair, 3 Ves. 231.

J. bequeathed in these words: "I give to N. the sum of 400*l.* which he owes me on mortgage of his estate in Shropshire, and I further order my executor to give him up all bonds owing from him to me, and which shall be found in my custody at my decease, with all interest due thereon." N. had given the testator a bond as a collateral security for the mortgage money. N. died before the testator. This is a lapsed legacy, and the executor of N. must pay the money. Toplis v. Baker, 2 Cox, 118; 2 R. R. 21.

In order to prevent a legacy from lapsing by the legatee's death, it is necessary to substitute another legatee in his stead. Id. 119.

Bequest by obligee to one of joint obligors of debt due on bond in these terms: "I remit and forgive to A. the sum of 500*l.*, which he stands indebted to me on his bond; and I direct said bond to be delivered up to him and cancelled": —Held, merely a personal bequest to A., and lapses by his death in lifetime of testator; therefore surviving obligors and representatives of A. are not released from bond. Izon v. Butler, 2 Price, 34.

Plaintiff's grandmother by her will forgave her son-in-law C. a debt of 500*l.*, due to her on bond, which she desired her executors to deliver up to be cancelled. The legatee died in the life of the testatrix:—Held, that plaintiff, as representative of C., should have the benefit of the discharge of this debt, and decreed that the bond should be delivered up to be cancelled. Sibthorp v. Moxon, 3 Atk. 581. And see S. C., 1 Ves. Sen. 49.

Gift over after Absolute Interest—Death of First Donee.]—If a testator possessed of a specific chattel, or chattel real, bequeath it to A. and the heirs of his body, and in default of such issue to B., the death of A. in the testator's lifetime without issue does not enable B., though surviving the testator, to take under the will, but causes a lapse. Harris v. Davis, 1 Coll. C. C. 416; 9 Jur. 269.

Devise of 100*l.* and of 50*l.* per annum to A. and his heirs, and if A. die without heirs then to a charity; A. dies without issue, living the testator: the will void as to the whole, and the charity cannot take. Att.-Gen. v. Gill, 2 P. Wms. 369.

A legacy to the testator's daughter, with a gift over, in the event of her dying unmarried, to such of the testator's other children as she should appoint, and in default of appointment to and amongst his other children equally, is not an absolute gift, and does not lapse by the death of the daughter unmarried in the lifetime of the testator; and consequently, the power of appointment not having been exercised, one of the testator's other children was held to be entitled to a distributive share of his sister's legacy, with interest in the absence of laches on his part, from the death of the testator in 1847, according to the express trust in the will. Kellett v. Kellett, Ir. R. 5 Eq. 298.

A testator gave all his residuary estate to his wife, her heirs, executors, and administrators; but "if she should die intestate," then over. The wife died in the testator's lifetime:—Held, that the gift over was inoperative, and the bequest lapsed. Hughes v. Ellis, 20 Beav. 193; 24 L. J., Ch. 351; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 316; 3 W. R. 310. And see Andrew v. Andrew, 1 Coll. C. C. 690.

A testator gave and devised to his brother all his real and personal estate and effects whatsoever and wheresoever, with full power to dispose thereof by deed or will, and then provided that if his brother should not dispose thereof the real estate should go to H. for life, with numerous limitations over. He then bequeathed his furniture, &c., to executors, as heirlooms, and gave all the residue of his estate and effects to the executors upon trust, after the decease of the survivor of his brother and himself, to sell and dispose thereof, and invest in other real estates to be settled to the same uses as he had declared concerning the real estates devised by his will, with powers of investment in the meantime. The brother died before the testator. On the death of the testator, in 1803, H. entered into possession, and held the estates till his death in 1869. On the death of H. the persons entitled under his will took possession of the property, which was then claimed by the persons entitled under the limitations in the will of the original testator:—Held, that though the first clause in the will amounted to an absolute gift, the whole will shewed a clear intention to give the testator's brother an estate for life only with a power of appointment, and as that power of appointment had not been exercised, the limitations over took effect. Stringer, In re, Shaw v. Ford, 46 L. J., Ch. 633; 6 Ch. D. 1; 37 L. T. 233; 25 W. R. 815.

Lapse of Gift in Trust—Effect on Interest of Beneficiary.] — Trust legacy cannot lapse by death of trustee. Moggridge v. Thackwell, 3 Bro. C. C. 517. Affirmed 13 Ves. 416; 6 R. R. 76.

Estate devised to a body corporate, which cannot take by the Statute of Mortmain, in trust to sell and apply the proceeds for persons competent to take; though the devise of the legal estate is void in law, yet the trust shall not be defeated. The heir-at-law therefore considered as a trustee for the purpose. Sonley v. Clockmakers' Co., 1 Bro. C. C. 81.

Devise to trustees for a charity; the trustees die in the testator's lifetime. This subsists in equity, though lapsed at law. Att.-Gen. v. Hickman, W. Kel. 4.

—— Of Gift subject to Charge—Effect on Chargee.]—As long as the fund itself exists upon which a legacy is charged, though it devolve either upon the heir or the executor, yet they take it, subject to the charge. Hills v. Wirley, 2 Atk. 605.

A testator bequeathed leaseholds, subject to the payment thereout of an annuity to A. He afterwards assigned the leaseholds on other trusts, and reserved a power to appoint a like annuity to A. Subsequently he confirmed his will, but he did not, in terms, execute his power:—Held, that the annuity failed. Cowper v. Mantell, 22 Beav. 223.

The testator directed the share of one of the nephews to be subject to the payment of 100*l.* to W. The share did not amount to 100*l.*:—Held, that W. took the share, so far as it went, towards the 100*l.* Arrowsmith, In re, 2 De G. F. & J. 474; 30 L. J., Ch. 148; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 9; 9 W. R. 258.

—— Of Gift subject to Condition—Effect on Persons taking Benefit of Condition.] — E. devises lands to his second son T., upon condition that T. or his heirs should pay to T.'s children 90*l.*, to be equally divided among them, and on default of payment a clause of entry or distress. T. died in the testator's lifetime; the son of the eldest son of the testator entered on the lands as heir-at-law, and sold them. The legacy to the children of T., the testator's second son, is a continuing charge on the land in the hands of the purchaser, and they are entitled to be satisfied for the same, with interest. Wigg v. Wigg, 1 Atk. 382.

A. devises lands to B., on condition to pay a sum of money, and no clause of entry. The legatee at law has no lien on the lands, but the heir of the testator shall enter for breach of condition, and yet in this court is but trustee for the legatee. Id. 383.

A wife having power to appoint 4,000*l.* to any of her kin, and for want of appointment to go according to the statute, appoints it by will to her nephew, "upon condition" that he paid his mother an annuity of 100*l.* She then bequeathed to her niece, S., all the real and residue of what she had power to dispose of. The nephew dying in her lifetime, the appointment as to him was void; but not so as to the annuitant; and the remainder was held to pass by the above residuary bequest. Oke v. Heath, 1 Ves. Sen. 135.

Testator devised land at M. to his son R. in fee, on the express condition that, within three months after testator's death, he should relinquish the debt owing to him from the testator, and deliver the promissory notes therefor to the executor to be cancelled. The testator devised land at S. to trustees upon trust for sale (with power to postpone the sale, the unsold portion being transmissible as personalty), to invest the net proceeds (after payment of the deficiency of his residuary personalty to pay debts), and pay the income to the widow, and after her death pay the capital to four grandchildren in equal shares. The testator devised his residuary realty to his sons R. and J. in equal shares in common. He also bequeathed his residuary personalty upon trust therewith to pay his debts (except a mortgage debt and the debts due to his sons), and to retain the surplus for the benefit of R. and J. equally; but in case the residuary personalty was insufficient to pay his debts (except as aforesaid), the deficiency was to be paid out of the realty directed to be sold. By a codicil the testator revoked the gift of one of the fourth shares in the proceeds of the S. estate, and gave such proceeds, subject to the widow's life interest and such deficiency of personalty, to pay debts, as to 900*l.* for certain persons, and he declared that the residue of clear proceeds should form part of the residuary personalty. R. died before the testator, without issue:—Held, that although the devise of the M. estate to R. had lapsed, that estate, and not the residuary personalty, must bear the debt owing to R. Although a testator makes it a condition of a devise that the devisee should do something, the devisee by refusing to perform the condition, or dying before it is to be performed, cannot deprive the person who is to have the benefit of the condition from such benefit; and there is no distinction between a condition to pay a sum or an annuity, or to give a valuable thing to a legatee, and a condition that the personal estate shall be exonerated from a debt. Kirk, In re, Kirk v. Kirk, 21 Ch. D. 431; 47 L. T. 36; 31 W. R. 94.

—— Of Prior Gift—Effect on Executory Gift Over.] — See VESTED CONTINGENT AND FUTURE INTERESTS.

b. Interests Undisposed of.

What is undisposed of—Gift on Condition unperformed.]—Devise on condition to pay 500*l.* in six months, upon trust to pay the interest to the devisor's wife for life, and after her death the principal, according to her appointment in writing, with witnesses, whether sole or married, provided she shall release her dower within six months, and in case of her marriage without consent of the trustees, one moiety to go over. The wife, who took other interests under the will, died within the six months, and not having married nor released dower, the 500*l.* did not vest in her. Croft v. Slee, 4 Ves. 60.

—— Realty not included under "any Residue."]—Devise of real estate to W. R. W. and his heirs, upon trust to receive the rents and profits, and apply same in discharge of the testator's debts and legacies, and after payment thereof to convey a portion of said real estate to testator's brother, R. W., for his life, and the residue thereof and the part so devised to R. W., after his decease, to such of the sons of W. R. W. as should at his decease be his second son for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail male, with remainder to the third and fourth, and every other son of W. R. W. successively in strict settlement. The will concluded thus: "And as to all my personal estate, &c., subject, however, to my debts and legacies heretofore bequeathed, I give and bequeath same to my relative W. R. W., whom I appoint executor of this my will, and also in case of any residue I appoint him my residuary legatee." The debts and legacies having been all paid, and R. W. having died in the lifetime of the trustee, W. R. W.:—Held, that the residuary clause was confined to the personal estate, and that under it these rents and profits did not pass to W. R. W. for his life. Wills v. Wills, 1 Dr. & War. 439.

Heir, Title of.]—In case of the lapse of a real estate the heir takes. Cambridge v. Rous, 8 Ves. 25.

W. H. by will devised the perpetual advowson of S. to W. C., upon trust to present his son to the living; and that, if the church shall next after his death be full of an incumbent, then to sell the perpetuity, and to apply the profit arising from the sale first to the payment of debts, and then to distribute the surplus in thirds to his daughters. The trustees presented the son, who died before the advowson was sold, leaving an infant daughter, who brought her bill, insisting upon a resulting trust in the advowson to her, as heiress-in-law, after debts and legacies paid:—Held, that the whole legal estate being devised away, there could be no resulting trust for the heir. At common law, where an estate is devised to trustees and their heirs, the whole is gone from the heir; but in equity there may be a beneficial interest remaining to the heir upon the trust. It is a certain rule in equity, that where an estate is charged with an incumbrance for payment of debts, and after such payment the surplus is given over, the whole property vests in the residuary legatee. Hawkins v. Chappel, 1 Atk. 621.

A testator died in 1821, having devised and bequeathed his real and personal estates to trustees upon certain trusts. In 1826 a bill was filed for the execution of the trust as to the personal estate. In 1847 a supplemental bill was filed, raising questions on the will as to the real estate, in which the heir, who was then unknown, was interested; and in 1849 another supplemental bill was filed to bring the heir, who was then ascertained, before the court:—Held, that the heir was barred, by lapse of time, from claiming the real estate adversely to the trustees; but that he was not barred from claiming part of the real estate as being, in the events that had happened, undisposed of and held by the trustees in trust for him. Simmons v. Rudall, 1 Sim. (N.S.) 115; 15 Jur. 162.

—— Where Gift in Trust, but no Trust declared.]—Devise to trustees for ninety-nine years upon the trusts hereinafter expressed, and from and after the expiration or other sooner determination of the said term in strict settlement. The term, no trust being declared, decreed to attend the inheritance, according to the limitations of the will, and no resulting trust for the heir upon apparent intention to devise immediate estates, subject to the term, not future estates, expectant on its determination. Sidney v. Shelley or Miller, 19 Ves. 352; Coop. 206; 14 R. R. 247.

Testator devised all his freehold estates to his most dutiful and respectful nephew, E. E., "upon the trusts and for the uses following"; but did not declare any use or trust except as to one of his estates:—Held, from the context of the will and a codicil thereto, that there was no resulting trust in favour of his son and heir as to any part of his estates. Hughes v. Evans, 13 Sim. 496; 7 Jur. 523.

—— Attempts to Exclude.]—A testator gave his real and personal estate to trustees for his sister. By a codicil he gave a legacy to his eldest nephew, whom he called his heir-at-law; and he directed that the codicil should not give to his trustees, for the benefit of his sister, any after-acquired freeholds or copyholds; but that the same as to freeholds should descend to his heir-at-law, and as to customary estates to his customary heir. At his death his sister was his heiress-at-law and customary heir:—Held, that she was not excluded from taking by descent the after-acquired copyholds. Gould v. Gould, 32 Beav. 391.

A bare intention, or even negative words, will not exclude an heir-at-law from insisting on a resulting trust; but a man, by empowering other persons to dispose of his estate, disinherits his heir as much as by his own actual disposition; therefore where a testator appoints his executor to sell his estate it is turned into personal assets, and leaves no resulting trust for the heir; but if the testator says, "I will my heir shall sell the land," he is not obliged to sell it. Cook v. Duckenfield, 2 Atk. 566, 568.

Upon a devise of personal and real estate for sale, to be held by the trustees as a fund of personal estate only, and no part by reason of any event to lapse or result for the benefit of the heir-at-law; and the testatrix, after bequeathing certain legacies, directed the residue of her estate to be paid and applied as she should thereafter appoint, and she made no appointment:—Held, that the heir was entitled to the proceeds of the real estate undisposed of by the will. Fitch v. Weber, 6 Hare, 145; 17 L. J., Ch. 361; 12 Jur. 645.

Next of Kin—Title of.]—The legal interest in a lapsed legacy is in the executor; but the beneficial is in the next of kin of the testator. As an heir does not take real estate by the intention of his ancestor, but by act of law, so, with regard to the personal, the next of kin take in succession ab intestato, and not by the intention of the testator. Owen v. Owen, 1 Atk. 496.

A legacy to the next of kin does not exclude him from taking the residue. Att.-Gen. v. Parkin, Ambl. 568.

The next of kin of a party who died leaving a codicil, but no will, allowed to take the residue, upon giving recognisances to refund in case a will should be found. Bakewell v. Tagart, 3 Y. & C. 173; 2 Jur. 699.

Residuary bequest cancelled by striking through with a pencil all the general description, with notes in pencil in the margin, indicating alteration, and a different disposition of certain articles, a resulting trust for the next of kin. Mence v. Mence, 18 Ves. 348.

The next of kin stands as to personalty in the same position as the heir-at-law as to realty, and the person claiming against him must make out his title. Underwood v. Wing, 4 De G. M. & G. 633; 24 L. J., Ch. 293; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 169; 3 W. R. 228.

Testator gave a sum of money to trustees, in trust only and for the use and benefit of his adopted daughter, and which he desired might be paid to her and to be settled on her during her life in case of her marriage, or in case she did not marry then the interest of the money, being vested in government securities, to be paid to her, and in the event of her not marrying or dying then the money to go to his nephews. The daughter married and shortly afterwards died without issue:—Held, that her husband, who had taken out administration to her, and not the testator's nephews, was entitled to the fund. Hawkins v. Hawkins, 7 Sim. 173.

A testator directed his trustees to sell his leaseholds, and stand possessed of the moneys to arise therefrom as part of his personal estate.

He gave the residue of his personal estate to trustees, and directed them to sell his real estate and to stand possessed of the produce of the sales of the real estate, and of his leasehold estate, and of his residuary personal estate, upon the trusts thereinafter declared. As to one equal fourth part thereof, in trust for A.; as to one other equal fourth part thereof, in trust for B. and her children; as to one other equal fourth part of the residue of the moneys to arise from the sale of his real estate, upon trust for C. and her children; and as to the remaining equal fourth part of the residue of the moneys to arise from the sale of his real estate, upon trust for D. and his children. He then gave power of maintenance and advancement for the children, in which no distinction was made between the different fourth parts:—Held, that there was intestacy as to two fourth parts of the leaseholds and personal estate. Seymour, In re, 14 Jur. 585.

A testator made a general bequest to two persons, and in case of their decease to their executors and administrators. Both the legatees died in the testator's lifetime, one of them having bequeathed to the testator the residue of her property, which included the share of the testator's property which passed to her representative:—Held, that this share was not to be treated as forming part of the testator's estate, and so distributed again under his will, but went to his next-of-kin as undisposed of. Valdez' Trusts, In re, 58 L. J., Ch. 861; 40 Ch. D. 159; 60 L. T. 42; 37 W. R. 162.

—— Attempts to Exclude.]—Where there is no gift of the undisposed-of residue, a testator cannot by negative words exclude one of his next of kin from participating in it. Johnson v. Johnson, 4 Beav. 318.

Where a will declared that "testator's widow and her child shall be cut off from all part of my property," but contained no disposition of the property, it was treated as an intestacy, and the widow and child held entitled to a share of the undisposed-of residue. Ib.

Testator gave real and personal estate to one daughter, in satisfaction of her child's part of whatsoever more she might have expected from him or out of his personal estate; he also gave a provision to his wife in full of her dower, thirds, or other claim at law or in equity, or by any local custom, to any other part of his real or personal estate; and residue to his other daughter. Upon her death in his life, he by codicil gave it according to the appointment of his wife. The power not being duly executed, the residue goes according to the statute as undisposed of, and the widow and daughter are not barred. Pickering v. Stamford (Lord), 3 Ves. 355. Affirmed id. 492. And see 2 Ves. 272, 581.

A. devises to B. and C., his wife's children, as he called them (not owning them to be his), ten shillings apiece, and no more, and gave the children that he owned considerable legacies. B. and C. shall come in for a share of the undisposed surplus, for the words of exclusion must be taken strictly. Vachell v. *Jefferey*s, Pre. Ch. 170. S. C., nom. Vachell v. Breton, 5 Bro. P. C. 51.

A testator gave his residuary real and personal estate to trustees for his five sons as tenants in common, and by a codicil revoked and made void all the trusts in his will contained concerning his residuary estate, so far as the same trusts related to his son R., or his interest therein, and in lieu gave a pecuniary legacy upon trust for R. his wife and children; and if R. should have no children, he directed that the legacy should sink into the residuary estate, but so that R. or his representatives should not take any share or interest therein:—Held, that the testator died intestate as to the trusts of one-fifth share of his residuary estate, and that the legacy was payable out of the residuary estate and out of the share which was undisposed of. Sykes v. Sykes, 37 L. J., Ch. 367; L. R. 3 Ch. 301; 16 W. R. 545.

A testator ordered that his real and personal property should be divided into as many equal parts as he should have children living at the date of his decease, and that one such part should be given to or held for each of such children. Afterwards he made a codicil revoking and annulling every bequest and provision in his said will in favour of his daughter E.:—Held, that there was no class, and consequently that there was an intestacy as to the share of E., so that E. herself, who, with three other children, survived the testator, was entitled as one of the next of kin to take a fourth part or share of the property originally bequeathed to her. Ramsay v. Shelmerdine, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 903; 13 L. T. 393; 14 W. R. 46.

A testator by his will gave an annuity of 1,200*l.* to his wife, and after her decease he "directed that the said sum of 1,200*l.* per annum so to be paid should go to and be equally divided amongst all and every his children who should be then living, share and share alike." And the testator declared that the said annuity so given as aforesaid to his wife was by him "meant and intended to be and should by his said wife be accepted and taken in full and entire lieu, bar, recompense, discharge, and satisfaction of and from all and all manner of claims and demands whatsoever which she at any time might or could have, or which, without provision and declaration, she could or might have at the time of my decease, of, in, to, or out of any part or parts of any real or personal estate under or by virtue of any settlement or other writing by him at any time made upon or in favour of his said wife, or as for or on account of any dower or thirds which she, my said wife, might, could, or would in any manner have claim, challenge, or demand, out of or upon, or from or in respect of, any part of his estate or effects in any manner howsoever." The testator died, leaving a wife and several children; and in the events that happened there was an intestacy as to a part of his personal property:—Held, first, that the testator's widow was excluded by the terms of the will from a distributive share of the property so undisposed of; secondly, that the annuity of 1,200*l.* was not perpetual, but that on the death of such child who survived the widow his share should sink into the residue. Lett v. Randall, 2 De G. F. & J. 388; 30 L. J., Ch. 110; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1359; 3 L. T. 455; 9 W. R. 130. Questioned in Tavernor v. Grindley, 32 L. T. 424.

Testator, after stating that it was his will that neither L. S. nor her children should take any benefit from his property other than what was given to her or them; and that it was not his intention that G. S., or any person claiming under him, should partake of any share in the distribution of his personal estate except what was given to him or them, said he considered that the provision which he had made for his brother and two sisters was adequate for their support, and therefore it was his intention that they should not, nor should any of them, take any benefit from his property except what was given for them; and he declared that L. S., G. S., and his brother and two sisters should not be entitled to take any share of his personal estate of which he might happen to die intestate, but should be wholly excluded therefrom in the same manner as if they had all died in his lifetime. There was an intestacy as to residue:—Held, that the next of kin other than the five persons named who were excluded were entitled. Bund v. Green, 12 Ch. D. 819.

A testator, who died in 1889, by his will, dated in 1887, gave various pecuniary bequests to individuals and charitable institutions, and ended his will thus: "And now revoking and hereby making utterly and for ever void and powerless any and all wills by me at any time heretofore by me made, and hereby utterly and for ever excluding any and all relatives except my two dear nieces aforesaid . . . from any and all advantages or benefit in this my last will and testament, I hereby lastly nominate, constitute and appoint my said two dear nieces," and certain other persons executrixes and executors of his will. The two nieces of the testator named in his will were not his only next of kin, and the question therefore arose, who were entitled to the residue of the testator's estate, of which no disposition was contained in the will:—Held, that the residue of the testator's estate was undisposed of and devolved upon his statutory next of kin without any person of that class being excluded. Holmes, In re, Holmes v. Holmes, 62 L. T. 383.

Trustee, Title of—Where Failure to Declare the Trust.]—If A. gives 40*l.* to S., to be disposed of as A. by private note should acquaint him, and A. dies without making any appointment, this is a good bequest to S. Martin v. Clerk, 2 Ch. Cas. 198. S. P., Lambert v. Bainton, 1 Ch. Cas. 199.

A testator bequeathed certain parts of his personal estate to A., B., and C., as joint tenants upon trust, and he also gave, devised, and bequeathed his residuary real and personal estate to the same three persons as tenants in common, "subject, however, to such disposition, limitation, or appointment thereof as he might, by any deed or writing duly executed, thereafter direct, limit, or appoint." He made no such disposition, limitation, or appointment before his death:—Held, that A., B., and C. took the residuary real and personal estate equally between them. Fenton v. Hawkins, 4 L. T. 737; 9 W. R. 300.

A testator being possessed of real estates in England and Canada, by his will, made in England in 1801, devised all his estate to trustees, upon trust to sell, and to divide the net proceeds between his brothers and sisters and their children. In 1804 the testator went to Canada, and by a codicil made there in that year he devised and bequeathed all his real and personal estate in Canada to other trustees resident there, upon trust to convert the same, and out of the proceeds to pay his debts in Canada, and legacies, and to remit the surplus to one of the trustees named in his will, to whom the testator gave all the residue of his estate and effects, in Canada or in Great Britain, not otherwise disposed of by that codicil, or by his will then in England, to hold to him, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns for ever; and the testator thereby revoked everything contained in his will which might be construed to be contrary to the above disposition of his said estates:—Held, that this devisee took the surplus proceeds of the sale of the property in Canada beneficially. Schofield v. Cahuac, 15 Jur. 1069.

Testator gave real estates to be sold, and the produce to be considered as part of his personal estate, and thereout and out of his personal estate gave legacies to his next of kin, heir, and others. He gave other estates to be sold, and the produce to be considered from thenceforth as other part of his said personal estate, and to be disposed of in manner following. He then gave legacies and some estates specifically, and other legacies out of his said trust moneys and personal estate, and gave his executor 1,000*l.* to be disposed of according to any instructions he might leave in writing, and gave all the residue of his goods and chattels, personal estate and effects whatsoever, subject to debts, legacies, &c. No instructions being found, the heir is entitled to the 1,000*l.* Collins v. Wakeman, 2 Ves. 683.

A testator made a general devise of all his property to A. upon trust, for purposes or legacies he should make in any codicil he might add to his will; and afterwards made a codicil which was unattested:—Held, that A. was not entitled in his own right to the property, but was a trustee for the heir-at-law of the testator. Davall v. New River Co., 18 L. J., Ch. 299; 13 Jur. 761.

—— Where Trust too Indefinite.]—If a testator means to create a trust, and the trust be ineffectually created or fails, the next of kin take. Ommanney v. Butcher, Turn. & R. 270; 24 R. R. 42.

Residue to trustees on trust for purposes too general for court to execute. Next of kin shall take. Vezey v. Jamson, 1 Sim. & S. 69.

Where the trust is too vague for the court to execute, the next of kin are entitled. A testatrix bequeaths the residue of her property to her executors upon trust, to dispose of the same at such time and for such purposes as they should think fit, it being her intention that the distribution thereof should be left entirely to their discretion:—Held, that the executors were trustees of the residue of the property for the next of kin of the testatrix. Fowler v. Garlike, 1 Russ. & M. 232; 8 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 66.

If trust is mentioned, but is not expressed, or is ineffectually created or fails, the next of kin are entitled; but if the person taking has a discretion whether to make the application or not, it is an absolute gift and not a trust. Morice v. Durham (Bishop), 10 Ves. 535; 7 R. R. 232.

Devise and bequest to trustees of freehold, leasehold, copyhold, and personalty upon trusts, which were declared, of the freehold, leasehold, and personalty only:—Held, that the cestui que trust was not interested in the copyholds which descended to the customary heir. Jackson v. Noble, 2 Keen, 590; 7 L. J., Ch. 133; 2 Jur. 251.

An aunt gave all her personal estate to trustees upon trust, after payment of her funeral and testamentary expenses, debts, and legacies, to hold the residue "in trust for such of my nieces A. and B. as shall be living at my death, my desire being that they shall distribute such residue as they think will be most agreeable to my wishes." The nieces both survived the testatrix:—Held, that they took the residue for their own benefit. Stead v. Mellor, 46 L. J., Ch. 880; 5 Ch. D. 225; 36 L. T. 498; 25 W. R. 508.

It is not necessary to exclude the legatee from a beneficial interest that there should be a valid or effectual trust; it is only necessary that it should clearly appear that a trust was intended. Briggs v. Penny, 3 Mac. & G. 546; 21 L. J., Ch. 265; 16 Jur. 93. Affirming 3 De G. & Sm. 525. And see Ellis v. Selby, 1 Myl. & Cr. 286; 5 L. J., Ch. 214. Affirming 7 Sim. 352; and Stubbs v. Sargon, 2 Keen, 255. Affirmed 3 Myl. & Cr. 507; 7 L. J., Ch. 95; 2 Jur. 150.

The testatrix, by her will, after giving, among other legacies, a sum of 3,000*l.* to S. P., and a like sum of 3,000*l.* in addition for the trouble she would have in acting as executrix, bequeathed all her residuary personal estate and effects unto the said S. P., "well knowing that she will make a good use and dispose of it in a manner in accordance with my views and wishes." The testatrix appointed S. P. sole executrix of her will:—Held, that S. P. did not take the residue for her own benefit, but that the words of the bequest created a trust. Ib.

—— Title to Land where no Heir or Cestui que Trust.]—A., being seised in fee ex parte paternâ, conveys to trustees in trust for herself, her heirs and assigns, to the intent that she should appoint, &c., and for no other use, intent, or purpose whatsoever. A. dying without appointment, and without heirs ex parte paternâ:—Held, per Henley, Custos Sigilli, and Clarke, Master of Rolls, the first, that the maternal heir was not entitled; secondly, there being a terre-tenant, the Crown, claiming by escheat, has not a title by subpœna to compel a conveyance from the trustee, the trust being absolutely determined; no opinion was given on the right of the trustee. Per Mansfield, Chief Justice, the heir ex parte maternâ was not entitled; secondly, that from the analogy between trusts and legal estates the Crown was entitled by escheat, but that if the conveyance had barred the Crown of its right, as between the maternal heir and the trustee, the former was entitled. Burgess v. Wheate, 1 Eden, 177; 1 W. Bl. 121.

Devise of copyhold (duly surrendered) to A. and his heirs, in trust for B. and his heirs; upon the death of B. without heirs, the heir of the trustee has no equity to compel the lord to admit him, and his bill was dismissed without costs. Williams v. Lonsdale (Lord), 3 Ves. 752; 4 R. R. 149.

In Att.-Gen. v. Sands (Hardr. 488; 2 Freem. 129; 3 Ch. R. 33) it was held that the trust of a term attending on the inheritance was not forfeited by the felony of cestui que trust, because it was no more than an accessory to the inheritance, which was not forfeited. It is not denied, however, that where a term is attending on the inheritance, and the king extends the inheritance, he shall have a right to the term. Nicholls v. How, 2 Vern. 389.

Trustee not having the legal estate, cannot hold against the Crown, claiming by escheat. Walker v. Denne, 2 Ves. 170; 2 R. R. 185.

A testatrix devised real estate to her trustee and his heirs, in trust out of the rents to maintain her son William until he attained twenty-one, "and when and as soon as" he should attain twenty-one, she devised to him in fee. But in case he should die before attaining twenty-one, to his children, if any; or if none then to the defendant. The son did not attain twenty-one, and died without issue in the lifetime of the testatrix. There being no heir or next of kin of the testatrix:—Held, that the trustee was entitled to hold the real estate beneficially. Cox v. Parker, 22 Beav. 168; 25 L. J., Ch. 873; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 842; 4 W. R. 453.

A., by will in 1837, bequeathed the residue of her real and personal property to trustees, "their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns," to sell and convert such parts of her estate as should not consist of money or stock in the public funds, and to stand possessed thereof, to pay thereout two life annuities, and subject thereto upon such trusts as she should thereafter by any codicil or codicils direct. The testatrix died without making any further bequest. By an order in an administration suit the trustees were declared entitled to the residue of the real estate, and the Crown to the personalty. One of the trustees and an annuitant had since died. A petition was presented by the surviving trustees for the payment of the sum arising from the real estate which had been set apart to answer the annuity:—Held, that the trustees took as joint tenants for their own benefit, and that the surviving tenants were therefore entitled. Taylor v. Haygarth, 14 Sim. 8; 6 L. T. 95.

A trustee under a deed held freehold premises in trust for L. S., her heirs and assigns, for her and their own use and benefit. L. S. by her will devised these premises among others to trustees, in trust to sell, and out of the proceeds to pay debts and legacies, the legacies being specified in a certain paper marked A. This paper not being forthcoming, the trustee of the deed, offering to pay the debts, claimed to be entitled to retain the trust premises for his own benefit. On a bill filed, however, by the trustees of the will, a conveyance to them was directed, the Lord Chancellor holding that the will gave them a title as against the trustee of the deed, who had nothing to do with the question how the premises would be disposed of in consequence of the trustees of the will not being able to carry the trusts into full effect. Onslow v. Wallis, 1 Mac. & G. 506; 1 Hall & Tw. 513; 19 L. J., Ch. 27; 13 Jur. 1085. Affirming 16 Sim. 485.

Title to Personalty where no Next of Kin.]—See CROWN.

Gift which fails—Principles determining who takes.] — Wherever land, &c., which would descend to heir-at-law is devised for purposes which law will not suffer to take effect, the heir-at-law shall have the benefit of the interest so devised as undisposed of, whether testator intended he should have it or not. Testator, limiting a remainder to his right heirs, shewed his intention that, failing the devise, the heir should take. Heir-at-law can only be disinherited by express words or necessary implication. Where a devise is made subject to be reduced to a certain extent on the happening of a given event, that is the condition or ground of reduction, and if the event never happens, the ground of reduction is gone, and the devise remains entire and absolute. Tregonwell v. Sydenham, 3 Dow, 194.

Where a real estate is directed to be sold, and a part of the produce is to be applied to a purpose which fails, and the residue of the produce is given over, the heir and not the residuary devisee will take the sum intended for that particular purpose. Where the real estate is not directed to be sold, and the residuary gift is not of the produce, but of the corpus of the estate, then if a gift intended for a particular purpose, which fails, is to be considered as an exception from the residuary gift, the heir will take. If it is to be considered as a charge from the devised estate, the residuary devisee will be entitled to the benefit of the failure. Cooke v. Stationers' Co., 3 Myl. & K. 262.

Money charged upon a real estate for a charity, void by the Statute of Mortmain, shall sink in favour of the specific devisee; not go to the heir-at-law or residuary legatee. Secus, when it is an exception out of the devise. Wright v. Roe, 1 Bro. C. C. 61. And see Bland v. Wilkins, cited id. in notes.

—— Where Charge for Purpose which Fails.]—Bequest to executors of a sum of money, "to be chargeable and paid as thereinafter mentioned," upon trust for the testator's wife for life, remainder for his children; then a gift of freehold and leasehold property to his nephew, subject to the payment of the said sum, and to the testator's debts, with a residuary devise and bequest to the wife absolutely:—Held, as between the testator's widow and his nephew, that the sum was a charge on the gift to the nephew, and not an exception out of the gift; and the testator never having had any child, the sum, subject to the widow's life interest, belonged to the nephew, the principle being, that where there is a gift by will of any property, whether real or personal, subject to a particular charge, if any of the purposes of the charge fail before all are satisfied, the donee takes the property, relieved from the residue of the burthen which, in the events that have happened, the testator no longer intended him to bear. Tucker v. Kayess, 4 K. & J. 339.

Devise of a specified real estate to trustees, upon trust, in the first place, to raise, either by sale or otherwise, out of such estate, within one year next after his decease, the sum of 2,000*l.*, and invest the same on good security, and pay and apply the same in manner thereinafter directed; also on trust to permit the testator's son P. to enjoy the said real estate (after raising as aforesaid) for life, and then upon certain trusts for his children; and in case he should happen to die without leaving issue, then the testator devised the said estate to his sons S. and T., their heirs and assigns, as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants. The testator then gave 1,000*l.* part of the 2,000*l.* directed to be raised as aforesaid, upon trust to pay the interest thereof to his daughter M. for life, and after her decease upon trust to divide the said sum of 1,000*l.* amongst her children equally; and the testator gave the other moiety of the said sum of 2,000*l.* upon similar trusts for the benefit of his daughter E. C. and her children. Finally, the testator gave all his residuary real and personal estate to his sons S. & T., their heirs and assigns for ever. The testator's three sons all survived him, and S. and T. then died, without having disposed of their interest in the estate, out of which the 2,000*l.* was to be raised, or of their interest (if any) in such sum of 2,000*l.* After the death of P. the son of the testator who survived his brothers, and not till then, the 2,000*l.* was raised for the purposes of the trusts declared thereof in the testator's will; and subsequently to that E. C. died without having had a child:—Held, upon the true construction of the will, and in the events which had happened, first, that the 2,000*l.* directed to be raised by the testator's will was a charge upon the estate out of which it was to be raised, and not an exception out of the devise of such estate. Secondly, that the 1,000*l.* part thereof, the trusts whereof had partially failed, sank into the said estate as realty, for the benefit of the devisees thereof, and belonged to the devisee in trust, under the will of P., the son of the testator, upon whom such estate had descended as heir-at-law of his brothers S. and T. Cooper's Trusts, In re, 4 De G. M. & G. 757; 2 Eq. R. 65; 23 L. J., Ch. 25; 17 Jur. 1087; 2 W. R. 601—L.JJ.

Devise of lands subject to and charged with legacies in mortmain the legacies sink for benefit of devisee. Jackson v. Hurlock, Ambl. 487; Eden, 263.

Trust of an annuity for a charity charged upon a devised estate being void, under the Act 9 Geo. 2, c. 36, does not pass by a residuary disposition, but sinks for the benefit of specific devisees. Baker v. Hall, 12 Ves. 497; 8 R. R. 366.

Where a testator directs his real and personal estate to be sold, and his debts and legacies to be thereout paid, including certain charitable legacies, and gives the residue of the mixed fund to A. and B., the failure of the charitable legacies, as far as they would affect the real estate, will enure to the benefit of A. and B. Green v. Jackson, 5 Russ. 35; 29 R. R. 12.

If an estate is devised charged with legacies which fail, the devisee, not the heir, shall have the benefit of it. Kennell v. Abbott, 4 Ves. 811; 4 R. R. 351.

A testator, owing his sister 10,000*l.* on mortgage and 3,788*l.* on a promissory note, and having power of appointment by deed or will under her will, gives an estate (not in mortgage) to W. H. C., subject to a charge of 7,000*l.*, which he directed his executors to raise by mortgage or sale of part thereof, such sum to be appropriated—1,000*l.* to his mother, 1,000*l.* to his sister, and 1,000*l.* to his uncle's children, and the remaining 4,000*l.* to be appropriated towards payment of the debt due on the note; and there was a declaration that the mortgages should be employed in paying his debts remaining after the appropriation of the 4,000*l.* W. H. C.'s sister died before the testator; and on the question whether her legacy lapsed for the benefit of W. H. C.:—Held, that it did; that there was a devise of the whole estate to W. H. C. subject to the charge, and that the 4,000*l.* was subject to the payment of debts generally. Sutcliffe v. Crosse, 3 Drew. 135; 3 W. R. 265.

Land was devised subject to a charge of a certain sum. The will contained no other reference to the charge, and no specific disposition of it:—Held, that the charge sank in the estate for the benefit of the devisee. Heptinstall v. Gott, 2 J. & H. 449; 31 L. J., Ch. 776; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1091; 7 L. T. 92; 10 W. R. 708.

—— Where Exception out of the Devise.]—If a testator devise land for purposes which are in part illegal, or which partially fail, or which require part only of the land devised, the heir takes the part which fails, or is not required for the purposes of the will; and so conversely in the case of personal estate, the next of kin are entitled. A testator directed his executors immediately to lay out 30,000*l.* in the purchase of an estate in his name, the income of which he settled to one for life, with remainder to others in tail, with remainder to a charity; the money was not actually laid out previous to the estate for life and the estates tail being spent. The gift of the charity failing by reason of the Mortmain Act, and the estates tail not having been barred:—Held, that the next of kin, and not the heir-at-law, were entitled to the 30,000*l.* Cogan v. Stephens, 5 L. J., Ch. 17.

A. and B. are made executors, and land devised to C., paying 1,000*l.* to executors, the residue to a charity. This 1,000*l.* is a charge on the real estate, which, by the Mortmain Act, is not well disposed of, and results to the heir. This devise held a sale of the land for 1,000*l.*, and the bequest of this 1,000*l.* held intended to the executors as such, for the purpose of the will, or as assets for debt, and not otherwise; so that, if good, it would not have lapsed by their deaths. Arnold v. Chapman, 1 Ves. Sen. 108.

If a child who has a legacy payable out of land dies before the contingency happens, it goes to the heir; à fortiori where it is given to a stranger. Att.-Gen. v. Milner, 3 Atk. 114.

A. makes a lease to B. (his wife's nephew) for twenty-one years, for payment of his debts and legacies, and at the same time by will, taking notice of the said lease, devises the lands, after the expiration of the said lease, to C., his nephew and heir, and makes B. executor. A. lives twelve years, and pays all his debts himself, and the personal estate was sufficient for the legacies. C. brings his bill to have the lease delivered up, the trusts being performed; but dismissed, the reversion only after the expiration of the term being devised to him. Bushnell v. Parsons, Pre. Ch. 218.

A. gives 800*l.* to his executors on trust to pay annuities to B. and C. for their lives exceeding the interest of the 800*l.*, and gives the surplus to D. and E. The annuitants being dead, the 800*l.* shall go to the residuary legatee, and not to the executors. Cock v. Burrish, 1 Vern. 425.

Where devisor directs that after payment of 800*l.* to charity, to be raised by sale of real estate, the residue thereof should go to a legatee. Legacy to charity being void, 800*l.* goes to heir, and not to the legatee. Costs to be borne equally by each party. Jones v. Mitchell, 1 Sim. & S. 290; 1 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 163.

Bequest of accumulated fund from real and personal estate, when the legatee attains twenty-one, upon his death, under that age, a resulting trust for the respective representatives. Chambers v. Brailsford, 18 Ves. 368; 19 Ves. 652; 11 R. R. 214. And see Spencer v. Wilson, 42 L. J., Ch. 754; L. R. 10 Eq. 501; 29 L. T. 19.

A tenant for life of real estate under a settlement, having power to charge it with 6,000*l.*, to be raised and paid at such time and to such purposes as he should think fit, by deed charged the estate with that sum, payable to trustees for such purposes as he should by will appoint, and afterwards appointed the same by his will for certain purposes, which partially failed:—Held, that the part of the money undisposed of was personalty, and went to the estate of the next of kin. Simmons v. Pitt, 43 L. J., Ch. 267.

Title to Surplus undisposed of—Principles.]—General devise and bequest upon trust, not sufficient to exhaust the whole property, a resulting trust for the heir and next of kin. Dawson v. Clarke, 18 Ves. 247. And see Barrs v. Fewkes, 6 N. R. 355; 34 L. J., Ch. 522; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 669; 12 L. T. 727; 13 W. R. 987.

It is not universally true that the expression of a purpose, for which even a devise of land is made, limits the devise to the purpose expressed. Where, for instance, there is a devise of land for payment of debts, it does not necessarily follow that there is a trust for the heir after the debts are paid. Each case depends upon the circumstances. Where the purpose expressed is in favour of the party to whom the bequest is made, the presumption for limiting the bequest is rather stronger. Walton v. Walton, 14 Ves. 322.

Construction of a devise in fee, subject to and chargeable with annuities, upon the intention, collected from the whole will, a beneficial devise and not a trust resulting to the heir as to the surplus beyond the annuities. King v. Denison, 1 V. & B. 260; 12 R. R. 227.

Distinction between a devise charged with debts and on trust to pay debts: the former a beneficial devise, subject to the particular purpose; the latter limited to the particular purpose; and therefore the interest not exhausted, a resulting trust for the heir. Id. 272.

No resulting trust for an heir taking a benefit by the will; but subject to circumstances. Id. 278.

Resulting Trust for Heir or Next of Kin.]—Resulting trust for the heir; the only express devise being to convey to the devisor's son from and after his age of thirty, which he did not attain; and no devise by implication from a declaration that he shall have no power over the estate until his age of thirty. Nash v. Smith, 17 Ves. 29.

A. devised to his wife a rent-charge of 200*l.* for thirteen years, in trust, nevertheless, for the payment of his debts and legacies; he also devised to her certain lands, in augmentation of her jointure. The surplus of this rent-charge, after debts and legacies paid, is not a beneficial trust for the wife, but a resulting trust for the heir. Wych v. Packington, 3 Bro. P. C. 44.

Lands are devised to three persons and their heirs, to the use of them and their heirs, upon the trusts after mentioned, and then the testator directs them to convey part to A. for life, and other part to B. in tail, but gives no direction as to the remainder in fee. Though two of the trustees were related to the testator, yet the remainder in fee will not belong to them, but be a resulting trust for the testator's son. Hobart v. Suffolk (Countess), 2 Vern. 644.

H. devises his manors, advowsons, &c., to trustees, to pay his son 1,000*l.* for life, and the rest of the profits to be laid out in land during his son's life, and then settled:—Held, the son had a right to present to the living when vacant, not under the devise, but as heir-at-law, it being a fruit undisposed of. Sherrard v. Harborough (Lord), Ambl. 165.

If under a will any part of the legal estate is undisposed of, it goes to the heir-at-law. So of the trust estate. Id. 166.

A. directs 1,000*l.* to be laid out in the purchase of lands, that the rents and profits thereof might come to his nephew W. for his life; but the testator made no disposition of these lands after the death of W.:—Held, that the lands belonged to the testator's heir-at-law. Fletcher v. Chapman, 3 Bro. P. C. 1.

Question of a resulting trust only arises between the real and personal representatives of the testator, not between the representatives of a party taking under the will. Ashby v. Palmer, 1 Mer. 296; 15 R. R. 116.

A. B. by his will reciting that he had a clear yearly profit rent of 60*l.* out of his freehold lands, devised the same with the rents, &c., thereof to his nephew C. D., for the term of ninety-nine years upon trust, to pay testator's only son a yearly sum of 10*l.* during his life, and which was to be in full of all claim he might or could have hereafter upon his real or personal property; and from and after his death to pay said sum of 10*l.* to his daughter M. and her issue, together with an additional sum of 18*l.* yearly, and upon this further trust to pay his other daughter N. and her issue the yearly rent of 28*l.*; and in case his said daughters M. and N. should happen to die without issue, &c., the testator devised said freehold lands (out of which the annuities issued) to his said nephew C. D. for ever:—Held, that C. D. was not beneficially entitled to the surplus rents of the said lands, which remained after payment of said annuities, for the residue of the term of ninety-nine years, but that same was a resulting trust for the heir-at-law. An heir-at-law is not to be disinherited, unless by express words; and unless it be distinctly pointed out to whom the estate is to go, it devolves on him. Salter v. Cavanagh, 1 Dr. & Wal. 668.

Real and personal estate devised to the executor in trust to pay debts and legacies, the rest and residue to himself, the only purpose of devising the real appearing to be to insure payment of the debts, without any intention to disinherit the heir:—Held, only a charge, and that the heir was entitled to the surplus of the real estate. Halliday v. Hudson, 3 Ves. 210.

Term raised for a particular purpose; when that purpose is answered the term shall be in trust for the heir. Levet v. Needham, 2 Vern. 139.

The distinction between a direction to sell real estate out and out, for payment of debts, and a charge for payment of debts, is exploded, as to any effect in exempting the personalty. In either case, the residue, if undisposed of, goes to the heir, unless there be a disposition made demonstrative of an intent that it shall change its nature and become personal. M'Cleland v. Shaw, 2 Sch. & Lef. 538.

If lands are appointed to pay debts, the heir is entitled to them when the debts are paid; and if to be sold, he is entitled to the surplus; but if there be any abuse, his remedy is against the trustee, and not against the purchaser. Culpepper v. Aston, 2 Ch. Cas. 115.

A Scotchman, by trust, disposition, and settlement, gave the whole of his real and moveable estate to three persons by name—first, to pay debts; secondly, to pay certain specified sums; thirdly, to lend out 2,000*l.* on security, taking the interest, payable to A. for life, and the said principal sum payable to his said trustees at A.'s death:—Held, that this was not a gift to the trustees for their own benefit, but that the 2,000*l.* at A.'s death fell into the general trust estate. Miller v. Rowan, 5 Cl. & F. 99.

—— Rebutted by Internal Evidence of Intention.]—J. S. by her will made H. N. her executor, and gave all her estates, real and personal, to be disposed of for the payment of her debts, and all such legacies as she therein or by codicil bequeathed to her said executor. She gave several money legacies, and among others 200*l.* to her heir-at-law; and by codicil she gave her executor's sister 500*l.*, but nothing to her executor:—Held, that there was no resulting trust for the heir, but that H. N., the executor, had a fee, for otherwise he would have no benefit by the devise. North v. Crompton, 1 Ch. Cas. 196.

J. by will bequeathed all his estate and effects, real and personal, whether in possession, reversion, or otherwise, unto his wife E., her executors, administrators, or assigns, upon trust to pay unto his daughter, during the lifetime of E., an annuity; and upon further trust that E., at the time of her decease, should cause her executors to pay certain legacies, but which did not exhaust the personal estate:—Held, that E. was a trustee only to the extent of the legacies, and that she was not deprived of a beneficial interest in the rest of the property. Williams v. Roberts, 27 L. J., Ch. 177; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 18; 6 W. R. 33.

Where a real estate is devised to be sold for payment of debts, and no more is said, there is clearly a resulting trust; but if a particular reason occurs why the testator should intend a beneficial interest to the devisee, there is no precedent that it shall not be held a beneficial interest. R. S., rector of B., devised his perpetual advowson of B. to G. S., willing and desiring her to sell it to Eton College, and on their refusal to Trinity College, and on the refusal of both to any other college in Oxford or Cambridge, being the best purchaser. This is not a resulting trust of the advowson to the heirs of the testator, but a devise of the beneficial interest therein to G. S., with an injunction only to sell to particular societies, and, on an avoidance by the death of the testator, the devisee and not the heir shall present. Hill v. London (Bishop), 1 Atk. 618.

Executors may take Beneficially though Will Professes to Dispose of whole Estate.]—Testator gave the interest of the 4 per cent. bank annuities then standing in his name, together with the interest of a sum of money, then at his banker's, which he directed to be invested in the same stock, to his wife, with a power of disposing of one-third thereof, after her decease. "And as to the rest and residue of his estate," after payment of the said bequest to his wife, viz., two-thirds of the property he should die possessed of, he gave the same as follows:—First, to the children of A. 60*l.* of the 4 per cent. consols; also to the eldest of such children 30*l.* per annum for life, and to his lawful heir, payable out of the interest. He then made a similar bequest in favour of the children of B., and he appointed his second wife and C. to be executors of his will, and declared his intention, "if the residue of his said property after the payment of the children of B. was not sufficient to pay the specified annuities of 30*l.*, the residue should be equally divided as above specified." The money at his banker's having been invested in the 4 per cents., the whole of that sum was 5,306*l.*:—Held, first, that the children of A. and B. respectively were entitled only to 60*l.* stock, and that the residue of the fund, after satisfying the two sums of 60*l.* and the two annuities of 30*l.*, was undis-posed of; secondly, that the testator having by his will professed to dispose of the whole of the property, although according to the aforesaid construction he had not in fact done so, yet this was not sufficient to exclude the executors from taking beneficially as such; and, thirdly, that the interest given to the wife in one-third, or the residue, did not prevent her taking her share of the remaining two-thirds under the Statute of Distributions. Oldham v. Carleton, 2 Cox, 399.

17. Charge of Legacies.

Implied — Where Intent shewn.] — Though a legacy is not expressly said to be paid out of an estate, nor by whom, yet it has been considered as a charge thereon, when the general intent of testator has appeared. Testator devised lands to his wife for life; remainder to his son R. in fee, and he gave to A. a legacy of 150*l.* to be paid in twelve months after his son R. should come to enjoy the premises. The legacy was held a charge, and was decreed with interest at 4 per cent. from the death of testator's wife, against R.'s son and heir. Miles v. Leigh, 1 Atk. 573.

Real estate made liable to a legacy, the personal estate proving deficient, and it being the testator's intention that it should be raised at all events. Jones v. Selby, Pre. Ch. 288.

Devise of lands made chargeable with what "I shall hereafter charge upon it." A legacy not expressly charged, shall be paid out of the land. Compton v. Oxenden, 4 Bro. C. C. 402; 2 Ves. 261.

Testator gave a legacy to his daughter, and all his real and personal estate to his wife, and after her death he gave his real estate, subject to legacy, to his son in fee. The wife survived the testator, and afterwards died:—Held, that the legacy, with interest from the end of a year after the testator's death, was raisable out of the real estate, in case the personal estate was deficient. Freeman v. Simpson, 6 Sim. 75; 2 L. J., Ch. 141.

Where Intent Doubtful—Simple Direction for Payment of Legacies.]—A will beginning "First, I will and direct that all my legal debts and legacies, and funeral expenses, shall be fully paid," is not sufficient alone to charge legacies on real estates specifically devised, for which the intent must be clear. Kightley v. Kightley, 2 Ves. 328; 2 R. R. 224.

The words, "from and after payment of my just debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and of the several specific legacies hereby given and bequeathed," occurring in connection with a devise of real estates:—Held, regard had to the whole frame of the will, to create no charge of the legacies upon realty. Sherratt v. Sherratt, Coop. t. Brough. 35.

A man makes his will in the following manner: "As to the disposal of my worldly estate, I give and devise," &c.; and then gives his lands to his eldest son in tail, remainder to his three other sons in tail, and devises copper mines and other estates to his eldest son, to be sold for payment of his debts and legacies, and gives his daughter 1,500*l.*; there not being personal estate sufficient to pay this legacy, whether real estate by the words of this will shall be charged therewith. Pawlet v. Parry, Pre. Ch. 449.

Quære, whether legacies were charged on the real estate, by a direction, in the introductory part of a will, that all the testator's debts, legacies, and funeral expenses should be paid as soon as conveniently might be after his decease. Graves v. Graves, 8 Sim. 43; 5 L. J., Ch. 270.

Where Contrary Intent shewn.]—A will says in the beginning, "After testator's debts and legacies paid"; then gives several legacies and portions to the testator's daughters, and then says, that "after legacies the surplus of the personal estate shall go to the son; after which follows a devise of land to the son": but if he dies without issue in the life of any of the daughters, then to the daughters; there is out of the personal estate a sufficiency to pay great part, though not all, of the legacies: in such case the deficiency is not chargeable upon the land. Davis v. Gardiner, 2 P. Wms. 187.

A testator bequeathed to each of his executors 100*l.*, but directed that, if they declined to act, the same should merge in the residue. He bequeathed to his wife and A. J. annuities of 200*l.* and 150*l.* respectively, charged on portions of his real estate, and pecuniary legacies of 200*l.* and 150*l.* respectively, over and above the annuities. He gave to his younger children legacies, with interest thereon, till paid off, and appointed C. their guardian, whom he directed to receive, and apply for their maintenance, education, and advancement as C. should think expedient, the income of the legacies during their minority; and he empowered C. to raise by charge or mortgage of his real estate a portion of the legacies not exceeding 500*l.* for the advancement of any younger child. He created a trust term in certain of his lands, to secure the annuities, and directed that the term should cease when the trusts thereof were satisfied; and he devised the land subject to the term and all other his real and leasehold estate, and the residue (if any) of his personal estate to his eldest son. The testator's will also contained a clause that, in the event of any of the younger sons becoming entitled to the testator's real estate, the legacies, both original and accruing, bequeathed to him or them should be divided amongst the other younger children. By a codicil the testator bequeathed to his eldest son a pecuniary legacy over and above the bequests made to him in the will, and charged upon the whole of the testator's freehold and personal estate, in priority to the annuities bequeathed by the will:—Held, that the legacies to the testator's younger children were not charged on his real estate. James v. Jones, 9 L. R., Ir. 489.

When Implied from Particular Words.]—A codicil directed that legacies given by the will should be paid in proportion, and according to the deficiencies in the testator's real and personal estate:—Held, that they became chargeable upon the real estate. Rich v. Whitfield, 14 W. R. 907.

Lands being inadequate to the payment of a sum charged upon them by marriage settlement, for maintenance of the issue of the marriage, and of a prior charge, the settlor by will, after giving an annuity to his wife, and other legacies, gave a further annuity and small legacy to his daughter, on whose marriage the settlement was made; and subject to such annuities and legacies, and also subject to the payment of all moneys secured to his daughter by the settlement, he bequeathed all his estates over to his son in fee:—Held, that the latter words did not charge any other estates of the testator than those already charged for the benefit of the daughter. Gough v. Andrews, 1 Coll. C. C. 69 ; 8 Jur. 305.

A testator gave realty and his residuary personalty to trustees, with a discretionary power to sell the realty during the life of his wife, and directed the trustees, out of the stocks in which the proceeds of the sales and the personalty were invested, to pay certain legacies, after the death of his wife, and also out of his personal estate to pay legacies for certain charities:—Held, that the general legacies were charged on the unsold real estate, and that the testator had not marshalled his assets in favour of the charity. The fact that the time for the payment of a legacy was deferred would not give other legacies priority in the distribution of assets ; they all rank equally, and must be provided for accordingly. Held, also, that there being an insufficiency of assets to pay the legacies, the trustees were bound to exercise their discretionary power of sale to meet the deficiency. Nickisson v. Cockill, 3 De G. J. & S. 622 ; 32 L. J., Ch. 753 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 975 ; 8 L. T. 778 ; 11 W. R. 1082.

A testator, after giving legacies and annuities, proceeded to say: "My executors may realise such part of my estate as they think right in their judgment to pay the aforenamed legacies": —Held, that the legacies were not charged on the real estate, for that the direction to the executors to realise such parts of his estate as they thought right to pay the legacies, was satisfied by holding it to apply to property which they took as executors. Cameron, In re, Nixon v. Cameron, 53 L. J., Ch. 1139 ; 26 Ch. D. 19 ; 50 L. T. 339 ; 32 W. R. 834—C. A. See also Buckley v. Buckley, post, col. 1661, and Biggar v. Eastwood, ante, col. 1547.

—— "Guarantee my Estate."] — A testator gave a number of legacies, adding, "I guarantee my estate at C., for the payment of the above legacies" ; and he, in the subsequent part of his will, gave many other legacies. The first class of legacies are not specific, and, failing the estate at C., are to be borne by the general personal estate. Willox v. Rhodes, 2 Russ. 452.

—— "Not otherwise disposed of."]—Where a testator, after giving legacies, gave and devised all his real and personal estate not otherwise disposed of:—Held, that the legacies were payable out of the mixed fund of realty and personalty. Bawden, In re, Bawden v. Cresswell, 63 L. J., Ch. 412 ; [1894] 1 Ch. 693 ; 8 R. 76 ; 70 L. T. 526 ; 42 W. R. 235.

—— "Subject to the Charges thereon."]—A father, on the marriage of his second son, by deed of settlement covenanted to pay him an annuity of 1,000*l.* a year for life, and to charge the annuity on a sufficient part of the real estate he might die seised of ; provided that nothing in the settlement should prevent his dealing with his real estate during his life, or, so only that sufficient real estate were left charged with the annuity, by will. The father subsequently made his will, by which he devised his real estate (subject to the charges and incumbrances thereon) in strict settlement on his first and other sons in tail male:—Held (Cotton, L.J., dissentiente), that the settlement operated not only as a covenant by the father, but also as a charge upon all the real estate of which he should die seised. Montague v. Sandwich (Earl), 55 L. J., Ch. 925 ; 32 Ch. D. 525 ; 54 L. T. 502—C. A.

—— "Subject as hereinafter."]—A testatrix, whose personal estate was insufficient to pay her legacies, and who had a general power of appointing real estate by her will, in 1880 "devised, bequeathed, and appointed all her real and personal estate, any moneys and other chattel property" to her trustees as executors thereinafter named "subject as hereinafter." She then "gave, devised, and bequeathed" a number of pecuniary and some specific legacies, and "gave, devised, and bequeathed" her freehold and leasehold estate to her two nieces, and all the rest and residue of any property "she might have at her death, subject to the payment of the legacies aforesaid" and her debts. By a codicil she revoked some of the legacies on account of the depreciation of her property:—Held, that the legacies were charges on the real estate. Wybrants v. Maffett, 17 L. R., Ir. 229.

—— "Paying thereout."]—Devise to A. of house, he paying thereout 20*l.* to B., with interest after three months from death, creates a charge. Seal v. Tichener, Dick. 444.

—— What included under "thereinafter."]— The testator, after directing that his debts and funeral expenses should be paid out of his residuary personal estate, devised his real estates in trust, as to a particular estate, for his wife for life, and, after her death, to A. L. for life, with remainder over, and the residuary realty in trust to sell and convert, and pay an annuity of 80*l.* to his wife, and to be possessed of the residue on the trusts thereinafter declared. He then gave a legacy of 800*l.* to be paid to T. L., his executors, &c., immediately after the decease of testator's wife, notwithstanding T. L. might die in the testator's lifetime. He then gave 10*l.* each to his trustees, and his furniture, &c., to his wife, W. M., and the residue of his personalty to trustees, after payment of debts, legacies, &c., and subject to the said annuity of 80*l.*, the proceeds of the real estate, in trust for M. L., for her life, &c. :—Held, that the legacy of 800*l.* was not charged on the real estate. Lee v. Rutley, 1 Jur. 493.

—— "Videlicet."]—A charge of legacies under a videlicet includes only those which follow, and not others at a great distance separated by other bequests. Hone v. Medcraft, 1 Bro. C. C. 261.

Where Executor Devisee.] — Real estates decreed to be charged with an annuity given by the will, though no express words to charge the land, the executor being devisee of the land. Elliot v. Hancock, 2 Vern. 143.

Devise of 100*l.* to a daughter, to be paid by executor in a month after death of the widow, to whom the real estate was devised for life, and afterwards to his son, the executor in fee ; appointing two trustees or overseers to see the will performed. On deficiency of assets, the real estate charged with the 100*l.* Lypet v. Carter, 1 Ves. Sen. 499.

P. devised real estate to his son A. in fee, and also gave to A. the residue of his effects, and directed that his son should pay unto his (P.'s) grandson a certain sum by instalments. A. paid several sums on account of the instalments, and then refused to pay any more, on the ground that the personal estate was insufficient:—Held, that under the terms of the will the legacy was charged on the real as well as on the personal estate, and that A. himself was personally liable in case the assets should be deficient. Preston v. Preston, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1040; 4 W. R. 455.

Neither the word "thereout" nor "paying" is required to make the payment of a legacy a condition so as to give the devisee in fee the lands charged with it. A testator devised his lands to his wife, and by a separate clause gave her certain chattels, and added, "Fourthly, I order my wife to pay the following legacies," which he enumerated and made her and another executors:—Held, the legacies were charged on the lands, and the wife took the fee. Johnson v. Brady, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 386.

J. S., by will, devises his lands to his brother, who was the heir-at-law, in fee, gives legacies, and makes his brother executor, desiring him to see his will performed. The real estate is charged with the legacies. Alcock v. Sparhawk, 2 Vern. 228.

Where Trustees appointed for Execution of Will.]—Testator, by will, gives annuity to wife, and legacies to children, knowing he has not sufficient personal estate. He says nothing of his real estate, but appoints certain persons trustees of the inheritance for the execution of his will. Semble, the trustees took an interest in the real estate for the purpose of this will. Trent v. Trent, 1 Dow, 102.

A testatrix, by will, gave to G. an interest in certain chattels, and gave her residuary real and personal estate to trustees, in trust out of her personal estate to pay her debts, funeral, and testamentary expenses and a legacy of 10*l.* to H.; and out of the rents and profits of the real estate, to pay such of the debts, funeral, and testamentary expenses as her personal estate should be insufficient to pay; and subject thereto, should stand possessed of the entire residue of realty and personalty in trust for the testatrix's three grandchildren. By a codicil, the testatrix directed that the trustees or trustee acting under her will should pay to H. 40*l.*, "in addition to the legacy of 10*l.* above mentioned, and to G. 100*l.* a year for life, in addition to the bequests above mentioned":—Held, that the direction in the codicil to the trustees to pay the legacy and annuity primâ facie made them a charge upon whatever funds the trustees had in their hands, and therefore charged them on the real estate in aid of the personalty, and that this was not rebutted by their being given "in addition" to bequests not charged on the realty. Gallemore v. Gill, 2 Sm. & G. 158; 23 L. J., Ch. 604; 18 Jur. 480. Affirmed, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1178; 4 W. R. 773—L.JJ.

Where Direction to Convert Realty.]—The testator directed his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses to be paid out of his personal estate. He then devised his freeholds to trustees to be sold, and the proceeds, after deducting costs, to be deemed part of the residue of his personal estate, and to be subject to the dispositions thereinafter made of the same. The testator then gave a legacy of 1,000*l.* upon certain trusts, and finally directed all the rest and residue of his personal estate to go to his wife for life, remainder over. The pure personal estate being insufficient to pay all the debts and legacies:—Held, that the legacy of 1,000*l.* ought to be paid out of the moneys arising from the sale of the real estate. Woollard's Trust, In re, 18 Jur. 1012.

A., after bequeathing legacies, devised his real estate to trustees, to sell, and declared that until sale the same should be considered as converted in equity from the time of his death, and that the proceeds of such sale should be deemed part of his residuary personal estate thereinafter bequeathed:—Held, that the legacies were payable out of the real estate. Field v. Peckett, 29 Beav. 568; 30 L. J., Ch. 811; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 983; 4 L. T. 459; 9 W. R. 525.

A testator, by will, gave a life annuity which he directed to be issuing out of his real estate, until a nephew attained twenty-one, and thenceforth out of his personal estate. He directed the real estate to be sold by trustees (who were also executors of the will) on the nephew attaining twenty-one, and the proceeds to be held upon the trusts thereinafter declared. He also directed the trustees to sell his personal estate, out of the proceeds to pay his debts, funeral, and testamentary expenses and legacies, and to invest the residue, with the surplus rents and profits of the real estate, until it was sold, and the proceeds of it after the sale, and stand possessed of the investments upon trust to set apart thereout a fund for payment of the annuity, and on its determination to apply the fund set apart to answer it in the same manner as was therein directed with respect to the residue of the personal estate. And he gave the residue of the trust fund to his nephew. An insufficient fund was set apart to answer the annuity against which there were, consequently, arrears at the annuitant's death:—Held, first, that the legacies were payable out of the proceeds of the real as well as of the personal estate:—Held, secondly, that the annuity was also payable out of the mixed fund:—Held, thirdly, that the arrears of it were payable out of the fund set apart to answer it. Bright v. Larcher, 3 De G. & J. 148; 28 L. J., Ch. 837; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1283; 7 W. R. 658. And see S. C., 4 De G. & J. 608.

Substituted Legacies in Codicil held Charged on same Fund.]—Testator, declaring his debts should come out of the real estate and the personal, gave the real to trustees charged with some charitable legacies, and one to each trustee; by codicil he removed one trustee, and revoked his legacy, appointing another with the same legacy. He revoked all the charitable legacies, and gave a less legacy to one of the charities mentioned before, and other new charitable legacies, without specifying any fund; all held to be charged on the real estate, and, therefore, void as to the charitable legacies. Leacroft v. Maynard, 1 Ves. 279; 3 Bro. C. C. 223. See also Austen v. Halsey, 6 Ves. 475; Hassel v. Hassel, Dick. 527.

Where Gift of Realty and Personalty joined.]—Where goods, lands, and chattels are given by will, altogether as one fund, and a legacy is given subject to the exception of what was given before, it is as a charge on the land. Edgell v. Haywood, 3 Atk. 358.

The circumstance that a mixed fund of real and personal estate is devised to the executor is not alone sufficient to make pecuniary legacies a charge upon the real estates. Testator devised a mixed fund of real and personal property to a trustee, upon trust to pay the rents, issues, and profits to certain persons (among whom was his daughter M.), for their respective lives, and subject to those trusts, he gave M. power to appoint, by will, the whole property. M. married, and by a will executed in pursuance of the power, devised the whole fund to a trustee, upon trust to permit her husband to receive and take the rents, issues, and profits for his life, subject as thereinafter mentioned; and, in case she should leave any issue of the marriage, son or daughter, living at her decease, she charged the estate with 4,000*l.*, for the benefit of that son or daughter; and after the decease of her husband, she devised the whole fund to such son or daughter, absolutely. She then proceeded as follows: "And in case there shall be no issue of my marriage living at my decease, then I give, devise, and bequeath to my said dear husband, all and singular my said estates and effects to hold to him, his heirs, executors, &c., subject, nevertheless, and chargeable with the payment of 100*l.* to each of his sisters, A., B., C., D.; also I give and bequeath to E., the sum of 200*l.*, to be paid to her within twelve calendar months next after my decease":—Held, that E.'s legacy was a charge upon the real estate, over which M. exercised her power of appointment. Nyssen v. Gretton, 2 Y. & C. 222. S. C., nom. Nyssen v. Ernst, 6 L. J., Exch. Eq. 22. See Bray v. Bree, 8 Bligh (N.S.) 568; 2 Cl. & F. 453.

A testator gave legacies, and charged his executors, to whom he devised real and personal estate, with the payment thereof:—Held, that the legacies were charged on the real estate. Cross v. Kennington, 9 Beav. 150; 15 L. J., Ch. 167; 10 Jur. 343.

J. A. devised and bequeathed to S. H. all his real and personal estate for her life, she paying thereout the legacies after mentioned, in three years after his decease; he then gave life annuities, and declared "the said several legacies or annuities to be charged on my real estate, the first payment to be made three years after my decease;" and then bequeathed several pecuniary legacies, and gave all his real and personal estate, after the death of S. H., to T. P. H. for life, with remainders over, if he should die without issue:—Held, on demurrer, that the legacies were charged upon the inheritance. Boyd v. Higginson, 5 Ir. Eq. R. 97; Fl. & K. 603.

A testator gave his real and personal estate to trustees, for the maintenance of his four children, until they attained twenty-one. As they arrived at that age respectively, he directed it to be divided as follows: A legacy of 100*l.* to his son, and his property at G. (freehold) between his daughters:—Held, on a deficiency of personal estate, that the legacy was not charged on the real estate. Bentley v. Oldfield, 18 Beav. 225.

A testator by will, dated in 1851, gave all his personal estate, not specifically bequeathed, and the proceeds of real estate directed to be sold, to trustees for payment of his debts (including mortgage debts), funeral, and testamentary expenses, and a legacy, and directed the surplus to be held in trust for his grandson if he should attain twenty-one, but if he should die under that age, then for his grand-daughter if she should attain that age. After making a specific devise of a messuage in favour of his grandson, he devised all the residue of his real estate to the grandson, charged in manner thereinafter mentioned; and gave to his wife an annuity charged on the hereditaments lastly thereinbefore devised to his grandson, and bequeathed a legacy of 2,000*l.* to his grand-daughter. The mixed fund proved insufficient for payment of debts:—Held, that the legacy of 2,000*l.* was not charged upon the real estate. Hensman v. Fryer, 37 L. J., Ch. 97; L. R. 3 Ch. 420; 17 L. T. 394; 16 W. R. 162. Reversing 12 Jur. (N.S.) 681.

Where Gift of Mixed Residue.]—If there are general gifts of legacies, and then of the rest and residue, real and personal, blending the whole in one mass (though accompanied by a power to the legatee of the residue "to dispose of the same in any manner he may think proper"), the legacies are a charge on the realty. Greville v. Browne, 7 H. L. Cas. 689; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 849; 7 W. R. 673.

A. gave a legacy, which, if not received, was to form "part of the residue of my property." Then followed a legacy to A., but if the legatee should die before time for payment, it was to be considered "as part of the residue of my property, and to go and merge in the same." After some small legacies, the will concluded, "All the rest, residue, and remainder of any property I may die possessed of, whether estates, freeholds, bonds, bills, annuities, &c., I devise and bequeath to my son in the fullest manner I can, with liberty to him to dispose of the same in any manner he may think proper." The son was named as one of the executors, but did not act as such. The will was proved by the other executor. The son mortgaged the real estates:—Held, that the legacy to A. was a charge on the real estates, and on a sale of them in the Incumbered Estates Court in Ireland, took precedence over the mortgages, notwithstanding the general power to the devisee to dispose of the estates in any manner he thought proper. Held, also, that the words in the bequest of the residue to the son gave him no power to mortgage or dispose of the real estate discharged of the legacies. Ib.

The doctrine of Greville v. Browne (supra), viz., that a gift of legacies, followed by a gift of the residue of the real and personal estate, charges the legacies on the residuary real estate, is applicable to a gift of legacies followed by a gift of the residue of all the property of the testator, and over which the testator has a power of appointment, though the power be special and non-exclusive; and in such a case the legacies are charged on property subject to a power of appointment. Gainsford v. Dunn, 43 L. J., Ch. 403; L. R. 17 Eq. 405; 30 L. T. 283; 22 W. R. 499.

The rule that legacies followed by a gift of real and personal residue in one mass are charged on the real estate, applies although preceded by a direction that the debts and legacies shall be paid by the executors.

A testatrix by her will directed her debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, and the legacies thereby bequeathed, to be paid by her executors thereinafter named, and after bequeathing specific and pecuniary legacies and making a specific devise, she gave the residue of her real and personal estate to A. and B. upon certain trusts, and appointed A. and C. executors:—Held, that the legacies were charged on the residuary real estate of the testatrix. Brooke, In re, Brooke v. Rooke, 45 L. J., Ch. 730; 3 Ch. D. 630; 35 L. T. 301; 24 W. R. 959.

A husband gave various pecuniary legacies, and all the rest and residue of his estate, real and personal, he gave, devised, and bequeathed to his wife, her heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, absolutely:—Held, that the legacies were charged on the real estate, and therefore that the general devise did not pass property of which the testator was seised in fee as trustee. Bellis, In re, 46 L. J., Ch. 353; 5 Ch. D. 504; 36 L. T. 644; 25 W. R. 456.

Testator directed that all his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses (not mentioning legacies) should be paid out of his personal estate. He then gave a number of legacies, and directed that if one of the legacies should fail, it should fall into his "residuary estate." He then devised all his freehold and leasehold hereditaments in the parishes of B., L., and R., "and all the rest, residue, and remainder of" his real and personal estate, to trustees, upon trust to make a weekly payment to his wife during her life, and subject thereto to invest the residue, and after his wife's decease, as to all his freeholds, and all his leaseholds, and all the residue and remainder of his estate and effects, to stand possessed thereof upon certain trusts. The personal estate, and the real estate other than the real estate in the parishes of B., L., and R., were insufficient to pay the legacies:—Held, that the legacies were a charge on the real estate in the parishes of B., L., and R. Bray v. Stevens, 12 Ch. D. 162.

A testator gives an annuity and pecuniary legacies, and then devises all the rest, residue, and remainder of his freehold, copyhold, and leasehold estates to trustees for the use and benefit of his children. The annuity and pecuniary legacies given prior to the devise are well charged upon the freehold, and copyhold, and leasehold estates. Cole v. Turner, 4 Russ. 376; 6 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 101.

On a bequest of all the testator's personal estate, upon trust to lay out 2,000*l.* in the purchase of an estate to be held on certain trusts, and upon trust to invest the residue of the personal estate and stand possessed of 1,500*l.*, part of the testator's estate on certain trusts and various other sums described as further parts of his estate upon other trusts, followed by bequests of pecuniary legacies, simpliciter, and a concluding gift of all the residue and remainder of the testator's estate and effects, whatsoever and wheresoever, and whether in possession, reversion, remainder, or expectancy:—Held, that the residuary clause passed the real estate charged with the pecuniary legacies, but not charged with the gifts directed out of the investment of the personal estate. Held, also, that the 2,000*l.* was to be set apart in priority to the other gifts. Gyett v. Williams, 2 J. & H. 429; 6 L. T. 279.

A testator, after bequeathing a number of pecuniary legacies to different persons, and giving a certain field to his godson, directed that all his debts and the above legacies should be paid and discharged within six months after his decease; and all the rest and residue of his estate, both real and personal, he gave to N. The personal estate proving insufficient to pay the debts and legacies:—Held, upon demurrer to a bill by some of the legatees seeking to charge their legacies on the real estate which passed under the residuary devise to N., that both the debts and legacies were, by the words of the will, effectually charged upon that estate. Mirehouse v. Scaife, 2 Myl. & Cr. 695; 7 L. J., Ch. 22. Affirming 1 Jur. 134, on different grounds. And see Brudenell v. Boughton, 2 Atk. 257.

Where Contrary Intent shewn.]—A testator, after directing his debts to be paid by his executors out of his personal estate, and making a specific bequest, gave all his realty and personalty to trustees for the conversion, getting in, and investment of his personalty; and by five clauses in his will he directed his trustees to stand possessed of five portions of his real estate (in each case giving the specific description), and five sums of 1,300*l.* (in each case describing the sum of money as "part of my personal estate") upon trust for the benefit of his five children and their issue; and as to all the residue of his realty and personalty not thereinbefore specifically or otherwise disposed of, upon trust, to release, assign, pay, and transfer the same to his said children:—Held, that the rule in Greville v. Browne (supra) did not apply, and that the five legacies were not charged upon the residuary realty. Browning v. French, 24 L. T. 649.

A father, after giving certain pecuniary legacies, devised as follows: "As to all my messuages, farms, and lands at Naunton, consisting of about 180 acres, my stock, crops, and implements of husbandry, moneys, securities for money, and all the residue of my estate and effects, real and personal, I bequeath and devise the same unto my wife to hold unto my wife until my youngest child shall attain twenty-one," with limitations over in favour of the children:—Held, that the pecuniary legacies were not charged on the farm at Naunton, or on the residuary real estate. Castle v. Gillett, L. R. 16 Eq. 530.

Testatrix directed her legacies to be paid by executors, to whom she afterwards gave all her real estates and the residue of her personal, after payment of her debts and funeral expenses:—Held, that legacies were not charged on real estates. Parker v. Fearnley, 2 Sim. & S. 592.

Subject to the payment of his debts, and certain legacies previously given, a testator devised "all his real estate," and bequeathed "all the residue of his personal estate," to trustees in trust for A. A. died in his lifetime:—Held, that the personal estate was the primary fund for the payment of debts and legacies, the testator not having manifested any intention to discharge it. Wells v. Row, 48 L. J., Ch. 476.

A testator directed that his debts, and all charges and incumbrances affecting his estates, should be paid by the application in the first instance of all ready money and securities for money which he should die possessed of; and he charged his estates of C. exclusively with the payment of such, if any, which should remain after such application. He devised his real estate to trustees and their heirs, as to the residue thereof not before disposed of (which included C.), to the use of his wife for her life; and he bequeathed to her, in case she should survive him, all his personal property not before bequeathed. He then bequeathed a legacy payable immediately after his decease, and gave, devised, and bequeathed, after the decease of his wife, two other legacies, and appointed his wife executrix:—Held, that the legacies were not charged on the lands of C., and that money of the testator, which at his death was in the hands of a salesmaster in Smithfield, was not ready money within the meaning of the will. Smith v. Butler, 1 Jo. & Lat. 692; 7 Ir. Eq. R. 467.

—— Where Executor Devisee.]—The principle of the decisions in reference to the question, whether a charge on real estate is effected by reason of a residuary devise, is the same in the case of legacies as in that of debts, and is this, that where residuary, real, and personal property is given in one mixed fund to the creditor, who is to pay debts and legacies, these legacies, as well as debts, are charged upon the real estate. A testator, after bequeathing a legacy and expressly charging part of his real estate with an annuity to the legatee, devised and bequeathed all the rest, residue, and remainder of all and singular his real and personal estate (subject to his debts, funeral, and testamentary expenses) to trustees, whom he also appointed executors, upon certain trusts:—Held, that the legacy was well charged upon the real estate. Wheeler v. Howell, 3 K. & J. 198.

A testator gave some pecuniary legacies, and devised a certain farm and lands to his wife, for such term and at such rent as his brother Robert should think fit, and then gave, devised, and bequeathed all the rest, residue, and remainder of his real and personal estate to his son James, and appointed him executor:—Held, that the residuary form of the devise to the executor made the legacies a charge upon the real estate, notwithstanding that a previous interest in real estate was given by the will. Francis v. Clemow, Kay, 435; 23 L. J., Ch. 288; 18 Jur. 223; 2 Eq. R. 426; 2 W. R. 308.

A testator directed that his debts should be paid by his executors; he then gave two legacies, one to one of his executrixes, to be paid to her in addition to what was afterwards devised to her: and gave the residue of his personal estate and all his real estate to five persons, whom he appointed executors, in equal shares, as tenants in common:—Held, that the legacies were charged on the real estate. Held, one of the five devisees having died in the testator's lifetime, that as between the heir and devisees the lapsed share was in the hands of the heir, liable to bear a rateable proportion only of the debts and legacies. Where residue is devised subject to charges, a share which in the result is undisposed of bears only its own proportions of the charges. Peacock v. Peacock, 34 L. J., Ch. 315; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 280; 12 L. T. 299; 13 W. R. 516.

—— Notwithstanding previous Gift of Interest in Realty.]—Where a testatrix after giving several pecuniary legacies devised and bequeathed all her real and leasehold estates to trustees to pay the rents and profits of her freehold house at G. (specifically describing it) to A. for life, with remainder to his children, in equal shares, and as to all the residue of her real and personal estate she directed her trustees to pay the rents and income to B. for life with remainder to his children in equal shares, and the personal estate proved insufficient for the payment of the legacies:—Held, that the legacies were a charge on the residuary real estate, notwithstanding that a previous interest in real estate was given by the will. Skiller v. Haisman, 24 L. T. 745; 19 W. R. 693.

T., by will, after bequeathing stock in trust for certain persons for life, and which he directed should, in certain events, "fall into his residuary estate," and also after bequeathing other legacies to charities and others, which he directed should be paid out of his personal estate, devised and bequeathed his freehold houses at S., and all and singular other the "residue and remainder of his estate and effects," to his executors, upon trust to pay the income to his sister for life; and after her decease, to convey, assign and pay the same residuary estate and effects" to her children as therein mentioned. The testator had no other real estate than the houses at S. The personal estate was insufficient to pay both the debts and legacies:—Held, that the real estate at S. was part of the testator's residuary estate, and that, as such, it was subject to the payment of the legacies, except the charitable legacies, so far as the personalty was insufficient. Thorman v. Hilhouse, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 563; 7 W. R. 332.

E. by her will, after a specific devise of real estate to S., and pecuniary legacies of 50*l.* and 200*l.*, bequeathed three other pecuniary legacies of 100*l.* each, with the proviso that "if her estate would not produce these sums of 100*l.* each, after the previous legacies were paid," then these sums were to abate; and she appointed S. her "residuary legatee." E. left real estate not specifically devised:—Held, that the pecuniary legacies were charged upon the testatrix's real estate not specifically bequeathed. Held, further, that the real estate not specifically devised passed to S., as residuary devisee as well as legatee. Salter, In re, Farrant v. Carter, 44 L. T. 603.

Bequest to wife of real and personal estate for life, and after her death a gift of various legacies, and a devise of all the rest, residue, and remainder of real and personal estate to testator's nephews:—Held, legacies were charged on real estate. Bench v. Biles, 4 Madd. 187; 20 R. R. 292.

A residuary gift of "all the rest, residue, and remainder of my freehold estates, real and personal property of any nature or description whatsoever, not thereinbefore by me disposed of," amounts to a charge of legacies on the residuary real estate, even where there are specific gifts of realty preceding it. Carrall v. Hargrave, Ir. R. 5 Eq. 123.

—— Charge, whether pro ratâ or in aid only.]—A testator, by will made in 1866, after specifically disposing of certain parts of his property and giving certain real estate to his wife during widowhood, gave the rest and residue of his real and personal estate to trustees upon trust to convert the same into money and thereout pay his debts, including debts due on mortgage of the property given to his wife during widowhood, and his funeral and testamentary expenses, and the cost of proving and executing his will. He directed his trustees to pay the income of the fund to his wife during widowhood, and after her death or second marriage he gave so much of the fund as consisted of pure personalty to charitable purposes, and bequeathed the rest of it to his wife. In a subsequent part of his will he appointed executors, and gave a legacy to each of them who accepted the trusts. At his death part of the residuary real estate was subject to mortgages:—Held, by Fry, J., that the executors' legacies were charged on the real estate, and that as there was a mixed fund they must be paid pro ratâ out of the different parts of it. But held, by the court of appeal, that the legacies were charged on the real estate, but only in aid of the personalty, the principle of pro ratâ payment only applying to payments which the testator had expressly directed to be made out of the mixed fund. Elliott v. Dearsley, 16 Ch. D. 322; 44 L. T. 198; 29 W. R. 494—C. A.

Effect of Will and Codicil—Legacies given by Valid Codicil.]—One gives legacies by his will, and other legacies by his codicil, and the lands are charged with the legacies in the will only, and the personal estate is not sufficient to pay all the legacies, the legacies in the will shall be charged on the land, and the legacies by codicil on the personal estate. Masters v. Masters, 1 P. Wms. 422.

Real estate is by will charged with the payment of the legacies "above mentioned"; this will not extend to the legacies in the codicil. Secus, if the land were charged with the payment of the legacies generally. Id. 423.

The principle that where a will contains a gift of legacies and residue the legacies are (in the event of the personal estate proving insufficient for their payment) to be deemed to be charged upon the real estate applies in favour of an additional legacy given by a codicil to a legatee named in the will. Hall, In re, Hall v. Hall, 51 L. T. 86.

A gift of a share of moneys to arise by sale of real estates was revoked by a codicil, and 2,000*l.* given in lieu thereof. The latter was held to be payable out of the general personal estate. Buxton v. Buxton, C. P. Cooper, 97.

A testator directed 2,000*l.* to be invested in the funds, and the dividends to be paid to his widow during her life, and gave or confirmed to her two annuities. By codicil, he charged these on his real estates; and by a second codicil he directed to be paid to his widow, during her life, such yearly sum as, together with the interest of the 2,000*l.*, and the annuities, should amount to the annual sum of 1,200*l.*:—Held, that the testator's intention was, that his widow should have 1,200*l.* a year out of his real estates, subject only to a deduction of so much as the interest of the 2,000*l.* should amount to; and that she had a claim on the real estates for the whole annuity so long as that 2,000*l.* should not produce any income. Devaynes v. Noble, 8 L. J., Ch. 256; 3 Jur. 550. And see S. C., 2 Jur. 1082.

A testator gave all his personal and leasehold estate to trustees, upon trust, to sell and dispose of the same, and convert the whole into money, and, out of the money to arise by such sale, disposition, and conversion, to pay his debts and the legacies given by his will, or which he might give by any codicil thereto. He afterwards made a codicil, by which he gave to the same trustees 2,000*l.* out of his personal estate, upon trust to distribute and pay the same for charitable purposes. This legacy was held not to be charged on the leasehold estate. Wilson v. Thomas, 3 Myl. & K. 579; 3 L. J., Ch. 144.

A testator, by his will, dated in 1828, attested by three witnesses, gave to his son an annuity or rent-charge of 20*l.*, charged on his real and personal estate. In 1831 he made a codicil, expressly referring to his will, attested by two witnesses only, by which he revoked the annuity of 20*l.*, and gave to the wife of his said son an annuity or clear yearly rent-charge of 70*l.* for her separate use, with powers of entry and distress over his real estate, if in arrear; and he ratified and confirmed his will in all other respects. In the same year he made another codicil, attested by three witnesses, and thereby, after reciting that he had executed his last will and testament, and also a codicil thereto, he declared the same to be a second codicil to his will, and, after making various alterations in the disposition of his property, ratified and confirmed his will:—Held, that the annuity of 70*l.* was well charged by the first codicil, to which effect was given by the second codicil, upon the real estate. Aaron v. Aaron, 3 De G. & Sm. 475; 14 Jur. 125.

Gift of "an annuity or clear rent-charge" of 40*l.* in a codicil, held to charge all the estates devised by the will. M'Dowal, Ex parte, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 553.

A testatrix, by her will, after giving various legacies, directed that in case her personal estate should be insufficient for the payment of the legacies in full, they should be charged upon her real estate. By her codicil she gave other legacies, and confirmed her will:—Held, that the legacies given by the codicil were a charge upon the real estate. Williams v. Hughes, 24 Beav. 474; 27 L. J., Ch. 218; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 42; 6 W. R. 94.

A testator gave sums of money as legacies to his three daughters, and charged them on his realty if his personalty should be insufficient. By a subsequent will, proved as a codicil, he gave, subject to two new legacies, all his personal estate to the daughters:—Held, that the legacies were not revoked by the codicil, but were payable out of the personalty, and if that were insufficient, out of the realty. Leese v. Knight, 11 L. T. 134; 12 W. R. 1097.

The trusts of a will were, in part, to provide an annuity of 1*l.* a week to each of the testator's sons, charged on the devised property. By a codicil reciting these trusts, he charged the property by the codicil with 1*l.* per week to each of his two sons:—Held, that this was not a cumulative legacy, but merely a reference to the old gift; and that it was charged primarily on the seven cottages, and as a subsidiary security on that which passed by the codicil. Hincheliffe v. Hincheliffe, 2 Dr. & Sm. 96; 5 L. T. 660. See also Leacroft v. Maynard, supra, col. 1638; Rich v. Whitfield, supra, col. 1634; Gallemore v. Gill, supra, col. 1637; Lushington v. Sewell, infra, col. 1656; and Conron v. Conron, infra, col. 1659.

—— Effect of "Herein" and "Hereinafter" or Equivalents.]—Testator directed his trustees to sell his real and personal estate, and to apply the produce in paying his debts and the legacies thereinafter given. The testator afterwards gave legacies by codicils, one of which was duly attested:—Held, that only the legacies in the will were payable out of the real estate. Strong v. Ingram, 6 Sim. 197.

Trust of a term by will to pay the several legacies thereby given, and also the several other legacies hereinafter bequeathed. The subsequent part of the will, reciting that the legacies given by the will to the testator's daughters were not an adequate provision, gave each of them a further legacy, in addition to the said legacies given them respectively by the will. The legacies by the codicil are not charged upon the real estate. Bonner v. Bonner, 13 Ves. 379.

A testator, having bequeathed pecuniary legacies, some of them to charities, gave the residue of his real and personal estate to trustees to sell and thereout to pay his debts and the legacies therein mentioned, and further directed the charitable bequests to be paid, and that the proceeds of such part of his estate as the law did not permit to be given to charities should be first applied in payment of such of the legacies therein mentioned as were not given to charities. He directed that no charitable bequest should be legally payable till six months after his decease. By a codicil he gave other charitable legacies, and the residue of his property among charitable legatees:—Held, that the words "herein mentioned" included the legacies given by the will and codicil, taken together:—Held, secondly, that, having regard to the distinction made in the will between property capable of being bequeathed for charitable purposes, and property not so applicable, the word "property" in the codicil signified such property as was legally applicable to the purpose of the legacy:—Held, thirdly, that the charitable legacies were not payable on the expiration of six months, but in the ordinary way. Jauncey v. Att.-Gen., 3 Giff. 308; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 6; 5 L. T. 374; 10 W. R. 129.

M., being indebted in 25*l.*, the balance of a larger sum, to a female, E., directed by his will all his just debts and legacies thereinbefore mentioned to be paid. Afterwards E. married, and then M., by codicil, gave E. a legacy of 100*l.*:—Held, that the charge in the will of legacies "thereinbefore" mentioned could not be extended to the legacy given by a codicil, and that the legacy was to be taken in satisfaction of the debt. Edmunds v. Lowe, 3 K. & J. 318; 26 L. J., Ch. 432; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 508; 5 W. R. 444.

The will of a testator directed all his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and legacies thereby given, to be paid as soon as conveniently might be after his decease, and then followed, "and I charge my debts and legacies on my real and personal estate":—Held, that the charge on real estates extended to a legacy given by codicil in trust for A. for life, and that such construction was not cut down by his directing the stocks to be appropriated for payment of it to return and become part of the residue of his personal estate. Rooke v. Worrall, 11 Sim. 216.

A testatrix, by her will, gave all her real and personal property to trustees, whom she had appointed executors, upon trust thereout, in the first place to pay her debts, and in the next place to pay the legacies which she should give by any codicil. The testatrix, by a codicil, devised to her sister an estate, called "The Tradeswill Estate," "for her life: at her death, to be sold for the payment of legacies"; and thereby also gave to various parties legacies amounting in the whole to above 50,000*l.* The testatrix's personal estate proving insufficient for the payment of her debts and legacies:—Held, that the testatrix had not, by her codicil, made the Tradeswill estate the primary fund for the payment of legacies, but that the sole effect of the direction in the codicil to sell at the death of her sister was to exempt her sister's life estate from the payment of legacies; and that, with that exception, the real estate was an auxiliary fund for the payment of legacies. Whieldon v. Spode, 21 L. J., Ch. 913; 16 Jur. 281.

—— Effect of Unattested Codicil.]—Testator, by his will, gave an annuity, payable out of his freehold, copyhold, and personal estate, and by a codicil, not duly attested, revoked the annuity:—Held, that this was a subsisting charge upon the freeholds. Mortimer v. West, 2 Sim. 274; 29 R. R. 104.

A testator by a will duly attested gave all his real and personal estate to trustees to convert into money and pay his debts, and then to appropriate and take out of his said trust-moneys 1,000*l.*, which he gave to the plaintiff. By a codicil not properly attested so as to pass real estate, he revoked the legacy:—Held, that on this will the testator had made his real and personal estate a common fund for payment of this legacy, that the revocation was inoperative as regarded the real estate, and that the plaintiff was entitled in the proportion which the real estate bore to the personal. Stocker v. Harbin, 3 Beav. 479.

B. devised an estate to A. for life, with remainder in tail male, and by an unattested codicil directed certain weekly allowances to be paid by whomsoever inherited the estate. To a bill against the tenant in tail for payment of one of the weekly allowances, a general demurrer was held good. Middlebrook v. Bromley, 2 N. R. 224; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 614; 11 W. R. 712.

A testator made a will and codicil; the former was attested so as to pass real estate, but the latter was not. By his will he bequeathed a legacy of 3,000*l.*, and charged it on his real, "in aid of his personal estate." And he devised his real and personal estate to trustees, charged with his legacies thereout, by mortgage, sale, or other disposition, to pay the legacy of 3,000*l.* By the codicil he reduced the legacy to 2,000*l.*:—Held, that the codicil, though not properly attested, effected the reduction. Coverdale v. Lewis, 30 Beav. 409; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 351; 10 W. R. 307.

When a sum of money is given originally out of land, a will with that charge must be equally executed with the same solemnity, because it is considered as part of the land. When a first will charges real estate with legacies, and a second gives general pecuniary ones, though not executed in form, yet the later legacies will be equally a charge upon the land. The rule is the same as to revocations of a devise of lands, and a revocation of a sum of money charged on lands; they must be revoked in the same manner. Brudenell v. Boughton, 2 Atk. 272.

Where real estate is charged with legacies generally by will duly attested, legacies may be revoked or charged by an unattested instrument. Buckeridge v. Ingram, 2 Ves. 665. And see Hannis v. Packer, Ambl. 556.

Testator, by will duly attested, gave an annuity to his daughter, charged on his real estate in aid of his personal; by codicil not attested he gave his real and personal estate to his mother for life; during her life the personal estate is discharged from the annuity, but it remains a charge on the real. Id. 652.

Legacy given by an unattested codicil is within a general charge, in the will, of debts and legacies to be given by codicil, on the real estate, though the will gives no legacies. An annuity is a legacy for this purpose. Swift v. Leach, 1 Jur. 507.

Devise and bequest of all the testator's real and personal estate in Grenada, to pay all such annuities, legacies, or bequests as he should give or bequeath to be paid out of or charged upon his real or personal estate in Grenada, by his will, or any codicil, whether witnessed or not. A charge by an unattested codicil is void, this being not a charge by the will of legacies, but a reservation by a will, executed according to the statute, of a power to charge by an unattested paper. As to the objection that the real estate was not charged as a subsidiary fund to the general personal estate, quære. Rose v. Cunyngham, 12 Ves. 29.

A testator directed his real and personal estate to be sold, and the moneys arising from the sale to be applied in the first place to the payment of his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and also the legacies which he might bequeath by any codicil or codicils to his will. He afterwards gave an annuity to his wife by an unattested codicil :—Held, that the annuity was well charged on the real estate. Swift v. Nash, 2 Keen, 20 ; 6 L. J., Ch. 363 ; 1 Jur. 557.

Testator having, by will duly executed, charged upon his real estate the legacies thereby given, afterwards gave legacies by several unattested codicils, and finally executed a codicil duly executed and attested, varying the appointment of trustees and executors, and revoking some legacies given to them by some of the codicils :—Held, that the legacies given by unattested codicils were not charged upon the estate. Radburn v. Jervis, 3 Beav. 450.

If a testator, by will properly attested, charge real estate with legacies he shall after give by codicil, a legacy by codicil not attested is good. Inchiquin v. French, Ambl. 41 ; Ridgw. 230 ; 1 Cox, 1.

Where a testamentary instrument, incomplete as a will, appears, on the face of it, to be intended as a substitution for a former complete will, the legacies given by the latter only shall take effect, notwithstanding both instruments are proved in the spiritual court ; but where a former will makes a charge of legacies generally on land, and a subsequent will, giving legacies, is not attested so as to affect the land, yet the general charge of the former shall include the legacies given by the latter : otherwise where the charge is made of particular legacies. Jackson v. Jackson, 2 Cox, 35.

A codicil does not revoke or alter a will to a greater extent than was intended. A testator, by his will, gave certain legacies, exclusively charged on real estate. By a codicil, after reciting so much of the will as related to those legacies, he revoked that part of his will, and in lieu of the legacies therein given gave smaller ones. The object of the codicil being only to alter the amount of the legacies :—Held, that it could not extend to charge the personal estate, and not being attested by three witnesses, could not alter the legacies charged on the real estate. Kirke v. Kirke, 4 Russ. 435 ; 6 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 143.

A testator gave his freeholds and copyholds upon trust for his son, a lunatic, absolutely ; and, in case he should not recover, upon trust for sale, the proceeds to be held upon trusts to pay certain legacies without any gift of the residue. By an unattested codicil he gave other legacies in the like event, and made three persons his residuary legatees :—Held, that although the unattested codicil did not affect the freeholds, the legacies thereby given were a charge on the copyholds, and that the residuary legatees therein named were also entitled to the proceeds of the sale of the copyholds. Wildes v. Davies, 1 Sm. & G. 475 ; 22 L. J., Ch. 495 ; 1 W. R. 253.

—— Effect of Revocation of Devise of Lands charged.]—Where a testatrix devised real estate to A., charged with certain annuities and legacies, and by a codicil revoked the devise of the lands to A., and devised them to B., and "confirmed her will in every other respect" :—Held, that the lands were charged in the hands of B. A testatrix, by her will, devised the lands of D. to trustees to the use of her son Y. for life, with remainder to his sons in tail. She then bequeathed a number of annuities to different members of her family, and among the rest an annuity of 100*l.* to H. ; and she directed that these annuities should be paid without any deduction, and charged them "on the lands so devised to the use of my son Y." ; and on the residue of certain other lands which she directed to be sold. The testatrix subsequently made a codicil to her will, in which the following clause occurred : "And whereas I did, by my said will, give the lands of D. to the use of my son Y. as therein, now I do hereby revoke so much of my said will as gives said lands of D. to my said son Y., and I direct the trustees shall stand seised of the said last-mentioned lands to the use of my daughter H. (the annuitant) for her life, in addition to what I have left her by my said will" : —Held, that the testatrix merely meant to substitute one devisee for the other, and did not intend to discharge the lands of D. from contributing to the payment of the annuities, with which, by the will, they were charged. A codicil is never held to revoke a will further than is necessary to give effect to the intentions of the testator. Young v. Hassard, 1 Dr. & War. 638.

A testator bequeathed one moiety of his personal estate to pay certain legacies, and then to pay the residue of such moiety to J. J., and in the event of the death of J. J., living H., then over ; provided if J. J. left a widow, to pay to her 200*l.*, part of the moneys so given to J. J. By a codicil the testator revoked the gift of the moiety to J. J. :—Held, that the 200*l.* legacy to his widow was revoked by the revocation of the gift of the moneys out of which it was to be paid. Grice v. Funnell, 1 Sm. & G. 130.

A testator devised an estate, X., and other estates to A., charged with annuities, and an estate, Y., and his residuary, real, and personal estate to B., subject to the payment of his debts, funeral expenses, and legacies. He afterwards revoked so much of the second devise as included Y., and devised it, subject to the same annuities and in the same manner as the estate X. :—Held, that the charge of debts, &c., on Y. was revoked. Ravens v. Taylor, 4 Beav. 425. And see Hills v. Wirley, infra, col. 1665.

Property chargeable—Order of Application—Personalty primarily liable.]—Held, that under a bequest of real and personal estates, upon trust to receive the rents and profits, and to pay legacies and annuities, and vest the surplus rents, &c., for other purposes, the personal estate is the primary fund liable to the payments, there being no direction to discharge it or to sell the real estate so as to constitute a mixed fund. Boughton v. Boughton, 1 H. L. Cas. 406. Varying S. C., nom. Boughton v. James, 1 Coll. C. C. 26 ; 8 Jur. 329. And see Bright v. Larcher, supra, col. 1638.

—— Where Mixed Fund created.]—In order that legacies charged upon real estate may be payable out of the real and personal estate pro ratâ it is not necessary that the testator should have directed an absolute conversion of the real estate. It is sufficient that he has shewn an intention of creating a mixed fund of realty and personalty out of which the legacies are to be paid. A testator gave his real and personal estate to trustees, and empowered them to sell the real estate, and he directed that an annuity should be paid out of the annual income of the estate ; and he also directed certain legacies to be paid out of his trust estates, moneys, and premises. He was intestate as to the residuary estate by reason of the death, in his lifetime, of the residuary devisee and legatee :—Held, that the legacies were payable out of the real and personal estate rateably. Allan v. Gott, 41 L. J

Ch. 571; L. R. 7 Ch. 439; 26 L. T. 412; 20 W. R. 427.

—— Where Realty charged in Aid of Personalty.]—Devise of freehold estate in trust to sell and apply the money towards payment of the legacies; the residue of the personal estate, after payment of debts, legacies, &c., upon trust to convert all the said residue of his personal estate into ready money, to be laid out in freehold property, to be settled. The personal estate leaving a residue beyond the charges, the real estate a resulting trust for the heir-at-law, and charged with the legacies, not primarily, but only as an auxiliary fund to the personal estate. Maugham v. Mason, 1 V. & B. 410; 12 R. R. 251.

Testator gave 1,500*l.* to his illegitimate son, to be paid, with interest, within twelve months next after his decease, and he charged that sum upon his farm called L., which, he added, was then rented for 100*l.* a year, and which he purchased before his marriage, and was not, in settlement or otherwise, incumbered. And he gave other legacies, and directed, as to some of them, that they should be paid by his executors, and he charged his real estates with the payment of his funeral and testamentary expenses and debts, in aid of his personal estate. By a codicil he confirmed, to his illegitimate son, all devises, gifts, by his will, made to him, and desired that all his (the testator's) debts, annuities, and legacies (except two annuities thereby given to A. E. and S. D.) should be paid, in the first place, out of any moneys he might die possessed of in the 3 per cent. consols, as far as they would extend, and he charged his farm called R. with the payment of all such debts, annuities, and legacies (except as aforesaid), in aid of his moneys in the 3 per cents.:—Held, that the 1,500*l.* was not charged on the farm called L. exclusively, and in exoneration of the testator's personal estate; but that the consols were to be applied first, the farm called R. next, the testator's general personal estate next, and the farm called L. last, in payment of it. Evans v. Evans, 17 Sim. 102; 14 Jur. 383.

Where there is a charge in the will of legacies upon real estate, they are at first directed to be paid out of the realty, the personal fund proving deficient. Minor v. Wicksteed, 3 Bro. C. C. 627.

E. B. by his will bequeathed certain legacies, including an annuity to his wife. And he directed that his trustees and executors should stand possessed of the net proceeds arising from the sale and conversion of his real and residuary personal estate (after and subject to the payment of his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses and legacies, and after making due provision for the said annuity) upon trust for E. B. K. And he directed that after the death of his wife the fund set apart to answer the said annuity should be held in trust for the Royal Agricultural Benevolent Institution of England:—Held, that the annuity fund was not payable rateably out of the blended fund constituting the residue, but was payable primarily out of the testator's personalty, and was only charged on the testator's realty in aid of his personalty. Elliott v. Dearsley (supra, col. 1644) followed. Dicta of Jessel, M.R., in Gainsford v. Dunn (supra, col. 1640) doubted. Boards, In re, Knight v. Knight, 64 L. J., Ch. 305; [1895] 1 Ch. 499; 13 R. 278; 72 L. T. 220; 43 W. R. 472.

A testator after directing his executors (whom he also appointed trustees) to pay his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, and giving various pecuniary legacies, gave all his personal estate and effects, except money or securities for money, to R.; and he gave and devised all the rest, residue, and remainder of his estate, both real and personal, to his trustees, upon trust thereout, in the first place, to pay two specified sums, and as to the residue thereof, or such part or parts thereof as might lawfully be appropriated for the purpose, for such one or more, or any hospital of a charitable nature, and in such proportions as they in their uncontrolled discretion should think fit. It was held by the court of appeal that the gift to R. was not specific, but that all the pecuniary legacies were payable in full before she could be entitled to anything under the bequest to her. The personal estate (including that bequeathed to R.), was insufficient for the payment of the legacies, and the real estate had to be sold to make good the deficiency. After the legacies had been paid there remained a surplus of the proceeds of the sale of the real estate:—Held, that the real estate was charged with the payment of the legacies only in aid of the personal estate, and that R. was not entitled to be recouped pro tanto out of the surplus the loss which she had suffered by the application of the personal estate bequeathed to her in the payment of legacies. Ovey, In re, Broadbent v. Barrow, 55 L. J., Ch. 103; 31 Ch. D. 113; 53 L. T. 723; 34 W. R. 100. See Taylor, In re, infra; and Whieldon v. Spode, supra, col. 1647.

—— Where Personalty originally Sufficient, but Wasted.]—A testator gave his real estate for a term of 800 years to A., his son, and B., a stranger, to secure payment of so much of his debts and legacies as his personal estate should be insufficient to pay. Subject thereto he gave his residuary real estate to A. and C., another son. A. and C. were his executors; they paid his debts and legacies, except two legacies of 1,500*l.* each. At the testator's death, his personal estate was sufficient to pay the two 1,500*l.* legacies; but the executors wasted it, and the two legacies of 1,500*l.* each were not paid. A. and C. (B. being dead) made two mortgages: one to persons who knew, or had the means of knowing, that the advance was for the personal use of A. and C., but the money was paid into the hands of A. alone, the surviving trustee of the term; the other mortgage was to a person without notice of any improper application of the money; and the deed recited truly that the debts were paid, but untruly that the two legacies not paid were provided for, and the trusts satisfied:—Held, that the legacies were charged on the term, though the testator's personal estate was sufficient at his death. Howard v. Chaffer, Howard v. Robinson, 2 Dr. & Sm. 236; 32 L. J., Ch. 686; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 767; 11 W. R. 1057.

—— As between Debts and Legacies.]—A testator, by his will, made in 1882, charged his copyhold and freehold estates with his debts and funeral expenses and legacies, and gave the residue of his personal property to the trustees of the deed-poll upon trust to build a hospital on the site of premises conveyed by a deed-poll. The testator died within twelve months from the execution of the deed-poll, which therefore became void under the Statute of Mortmain. Upon further consideration in an administration action :—Held, that the legacies must be paid out of the proceeds of the real estate, and the debts and funeral expenses, in the first instance, out of the personalty. Taylor, In re, Martin v. Freeman, 58 L. T. 538.

A testator devised his estates to his eldest son, but charged certain of them with legacies to his younger children, specifically charging one of such legacies, amounting to 10,000*l.*, upon one of his estates, and another legacy of 20,000*l.* upon a different estate. He then made other devises and bequests, and directed that a certain house and his residuary property should be sold in payment of his debts, and in ease of his real estates. The legatee of the 10,000*l.* filed a bill to have the trusts of the will declared and executed. Creditors were directed to come in, and the estates specifically charged with the payment of the debts were found not sufficient for that purpose. The court afterwards directed a reference to the master to take an account of the debts, and that in taking such account he should report the order and priority of such debts and incumbrances, and particularly that he should inquire and report whether any and what sum remained due to the person entitled to the legacy of 20,000*l.* and the priority thereof. This legacy had been assigned to trustees under a marriage settlement, and they were not parties to the suit, but went in with others upon the reference to the master. The master made a report of the amount of the debts, and found that this legacy was a charge affecting this particular estate, but was only next in priority after the payment of the judgment and bond debts of the testator remaining unpaid by sale of the other fee-simple estates of testator :—Held, that such finding was right. Bouverie v. Norbury, 3 Cl. & F. 247 ; 9 Bligh (N.S.) 611.

Exoneration of Personal Estate.]—Testator gave to his wife an annuity of 60*l.*, issuing and payable out of his real estate thereinafter devised to his three sons. He then gave to his daughter A. a legacy of 500*l.*, and to each of his sons H. and S., and to each of his daughters M. and E., a legacy of 1,600*l.*, to be paid, with interest, two years after his death. And he thereby charged and made chargeable his real estate, thereinafter devised to his three sons J., T., and F., with the payment of the said legacies and the interest thereon. He gave his personal estate (charged with the payment of debts, funeral and testamentary expenses and expenses of proving his will) unto his said sons J., T., and F., and gave all his residuary real estate (subject to mortgages, and subject to and charged with the payment of the annuity of 60*l.*, and the legacies to his sons H. and S., and his daughters M. and E., and also the legacy of 500*l.* to his daughter A., and subject also, in aid of his personal estate, to the payment of his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and the expenses of proving his will) equally between his said sons J., T., and F. :—Held, that the legacies were charged on the real estate exclusively in exoneration of the personal estate. Needham, In re, Robinson v. Needham, 54 L. J., Ch. 75.

By his will a testator bequeathed a legacy of 16,000*l.* to trustees for his daughter A. during her life, and after her death directed that the legacy should revert to and be added to his general residuary personal estate and go as the same was bequeathed by his will. The testator then gave his general residuary personal estate to B. The testator devised his estates in certain places to other trustees as a fund for the discharge of his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and his pecuniary legacies in aid of his personal estate, with power to his trustees, if they thought it expedient or necessary, either before or after his residuary personal estate should be exhausted, to raise money for those purposes by sale or mortgage, and subject thereto, upon trust for B. in fee. The personal estate of the testator was insufficient for the payment of his debts and legacies, and B. supplied such deficiency, including the annual payments to A. in respect of her legacy. A. survived both the testator and B. On the death of B. the question arose whether, as the testator's personalty was insufficient for the payments before mentioned, the testator intended that the corpus of the legacy should be raised out of the real estate devised to B. for the benefit of B., who was the testator's residuary legatee :—Held (following Johnson v. Webster, 4 De G. M. & G. 474), that the words "revert to and be added to my general residuary estate," in the will, shewed that the testator meant the legacy to be restored to the funds from which it was taken ; and that it was not to be taken from the real estate merely for the purpose of augmenting the personal estate: —Held, also, that B. had a vested interest in the charge on the real estate of which he was absolute owner ; and that such interest was in immediate contact with his ownership of the inheritance in the land :—Held, further, that, inasmuch as the charge was not raised during the lifetime of B., and that now it was neither necessary nor expedient to raise it, the corpus of the legacy was not raisable out of the real estate for the benefit of B.'s personal estate at the instance of those who were entitled to his personal estate. Somerset (Duke), In re, Thynne v. St. Maur, 55 L. T. 753. See Lloyd v. Lloyd, ante, col. 1141.

The testator bequeathed certain pecuniary legacies, and he gave his leasehold estates to his executors, to sell and apply the proceeds in part payment of the legacies :—Held, that the leaseholds were to be applied, as far as they would extend, in payment of the legacies, and that the deficiency was to be paid out of the general personal estate. Bunting v. Marriott, 19 Beav. 163.

—— Lapsed Bequest.]—A testatrix devised her real estate to trustees in trust for sale, and directed them out of the proceeds to pay her funeral and testamentary expenses, debts and legacies, and pay the residue to a class of persons. She then directed her trustees, who were also her executors, to sell her leaseholds, and if the sale moneys of the real estate were insufficient to pay her debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and legacies, to apply so much of the proceeds of the sale of the leaseholds as should be sufficient for that purpose, and to pay the residue, or if no part was required for the above purpose, the whole of the proceeds to another class of persons. She then bequeathed to her trustees "all my personal estate," upon trust to call it in and convert it into money, and after payment of the expenses of such calling in and conversion, to pay the proceeds to the churchwardens of C. for charitable purposes. Part of the personal estate consisted of a mortgage debt, as to which the charitable bequest failed, and the crown became entitled, there being no next of kin :—Held, that there was upon the will a sufficient indication of intention that the general personal estate should be exonerated from debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and legacies out of the real estate; and if that was insufficient, out of the leaseholds; but that this right to exoneration failed as regarded the property which went to the crown, and that there was no distinction in this respect between the freeholds and leaseholds. Browne v. Groombridge (4 Madd. 495), in which a direction to exonerate the general personal estate out of a specific fund of personalty was held to enure for the benefit of persons who took by lapse, not followed:—Held, therefore, that the debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and legacies, must be apportioned rateably between the pure and impure personalty, including the leaseholds; that the real estate and then the leaseholds were to be applied in exonerating the pure personalty from its proportion of debts, &c., and that the charity took the pure personalty, subject to so much of that proportion as the freehold and leasehold estates were insufficient to satisfy, and that the crown took the impure personalty (other than leaseholds) subject to its proportion of debts, &c. Meere, In re, Kilford v. Blaney, 55 L. J., Ch. 185; 31 Ch. D. 56; 54 L. T. 287; 34 W. R. 109—C. A.

And see EXECUTOR AND ADMINISTRATOR.

Agreement between Residuary Devisee and Trustee ineffectual to Re-adjust Burden of Charge.]—A testator gave a legacy of 4,000*l.* to trustees for the benefit of certain persons in succession, and directed that in case his personal estate should be insufficient, the amount should be raised out of his real estate. B. was residuary devisee and legatee. The trusts having been duly administered, with the exception of raising the 4,000*l.* B. was let into possession of the real and personal estate. The interest on the legacy was regularly paid. B. subsequently executed a deed, to which the surviving trustee of the testator was a party, whereby it was agreed that certain of the estates should be discharged from the liability to pay the legacy, and that the remaining estates should alone be charged with such payment. B. died, having devised some of the real estates. Upon a bill to obtain payment of the 4,000*l.* and interest:—Held, that the dealings with the property had not affected the charge created by the testator, and that both the real and personal estate remained liable for the payment of the legacy; that if the personal estate was originally sufficient to pay the legacy, then the residuary legatee had made his own assets liable; that if insufficient, then the real and personal estate which was handed over to the residuary legatee was liable, the personal estate remaining in specie being the fund primarily liable. Hepworth v. Hill, 31 L. J., Ch. 569; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 960; 6 L. T. 403; 10 W. R. 477.

What Property Charged—Estate in Remainder.]—Devise of lands to A. for life, remainder to such child or children as should be living at his death, and to their heirs, A. paying 40*l.* to R. This is a charge, not only on A.'s estate for life, but also on the remainder. Sadd v. Carter, Pre. Ch. 27.

A testator, after a specific bequest and devise, devised all his other real property to his wife for life or widowhood, and after her decease or second marriage he devised part thereof to his eldest son, but subject to the payment of an annuity to his daughter, and he directed that such annuity should be payable in equal half-yearly payments, the first to become due six months after his decease:—Held, that the annuity commenced at the death of the testator, and was payable from that time, but was chargeable only on the reversionary interest. Jackson v. Hamilton (post, col. 1675) approved; Bywater, In re, Bywater v. Clarke (ante, cols. 698–9) distinguished. Williams, In re, Williams v. Williams, 64 L. J., Ch. 349; 13 R. 316; 72 L. T. 324; 43 W. R. 375.

—— Estate preceding Fee.]—Devise to trustees, from and immediately after determination of precedent estate, to use of A. in fee, charged and chargeable with legacies, to be paid in twelve months, they run over the precedent estates as well as the fee. Carter v. Carter, 1 Ves. Sen. 168.

A. gave all his real and personal estate to his wife for life, and after her death, to her son absolutely, chargeable with payment of a legacy of 200*l.* to his daughter, within six months after his death, and with the payment of his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses. There was no personal estate:—Held, that the legacy was charged on the life interest as well as on the remainder of the real estate, and ought, with the arrears of interest for six years, to be raised by mortgage of the property, and that the remainderman ought to be recouped out of the rents and profits, to the full amount of the arrears of interest raised out of the estate. Makings v. Makings, 1 De G. F. & J. 355.

—— Residue where Property ceases to exist.]—Legacies to be paid from a farm when A.'s son attains twenty-one, the farm not being carried on, are not to be paid out of the residue. Mayott v. Mayott, 2 Bro. C. C. 125.

—— Contingent Interest where Contingency fails in Part.]—One devises lands to his son by his second wife in tail male, remainder to his eldest son by his first wife, provided that if the land should come to his eldest son, that then he or his heirs should pay 1,000*l.* to the testator's daughters within four months after the estate should come to them; and in default of payment, the trustees to enter and raise the money. The son by the first wife dies leaving a son; the son by the second wife suffers a recovery of a moiety of the land, and dies without issue, so that the moiety only of the premises comes to the son of the son by the first wife. Though no part of the premises ever came to the eldest son, yet the moiety of the land shall be liable to the payment of the whole 1,000*l.* without any apportionment. Hooley v. Booth, 2 Vern. 359.

A testator by will gives his moiety of an estate called H. to his sister and her children, and subsequently by a codicil, which purports to give them the whole of that estate if he shall possess it at his death, charges it with a sum of money to legatees; at the date of the will and codicil he was owner of only one moiety of H., but before his death he acquired the other; although the devise fails as to the after-purchased moiety, the charge is good for the whole sum, and equity will make no apportionment. Lushington v. Sewell, 1 Russ. & M. 169.

—— Whole Burden thrown on One of Two Estates.]—A bankrupt, to whom two estates were devised, charged with the payment of legacies, had mortgaged each of them separately, and the assignees sold the estates subject to the unpaid legacies and the mortgages. One of the estates was sold for 1,000*l.* more than the amount of the mortgage money with which it was charged, and which surplus was sufficient to pay the legacies; but the proceeds of the other estate were scarcely sufficient to satisfy the mortgage on it:—Held, on the application of the mortgagees of the last mentioned estate, that the outstanding legacies should be charged exclusively on the surplus proceeds of the first estate. Hartley, Ex parte, 1 Deac. 288; 2 Mont. & Ayr. 496; 5 L. J., Bk. 13.

—— Leaseholds whether charged with Realty.]—A., in 1845, devised "all his real estate lying and being within F.," to trustees "to have and to hold unto them and the survivor of them for ever, or otherwise according to the several and respective natures and tenures thereof." He then directed the trustees to sell his real estate, subject nevertheless to legacies; and after directing his debts to be paid out of his personal estate, he directed that if insufficient for that purpose, the deficiency should be paid "out of the rents, issues, and profits of his real estate." He was possessed of freehold property and of leasehold property. Both estates, although not quite contiguous, were occupied by one tenant, at one entire rent. The question arose whether the leasehold property was chargeable pro ratâ with the freehold property, with the legacies:—Held, that the legacies were chargeable on both the freehold and leasehold estates rateably. Swift v. Swift, 29 L. J., Ch. 121; 1 L. T. 150; 8 W. R. 100—L.C.

A testator devised and bequeathed all his real, freehold and leasehold property in land, houses, or fee-farm rents to his son L., and after giving certain legacies to his four daughters and others, he directed that his said daughters should reside with L. while they remained unmarried, and in case of any of them not agreeing to do so, the testator directed as follows: "I direct that my son L. shall pay to them the annual sum of 200*l.*, said sum to be paid to them or any of them so long as they or any of them shall remain unmarried; and I charge all my real and freehold property with said annual sum of 200*l.*; and in case all my said daughters shall marry, then the said annual sum shall cease." The testator devised and bequeathed the residue of his property, real, freehold, and personal to L., subject to payment of his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and appointed L. his executor. The testator died possessed of freehold and leasehold property, as well as ordinary personalty:—Held, that the annuity was charged only on the freeholds, and not on the leaseholds or other personalty. Greer v. Waring, [1896] 1 Ir. R. 427.

—— Charged under Mistake.]—A testator devised his freehold estate to his widow, charged with a legacy to another, and also bequeathed to his widow his personal estate. The widow, by her will, gave a leasehold estate, part of the same property (erroneously describing it as a freehold), to A., subject, in conjunction with the freehold premises, to the legacy; and she devised the freehold premises to B., subject, with the premises devised to A., to the payment of the same legacy:—Held, that the fact of the testatrix having left the estates to A. and B. respectively, in the mistaken supposition that both estates were, under the will of the original testator, subject to the legacy, but which he had charged on the freehold only, was no ground for exonerating the estate bequeathed to A., for there was no reason to presume the testatrix would have apportioned her bounty differently if the mistake had not occurred. Westcott v. Cullifford, 3 Hare, 265; 13 L. J., Ch. 136; 8 Jur. 166.

—— English and Foreign Realty.]—B. gave all his real and personal estate (except his estates in Norway), to trustees to pay debts, legacies, and the incumbrances affecting his estates in England and Norway, and after payment of the debts and the legacies, he bequeathed all "the said residue," but not including his estates in Norway, directing payment thereout of certain sums of money to the persons mentioned. He then devised his estates in Norway to trustees, to pay debts and the incumbrances affecting the estates, if not extinguished out of his other property; and immediately from and after the payment of all his debts and the legacies therein before given by him, he directed his trustees to divide the rents equally amongst his children and the survivors during their lives, and, after the decease of the survivors, he devised his Norwegian estates to his sons in tail male:—Held, that the sums of money given were legacies, and were chargeable in the first instance on the English property, but if that should prove insufficient, then on the estates in Norway in aid of the English property. Hakewill v. White, 8 L. T. 529; 11 W. R. 609.

—— Will in Scotch Form.]—A domiciled Scotchman, by his will, devised and bequeathed to trustees all his real and personal estate, and after directing payment of his debts, testamentary and funeral expenses, and giving various legacies and annuities, directed the residue of his estate to be apportioned amongst certain charities. The testator's personal estate was more than sufficient to satisfy all his debts, testamentary and funeral expenses, and the legacies and annuities; his residuary estate comprised English and Scotch realty. By the law of Scotland, debts, testamentary and funeral expenses, and legacies, are a primary charge on personal estate, and annuities are a primary charge on heritable or real estate. The testator's heir-at-law claimed the English realty as undisposed of, on the ground that by English law it was not liable to contribute to the charities or annuities. It was conceded that the charitable gifts, so far as they were payable out of the English realty, were void:—Held, that the Scotch law of administration applied, and that the English realty, rateably with the Scotch realty, must contribute towards the annuities. Hewit, In re, Lawson v. Duncan, [1891] 3 Ch. 568; 65 L. T. 48.

Property specifically Devised — Presumption against Charge.] — Where there is a specific devise, or a specific legacy in a will, the presumption is that it is the intention of the testator that the devisee or legatee shall have it as it is given, in its integrity, and without derogation; and a general charge subsequently introduced into the will, which may in terms be capable of comprehending the specific devise or bequest, is not alone sufficient to take it away. A testator residing in Ireland, who was possessed of real and personal property, made his will in June, 1836, by which he devised freehold estates to trustees for a term of ninety-nine years, to pay an annuity to his wife, and another annuity to one of his sons for life; the estate, after the death of his son, to go to the sons of that son in tail male. He gave other lands, some freehold, some leasehold, to other sons; he created annuities and gave legacies; directed the different properties devised and bequeathed to fall, in certain events, into his residuary estate; and at the end of his will directed that "in case my personal and chattel property shall be inadequate to the payment of the pecuniary legacies bequeathed by this my will, the deficiency shall be paid out of my real and freehold estates, and I hereby charge and encumber the same with the payment thereof." In a codicil he said "I charge and encumber all my estates, of every description, both real and personal, with the following legacies"; and he gave to these legatees a power to distrain on any part of his estates or property, of every description, for the arrears of the interest due on the annuities given by the codicil:—Held, that the legacies were not charged on the specifically devised estates. Conron v. Conron, 7 H. L. Cas. 168.

There is no distinction between a residuary and a specific devise of real estate; every devise of land being in effect specific, inasmuch as a residuary devise will only pass such real estate as the testator had at the time of making his will, and will not pass as real estate subsequently acquired. When pecuniary legacies are charged upon real and personal estates, and there is a deficiency of personal assets, the real estates, as well those specifically devised as those devised under a general residuary devise, must make good the deficiency. Spong v. Spong, 1 Y. & J. 300. Reversed 3 Bli. (N.S.) 84; 1 Dow (N.S.) 365.

A mere charge of legacies on all the real and personal estate does not of itself create a charge on any specific devise or bequest; and the presumption, in the absence of the clear expression of intention to the contrary which is necessary to rebut it, is against general legacies being charged on specifically devised lands or on specific legacies. Campbell v. M'Conaghey, Ir. R. 6 Eq. 20.

—— Otherwise where Specific Devise Subsequent to Charge.]—A testator devised and bequeathed all his estates, real, freehold, and leasehold, to trustees, on trust to pay an annuity of 120*l.* a year among three of his children, A., B. and C.; the said annuities to be charged on all his said estates; and after giving certain pecuniary legacies, he devised to his trustees a certain farm of land, held in fee-simple, to be divided between his two sons, P. and M., and devised to his trustees certain other lands to the use that his daughter R. should receive an annuity of 50*l.*, to be charged on the said lands; and subject thereto, to the use of his son P.; and he devised certain other lands to his trustees, to the use that his daughter J. should receive an annuity of 50*l.*, to be charged on the said lands, and subject thereto to the use of his son M. After certain specific bequests, the testator bequeathed all the residue and remainder of his personalty not otherwise disposed of—three-fourths to his sons P. and M., and one-fourth to be divided amongst three of his daughters:—Held, that the annuity of 120*l.* a year was charged upon, and payable out of, all the testator's real, freehold, and leasehold estates, including those specifically devised. Spong v. Spong (supra) and Conron v. Conron (supra) distinguished. Cornwall v. Saurin, 17 L. R., Ir. 595—C. A.

When legacies are by a will charged upon all the testator's real estate, and the will afterwards goes on to dispose specifically of parts of the real estate, the charge will, in the absence of anything to lead to a contrary conclusion, attach upon the lands specifically devised. M'Carthy v. M'Cartie, [1897] 1 Ir. R. 86.

Legacies were charged upon the personal estate of a testator, and the will provided that if the personalty should be insufficient the legacies should become a charge upon the realty. At the death of the testator the personalty was sufficient to meet the legacies, but at the date when payment was claimed by the legatees it was insufficient:—Held, that the charge on the realty took effect. Richardson v. Morton (infra, col. 1667) dissented from. Ib.—C. A.

—— Or where Intention Expressed or Implied.]—A husband, by will dated in 1857, bequeathed to his wife all sums of money that had come to his hands as part of her patrimony for her sole use and benefit, with the option of leaving it invested at 5 per cent. to be paid her quarterly, or if she wished to draw it out, then the property most suitable for sale to be disposed of to raise the amount due to her, being in fact a charge upon the property; and, if she so desired, this, as well as all just debts and obligations due from him, to be discharged as the first act of his executors:—Held, that the wife's patrimony was to be treated as a debt, and a charge on the specifically devised property as well as the rest of the property. Mannox v. Greener, L. R. 14 Eq. 456; 27 L. T. 408.

Testator directed that all his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses (not mentioning legacies) should be paid out of his personal estate. He then gave a number of legacies, and directed that if one of the legacies should fail, it should fall into his "residuary estate." He then devised all his freehold and leasehold hereditaments in the parishes of B., L., and R., "and all the rest, residue, and remainder of" his real and personal estate, to trustees, upon trust to make a weekly payment to his wife during her life, and subject thereto to invest the residue, and after his wife's decease, as to all his freeholds, and all his leaseholds, and all the residue and remainder of his estate and effects, to stand possessed thereof upon certain trusts. The personal estate, and the real estate other than the real estate in the parishes of B., L., and R., were insufficient to pay the legacies:—Held, that the legacies were a charge on the real estate in the parishes of B., L., and R. Bray v. Stevens, 12 Ch. D. 162.

A general charge by will of debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, and also legacies upon the whole of the testator's real and personal estate and effects, has the effect of charging the legacies upon specifically devised realty. Emmerton, In re, 3 De G. J. & S. 338.

A testatrix bequeathed to her trustees certain specified moneys, upon trust, "after payment thereout, in the event of my predeceasing my husband, of my debts and funeral expenses as well as of my testamentary expenses for the time being," for her nephew; and after giving certain pecuniary legacies she devised and bequeathed all her real and personal estate not thereinbefore otherwise bequeathed, to trustees, upon trust after her husband's death, to sell and convert, and out of the proceeds, "subject nevertheless to the bequest of moneys to my said nephew hereinbefore contained," to pay her debts, pecuniary legacies, and funeral and testamentary expenses, and invest the residue and stand possessed thereof upon certain trusts. The testatrix predeceased her husband:—Held, that the moneys comprised in the specific gift were primarily applicable to the payment of the debts and funeral and testamentary expenses of the testatrix. Hastings (Lady), In re, Hallett v. Hastings, 55 L. J., Ch. 278; 54 L. T. 75; 34 W. R. 452.

Marshalling.]—A testator, seised and possessed of real and personal estate, after bequeathing some pecuniary legacies (amongst others 250*l.* to his son C. E.), directed by his will that his trustees should, in the first place, pay out of his personal estate all debts of every kind, including specialty debts, in full exoneration of his real estate. He devised to his wife an annuity for life, and to his daughter and his five sons respectively perpetual annuities, which he directed to be first, second, third, and fourth charges on his real estate, and two small annuities to others. He appointed his son C. E. and another, trustees and executors of his will. The testator's real estate produced 660*l.* a year. It was subject to two mortgages of 6,000*l.* and 1,500*l.* and was sufficient to pay the annuities charged thereon by the will if the mortgages were paid out of the personal estate (8,000*l.*), which was more than sufficient to pay the mortgages and other debts. But if the mortgages were primarily payable out of the real estate, and the personal estate applied in exonerating the real estate therefrom, it might not reach the legacy of 250*l.* to C. E.:—Held, on the construction of the will, that the mortgages were primarily payable out of the lands mortgaged; that the annuities were charged by the will on the real estate alone; and also, that the application of Locke King's Act and the acts amending it did not preclude the annuitants from their equity to marshal the assets. Buckley v. Buckley, 19 L. R., Ir. 544.

Charge whether on Corpus or Income.]—Legacy given to be paid within one year without interest, and, in case of default or refusal, devise of life estate. The year expired: and on a bill filed, the court decreed a sale of the land to raise the legacy together with interest from the end of the year, and costs of the suit. Bell v. Shelton, 9 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 214.

—— Effect of Words "Rents and Profits."]—A direction to raise legacies out of the "rents and profits" of a real estate is a charge on the estate itself, and empowers the trustees to raise the money on it. Londesborough (Lord) v. Somerville, 19 Beav. 295.

Devise of Blackacre, subject to the debts of testator, to trustees, upon trust out of the "rents" and "issues" to pay to his three nieces a sum of 1,000*l.* at twenty-one or marriage, with interest from his death; and in case they should all die before twenty-one or marriage, he gave that sum to his nephew. The testator then bequeathed certain annuities, which he directed to be paid out of the "rents, issues, and profits" of Blackacre, and gave the annuitants power of distress and entry. He next devised ("after payment of the bequests and legacies aforesaid") Blackacre and all other his real and personal estate, subject to his debts, legacies, &c., to the same trustees, upon trust to pay 40*l.* annually for the maintenance of the nephew during minority; and directed the investment during that time of the surplus "rents, issues, proceeds, and profits" of Blackacre, and the other real and personal estate, with power to jointure, and with remainder over, in strict settlement to his (the nephew's) issue. At the date of the will the nephew was nineteen, and the nieces were respectively sixteen, twelve, and ten years of age. The testator left personalty to the value of 100*l.*:—Held, that the sum of 1,000*l.* bequeathed to the nieces might be raised by sale of Blackacre, and was not charged upon the annual rents only. Spring v. Stephenson, 1 Ir. Ch. R. 132.

A. bequeathed pecuniary legacies, to be paid after three years from his decease, but without interest. He then directed all his residuary personal estate to be accumulated to form a fund for payment of legacies; and in case of deficiency, charged his lands at U. with 1,000*l.* towards such deficiency; and in case of further deficiency, declared that the same should be raised out of the annual rents and profits of his lands at D., and subject thereto, he devised the lands at D. to M. for life remainder to his first, and other sons in tail. The personal estate and the 1,000*l.* being insufficient to pay the legacies:—Held, that the deficiency must be borne out of the rents and profits of the lands at D. as they accrued due, and that the tenant for life could not throw it as a charge on the corpus. Marsh v. Marsh, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 348.

A. devised land to trustees, on trust for B. (a minor) and his sons, in strict settlement, giving B. a power of charging the lands with 5,000*l.* for younger children, "to be raised by sale or mortgage of a competent part of the lands, or out of the rents and profits." A. then bequeathed legacies amounting in all to 12,000*l.*, to his grand-daughters, and directed that his executors "should place these legacies in some of the most eligible public funds," and accumulate such portions of the annual interest of them as was not required for the maintenance and education of the legatees. He then, after giving some small legacies, declared that if his assets, not thereby specifically disposed of, should prove insufficient for payment of his debts and legacies "it was his will that such deficiency should be made good and supplied by his trustees out of the annual rents and profits arising out of his estates, which he thereby desired that his trustees might receive and apply until such deficiency should be made good thereby, allowing, however, to his grandson B. so much as the trustee should deem expedient and fitting for his education and maintenance"; but if it should happen that there should be a surplus of his personal estate, after payment of his debts and legacies, he bequeathed such surplus among his several grandchildren above mentioned. The personal estate proved insufficient for the purposes contemplated. On the death of the testator, B. and the other grandchildren were made wards of court, and one of the executors acted as guardian. In the accounts and dealings in the matter of the minors, the legacies were treated as charged on the corpus of the estate, and B. paid interest on them until he died, leaving a son, who refused to pay these charges :—Held, that only so much of the legacies as the personalty was inadequate to pay was at all charged on the real estate ; that the charge was only on so much of the rents and profits of the real estate in the years immediately following the testator's death as would have made up the deficiency ; and that B.'s son was not bound by the dealings in the minor matter. Scott v. Clements, 8 Ir. Ch. R. 1.

Testator being seised in fee of freehold collieries, for which he received a rent, and also having shares in a leasehold colliery, directed that his legacies should be paid "out of the rents and profits of his collieries":—Held, that the freehold collieries only were charged. Shipperdson v. Tower, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 441 ; 6 Jur. 658.

Option to Trustees to pay Charges out of Income or Capital.]—By a deed, executed two years before his will, a testator devised estates in Glamorganshire, which comprised a canal, harbour and docks at Cardiff, and also estates in the counties of Bedford, Herts, and Durham, to A., B. and C., upon trusts out of rents and profits and sums to be raised by sale or mortgage, to pay expenses, salaries, mortgage debts, and the residue to the settlor. He empowered the trustees to enlarge, improve, and make additional works at Cardiff, and to manage the estates, with powers of leasing, sale, and mortgage. By his will, dated two months before the birth of his first son, the testator devised the Glamorganshire estates (except Cardiff Castle, park, and lands adjoining) to B. and C. and their heirs for a term of 1,500 years, and subject thereto to the use of his first son for life, remainder to his first and other sons in tail male. The trusts of the 1,500 years' term were declared to be, after payment out of income of certain annuities, of a specified sum for certain repairs, "by mortgaging or otherwise disposing of the term . . . or by, with and out of the rents, issues and profits of the same hereditaments . . . or by one . . . or all of the aforesaid ways and means, or by any other reasonable ways and means" to raise moneys sufficient for the above purposes, and with the moneys to arise from the sale of the estates in Bedford, Herts, and Durham, to satisfy the trusts of such sale. The trustees of the term were empowered to manage and improve the hereditaments comprised in the term in the same manner as the trustees of the deed. Testator then directed that, during the minority of a tenant for life of the Glamorganshire estates, D. and A. should enter into possession and receipt of the rents and profits of the same hereditaments, and thereout keep down the interest on mortgages, and maintain mansion-houses and grounds, and pay the surplus to the trustees of the 1,500 years' term for the purposes thereof, and "subject thereto, and after the trusts of the said term of 1,500 years shall be fully performed or satisfied," apply any annual sum they may think proper for the maintenance of the minor, and invest the surplus and accumulate the income for his benefit on attaining majority. The trusts of the proceeds of sale of the Bedford, Herts, and Durham estates were declared to be (1) to pay debts, including mortgage debts on the Glamorganshire estates ; and (2) to purchase lands to be settled as before. Six months after the birth of his first son, testator died, and during the minority the trustees of the 1,500 years' term laid out upwards of 1,000,000*l.* in enlarging and improving the canal, docks, and harbour, and in other works. This sum was largely paid out of income :—Held, that the expenditure was a charge on the corpus of the estates comprised in the term. Bute (Marquis), In re, Bute (Marquis) v. Ryder, 27 Ch. D. 196 ; 32 W. R. 996.

—— Timber cut where Time for Payment Limited.]—Devise of land upon which timber is growing, to A. for life, remainder to B. in fee, paying several legacies within a limited time ; and in default of payment the remainder in fee is devised over to C., he paying the legacies ; upon a bill brought by B., the court gave leave to B. to cut down timber for the payment of the legacies, though it was opposed by the tenant for life, and the devisee over. Claxton v. Claxton, 2 Vern. 152 ; Pre. Ch. 15 ; Gilb. Eq. R. 338.

—— Where Gift of Annuity.]—A testator bequeathed a pecuniary legacy and a life annuity to his widow, and gave all his real and personal estate to trustees, upon trust, subject to the payment of the legacy and annuity, to pay the rents and income to his daughter for life, and he directed that after her death the estate should be held in trust for his grandchild. He empowered his trustees to continue his business and to increase or diminish the real or personal estate employed therein at his death :—Held, that the annuity was a first charge upon the corpus of the real and personal estate. Webb, In re, Leedham, v. Patchett, 63 L. T. 545.

—— Bequest of Leaseholds "subject thereto."]—Bequest of leaseholds "upon trust, out of the rents and profits of the said lands, to pay my just debts, and subject thereto, upon trust to pay out of the rents and profits of the said lands, to my wife Jane Moore, during her life, an annuity or yearly rent-charge of 150*l.* per annum ; and, subject thereto, I bequeath the said lands of S., upon trust to receive the rents and profits, and to apply the same for the maintenance, &c., of my son," and on his attaining twenty-one, to assign him the lands and accumulations (if any) of the said rents and profits, &c. :—Held, that the annuity was a charge upon the corpus of the leaseholds. Moore's Estate, In re, 19 L. R., Ir. 365.

—— Direction to appropriate Fund—Deficiency in Income—Resort to Capital.]—A testator, after giving various pecuniary legacies, bequeathed to various persons annuities of 1*l.* a week, and he directed sufficient funds to be appropriated in the name of his trustee out of his personal estate to answer by means of the income the payment of the annuities, and he directed that on the dropping of the annuities the appropriated funds should follow the distribution of his residuary personal estate. The income of the personal estate, after payment of the pecuniary legacies, was insufficient to pay the annuities :—Held, that the annuities were payable, so far as necessary, out of the capital of the estate. Taylor, In re, Illsley v. Randall, 53 L. J., Ch. 1161 ; 50 L. T. 717 ; 33 W. R. 13.

And see ANNUITY.

Remedies of Legatee—Civil and Common Law.]—Suits for legacies charged upon personal estates were originally and properly cognisable in the ecclesiastical courts as a branch of that testamentary jurisdiction which undoubtedly belongs to them; but legatees instituting suits there, finding the authority of that court inadequate to enforce a full discovery of assets, were frequently driven into equity for that purpose, and therefore, to save circuity of suit, and in ease of the suitor, courts of equity exercised complete jurisdiction in the matter by enforcing the discovery and decreeing payment of the legacy. But in the exercise of this concurrent jurisdiction courts of equity necessarily adopted the law of that forum in which the suit was originally cognisable, and therefore it is that where a suit is instituted in equity for payment of a legacy charged upon the personal estate, if a question arise upon the right of the legatee to demand payment, it is governed by the civil law; whereas, if the legacy is charged on a real estate, the rules of the common law prevail, because in the latter case the jurisdiction of the temporal court is original and exclusive. Keily v. Monck, 3 Ridgw. P. C. 243.

—— Right to proceed at Law or in Equity.]—A married woman, who is entitled to a legacy charged on land, with powers of distress and entry, has a right to file a bill to obtain payment of the legacy, instead of proceeding at law, although the effect may be to give to her an equity to a settlement which she would not otherwise possess. Duncombe v. Greenacre, 6 Jur. (N.S.) 987; 8 W. R. 657.

—— Charge remains good as long as Property exists.]—As long as the fund itself exists upon which a legacy is charged, though it devolve either upon the heir or the executor, yet they take it, subject to the charge. Hills v. Wirley, 2 Atk. 605.

Where, by a prenuptial settlement, the property of the wife was secured to her, with power of disposition by will, and she bequeathed a portion of the fund to her son, and the residue to her husband, whom she constituted her executor:—Held, that upon his bankruptcy, and a sale of his real estate, the legatee had no claim, by privilege of hypotheque under the colonial (old French) law, against the proceeds in the hands of the sheriff, such fund not appearing to have arisen from any part of the wife's property. Smith v. Brown, 2 Moore, P. C. 35.

Devise to A., charged with a legacy to B.; A. sells the estate, without having discharged the legacy. On a bill filed by B. against A. for payment of the legacy, decree against the purchaser, with decree over against A., in case upon inquiry it should turn out that no deduction had been made from the purchase-money in respect of the legacy. Newman v. Kent, 1 Mer. 240; 15 R. R. 110.

—— Charge good though Devise fails.]—E. devises lands to his second son T., upon condition that T., or his heirs, should pay to T.'s children 90*l.*, to be equally divided among them, and on default of payment a clause of entry or distress. T. died in the testator's lifetime; the son of the eldest son of the testator entered on the lands as heir-at-law, and sold them. The legacy to the children of T., the testator's second son, is a continuing charge on the land in the hands of the purchaser, and they are entitled to be satisfied for the same, with interest. Wigg v. Wigg, 1 Atk. 382.

An estate was devised subject to payment of legacies to the plaintiff. The devisee died before the testatrix, and her heir-at-law entered into possession of the property, and in 1847 devised the same to the defendant upon certain trusts. The defendant having refused to pay the legacies, the estate was, on a claim filed by the legatees, ordered to be sold, and the proceeds paid into court. The fund produced by the sale was not sufficient to pay the legacies and the costs of the plaintiff. The court held that the defendant was entitled to costs out of the fund in priority to the plaintiff. Woollatt v. Woollatt, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1292.

—— though Condition becomes Impossible of Fulfilment.]—A testatrix devises real estate to trustees upon trust, to raise out of the same, by mortgage, a sum sufficient to pay certain legacies, which are made payable twelve months after her decease, and subject to that charge "in trust for R. N. in fee, provided that if R. N. shall not, within six calendar months after my decease, by writing under his hand and seal, &c., accept the devise, and shall not at the same time secure to the satisfaction of the said trustees, or pay to them a sum of money sufficient to satisfy the legacies," the trustees shall stand seised of the real estates upon trust to sell the same, and to distribute the money among the legatees, in proportion to the amount of their several legacies; R. N. died in the lifetime of the testatrix:—Held, that the legatees are entitled only to their legacies, and not to the whole produce of the estate. Davidson v. Davidson, 3 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 103.

—— Remainder Charged with Payment at Future Date—Charge Lost by Sale in Interim.]—Copyhold hereditaments were devised to A. for life, and, after his decease, the same were devised to B., his heirs and assigns, but subject to the payment of 400*l.* within three years from the death of A. to C., her executors, administrators, or assigns. B. sold the hereditaments for the full value, allowing nothing in respect of the legacy. A. afterwards died, but the legacy was not paid at the end of the three years. The purchaser sold the hereditaments to two persons, in equal shares, one of whom purchased the share of the other, and was admitted to the whole. C., the legatee of the 400*l.*, died, and her executor filed a bill against the party admitted to the copyholds, and against B., praying an account of what was due for the legacy, and a decree directing the defendants, or one of them, to pay. The case against B. was pressed at the bar, but against the other defendant was abandoned:—Held, that, though the will charged the hereditaments with the legacy, it did not charge B. personally with the same, and that, though he accepted the devise, he was not bound to pay the legacy when the three years expired; held, also, that B. was not a trustee for the plaintiff, the representative of C., of so much purchase-money as would answer the legacy. Jillard v. Edgar, 3 De G. & Sm. 502; 13 Jur. 1114.

—— Where Charge on Estate contracted to be Purchased.]—Pecuniary legacy directed to be paid by sale of an estate, which testator had contracted to purchase, is payable out of the testator's general assets, if contract cannot be completed. Fowler v. Willoughby, 2 Sim. & S. 354; 25 R. R. 219.

—— Against Executors—Deficiency of Assets for Debts no Answer.]—A bill being filed for payment of a legacy charged upon land, pursuant to a power, payment was decreed, although the defence set up was, that the assets were deficient for the payment of debts; the court holding that executors cannot make such defence, but that if this question had arisen upon a bill filed by the creditors, it might have received a different consideration. Frazer v. Frazer, Wall. Lyn. 231.

—— Where Devastavit.]—A legacy, payable to the legatee at twenty-one, was charged primarily on the testator's personalty, and on his realty, failing sufficient personal assets. At his death the personal assets were sufficient, but, owing to a devastavit by the executors, became at some subsequent unascertained time inadequate. The legatee attained twenty-one in 1849. The petition was filed on the 26th of January, 1863:—Held, first, that the mere non-enforcement of payment from the executor was no laches to estop the legatee; held, secondly, the real estate of the testator was liable to the payment of the legacy. Massey, In re, 14 Ir. Ch. 355.

When a legacy is given to an infant vesting at once, but payable on his attaining twenty-one, and real estate is charged with so much of the debts and legacies as the personal estate shall be insufficient to discharge, the time for determining whether and to what extent the real estate is charged is the death of the testator, and not the time at which the infant attains twenty-one, and if the personalty is then sufficient, the real estate will not be affected by a deficiency subsequently arising from a default of the executor. Richardson v. Morton, 41 L. J., Ch. 8; L. R. 13 Eq. 123. But see M'Carthy v. M'Cartie, supra, col. 1660.

—— Against Purchaser of Property Charged.]—A legacy was charged on the testator's personal, and if that should prove deficient, on real estate. The personal estate was sufficient at the testator's death, but was distributed without any provision being made for the legacy. The legatee by her marriage settlement settled a portion of the legacy on trusts for herself, her husband, and the children of the marriage who should be living at the death of the survivor of the husband and wife. Afterwards the wife became entitled to the real estate charged by descent, and she and her husband sold it to different purchasers. A bill, filed by her and an infant son, praying to have the legacy declared a charge on the real estate, and to have the money raised, dismissed as against the purchasers. Beynon v. Gollings, Romilly's Notes of Cas. 132.

—— Against Mortgagee.]—If an estate is given to a devisee charged with the payment of legacies, and he mortgages the estate to one person, and afterwards sells it to another, the purchaser will stand in the place of the legatees, but will do so bound in equity to make good the mortgage debt. Colyer v. Finch, 5 H. L. Cas. 905; 26 L. J., Ch. 65; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 25.

—— Right of Annuitant to have Estate Realised to Secure Annuity.]—When a testator bequeaths legacies and annuities, and then gives the residue of his property, after payment of his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, legacies, and annuities, the annuitants are not entitled as a matter of right to have the estate converted, and a sum sufficient to answer the annuity invested in such securities as the court would approve for the investment of funds under its control; but they are entitled to have the annuities sufficiently secured, for instance by a mortgage of real estate of the testator. A testator, after bequeathing 100*l.* to each of his two executors, directed his executors to pay to his father and his sisters life annuities amounting together to 700*l.*; and he declared that the residue of his property, after payment of his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, and the legacies and annuities thereinbefore directed to be paid, should be divided amongst his next of kin and heiresses, as though he had died intestate with respect thereto. The testator's estate consisted mainly of two freehold theatres and two leasehold theatres. The freehold theatres were let to tenants on lease at rents respectively of 700*l.* and 1,317*l.*, and produced respectively (after deducting outgoings) net incomes of 629*l.* and 888*l.* The testator was the original lessee of the leasehold theatres at the respective rents of 750*l.* and 25*l.* for the respective terms of eighty years and seventy-one years. Of the eighty years nine years had expired, and of the seventy-one years twenty-six years had expired. Both these theatres were underlet at largely improved rents, and they respectively produced net profit incomes of 2,109*l.* and 186*l.* Each of the leasehold theatres, and one of the freehold theatres, was subject to a mortgage, the mortgage debts together amounting to 12,500*l.* The testator's debts (other than the mortgage debts on the theatres) and his funeral and testamentary expenses and pecuniary legacies had been all paid out of his personal estate, and there remained a balance of 2,000*l.* in the hands of the surviving executor. The annuities had been punctually paid since the testator's death. The annuitants claimed to be entitled to have the leasehold theatres sold, and the mortgage debts paid out of the proceeds of sale, and that a sufficient sum should then be invested, in the mode in which cash under the control of the court would be invested, to provide for the payment of the annuities. The residuary legatees proposed that the executors should raise by mortgage of one of the leasehold theatres such a sum as (with the 2,000*l.* in the executor's hands) would be sufficient to discharge the testator's mortgage debts, and that the annuities should be secured by a first mortgage on the two freehold theatres, the charge of the annuities on the residue of the testator's estate (subject to the new mortgage to be created) remaining undisturbed, with liberty to the annuitants to apply to the court for additional or other security in case the annuities or any of them should fall into arrear; and that, after payment of the interest on the new mortgage and the annuities, the residue of the income of the estate should be divided between the residuary legatees:—Held, on the authority of Potter, In re (infra), Webber v. Webber (post, col. 1693), and King v. Malcott (9 Hare, 692), that the annuitants were not entitled to have the leasehold theatres sold, but that, the estate having been cleared by the payment of the testator's debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, the annuitants were only entitled to have the annuities sufficiently secured, and that the proposed security would be sufficient. Parry, In re, Scott v. Leak, 42 Ch. D. 570; 61 L. T. 380; 38 W. R. 226.

The testator gave all his real and personal estate to his son, upon trust to pay thereout weekly and every week to the testator's wife during her life the sum of 1*l.* 10*s.*, and, subject thereto, upon trust for his said son absolutely. The testator had been dead four years, and the weekly payment had been regularly made during all that period. The widow now asked that its future payment should be secured by the sale of the property and the investment of the proceeds. The estate consisted substantially of a leasehold public-house, and the business carried on there, and the total amount of it, if realised, would not have been equal to the amount of the capitalised value of the annuity:—Held, that the property was given to the son absolutely, subject only to the payment of the annuity, and so long as he paid that, he was entitled to the quiet possession of his property, and the widow was not entitled to have it sold. Potter, In re, Potter v. Potter, 50 L. T. 8.

—— Annuity in Arrear—Mortgage or Sale of Settled Estate.]—The court has a discretionary power to order the sale or mortgage of real estate charged with the payment of annuities in order to raise funds to pay off arrears. Graves v. Hicks (11 Sim. 551) and Taylor v. Taylor (L. R. 17 Eq. 324) doubted. Tucker, In re, Tucker v. Tucker, 62 L. J., Ch. 442; [1893] 2 Ch. 323; 3 R. 436; 69 L. T. 85; 41 W. R. 505.

And see ANNUITY.

—— Right of Legatees to Back Rents.]—Where a devisee or his assigns have been in possession of real estate charged with the payment of legacies, and the estate proves insufficient to satisfy the legacies, the legatees are not entitled to back rents. Garfitt v. Allen or Allen v. Longstaffe, 57 L. J., Ch. 420; 37 Ch. D. 48; 57 L. T. 848; 36 W. R. 413.

Statute of Limitations.]—In an action to raise the amount due on an equitable mortgage, instituted by the mortgagee, lands were sold under the judgment pronounced at the first hearing of the action, and realised more than sufficient to pay the plaintiff's demand and costs. An order was made directing inquiries as to the other incumbrances on the lands sold, and their priorities, under which claims were brought in by legatees entitled to legacies admittedly charged on the lands. The only question being the date from which interest on these legacies should be compounded:—Held, that under the 102nd General Order in Chancery, 1843, the claim of the legatees was a proceeding by way of suit within s. 42 of 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 47, and that the legatees were entitled to interest on the legacies for six years prior to the commencement of the action. Archdall v. Anderson, 25 L. R., Ir. 433.

—— Procedure—Where Adult and Infant Legatees.]—Where there are adult and infant legatees whose legacies are charged on a real fund, though the adult legatees have a right to have their legacies immediately raised, and for that purpose a sale may be necessary, and the heir offers the residue of the purchase-money to be laid out as a security for the interest of the legacies given to the infants when due, the court will not deprive them, in case of deficiency, of recourse to the real fund. Dickinson v. Dickinson, 3 Bro. C. C. 19.

—— Implied Declaration by Court that Legacies are charged.]—By his answer, a defendant insisted that a former tenant in tail had paid off certain legacies, which he alleged were charges upon the real estate, out of a specified fund; and that the sums so paid off were still charges upon the real estate. By the interlocutory decree, it was referred to the master to take an account of the sums advanced on foot of the specified fund in exoneration of the lands; and whatever should appear to be so advanced was thereby declared to be a charge on the lands:—Held, that this amounted to a declaration that the legacies were a charge on the lands. Kelly v. Lennon, 1 Jo. & Lat. 305; 7 Ir. Eq. R. 98.

—— Right of Legatee to Production of Documents identifying Property.]—The plaintiff was entitled to a legacy which the testator had charged on his estates not in settlement. The defendant stated that the testator was tenant in tail of part of the estate, but did not specify it, and he admitted the possession of a copy of a deed creating the entail, but he stated it did not make out the plaintiff's case:—Held, he was bound to produce it for the plaintiff's inspection, as tending to shew what estates were in settlement. The defendant being entitled to an estate, subject to a charge thereon, belonging to the plaintiff, mortgaged it and delivered the title-deeds to the mortgagees, but he retained copies:—Held, that he was bound to produce the copies, though the mortgagees were not parties to the suit. Hercy v. Ferrers, 4 Beav. 97; 10 L. J., Ch. 273.

—— Receiver when Appointed.]—A testator in possession of lands devised the same to his widow for life, remainder to another tenant for life, with remainders over; and he gave to the plaintiff 200*l.*, which he charged on specified land, part of his lands devised, payable after the widow's death. The widow was possessed for her life, and, on her death, a stranger entered into and kept possession of the lands of the testator. The plaintiff by his bill, to which the tenants for life and in remainder and the stranger were defendants, asked that the 200*l.* legacy might be raised out of the specified land. The tenant for life disclaimed. The stranger alleged a title paramount to that of the testator, and objected that he ought not to be a party:—Held, that the stranger could not be sued in this court by any person claiming under the will, and he was dismissed with costs; and the court declared the plaintiff entitled to his legacy, appointed a receiver, and ordered that the plaintiff should be at liberty to bring such action as he should be advised for the recovery of the specified land in the names of the tenants for life and in remainder upon an indemnity. Daniel v. Davies, 5 De G. & Sm. 611.

18. ABATEMENT AND PRIORITY.

Priority—Principles.]—The court will not strain to prefer any legacy to another; but where there is a deficiency of assets, will let the general rule of equality take place. Appointing a legacy to be paid at a different time will not give it a preference. Clark v. Sewell, 3 Atk. 99.

The rule is, that in case of deficiency of assets all annuities and legacies abate rateably, and that the onus lies on the party seeking priority to make out clearly and conclusively that such priority was intended. In deciding upon questions of priority under a will, the mere circumstance of relationship to the testator is not entitled to much weight; it constitutes but an auxiliary reason for giving priority where the words used in the will favour the notion of priority to a sufficient degree. Miller v. Huddlestone, 3 Mac. & G. 513; 21 L. J., Ch. 1; 15 Jur. 1043. Reversing 17 Sim. 71.

Primâ facie, a testator must be presumed to intend that all his legacies should be equally paid, and the onus is upon those who contend for a priority to shew that the testator meant to give a preference to a particular legatee. A testator gave 1,000*l.* to trustees, in trust, to pay the interest to his wife during her life, and after her decease he declared his will to be that the 1,000*l.* should become part of his personal estate and applicable to the trusts or payment of the legacies given by his will, and he gave a legacy of 500*l.* in trust for N. M. and his wife, in nearly the same words:—Held, that a priority was given to these two legacies. Brown v. Brown, 1 Keen. 275.

The circumstance that legacies are payable immediately is not per se sufficient to give them priority over legacies the payment of which is postponed. Nickisson v. Cockill, 3 De G. J. & S. 622; 32 L. J., Ch. 753; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 975; 8 L. T. 778; 11 W. R. 1082.

One by will gives several legacies, and afterwards in the same will apprehending there will be a surplus, therefore gives further legacies: the legacies in the former part of the will shall have preference in case of a deficiency. One makes a will, then a codicil, and gives legacies by both; on a deficiency they shall come into average. Att.-Gen. v. Robins, 2 P. Wms. 23.

—— Legacy to Wife no Exception.]—Where the estate of a testator is insufficient to pay all legacies in full, a legacy given to his wife to be paid to her immediately after his death, for her immediate requirements, is liable to abatement as well as the others. Cazenove v. Cazenove, 61 L. T. 115.

A legacy to a wife, though given to enable her to provide a home, and made payable within a short period after the decease, has no priority over other legacies. Hardy, In re, Wells v. Borwick (infra), not followed. Schweder, In re, Oppenheim v. Schweder, 60 L. J., Ch. 656; [1891] 3 Ch. 44; 65 L. T. 64; 39 W. R. 588. And see Miller v. Huddlestone, supra.

Express Direction—What amounts to.]—A testator, upon his marriage, covenanted to settle certain property so as to secure for his wife a jointure of 400*l.* per annum. This covenant the testator never performed, but directed the trustees of his will to pay the interest of 5,000*l.* to his wife for life, in addition to the provisions made for her by the marriage articles, and that 1,000*l.* of said sum should be paid to such person as his said wife should by deed or will appoint. There were several other legacies bequeathed by the testator. The 1,000*l.* was paid to the widow herself, but no portion of the interest which accrued upon the balance of 4,000*l.*, in consequence of the widow's claim, under the covenant in the marriage articles, having exhausted the whole fund properly applicable for that purpose. Upon the widow's death, her personal representative claimed the arrears of interest out of the corpus of the fund, which was insufficient to pay all the legacies bequeathed by the testator:—Held, upon the true construction of the will, that the interest was given to the wife in priority to the other legacies, and that her personal representative was entitled to be paid the arrears. Pepper v. Bloomfield, 3 Dr. & War. 499; 2 Con. & L. 198.

Testator directed his trustees to invest a sum of 4,500*l.*, "to be raised out of his personal fortune"; of this sum he gave to his daughter 3,000*l.*, and the remainder to collateral relatives; he then gave his wife 1,000*l.* out of his personal property. The whole personal estate only amounted to 4,500*l.*, and the wife received the 1,000*l.*:—Held, that the collateral relatives were not entitled to have the personal estate accumulated to make up 4,500*l.* above 1,000*l.* Acheson v. Fair, 2 Con. & L. 208; 3 Dr. & War. 512.

A testator seised of P. and other lands directed all his just debts, funeral expenses, and legacies to be paid by his executors, and devised all his real and freehold estates (save a part devised to his wife) upon trust that his wife and her assigns should, after his decease, receive a rent-charge with power of distress, and that three of his daughters should receive rent-charges with like remedy by distress and entry as provided with respect to the rent-charge to his wife. The testator then bequeathed pecuniary legacies to his children, and left all the residue and remainder of his real, freehold, and personal estates, subject to his debts and the aforesaid legacies and annuities, to the trustees:—Held, that the rent-charges to the daughters were specifically charged on the same lands as the rent-charge to the wife, and had priority over the legacies which were charged by the residuary clause only. Weir v. Chawley, 1 Ir. Ch. R. 295.

Testator gave legacies to trustees, in trust, for his daughters, for their separate use for their lives, and, after their deaths, for their children. By a codicil, after reciting that he had settled on his daughters fortunes which he was satisfied his property would allow of being increased, he gave to each of them 500*l.*, which he directed not to be settled, but to be paid to them. By a second codicil, he gave to his wife 3,000*l.* in lieu of 1,000*l.* which he had given her by his will. His property proved insufficient to pay the legacies in full:—Held, that the legacies given by the first codicil were postponed to the legacies given to the daughters by the will, and also to the legacy given to the wife by the second codicil. Stammers v. Halliley, 12 Sim. 42; 5 Jur. 817.

A testatrix who was entitled to half of her sister's residuary estate bequeathed a large legacy, which, if it should fail, she directed should fall "into her own estate." She bequeathed the residue of her property (except that derived from her sister) to A., and the residue of her property, derived from her sister's estate, to B.:—Held, that the latter must contribute with the former to payment of the debts, expenses, and legacies. Greenwood v. Jemmett, 29 Beav. 479.

One having two sons and a daughter, by will gives to each 2,000*l.* payable at twenty-one, provided, if assets fall short to pay the legacies, the abatement shall be borne out of the sons' legacies. Testator leaves assets to pay, which the executrix wastes; the daughter's legacy shall have the preference. Marsh v. Evans, 1 P. Wms. 668.

A testator gave to his wife all his furniture and effects, together with the sum of 500*l.* to be paid to her immediately after his decease. He also directed his trustees to raise out of his estate the sums of 12,000*l.* and 5,000*l.*, and invest the same and pay the interest of the 12,000*l.* to his wife during her life, and the interest of the 5,000*l.* to his brother and sisters during their lives, and after the death of his wife, brother, and sisters, those sums were to fall into the residue of his estate. He then gave his brother and sisters legacies of 6,000*l.* and 2,000*l.*, and gave other smaller legacies. His estate proved insufficient for the payment in full of all the legacies :—Held, that the legacy of 500*l.* to the wife had priority over all the other pecuniary legacies. Held, also, that the legacies of 12,000*l.* and 5,000*l.* had priority over the other legacies. Blower v. Morret, infra, dissented from. Hardy, In re, Wells v. Borwick, 50 L. J., Ch. 241 ; 17 Ch. D. 798 ; 44 L. T. 49 ; 29 W. R. 834. But see Oppenheim v. Schweder, supra.

A testator gave and bequeathed to his wife "the sum of 5,000*l.*, to be paid to her out of my estate," and he appointed her and another executors. After certain specific devises and bequests, the testator provided as follows : "Out of the rest, residue, and remainder of my property I give, devise, and bequeath the following legacies," and then followed a number of bequests of money to certain persons. He appointed his wife residuary legatee. In the administration of the personal estate of the deceased by the court, the assets proved insufficient for the payment of all the legacies in full :—Held, that the legacy of 5,000*l.* to the testator's wife was entitled to priority of payment over the other pecuniary legacies bequeathed by the will. Browne v. Malone, [1897] 1 Ir. R. 571.

—— Effect of Words—"In the First Place."]—Pecuniary legacies abate in proportion, notwithstanding a direction in the will that they are to be paid "in the first place," or a direction as to the time of payment. If, however, an intention that any legacies are to be paid in full is to be collected or reasonably inferred, it will be otherwise, as where a legacy is meant as a purchase of dower to which the party is entitled. Blower v. Morret, 2 Ves. Sen. 420. But see Hardy, In re, Wells v. Borwick, supra.

If priority is contended for as arising on the face of a will between the objects intended to be benefited by the will, the point must be determined by the court ; but if a question arises of priority between the extrinsic incumbrancers, it is a fact to be ascertained by the master. The words in a will in trust, "in the first place," are merely words of method and order, and do not imply priority of payment. Nash v. Dillon, 1 Moll. 236.

Unless contrary intent clearly appears in will, presumption is that testator intends all legacies to be equally paid. Words "in the first place, I give to A., and then to B., then to C.," not evidence of such intent. Nor words "to A. payable at one month, to B. at six months, and C. at twelve." Nor "in the first place, I direct, &c., to A., then to B., then to C.," nor "I direct that my executors shall, in the first place, &c., to A., in the next place to B., then to C." Expressions in will direct, after payment of debts, "in the next place" certain legacies ; and that trustees should afterwards raise other legacies :—Held, not to give first legatees any priority in payment, but in case of deficiency all shall abate alike. Beeston v. Booth, 4 Madd. 161 ; 20 R. R. 287.

Legacies directed to be invested, and to become payable and paid in a certain order, with interest from the testator's death. The assets being deficient, the court, on the context, held that they were payable pari passu. A testator, by his will, directed 60,000*l.* to be invested in lieu of 6,000*l.* secured by his marriage settlement, and the interest to be paid to his wife, and after her decease, the principal to be applied as therein mentioned. He then directed sundry legacies to be invested for certain relatives, to be paid within a year after his death, if they should be of age, and if not, upon coming of age, with interest in the meantime ; but the principal sums were not to be paid till after the payment or investment of the 60,000*l.* He then gave other legacies, and directed that the several sums given by his will, and not thereinbefore particularly directed, "should be invested in the order, and become payable and paid in the manner thereinafter mentioned," and that the 60,000*l.* should be the sum first paid and invested, and that a legacy to one of his sisters should be the next paid and invested, and so on : —Held, that, except as to the 60,000*l.*, the priority intended was a priority of administration or realisation of assets, and not of rights and interests ; and therefore (the estate being insufficient) that all the legacies, except the 60,000*l.*, abated pro ratâ. Dunboyne (Lord) v. Brander, 18 Beav. 313. And see Brown v. Allen, infra, col. 1678.

—— Where Estate Proves Sufficient — But Direction for Abatement in Case of Loss.]—Two legacies, one to a natural brother, the other to a niece, with a direction, that in case of loss in the amount of property (which happened) the same should be reduced, 100*l.* less than mentioned :—Held, notwithstanding there was residue sufficient for the satisfaction in full, that each legacy must, under the circumstances, abate in a sum not exceeding 100*l.* Dowell v. Wilson, Coop. t. Brough. 504.

—— But Specific Fund Deficient.]—A testator bequeathed a debt of 4,000*l.* due from his brother to trustees for his brother for life, and he gave 1,000*l.*, part of the 4,000*l.*, to A. ; 2,000*l.*, other part of the 4,000*l.*, to B. ; and as to the 1,000*l.*, being the remainder of the 4,000*l.*, to sink into his general estate. He directed that if his estate should be deficient, the legacies should abate proportionately ; and if it should be more than sufficient to satisfy the legatees, the legacies should be increased proportionably. At his death, 2,120*l.* only remained due :—Held, that the legacies of 2,000*l.* and 1,000*l.* were specific, and ought to abate. Held, secondly, that A. and B. were not entitled to have the whole 2,120*l.* applied rateably in satisfaction pro tanto of their legacies, but that a rateable proportion of the 2,120*l.* ought to be attributed to the 1,000*l.* directed to sink into the residue. Ib. Held, thirdly, that the legacies of 2,000*l.* and 1,000*l.* ought to be increased out of the surplus of the estate, in proportion to the reduced amounts payable in respect of such legacies after the abatement. Duncan v. Duncan, 27 Beav. 386.

Between General and Residuary Legatees.]—In our law, particular legatees are always preferred to the residuary legatees. Secus, in the Roman law. Purse v. Snaplin, 1 Atk. 418.

P. assigned by deed to a trustee all his expectations under the will, or as next of kin, of G. deceased, upon trust to pay certain debts and then for P. for life, remainder to his children; and a power was reserved to P. to revoke by will the trusts of the deed, and to reappoint the same generally. P., by his will, revoked the trusts, and appointed 5,000*l.*, part of the trust fund, to A., his mother; 500*l.* to M., his executor; and the residue to his only son, L. The creditors of the testator having claimed to be paid out of the fund as equitable assets, and thereby reduced the fund so that there was only sufficient to pay the 5,000*l.* and 500*l.* given to A. and M.:—Held, that as the fund was unascertained at the date of the will, the loss caused by payment of creditors was not to be borne by all parties interested in the fund, pro ratâ, but fell exclusively on the residue. Petre v. Petre, 14 Beav. 197; 15 Jur. 693.

The testator bequeathed all his moneys in government stock, and all his other moneys, on trust to sell so much of the stock as should be sufficient to pay the following legacies. He then bequeathed certain legacies, and then directed that his trustees should expend all the residue of his government stock and other moneys which he should die possessed of, after payment of his legacies, debts, &c., in land:—Held, a gift out of the general residue, and that the legacies should not abate in favour of the devisee of the land to be purchased. Jackson v. Hamilton, 3 Jo. & Lat. 702; 9 Ir. Eq. R. 430.

A testatrix, after reciting that she was entitled to a legacy of 1,000*l.* under her husband's will, gave the 1,000*l.*, as to 100*l.* part thereof, to A., as to 400*l.* part thereof, to B., and as to all the residue of the legacy of 1,000*l.* and all the residue of her estate, to C. At her death 216*l.* only was due on the legacy:—Held, that A., B., and C. must abate in proportion. Wright v. Weston, 26 Beav. 429.

Where a testatrix appointed 600*l.* to a trustee to invest and pay 75*l.* to each of her daughters, and to apply the income of the residue for the benefit of her grand-daughter till she attained seventeen, and then to pay 100*l.* more to each of her daughters, and apply the income of the residue for the benefit of her grand-daughter till she attained twenty-one, and then to pay such residue to the grand-daughter for her own absolute use and benefit; and the fund had been diminished by certain costs and was insufficient:—Held, that the gift of the residue to the grand-daughter was not a gift of a fixed sum, but only of what might be left after payment of the fixed legacies, and that, therefore, the legacies to the daughters must be paid in priority, and were not liable to abate pari passu with the residue. Harley v. Moon, 1 Dr. & Sm. 623; 31 L. J., Ch. 140; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1227; 10 W. R. 146.

A testator bequeathed leaseholds to a charity. The bequests failed under the Statute of Mortmain, and the property went to the next of kin. He bequeathed the residue of his property, which consisted of pure personalty, to the same charity. It was contended on behalf of the next of kin, that the bequest which they took was specific, and not residuary, and consequently that they were not bound to contribute to the payment of debts and legacies:—Held, that the gift which failed formed part of the residue, and, as such, was bound to contribute, with the residue taken by the charity, to the payment of debts and legacies. Scott v. Forristall, 5 L. T. 709.

—— Where Fund Appropriated.]—A testator bequeathed stock to his executors, subject to his debts, to pay the dividends to his wife for life, and at her death to sell the capital, and out of the proceeds to pay certain legacies, which would exhaust about one-half of the fund, and he made A. his residuary legatee. Thirty years before the death of the tenant for life, the estate of the testator was fully administered by the trustees and executors of his will, and no part of the stock being required for payment of his debts, it was set apart and appropriated for the persons entitled thereto. About the time of the tenant for life's death, a large portion of the fund was lost. Upon a bill by the pecuniary legatees to have the remaining portion applied in satisfaction of their legacies in priority to the residuary legatee:—Held, that as there had been a complete appropriation of the fund, the subsequent loss must fall on the pecuniary legatees in common with the residuary legatee, and therefore that the residuary legatee was entitled to share in the remaining portion of the fund, which must be divided amongst the respective legatees in proportion to their respective interests in the original fund. Baker v. Farmer, 36 L. J., Ch. 819; L. R. 4 Eq. 382; 17 L. T. 46; 15 W. R. 917. But see S. C. L. R. 3 Ch. 537; 16 W. R. 923.

One of several executors, whilst the testator's assets were sufficient for payment of his debts and the several legacies given by his will (which were a charge on his real estate), appropriated two sums in favour of two legatees, and afterwards becoming bankrupt, was found a defaulter to the testator's estate in a considerable sum of money in respect of assets wasted by him. A bill was afterwards filed by one of the residuary legatees against the several other parties interested in the testator's estate and effects, seeking the administration thereof, but containing no power for a direction that the legatees who had received their legacies in full should proportionately abate the same. The master, on reference to him, had, by his report, which had been duly confirmed, found that the two legacies in question had been appropriated by the executor:—Held, that the two legatees, whose legacies had been appropriated, could not be ordered to contribute in respect of the deficiency of the testator's estate to answer the demands upon it. The bankrupt was ordered to pay his ordinary costs incurred since the date of his bankruptcy, and his assignees were dismissed from the suit with costs. Knight v. Knight, 15 L. J., Ch. 363.

—— Where Fund subsequently Falls in.]—When a testator gives trust legacies, and directs that in case of deficiency they shall abate in proportion, and the estate proves deficient, and an abatement is accordingly made, a fund subsequently falling into the estate, from a default in the trusts of the legacies, goes to the residuary legatees, and is not applicable to make up the deficiency of the abated legacies. Dudman v. Shirreff, 18 W. R. 596.

L., by will, gave to trustees 1,000*l.* upon trust for A. and B. for life successively, with remainder for the children of B. absolutely, but in case all B.'s children should die before attaining the age of twenty-one, he directed that the 1,000*l.* and all securities should become part of his residuary estate. All the residue he gave in trust for B. and the children of L. equally. By codicil he gave one pecuniary legacy, and declared that in case his personal estate at the time of his decease should be insufficient to pay all the legacies in full, they should abate proportionably. The personal estate was insufficient, and the trustees set apart 598*l.* to answer the 1,000*l.* A. and B. having died, the latter without issue, the trustees appropriated the 598*l.* for the benefit of the residuary legatees:—Held, that the fund must be paid to the legatees whose legacies had abated. Lyne, In re, Sands v. Lyne, L. R. 8 Eq. 482.

Between Annuitants.]—When a testator's estate is insufficient (after payment of his debts) to pay in full annuities given by his will, the fund must (after payment of costs) be apportioned between the annuitants in the proportion which the sum composed of the arrears of the annuity in each case plus the present value of the future payments bear to each other, and this rule applies in a case in which the annuitants are all living at the time of distribution. A testator gave an annuity of 150*l.* to his widow, and an annuity of 100*l.* to a stranger in blood, and he directed that the second annuity should be paid free of legacy duty, which should be paid out of his estate. After payment of his debts, the estate was insufficient to pay the annuities in full:—Held, that (after payment of costs) the fund must be apportioned as above between the two annuitants; that the legacy duty payable on the sum apportioned to the second annuitant must be deducted from the whole fund, and the balance then divided in the same proportion between the two annuitants. Heath v. Nugent (29 Beav. 266) followed. Wilkins, In re, Wilkins v. Rotherham, 54 L. J., Ch. 188; 27 Ch. D. 703; 33 W. R. 42.

Between Annuitants and Residuary Legatees.]—A sum of stock which was directed to be invested to pay annuities, and ultimately to go to a charity, having been reduced from 4 to 3½ per cent.:—Held, that the annuitants were not entitled to be paid their respective annuities in full, either out of the capital or of the released dividends by the falling in of the annuities, but that the reduction of the interest of the stock operated to reduce proportionately the annuities and the charity fund. Att.-Gen. v. Poulden, 3 Hare, 555; 8 Jur. 611.

A testator gave several life annuities charged upon a particular fund, the income of which he considered to be equal to them in value; and he gave the fund itself over to another person for life, upon the respective deaths of the annuitants; the fund having proved deficient, and the annuitants having suffered a proportional abatement, it was held, on the death of one of them, that the income from the fund released by the falling in of her annuity went over to the tenant for life, and was not applicable to make good the deficiency of the continuing annuities. Scott v. Salmond, 1 Myl. & K. 363; Coop. t. Brough. 46.

Where a testator's effects are insufficient to satisfy an annuity bequeathed by the will and the pecuniary legacies:—Held, that the annuity ought to be valued, and that the annuitant was entitled at once to the amount of the valuation, subject to an abatement in proportion to the abatement of the pecuniary legacies; and that although the annuitant died before the payment of the annuity in full would have equalled the abated amount of the valuation, the other legatees would have no claim to the surplus of that amount. Wroughton v. Colquhoun, 1 De G. & Sm. 357; 11 Jur. 940. S. P., Carr v. Ingleby, 1 De G. & Sm. 362, n.; Long v. Hughes, id. 364, n.; 7 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 105.

Between Appointees under Power and Residuary Legatees.]—W. bequeathed 120,000*l.* in trust for the separate use of his daughter B. during the joint lives of herself and her husband; and in case B. should happen to die in the lifetime of her husband (which event took place), then in trust to pay, &c., unto such person as B. should appoint; and in default of appointment, in trust to pay the same, or so much as should not have been appointed, unto and equally between all the children of B. By deed-poll B. appointed 30,000*l.*, part of the 120,000*l.*, in favour of her husband, who after the death of his wife assigned the sum to the executor of W., in part payment of a mortgage debt due to W.'s estate, which proved to be insufficient to pay in full the legacy of 120,000*l.* The master found that the appointee was entitled to the whole of the 30,000*l.* as a certain and specific sum, irrespective of the amount which the estate of W. might produce; but on exceptions to his report:—Held, that the 30,000*l.* was not to be paid in all events, but only rateably, and in proportion with the other part of the legacy of 120,000*l.* Booth v. Alington, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 945; 4 W. R. 453.

Where a sum of 5,000*l.* was appointed upon certain trusts, subject to a power of appointing to the amount or value of 1,000*l.* each, one of which had been exercised, but the fund proved insufficient:—Held, that the appointees of the 1,000*l.*, and the persons entitled to the residue of the fund, must abate proportionately. Miller v. Huddlestone, L. R. 6 Eq. 65; 16 W. R. 478.

Specific Legatees.]—In case of deficiency of assets, a specific legatee shall not abate in proportion with pecuniary legatees, but one pecuniary legatee shall abate in proportion with the rest, though his legacy is directed to be paid in the first place. Brown v. Allen, 1 Vern. 31. S. P., Webb v. Webb, 2 Vern. 111.

Legacy of 1,500*l.* to be laid out in land shall be taken as land; but if a deficiency of assets then not specific, but shall contribute in proportion. Specific legacy is what vests by assent of executor. Hinton v. Pinke, 1 P. Wms. 539.

One devises to his wife all his personal estate at W.: this is a specific legacy, and to be preferred to pecuniary legacies in case of deficiency of assets; all the testator's personal estate that was at W. at his death shall pass, though not there at the making the will. Sayer v. Sayer, 2 Vern. 688; Pre. Ch. 392; Gilb. Exch. R. 87.

Specific legacies, as in some respects they have the advantage, so in others they have the disadvantage, of pecuniary ones. Ashton v. Ashton, 3 P. Wms. 385.

Testator having a sum of 500*l.* secured by mortgage, bequeathed to defendant 500*l.* to continue at interest on such securities as he should leave at his death, or to be put out on government securities, at the election of his executors. There being a deficiency of assets:—Held, that the 500*l.* legacy was not so specific as that it should not abate with the pecuniary legacies. Lawson v. Stitch, 1 Atk. 507.

A bequest of a sum of money in a bag, &c., is a specific legacy, and shall not abate with pecuniary legacies. Ib.

Specific legatees shall not abate in proportion with the pecuniary, on a deficiency of assets. Gibson v. Scudamore, Mos. 7. And see Mullins v. Smith, infra.

—— Where Direction Express or Implied.]—By a will reciting that the testatrix was entitled to 2,255*l.* stock, she bequeathed the said sum so standing in her name to a trustee to divide in the following shares and proportions. She then gave specific sums to certain legatees, and directed that these sums, described as amounting to 1,769*l.*, should be paid out of the stock, and that the balance, amounting to 495*l.* or thereabouts, or whatever it might amount to, should be paid to X. The amount of the stock was really only 1,750*l.*:—Held, that the gift to X. wholly failed, and the other legatees could not be called on to abate rateably with him. Williams v. Armstrong, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 356.

A contribution was directed amongst specific legatees for payment of the debts and costs of suit. One of such legatees became insolvent, and by his nonpayment the fund raised was deficient. The court directed an additional contribution amongst the solvent legatees. Conolly v. Farrell, 10 Beav. 142.

Devise in trust to sell, but not for less than 10,000*l.*, and to pay several sums amounting to 7,800*l.* and the overplus moneys arising from the sale to A.:—Held, a specific legacy of 10,000*l.*, and the sale producing less, A. and the others to abate; legacies to charity, void by the statute 9 Geo. 2, c. 36, fell into the general residue. Page v. Leapingwell, 18 Ves. 463; 11 R. R. 234.

Specific bequest of jewels upon trust to sell for the best price obtainable, and to pay thereout two legacies of fixed amounts; there was a residuary bequest, but no other gift of any surplus sale money. The price obtained was insufficient to pay both legacies, but one of them lapsed:—Held, that the other legacy was not liable to abate in favour of the residuary legatee, as it would have done in favour of the other legatee, if his legacy had taken effect. Page v. Leapingwell (supra) distinguished. Tunno, In re, Raikes v. Raikes, 59 L. J., Ch. 573; 45 Ch. D. 66; 63 L. T. 23; 38 W. R. 636.

—— Where Subject of Gift wholly or partially non-existent.]—Bequest "of 400*l.* East India bonds," under the circumstances, not specific, but a legacy of quantity, to be made good out of the general assets, the testatrix having repeatedly in this bequest omitted the word "my," which she had used in other bequests clearly specific, and having only one East India bond at her death. Bequest of South Sea stock in parcels to a larger amount than testatrix was possessed of held specific, the bequest of the last parcel being called the remaining South Sea stock standing in her name. These legatees must abate in proportion. Sleech v. Thorington, 2 Ves. Sen. 560.

Specific legacy, if existing, the whole paid, though nothing left for pecuniary, but if not existing the right is gone. Drinkwater v. Falconer, 2 Ves. Sen. 623.

—— Specific Bequest of Property charged by Testatrix in her Lifetime—General Charge of Debts.]—A testatrix, after directing that her debts should be paid as soon as conveniently might be after her decease, specifically devised all her real estate, and specifically bequeathed certain personalty which in her lifetime she had specifically charged with a debt:—Held, that such personalty must be applied in payment of the debt before the real estate could be resorted to, notwithstanding that the direction to pay debts was a constructive charge of debts on the latter. Butler, In re, Le Bas v. Herbert, 63 L. J., Ch. 662; [1894] 3 Ch. 250; 8 R. 504; 43 W. R. 190.

Between Specific and Residuary Legatees.]—A testatrix by will, "out of the residue of her property," gave a legacy to A. By a codicil she directed her executors "out of the residue of her estate, in case there should be sufficient," to invest a legacy for B. The residue being deficient:—Held, that these legacies must abate pari passu. Earestaff v. Austin, 19 Beav. 591.

A testatrix bequeathed various sums of her bank stock, part of 9,000*l.* live stock, to several legatees, and all the residue of her said bank stock to C. The stock, at her death, was insufficient to pay the specified sums:—Held, that all these legacies, including the residue to C., must abate in proportion. Elwes v. Causton, 30 Beav. 554.

A. gave a house and 800*l.* to his daughter for life, and after her death he directed 500*l.* to be paid to her issue, "and that after such payment the remaining part of the principal 800*l.*, that is 300*l.*, and the house," should revert to his "next lawful heirs." The assets were insufficient, and only 400*l.* was paid in respect of the legacy and what had accumulated:—Held, that the legatees of the 500*l.* had no priority over the legatees of the 300*l.*, and that the fund must be apportioned rateably between the two legatees. Haselwood v. Green, 28 Beav. 1.

A testator desired that every legatee under his will should contribute 1*l.* per cent. out of their legacies to Mrs. W. and her children:—Held, that the specific legatees and annuitants and residuary legatees (both in respect of the residuary personal estate, and of the produce of real estate directed to be converted) were bound to contribute. Ward v. Grey, 26 Beav. 485; 29 L. J., Ch. 74; 7 W. R. 569.

Demonstrative Legatees.] — Demonstrative legatees must abate with general legatees, and have no right, after getting what they can out of the demonstrative fund, to claim their entire legacies with the other legatees out of the general estate. Demonstrative legatees must get their legacies first out of the demonstrative fund as far as it extends; and the balances only, together with the general legatees, out of the general estate. Sellon v. Watts, 28 Beav. 579; 9 W. R. 847.

A specific legacy is not liable to abatement for the payment of debts, but a demonstrative legacy is liable to abate when it becomes a general legacy by reason of the failure of the fund out of which it is payable. A specific legacy is liable to ademption, but a demonstrative legacy is not. A specific legacy, if of stock, carries with it the dividends which accrue from the death of the testator, while a demonstrative legacy does not carry interest from the testator's death. Mullins v. Smith, 1 Dr. & Sm. 204, 210; 8 W. R. 739.

Where demonstrative legacies were payable, in a certain order of priority, out of leasehold property held of an ecclesiastical body, under a lease which was renewable, on payment of a fine, every fourteen years, and by consent of all parties one of the legatees was allowed to continue for a long time in occupation of the leasehold property, paying out of the rent the interest of the other legacy, and the leaseholds were, meanwhile, twice renewed by the executors, without calling upon the legatees to contribute to the fine:—Held, that this course of dealing had destroyed the right of priority. Severs v. Severs, 17 Jur. 706; 1 W. R. 320.

Legacy to A. of 12,000*l.*, and to B. 4,000*l.*, the latter sum directed to be paid out of money in the hands of the testator's agent. At the time of testator's death, there was a sufficient fund in the agent's hands to answer this legacy; but the general assets did not extend to the payment of both. Legatee of the 4,000*l.* held entitled to be paid by priority. Acton v. Acton, 1 Mer. 178.

Legacies to one younger child of the sum of 12,000*l.* of my funded property, to be transferred in his name, or employed as it shall appear most beneficial; to another, the sum of 12,000*l.* in every respect the same; to a third, the sum of 12,000*l.*, to be enjoyed by him in every respect as the former; the residue, real and personal, to the eldest son. The legacies to the younger children pecuniary, not specific; the fund, if deficient, to be equally divided among them. Lambert v. Lambert, 11 Ves. 607; 8 R. R. 253.

Legacies to be paid out of a specific security, which failed:—Held, general upon the circumstances. Roberts v. Pocock, 4 Ves. 150.

Between Chargees and Devisees of Property Charged.]—A. devised real estate to one for life, with remainder to trustees for a term to raise the clear sum of 10,000*l.* for his younger son; and, subject thereto, he devised the estate in strict settlement. The personal estate, not specifically bequeathed, was insufficient to pay the debts, and thereupon the devised estate and specific legacies became liable to contribute rateably towards the deficiency:—Held, that as between the youngest son and the persons taking the estate subject to the term, the whole amount of contribution of the real estate was to be borne by the latter. Raikes v. Boulton, 29 Beav. 41.

A testator devised his real estate to the use of his wife during her life or widowhood, with remainder to the use of trustees for a term of 500 years, on trust to raise, by mortgage of the real estate or out of the rents and profits, portions of 5,000*l.* apiece for each of his younger children, with remainders in strict settlement, the testator's eldest son taking the first life estate. The testator's general personal estate was insufficient for the payment of his debts, and, consequently, the specifically bequeathed personal estate and the real estate had to contribute:—Held, that, as between the portioners and the persons entitled to the real estate on which they were charged, the former were not bound to contribute to make good the deficiency. Raikes v. Boulton (supra) followed; Long v. Short (1 P. Wms. 403) considered and explained:—Held, also, that, as between the real estate and the specifically bequeathed personal estate, the former must contribute in proportion to its full value, not in proportion to its value less the amount of the portions. Saunders-Davies, In re, Saunders-Davies v. Saunders-Davies, 56 L. J., Ch. 492; 34 Ch. D. 482; 56 L. T. 153; 35 W. R. 493.

Testator, after making certain specific devises and bequests, gave some pecuniary legacies, and gave all the real and personal estate to which at his death he should be beneficially entitled, or of which at his death he should have any general power to dispose beneficially by will, and not otherwise disposed of, unto A. absolutely. The personal estate not specifically bequeathed was insufficient for payment of debts:—Held, following Raikes v. Boulton (supra) and Saunders-Davies, In re (supra), that as between the pecuniary legatees and the residuary devisee, the pecuniary legatees were entitled to their legacies out of the residuary real estate without any liability to contribute to the payment of debts; that the residuary devisee was bound to contribute rateably with specific legatees and devisees; and in ascertaining the proportion of his contribution, the value of the residuary real estate must be measured not by the value less the legacies to be raised out of it, but by its value independently of the legacies. Bawden, In re, Bawden v. Cresswell, 63 L. J., Ch. 412; [1894] 1 Ch. 693; 70 L. T. 526.

A testator devised certain property to his daughter M. M. B. absolutely, and devised and bequeathed to his grand-daughter A. E. the sum of 1,000*l.* or 50*l.* per annum, whichever his executors should think fit or most advantageous for her, the said sum of 1,000*l.* or 50*l.* per annum to be paid by his said daughter and to be chargeable and payable out of the property so bequeathed to her. One undivided third of the property was subject to the trusts of a settlement, under which M. M. B. took a life interest, with remainders over; and the testator had no power to dispose of same. In a petition by A. E. and her husband, the petitioners were declared entitled to a perpetual annuity of 50*l.* charged on the property devised to M. M. B. On the death of M. M. B. the person entitled to the one-third in settlement claimed the same. There was nothing in the will to shew an intention that the property was to be enjoyed by the chargee and the devisee of the property itself in aliquot proportions:—Held, that the annuity was not liable to abate, and that A. E. was entitled to be paid the same in full out of the remaining two-thirds of the property. Saunders-Davies, In re (supra), followed. Long v. Short (1 P. Wms. 403) considered. Roche v. Jordan, [1896] 1 Ir. R. 494.

Between Purchasers and Volunteers.]—Pecuniary legacies, if assets wanting, shall be paid in average; but a legacy given to a wife in consideration that she releases dower shall be preferred. So money bequeathed to buy land, or an annuity, is as a specific legacy, and shall not come in average. Burridge v. Bradyl, 1 P. Wms. 129. But see Hinton v. Pinke, id. 541.

W. F. gives by will his wife an annuity of 100*l.* for life, and 500*l.*, which, together with the annuity, he declares to be in full for her dower, or thirds, out of his real or personal estate. On deficiency of assets:—Held, the wife should not abate in proportion with the other legatees. Davenhill v. Fletcher, Ambl. 244.

Where the testator, possessed of freehold estate and copyhold in fee, bequeathed an annuity to his wife, to be accepted in lieu of all dower, and thirds, or other claims she might have otherwise had against his estate, she being his customary heir as to the latter:—Held, entitled to both, and not bound to elect; and the assets being insufficient to satisfy the annuity and other legacies, that she was entitled to priority, and be paid in full, before pecuniary legacies. Norcott v. Gordon, 14 Sim. 258; 8 Jur. 679.

A legacy to a widow, in lieu of dower or thirds, at common law or by custom, has no priority over other legacies, where the testator leaves no real estate. Acey v. Simpson, 5 Beav. 35.

A testator having by a post-nuptial settlement made certain provisions for his wife which were expressed to be in bar of dower, bequeaths to her specific legacies, and a sum of money, adding that what he has so given her, together with the provision made for her by the settlement, should be in lieu of any dower which she might claim; the assets having proved insufficient for the payment of the legacies in full:—Held, that the wife is entitled to priority over the other legatees, and that the legacies given to her ought not to abate proportionably with the other legacies. Heath v. Dendy, 1 Russ. 543; 5 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 59; 25 R. R. 135.

A testator by his will bequeathed a legacy to a person between whom and himself accounts had subsisted, on condition of the legatee's executing to his executors a general release of all claims and demands. The legatee executed the release. It subsequently appeared that the assets were insufficient for the payment of all the legacies:—Held, that the legatee was not, by executing the release (it not being established that any debt was actually due to him), a purchaser of his legacy, so as to avoid an abatement with the other legatees. Davies v. Bush, Younge, 341.

A., noticing that he had been bankrupt in 1822, and had paid only 4*s.* 3*d.* in the pound, and had obtained his certificate, made his will in 1851, and directed his just debts to be paid, in which he included the unpaid-in-full debts in the bankruptcy, and said: "I will and direct my executors and trustees to pay unto the official assignee of the bankruptcy, in trust to pay all who have proved their debts on the commission, so much money as will make the dividend on the estate equal to 20*s.* in the pound on all the debts so proved":—Held, that the official assignee was entitled to receive a sum sufficient to make up 20*s.* in the pound on all the debts proved, notwithstanding that some of the creditors might have died before the testator. Turner v. Martin, 7 De G. M. & G. 429; 26 L. J., Ch. 216; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 397; 5 W. R. 277. And see Blower v. Morret, supra, col. 1673.

Charitable Legacies.]—Charitable legacies by the civil law are to be preferred to other legacies. If the spiritual court gives a preference to charitable legacies, in case of deficiency of assets, this court will not grant an injunction. Fielding v. Bound, 1 Vern. 230.

Legacy to a charity shall abate in proportion with other legacies on failure of assets. Att.-Gen. v. Hudson, 1 P. Wms. 675.

In case of a deficiency, charity legacies, as well as others, shall abate in proportion; but 3*l.* to the poor of the parish shall be taken as part of funerals, and so no abatement. Att.-Gen. v. Robins, 2 P. Wms. 25.

Devise of real and personal estate in trust for debts and legacies void, under the stat. 9 Geo. 2, c. 36, as a charge of charity legacies upon the real and leasehold estates, and money on mortgage; but on a deficiency of assets, the other legatees preferred to the heir. Currie v. Pye, 17 Ves. 462.

A. is entitled to 8,000*l.* in the Chamber of London, and whilst a stop was put to payment there, he made his will, and declares, that when the executors should receive the 8,000*l.*, he gives 2,000*l.* to three hospitals. Afterwards an act passed for settling a fund for paying a perpetual interest for the orphans' debt, and the 8,000*l.* is then worth, to be sold, but 6,300*l.*, yet decreed the whole 2,000*l.* to be paid. Colwall v. Bonython, 2 Vern. 547.

A testator directed that his debts and legacies (other than charitable legacies) should be paid by his executors out of his impure personalty, and his charitable legacies out of his pure personalty. The pure personalty was insufficient to pay all the charitable legacies in full. In December, 1871, he borrowed 8,000*l.* of his bankers, to be repaid in March, 1872. This sum was placed to his credit on a loan account. He died in February, 1872, having, at the day of his death, 629*l.* standing to his credit on his general drawing account:—Held, that the executors were not bound to pay, out of the impure personalty, the whole amount of the debt due on the loan account at the day of the death, but only the difference between that amount and the amount then standing to the testator's credit on his general drawing account. Thomas v. Howell, L. R. 18 Eq. 198; 30 L. T. 244; 22 W. R. 676.

A voluntary covenant to secure by will the payment of a sum of money to be applied for charitable purposes cannot be satisfied out of the impure personalty of the covenantor; and the debt created by the covenant must, like a legacy, abate in the proportion of the impure to the pure personalty. Fox v. Lownds, 44 L. J., Ch. 474; L. R. 19 Eq. 453; 23 W. R. 404.

A testator gave in the commencement of his will various pecuniary legacies, including one of nineteen guineas to a charity, which he directed to be paid out of his personal estate. He then made a general devise and bequest of all his real and personal estate to trustees, who were also his executors, and the trustees of his real estate were to collect and manage the same and receive the rents and profits, with power to grant leases on such terms as they should think advantageous and proper, and with power also, if they should consider it advisable, but not otherwise, to sell his real estate or any part by public or private sale in such manner, at such time or times, and for such prices as they should think proper. He then proceeded to direct that his personal estate should be collected, and that the proceeds of that estate, together with the proceeds resulting from any sale of the real estate, should be invested in the funds. He then gave the income of the whole of his estate, the real estate, if unsold, and of the funds which should be so invested, to his wife for life, and at the death of the wife he directed several other legacies to be paid, including a legacy of 100*l.* to a charity, which he again directed should be paid out of his personal estate; and subject to those legacies and at the death of his wife, and subject to a provision for any child of which she might be enceinte at his death (which failed in fact by reason of there being no such child), he directed the whole income of all his real and personal estate to be paid to his wife's niece for life; and at her death he directed a legacy of 500*l.* to be paid to a charity, which he again directed should be paid out of his personal estate :—Held, first, that the 500*l.* charitable legacy was not to be postponed to the other legacies, it being clear on principle and settled by authority, that although a legacy is deferred as to its time of payment, it must rank equally with other legacies in the distribution of assets which are directed to be immediately paid, and that the trustees were bound to provide for the payment of the 500*l.* legacy at the time when they applied themselves to the payment of the other legacies. Nichisson v. Cockill, 3 De G. J. & S. 622 ; 32 L. J., Ch. 753 ; 8 L. T. 778 ; 11 W. R. 1082 ; 2 N. R. 557.

Held, secondly, that the two first given charitable legacies had no precedence over the 500*l.* legacy. Held, thirdly, that the proceeds of sales of parts of the real estate by the trustees, under their power, having proved insufficient for the payment of the legacies other than the charitable legacies, so as to leave the pure personal estate for the payment of the charitable legacies, the case had arisen in which the trustees ought to have "considered it advisable" to sell the real estate, under their power to do so, however discretionary in its form, for the purpose of paying the general legacies, the testator having devoted the proceeds of any sale, when made, to the payment of legacies. Ib.

Testator, after directing that his residuary real and personal estate should be applied in payment of certain specified legacies, if there should remain any surplus of the moneys to be appropriated to the object of the will after satisfying the legacies, gave the surplus to a charitable society, the same to be paid out of the funds appropriated as should not consist of lands or mortgages :—Held, that the legacies were payable out of the personal estate savouring of the realty ; and if that were insufficient, out of the proceeds of the realty which had been sold, so as to appropriate to the charity all such pure personalty as might not be required to satisfy the legacies, after application for that purpose of the personalty savouring of realty, and the proceeds of the realty. Pritchard v. Norris, 4 W. R. 733.

Where there is a general charge of debts on real estate, a legatee is entitled to marshal assets to the amount to which the personal estate has been applied in payment of debts, funeral and testamentary expenses. Stokes, In re, Parsons v. Miller (67 L. T. 223), approved and followed. Salt, In re, Brothwood v. Keeling, 64 L. J., Ch. 494 ; [1895] 2 Ch. 203 ; 13 R. 499 ; 43 W. R. 500.

A testatrix, to whose will the provisions of the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1891, did not apply, gave to a charity "all the rest and remainder of my personal estate whatsoever and wheresoever situate, save and except such parts thereof as cannot by law be appropriated by will to charitable purposes" :—Held, that this did not amount to a direction to marshal, and that the gift, so far as it consisted of things savouring of realty, failed and was divisible among the next of kin. Edwards v. Hall (ante, col. 1549) followed. Somers-Cocks, In re, Wegg Prosser v. Wegg Prosser, 65 L. J., Ch. 49 ; [1895] 2 Ch. 449 ; 13 R. 819 ; 73 L. T. 58 ; 44 W. R. 106.

And see CHARITABLE LEGACIES.

Effect of Devastavit.]—A testatrix bequeathed all the residue of her personal estate to trustees, who were also her executors, to invest and pay the income to A. for life, and after his death to pay 1,000*l.* to B., 1,000*l.* to C., and the residue to D., E., and F. The executors ascertained the residue, and invested it as directed by the will. The surviving executor afterwards applied part of the trust fund for his own use :—Held, that the loss which was thus occasioned must be borne pro ratâ by all the legatees ; and that the legatees of 1,000*l.* were not entitled to their legacies in full. Newman v. Williams, 10 L. J., Ch. 106.

An executor, who was also trustee, having paid to the adult legatees their shares of the then ascertained residue, invested in his own name the shares of infant legatees, for whose maintenance he was bound as trustee to apply the dividends, but did not execute any declaration of trust. He subsequently applied these shares to his own use, after which further assets of the testator's estate fell in :—Held, that they were applicable, in the first instance, in making good the infants' legacies. Willmott v. Jenkins, 1 Beav. 401.

A pecuniary legatee is entitled to be paid in full out of a dividend payable on a proof made in respect of a devastavit committed by a bankrupt, who is executor and residuary legatee. Turner, Ex parte, West, In re, 2 Mont. D. & D. 613 ; 6 Jur. 840. S. C., nom. Hufton, Ex parte, West, In re, 11 L. J., Bk. 21.

A residuary legatee, on a deficiency of assets, allowed to come in pari passu, with the other legatees, by reason of the special circumstances of the case. Dyose v. Dyose, 1 P. Wms. 305. And see Marsh v. Evans, supra, col. 1672.

—— On Executor's own Legacy.]—Where a testator bequeathed to A. and B., two of his three executors, a sum of money to be invested in trust for C. for life, and then to sink into the residue, and A. and B. accordingly invested the money ; but after A.'s death, B. sold out the stock, and applied the proceeds to his own use :—Held, that a legacy given to him by the will, which he had not yet received, but which he had assigned for valuable consideration, was applicable to make good the breach of trust, the approbation of the stock having been defeated by the act of B. Morris v. Livie, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 380 ; 11 L. J., Ch. 172.

—— Where Waiver.] —A testator having directed his trustees and executors, after sale of his estates, to stand possessed of the money arising from the sales, upon trust, in the first place, to invest 400*l.* in trust for his wife for life, in bar of dower, and after her death for W. C. ; and upon further trust, out of the residue of the money, to invest 400*l.* in trust for J. R. for life, and after his death for his children ; and upon further trust, to pay other sums to persons named ; and having bequeathed the residue of his estate to W. C., and the only acting executor having made no investment on the trusts of the will, but having paid interest on the two sums of 400*l.* to the respective legatees, and applied the assets to his own use, and afterwards become bankrupt ; it was held, that by that dealing the two legatees had waived whatever priority the will might have given to them ; and the dividend payable on the whole sum proved under the commission against the executor in respect of the testator's estate was divided among the pecuniary legatees and the residuary legatee, in the proportion of the amount of their legacies and of the residue, as it was computed at the death of the testator, with interest on each. Chadwin, Ex parte, 3 Swan. 380; 19 R. R. 219.

19. ASSENT OF EXECUTOR.

What Amounts to.]—It is not essential to the efficacy or validity of an assent to a bequest that it should confer a legal interest, or affect the mere legal title to the subject of the bequest. Trail v. Bull, infra.

A small matter will amount to an assent to a legacy. Noel v. Robinson, 1 Vern. 94; 2 Vent. 358; 2 Ch. Cas. 145; 2 Ch. R. 248.

—— Assent to Prior of Two Estates.]—Where a term for years is devised to A. for life, remainder to B., and the executor assents to the devise to A., this is a good assent to the devise over. Adams v. Peirce, 3 P. Wms. 12. S. P., Foley v. Burnell, infra.

—— Acquiescence in Possession.]—Whether, without any express assent by executors to a bequest of a leasehold estate, the entering of the legatee into possession and receipt of the rents and profits, with the knowledge of and without any objection from the executors, does not amount to an assent by them, quære. Cole v. Miles, 10 Hare, 179.

—— Where Legatee Co-executor—Joining in Dealings.]—Where a leasehold was given to A., the wife, and also an executrix of testator, for life, with remainder to such three persons, B., C. and D., as should be living at A.'s death, and A. was allowed by her co-executors to remain in possession, and one of such executors, who was the husband of B., joined in a deed executed by B., C. and D., whereby they agreed to take the leasehold as tenants in common without survivorship:—Held, that there was no such assent to the bequest as prevented the executors from making a title to purchaser. Att.-Gen. v. Potter, 5 Beav. 164; 14 L. J., Ch. 16.

—— Where Legatee Sole Executor—Dealings with Property.]—The widow of a testator, who was his executrix and also legatee for life of certain leaseholds, with a limitation over on her death to the testator's children, entered into possession of the leaseholds, and received and applied the rents to her own use. From the master's report, it appeared that the widow, during the whole of her life, had been in advance to the testator's estate:—Held, that, under the circumstances, such receipt and application of the rents did not constitute an implied assent to the legacy. Trail v. Bull, 22 L. J., Ch. 1082. Affirming 1 Coll. C. C. 352.

—— Assent given in Petition.]—A personal representative who is also a legatee may, though no assent has been previously given, shew by his petition that he assents to his own legacy. An assent, so testified, will suffice, and may be shewn, not only by an express averment of assent, but even by the frame of the cause petition manifesting that the petitioner sued as legatee. Quinton v. Frith, Ir. R. 2 Eq. 396.

—— Evidence of.]—Entry by an executrix, who is also a legatee of the entire interest in a chattel lease, is evidence, but not conclusive evidence, of her assent to the legacy. Gleeson v. Cooke, 1 Hog. 297.

Effect of Assent.]—Personal estate vests in the executor, and no legacy comes out of him without his consent. Abney v. Miller, 2 Atk. 598.

The executor has not a bare authority, but the interest in the thing assigned, for neither residuary nor specific legatees have any interest without the assent of the executors. Mead v. Orrery (Lord), 3 Atk. 239.

At law a legacy does not vest in legatee till the executor's assent; but in equity he will be decreed to deliver the specific legacies, being considered there as bare trustee. Northey v. Northey, 2 Atk. 77.

—— By Infant Executor.] — If an infant executor assents to a legacy, such assent shall be good, if there are sufficient assets to pay the debts; secus if not. Chamberlain v. Chamberlain, 1 Ch. Cas. 256.

—— Cannot be withdrawn.]—Whenever an executor assents to a bequest in his testator's will, there is an end of his interest in the thing bequeathed, and he cannot afterwards dissent. And it is equally true that the executor's assent to the first devise is an assent to the remainder over. Foley v. Burnell, 4 Bro. P. C. 34.

An executor who has assented unconditionally to a specific bequest of the testator's leasehold estates, is not entitled to an indemnity out of the testator's general estate in respect of his covenants contained in the lease. Shadbolt v. Woodfall, 2 Coll. C. C. 30; 9 Jur. 229.

—— On Position of Executor.]—Upon assenting to a specific bequest given them in trust, executors forthwith became trustees. A testator bequeathed a mortgage, secured by a conditional surrender, and which had become absolute, to his two executors, upon trust to continue and hold it on certain trusts. The executors assented to the legacy, but did not procure themselves to be admitted, and by reason thereof one of them was enabled to receive money and release the estate. The money being misapplied:—Held, that the co-executor had become a trustee, and was liable for his default. The ordinary trustee indemnity clause affords no security to a trustee who neglects to take the necessary steps to secure the trust fund. Dix v. Burford, 19 Beav. 409.

Where a person, executor and trustee of legacy to be laid out in stock, has fully administered estate and assented to legacy, and retains legacy in his hands, not as assets, but as trustee, he is liable for breach of trust, and ordered to purchase stock at price of time when he was first able to invest it. Byrchall v. Bradford, 6 Madd. 13; S. C. id. 235; 23 R. R. 204.

A legatee is not obliged in every instance to bring a bill against an executor for a recovery of a legacy, for after he has assented, trover will lie. Williams v. Lee, 3 Atk. 214. And see Atkins v. Hill, Cowp. 284; Hawkes v. Saunders, id. 289.

Whether an executor, after he has voluntarily assented to a legacy, shall not compel the legatee to refund it. A debt voluntarily paid to a bankrupt shall be paid over again, otherwise if recovered by course of law. Noel v. Robinson, 1 Vern. 94; 2 Vent. 358; 2 Ch. Cas. 145; 2 Ch. R. 248.

—— On Position of Legatee.]—Although the bank is bound to allow the transfer to, or by the executor of stock, specifically bequeathed, if the executor has not assented to the legacy, yet it does not follow that if he has assented to the legacy the bank is bound to transfer it to the legatee. Humberstone v. Chase, 2 Y. & C. 209.

A legatee of the share of the mere goodwill of a deceased partner cannot support a bill against the surviving partner to obtain the benefit of his legacy, even after assent by the executor. Robertson v. Quiddington, 28 Beav. 529. And see Williams v. Lee, supra.

—— On Constitution of Suit.]—Where an executor has not assented to a specific bequest, the persons beneficially entitled are not necessary parties to a suit relating to the property specifically bequeathed. Const v. Harris, Turn. & R. 514; 24 R. R. 108.

Where a bill was filed against the devisee of the lease, praying that the lease might be declared void, and the defendant insisted that if the lease was set aside the plaintiffs ought to repay the moneys expended by his devisor in the improvement of the premises, the executor of the devisor who had assented to the devise of the lease was not a necessary party to the suit. Malpas v. Ackland, 3 Russ. 273.

20. Appropriation.

What amounts to—Sufficient Sum set apart with Intent.]—F., having an estate which came to her ex parte maternâ, on her marriage, conveyed the same to trustees to such uses as she should direct, with remainder to her own right heirs. By will she directed the estate to be sold, the money to be laid out in the funds, and the trustees to permit the husband to receive the interest for life; then, after the deduction of 3,500*l.* to uses which vested in the plaintiff A., and after payment of 1,000*l.* to G., to pay the residue of the purchase-money to the three defendants, H.; by codicil, she gave the plaintiff, her husband, a power of appointing the 3,500*l.* in case A. should marry without his consent. G. died, living the testatrix, before the codicil made, but F., in the codicil, took no notice thereof. The 3,500*l.* is vested in A., and, the trustees having laid out a larger sum by 17*l.*, with intent to appropriate, it is well appropriated; and A. having married once with her father's consent, his power is gone, and, he consenting to give up his life interest, it was decreed to be paid to the trustees on her marriage settlement. Hutcheson v. Hammond, 3 Bro. C. C. 128.

—— Secus where Life Interest intervenes.]—When stock is left to pay the interest to plaintiff for life, and then, after payment of gross sums, the residue to him, the court will not permit the security to be lessened by laying out a certain sum to secure the legacies, and paying the residue immediately to the plaintiff. Soundy v. Binyon, 3 Bro. C. C. 258.

—— Transfer to Trustees for Prior Estate.]—The circumstance, that a fund in which a party takes a life interest under a will is transferred by the executor to the trustees of that fund appointed by the will, is not necessarily and conclusively a severance of the fund from the bulk of the estate, unless the executor has by such transfer done all that it is incumbent upon him to do in the administration of the fund. Upon a transfer to trustees of a fund bequeathed to them upon trust to pay the interest to a tenant for life, without any bequest of the corpus, or with a bequest thereof of doubtful validity, and which upon construction might fail, so that the corpus would ultimately become part of the residuary estate, the trustees of such fund are not ipso facto trustees for the residuary legatees or the next of kin; but the corpus of the fund must be regarded as assets of the testator's estate unadministered ultra the life estate. The circumstance, that the residue of the estate (omitting the fund so vested in trustees for the tenant for life) has been administered in equity, does not affect the principle, nor is it less applicable because, from the time which has elapsed since the death of the testator, the executor is not a necessary party in the administration of the particular fund, and has not been made a party to the suit. Pennington v. Buckley, 6 Hare, 451. And see S. C., 11 Jur. 468.

—— Investment in Securities liable to be paid off.]—The securities appropriated in satisfaction of a legacy in which infants are interested must be of a permanent character. A testator directed his trustees and executors to invest 15,000*l.* upon such securities as they might in their absolute discretion think fit, and to stand possessed thereof in trust for his widow during her life, with remainder to his children, some of whom were infants. The trustees, by arrangement with the tenant for life, set apart for the purpose of answering the legacy certain securities, some of which were preference stocks, which appeared to be liable to be paid off. The tenant for life being dead:—Held, that the appropriation was not binding upon the children, and that the full sum of 15,000*l.* must not be invested. Stewart v. Sanderson, 39 L. J., Ch. 337.

—— Appropriation of Stock for Charity.]—Stock cannot be appropriated to support a permanent charity, but must be sold and the money appropriated. Isaac v. Gompertz, 1 Ves. 44.

—— Appropriation of Mortgage if Security ample.]—An executor and trustee directed to invest a legacy on mortgage may properly appropriate one of the testator's mortgages in payment of the legacy, but he must ascertain its sufficiency. Ames v. Parkinson, 7 Beav. 379.

—— Signing Legacy Duty Receipts.]—B. and T., as executors, had signed two Legacy Duty Office receipts for the two legacies:—Held, that this did not amount to an appropriation by the executors of the sums required for the legacies so as to discharge the real estate. Howard v. Chaffer, 32 L. J., Ch. 686; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 767; 9 L. T. 243; 11 W. R. 1057.

—— Loan of Deeds to Legatee giving Equitable Lien.]—Executors, who are also trustees, agree to give one of the residuary legatees, as a security for his share, a legal mortgage of real estate, part of the testator's assets, and for the purpose of having the mortgage prepared, they deliver the title deeds to his agents; this gives him an equitable lien on the property, against the executors, though not as against the other residuary legatees. Hockley v. Bantock, 1 Russ. 141; 25 R. R. 16.

—— Agreement with Legatee.]—Case in which an executor had agreed with a legatee that a certain part of a charge on an estate to which the testator was entitled would be paid to her, and it was accordingly reported in a suit as payable to her; but the assets being deficient, in consequence of a devastavit, it was held that the transaction was not an appropriation tantamount to payment to the legatee, so as to give her priority over the other legatees. Molloy v. French, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 376.

A. being seised in fee of Ardgullan, confessed a judgment, and afterwards, upon the marriage of his son B., conveyed the lands to the use of B. for his life, remainder to the issue of the marriage, and covenanted that they were free from incumbrances. By his will he gave several legacies, and died, having appointed B. his executor, and leaving assets more than sufficient to pay all his debts and legacies. Upon the marriage of C., one of the legatees, a settlement was executed, whereby, after reciting the will of A., and that the legacy of C. was then in the hands of B. as executor, C. assigned the legacy to trustees, of whom B. was one, upon trust for C. for her life, and after her decease without issue, upon trust for the benefit of the judgment creditor and his issue. In 1835 the judgment creditor instituted a suit for payment of his judgment debt out of the real and personal assets of the testator. In 1836 C. and her husband (there being no issue of their marriage) instituted another suit against B. and the persons entitled under their settlement, in default of issue of their marriage, for the appointment of new trustees and an account of the trust funds. And in that suit an order was made, on the consent of B., but without notice to the persons entitled in default of issue of C. and her husband, that B. should transfer to the credit of that cause stock to the value of C.'s legacy, without prejudice to the rights of the parties: and it was ordered that the dividends thereof be paid to C. The stock was accordingly transferred by B., who purchased same with the produce of the sale of part of the assets of the testator, which were outstanding in specie when the bill of 1835 was filed. The assets having been wasted, the children of B., claiming as specialty creditors of A. under his covenant, filed a bill in 1840 to have the stock standing to the credit of C.'s cause applied in payment of the judgment debt:—Held, that the stock had not been appropriated to the payment of C.'s legacy either as against the specialty creditors, or the other legatees of A., but that it still continued assets for payment of his debts and legacies. Jennings v. Bond, 2 Jo. & Lat. 720; 8 Ir. Eq. R. 755.

Legatee having taken mortgage in part payment, subject to an agreement for payment out of the other assets, and resumption of mortgage:—Held, entitled to benefit of that agreement, accounting for the difference of interest. Sitwell v. Bernard, 6 Ves. 520; 5 R. R. 374.

—— Implied Acquiescence in Appropriation by Co-executor.]—A. R. having bequeathed his personal estate, subject to the payment of his debts, to two trustees, H. and N., upon trust to place out at interest such money as he should die possessed of, and at their discretion to continue at interest the several sums then standing at interest, and out of the produce of his personal property to pay his wife, R. R., a legacy of 4,000*l*., and an annuity of 200*l*. per annum, and the residue to his daughter, appointed his wife, R. R., executrix, and the said H. and N. executors. The testator died in 1797; a settlement was executed on the marriage of the testator's daughter, with T. K., to which R. R. was a party, and in which there was a covenant by all the parties thereto, that the residue should be ascertained and paid over within a year to the trustees of the settlement. H., who had been the banker and agent of the testator, but was indebted to him at the time of his decease, was allowed by the executrix, R. R., to have the sole management of the assets, which, at the time of the testator's death, were sufficient to pay all demands. H. at different times advanced out of the testator's assets several sums, the interest of which T. K. was permitted to enjoy, and in 1812 became a bankrupt, whereby a large portion of the assets was lost. It appeared from his books that he had made entries, appropriating those several sums to the uses of the settlement of 1797. R. R. proved under the commission as executrix, and in the account which was furnished to her by H., and annexed to her disposition, made on the occasion of so proving, referred to the bankrupt's books:—Held, that as it was her duty to have examined those books, she was bound by the entries made therein, and that the appropriations must be considered as made with her privity and concurrence, and, consequently, that she had forfeited her right to be paid the sums due to her under the will of the testator out of the funds so appropriated. Riky v. Kemmis, Ll. & G. t. Sugd. 101.

—— Appointment of Receiver to keep down Interest on Incumbrances.]—On a bill by infant tenant in tail, a receiver was appointed, with an order to keep down the interest of incumbrances out of the rents. He kept down, accordingly, the interest of all but one mortgage, the interest of which (belonging to infant) was never applied for, except small portion for maintenance; the residue of rents paid into court to credit of cause. Tenant in tail coming of age, suffers recovery, and resettles estate, and afterwards dies. Master, by report, having certified that deceased was not bound, while tenant in tail, to keep down interest of incumbrances, and consequently that rents paid into court during time belonging to his personal representatives, partly claiming to be entitled to estate under settlement, petitioned for leave to except to report on following grounds: first, that in case of an infant tenant in tail, interest of incumbrances ought to be kept down out of rents; secondly, that direction to receiver to keep down interest amounted to an appropriation of so much of rents to that purpose; and, thirdly, that deceased, by not claiming fund when of age, shewed intention that it should be appropriated: but it was held, first, that general question would only run in favour of a remainderman or reversioner, and all such rights were in that case barred by the recovery; secondly, that the order was not meant to vary the rights of the real and personal representatives, but to prevent the incumbrancers from being prejudiced by court taking estate into its custody, and also to protect estate from hostile proceedings on part of creditors, and did not amount to appropriation; and, lastly, that there was nothing in circumstances to alter character of property, which, consisting of rents paid into court, and neither applied in payment of interest nor appropriated for such payment, was personal estate, and to be dealt with as such. Bertie v. Abingdon (Lord), 3 Mer. 560; 17 R. R. 125.

Order for—When made—In General.]—Court will of course order security for a legacy payable at a future day. Ferrard v. Prentice, Ambl. 273; Dick. 568.

Where legacy is a charge upon personal estate, the court will set apart sufficient sum to answer it, though not payable immediately. Phipps v. Annesley, 3 Atk. 58.

Admission that there is standing in the names of the executors, upon the trusts of the will, a considerable sum in the 3 per cents., and offering an appropriation, was held sufficient to entitle the plaintiff, a contingent legatee, to move for that purpose; and by consent the order was made as upon admission of assets sufficient to satisfy the plaintiff's demand, to transfer, &c. Pullen v. Smith, 5 Ves. 21.

Legacy carried over to a separate contingent account, in order to avoid the expense of serving all the parties interested. Cazalet v. Smith, 11 Beav. 177.

—— Where Testator's Intention appears.]—Upon the construction of a will:—Held, that it was the duty of executors to set apart a sum of 4,500*l.* upon a particular trust, and for that purpose, if necessary, to make an immediate conversion of the testator's assets, it being the primary intention of the testator to constitute that trust, also to give maintenance to his infant residuary legatees, although, from other expressions in the will, it might also appear to be his intention that the conversion should not take place till the residuary legatees should attain twenty-five. In default of executing this trust, a receiver was appointed. Richards v. Perkins, 3 Jur. 168.

—— Where Testator's Debts not immediately ascertainable.] — Where the existence and amount of a testator's debts are contingent, and depend upon the result of legal proceedings before a foreign tribunal which are not likely to be speedily settled, the court, in administering his assets, will not be induced by that circumstance to direct an appropriation of the fund in court to answer pecuniary legacies, subject to such demands as creditors may eventually establish. Thomas v. Montgomery, 1 Russ. & M. 729.

—— Where Legacy Future or Contingent.]—The court will not direct a legacy to be raised out of land before the time of payment, although it will secure personal fund for a future or contingent legatee. Gawler v. Standewick, 2 Cox, 15.

Where legacy is given on contingency, and suit is instituted for administration of estate, court does not direct sum of stock to be appropriated to pay legacy when due, but directs whole fund to residuary legatee, and him to give security for legacy when due. Webber v. Webber, 1 Sim. & S. 311; 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 219; 24 R. R. 180.

Right of a party, entitled contingently in remainder, to have the trust fund brought into court at the hearing, though there be no imputation against the trustees. Governesses' Benevolent Institution v. Rushbridger, 18 Beav. 467.

Where a party's interest is a mere possibility, he cannot maintain a bill to secure a legacy. Davis v. Angel, 31 L. J., Ch. 613; 10 W. R. 685. Affirmed 10 W. R. 722—L. C.

—— Where Survivorship.]—Where pecuniary legacies were bequeathed to several persons for their lives, and if any of them should die without issue, their proportions to be divided among the survivors, the sums were directed to be secured in court, and the dividends paid to the legatees for their respective lives, with liberty to any person to apply upon the death of each legatee. Ranelagh v. Ranelagh, 2 Myl. & K. 441; 1 L. J., Ch. 183.

—— Where Gifts of Corpus and Income distinct.]—A testator bequeathed all his property, real and personal, to trustees, to be distributed by them as trustees, in the following manner, i.e., to pay to his daughter A. the interest of 6,000*l.*, at the rate of 5 per cent., for life, and after her death to be divided among the children of A., share and share alike; the portions to be paid to each of the boys at twenty-one, and to each of the girls at her marriage, provided her husband should settle a jointure equal to her portion, but if not, the portion not to be paid, but the interest at 5 per cent. on her own receipt, and the principal to be paid to her children (if any), share and share alike; but if she should die without children, then to be paid to her surviving brothers and sisters, share and share alike; and to pay to his daughter B., the wife of Y., and her three children, the interest of 6,000*l.*, at 5 per cent., i.e., to B. 130*l.*, to her son H. 40*l.*, to her daughter F. 40*l.*, and to her daughter M. 40*l.*, making among them 300*l.* a year; the above payment to continue during the life of B., and after her death the 6,000*l.* to be appropriated among her children in the same manner, and on the same terms and conditions, as required respecting A. and her children; and to pay to his daughter C. 300*l.* a year for life, and after her death 100*l.* a year to her husband Z.; and should C. leave any children, they were to have 6,000*l.* the same as A.'s children; the 100*l.* a year to be paid to Z. to be considered part of the interest: and he gave all the residue of his property to his son, who was one of the trustees, and authorised them to advance any part of his daughters' portions, with their consent, to provide for any of his grandchildren. 1,300*l.* was paid, with B.'s consent, for the advancement of H.:—Held, in a suit instituted by the son, to have sums set apart to provide for the payment of the legacies, and to have the residue transferred to him, that, as the 300*l.* a year bequeathed to B. and her children was a distinct bequest from that of the principal sum of 6,000*l.*, a sum of stock, sufficient to provide for the interest at 5 per cent. on 4,700*l.* (the remainder of the legacy of 6,000*l.*, minus 1,300*l.*, paid to H.), should be set apart during the life of B. O'Neill v. Billing, 2 Ir. Ch. R. 80.

Subsequent Loss by Breach of Trust.]—Where a testator bequeathed to A. and B., two of his three executors, a sum of money to be invested in trust for C. for life, and then to sink into the residue, and A. and B. accordingly invested the money; but after A.'s death, B. sold out the stock and applied the proceeds to his own use:—Held, that a legacy given to him by the will, which he had not yet received, but which he had assigned for valuable consideration, was applicable to make good the breach of trust, the appropriation of the stock having been defeated by the act of B. Morris v. Livie, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 380; 11 L. J., Ch. 172.

An executor, who was also trustee, having paid to the adult legatees their shares of the then ascertained residue, invested in his own name the shares of infant legatees, for whose maintenance he was bound as trustee to apply the dividends, but did not execute any declaration of trust. He subsequently applied these shares to his own use, after which further assets of the testator's estate fell in:—Held, that they were applicable, in the first instance, in making good the infants' legacies. Willmott v. Jenkins, 1 Beav. 401.

—— By Fall in Stocks.]—Reference to master on infant legatees' bill, to compute how much stock should be set apart to answer the legatees. Master made his report, but before the order was made, infant became of age; stock had fallen in meanwhile:—Held, he was to be paid legacy in full, without deducting for fall in stocks. Rock v. Hardman, 4 Madd. 253.

Legacy, payable at twenty-one, having, under direction of court, been invested in annuities which had sunk in value, legatee not bound to accept them in satisfaction of whole legacy. Alcock v. Eames, Dick. 578. But see Webb v. Webb, Dick. 746.

Legacy, left to A. on marrying with consent, and till marriage interest to be paid 3*l.* per cent. The executrix lays it out in the funds, and conveys to trustees in trust to pay the legacy, with 3*l.* per cent. interest, and to pay the surplus interest to her. This is not a good appropriation, but the stock having sunk in value, the executrix's estate shall make it good. Cooper v. Douglas, 2 Bro. C. C. 232.

A testator bequeathed stock to his executors, subject to his debts, to pay the dividends to his wife for life, and at her death to sell the capital, and out of the proceeds to pay certain legacies, which would exhaust about one-half of the fund, and he made A. his residuary legatee. Thirty years before the death of the tenant for life, the estate of the testator was fully administered by the trustees and executors of his will, and no part of the stock being required for payment of his debts, it was set apart and appropriated for the persons entitled thereto. About the time of the tenant for life's death, a large portion of the fund was lost. Upon a bill by the pecuniary legatees to have the remaining portion applied in satisfaction of their legacies in priority to the residuary legatee:—Held, that as there had been a complete appropriation of the fund, the subsequent loss must fall on the pecuniary legatees in common with the residuary legatee, and therefore that the residuary legatee was entitled to share in the remaining portion of the fund, which must be divided amongst the respective legatees in proportion to their respective interests in the original fund. Baker v. Farmer, 36 L. J., Ch. 819; L. R. 4 Eq. 382; 17 L. T. 46; 15 W. R. 917. But see S. C., L. R. 3 Ch. 537; 16 W. R. 923.

Subsequent Increment.]—A particular sum having been set apart to answer a pecuniary legacy, which was given to one for life, with remainder to his children, and an increase in the value of that fund having taken place, which made its value greater than the amount of the legacy:—Held, that the legatees were entitled to the benefit of the increase. Kimberly v. Tew, 5 Ir. Eq. R. 389; 4 Dr. & War. 139; 2 Con. & L. 366.

A. B. bound himself to pay 16,000*l.*, on the death of the survivor of himself and wife, on certain trusts, under which, on a contingency, the amount was to revert to himself. A. B. by his will, gave the 16,000*l.*, if it should revert, to trustees, on trust to pay thereout 14,000*l.* to C., and three legacies of 500*l.* each to charities, and "the remaining sum of 500*l.*" to the Foundling Hospital. His wife survived him nine years, and the sum of 16,000*l.* was invested in 25,702*l.* 3 per cents. In 1848 the contingency happened, when the fund reverted, and amounted to considerably more than 16,000*l.*:—Held, that the legatees were entitled to money legacies only, and not to the whole fund. Loscombe v. Wintringham, 12 Beav. 46. And see Green v. Pigot, infra.

Securing Legacy to Infant.]—Legacy at twenty-one. If infant dies before, then to executor, the residuary legatee; court will not order legacy to be raised and secured for infant. Palmer v. Maysent, Dick. 70. S. P., Starkie v. Smith, Dick. 520.

On a bill by an executor to recover a fund belonging to the testator, it appeared that the testator's debts were paid, and that the fund was bequeathed to infants; the court refused to have it transferred to the executor, but secured it in court for the benefit of the infants. Orrok v. Binney, Jac. 523.

Legacy to a female infant, to be paid at twenty-one, or marriage, with interest at 4 per cent., but if she die before, to sink into the residue, ordered to be paid into the bank, in order to secure the legacy, and if greater interest made, that it should be for the benefit of the child. Green v. Pigot, 1 Bro. C. C. 103; Dick. 585.

In some cases an executor may be compelled to give security; as where 1,000*l.* was given to A., to be paid at twenty-one, upon a bill suggesting a devastavit, security was decreed to be given. Duncumban v. Stent, 1 Ch. Cas. 121.

A. by will gives all his personal estate to his wife for life, and then gives to his grandchildren, T. and F., 100*l.* each, if they attain twenty-one, or marriage:—Held, legacies were not payable till death of wife, but that T. and F. were entitled to security at the above periods. Young v. Burdett, 5 Bro. P. C. 54.

Testator gives a legacy to child, payable at the age of twenty-three, and made his wife executrix and residuary legatee. She marries again, and dies. Her second husband takes administration de bonis non, &c. Upon a suggestion of insolvency the second husband ordered to give security to pay the legacy when due. Rous v. Noble, 2 Vern. 249.

Executors, having personal estate of the testator given to them by the will upon trust to lay out upon good and sufficient security for an infant, to be paid on his coming of age, after a decree to account, and after notice by the next friend of the infant plaintiff, lending a part of such personal estate upon mortgage, ordered to pay the same into court; but the motion asking, in the alternative, that the executors might be ordered to replace the amount by so much stock as the same would have purchased at the time of investment, was to that extent refused. Widdowson v. Duck, 2 Mer. 494; 16 R. R. 206. And see Willmott v. Jenkins, supra.

—— Under Legacy Duty Act.]—Bill for a legatee very nearly of age to secure the legacy, the costs were given out of the estate, but that will not be done in future upon a bill to secure the legacy of an infant; as under the Legacy Act (56 Geo. 3, c. 52), s. 33, the executor may pay the legacy into court, and the legatee when of age, may petition for it. Whopham v. Wingfield, 4 Ves. 60.

Where money is lodged with the accountant-general under the Legacy Act, he is bound to invest from time to time the dividends on the principal sum in stock; and the order for investing the principal sum should provide for the costs of investing the dividends. But where the order did not provide for those costs, he was not held responsible for not having so invested the dividends. M'Mullen, Ex parte, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 488.

An infant being entitled to a legacy of 50*l*., the executors under the will invested that sum, minus the legacy duty, in 3*l*. per cent. consols, and tendered the amount produced by sale of the stock, with the interest upon it, to the infant upon her coming of age. A bill was filed against the executors by the legatee for the amount of the legacy, with 4*l*. per cent. interest:—Held, that the executors ought to have paid the legacy into court, under the Legacy Act, and a decree was made for the plaintiff, with costs. Rimell v. Simpson, 18 L. J., Ch. 55.

A testator bequeathed the residue of his personal estate to his executors, in trust for his wife for life, and, after her decease, for his nephews and nieces, whereby legacy duty would be payable at the death of the wife:—Held, that, under the 36 Geo. 3, c. 52, s. 13, the executrix of the surviving executor might, during the life of the widow, transfer the trust fund to new trustees of the will appointed by the court. Jones's Trust, In re, 21 L. J., Ch. 566.

A legatee being absent in India, the executors paid his legacy into court, under the statute 36 Geo. 3, c. 52. The legatee, by letter, authorised his brother to receive and the executors to pay it. The court, upon the joint petition of the legatee and the party authorised to receive it, directed the money to be paid. Candy, Ex parte, 8 Sim. 189; 5 L. J., Ch. 14.

When executors paid residue into the bank to the credit of infants, under the Legacy Duty Act, 36 Geo. 3, c. 52, and subsequently incurred costs in the Probate Court, repayment allowed to them on petition out of fund so paid in. Blight, In re, 21 W. R. 573.

21. Payment.

Presumption of.]—In 1780 the interest of a sum of money was bequeathed to A. for her life, and after her decease the principal to her daughter B. Between 1784 and 1795 proceedings in chancery, in which A. and B. were parties, were instituted against the executor, and a decree for an account was obtained, which was not acted upon. From that time till 1828 no application was made by B. for her legacy, nor did it appear that A. had of late years received her interest. On the other hand, it was stated by the representatives of the executor, and from circumstances it appeared probable, that the legacy was paid by the executor many years ago to A. and B. jointly, or to one of them with the consent of the other:—Held, nevertheless, that payment of the legacy in the mode suggested could not be presumed, such mode of payment being contrary to the presumed duty of the executor. Prior v. Horniblow, 2 Y. & C. 200.

Order of.]—An executor ought to pay that creditor first who uses the first diligence: so at law, the first judgment shall be preferred, but otherwise as to legatees, for there being no priority among them, their legacies shall be paid pari passu. Ashley v. Pocock, 3 Atk. 208.

—— Preference of Legatees to Creditors a Devastavit.]—Payment by executor of legacies not good in case of deficiency of assets against creditor by simple contract of the testator, and it makes no difference that notice of his demand was not given within the year. It is a devastavit. Onge v. Truelock, 2 Moll. 45.

An executor will be allowed payments made by him to simple contract creditors of his testator, a bond being in existence, but not payable, but he will not be allowed payments to legatees, notwithstanding he had no notice of the bond. Norman v. Baldry, 6 Sim. 621.

Executor having paid legacies, stands in a situation in which (at least for the security of the fund) it is not competent to him to allege that debts are unpaid. Freeman v. Fairlie, 3 Meriv. 38; 17 R. R. 7.

The testator leaves assets sufficient to pay all debts and legacies; the legatees receive payment, which the creditors might also have had, if they had demanded it in time; they lie by for eleven years, and the estate is wasted, yet the legatees shall refund. Hardwick v. Mynd, 1 Anstr. 112; 3 R. R. 562.

Payment by executor of simple contract debt before breach of condition of bond is good, and no devastavit in case of deficiency of assets, but payment of legacies is otherwise. Hawkins v. Day, Ambl. 160; Dick. 151.

A specific legacy is not discharged from its liability to pay the testator's debts, although the personalty not specifically bequeathed is more than sufficient for that purpose, and although the specific legacy has been in consequence assigned and delivered by the executor to the specific legatee. Davies v. Nicolson, 2 De G. & J. 693; 27 L. J., Ch. 719; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 49; 6 W. R. 790.

If an executor acting bonâ fide, and under a conviction, that the assets are amply sufficient for the payment of the testator's debts, permits specific legatees to retain or possess themselves of the articles bequeathed to them; he will be answerable for the value of those articles with interest at 4 per cent. if there should ultimately be a deficiency of assets, although the deficiency should be occasioned by subsequent events which he had no reason to anticipate, and the court will direct an account to be taken of the value of the property so possessed by the legatees, and interest to be computed, unless it is certain that the assets will ultimately be sufficient to pay all the creditors. Spode v. Smith, 3 Russ. 511.

By Charge on Property of Executor indebted to Testator's Estate.]—An executor, indebted to his testator's estate, creates a charge on his (the executor's) own freehold estate in favour of his wife and children, to the amount specified in the testator's will, as part of their share of his residuary estate:—Held, that the wife and children were entitled to the benefit of the charge, although the debt due to the testator's estate remained unpaid. Stilwell v. Mellersh, 20 L. J., Ch. 356.

To Infant.]—Executors cannot justify paying a legacy payable at twenty-one to the infant, or for his use, except for express necessaries. Davies v. Austen, 3 Bro. C. C. 178; 1 Ves. 247.

Executor, pursuant to will, pays into the hands of three children, of the respective ages of sixteen, fourteen, and nine years, their legacies of 100*l.* each; the father embezzled the money. On bill for repayment, held that, as the executor made this payment to save a forfeiture of what he himself took under the will, he ought not to pay it over again; but Lord H., afterwards thinking the point doubtful, at his recommendation the defendant paid 50*l.* amongst the three children, who were ordered to release their legacies. Philips v. Paget, 2 Atk. 80.

A legatee domiciled abroad may, if of age, according to the law of the place of his domicil, receive payment of his legacy, although a minor, according to the law of this country, and a legatee domiciled abroad may be paid his legacy on attaining his majority, according to the law of this country, even if he is a minor, according to the law of his place of domicil. Hellman, In re, L. R. 2 Eq. 263; 14 W. R. 682.

When persons entitled to a legacy under a will were minors domiciled in Scotland, and the executor lodged the money so bequeathed in court:—Held, that the money so lodged might be paid out on the joint receipt of the minors and their curator appointed according to the law of Scotland. Ferguson, In re, 22 W. R. 762. And see Deneken, In re, infra, col. 1703.

To Father.]—Trifling specific bequests given to infant children, ordered to be delivered to their father. Hill v. Chapman, 2 Bro. C. C. 612.

An infant's legacy of small amount paid to the father under special circumstances. Walsh v. Walsh, 1 Drew. 64.

A legacy was given to a child ten years old, and the executor paid it to his father for his benefit. The father became insolvent. The executor shall not be obliged to pay it over again. Sed secus, if the executor had taken a security from the father, for then he paid it at his own peril. Holloway v. Collins, 1 Ch. Cas. 245. But see 1 P. Wms. 285.

Payment to the father, as guardian, of legacy given to a child, ill, though the testator, by parol on his deathbed, directed it. Dagley v. Tolferry, 1 P. Wms. 283; 1 Eq. Abr. 300. See 1 Ves. 249. n.

N. made a will with certain trusts relating to his real and personal estate, and appointed trustees to carry them into execution. One of these trusts was for the payment of provisions of 2,500*l.* for the younger children, and 500*l.* for the eldest daughter of R., who was one of the executors and trustees under the will. An act of parliament was obtained to carry some of the trusts of this will into execution, and, under this act, lands devised by N. were sold. The trustee under the act was W. On a bill filed against him by the legatee of the 2,500*l.*, he sought to take advantage of the payment by him of that sum to R.:—Held, that R.'s receipt was no discharge of W.'s liability, as, by the terms of the act, he was absolutely bound to pay the debts, and discharge the children's portions, and it was not set up in the answer, nor proved that R. had specifically received this money as trustee for his daughter. Lawrence v. Blake, 8 Cl. & F. 504.

To Parent, where gift to Parent and Children.]—Legacy given to A., to be divided between himself and his family, is well paid to A. Cooper v. Thornton, 3 Bro. C. C. 96, 186.

Legacy to a father the better to enable him to provide for his younger children: he consented to secure the capital, but was held entitled to the interest. Brown v. Casamajor, 4 Ves. 498.

Bequest to A. for her and her children's use: a transfer decreed to A. Robinson v. Tickell, 8 Ves. 142; 7 R. R. 5.

To Guardian.]—Where an infant is entitled to a vested legacy, payment thereof, during his minority, by the executor to the testamentary guardian is valid, inasmuch as the statute for taking away the Court of Wards and Liveries (14 & 15 Car. 2, c. 19, Ir.; 12 Car. 2, c. 24, Eng.) enables the guardian to give a good acquittance. Such a payment is valid, although the period directed by the testator for payment of the vested legacy to the infant is the attainment of the age of twenty-one years or marriage. Accordingly, where a testator bequeathed to his eight younger children all his property, share and share alike, on their attaining their respective ages of twenty-one years or marriage with the consent of their guardian, and directed that the interest arising from their respective shares should be applied in the meantime to their maintenance and education, and appointed a guardian and an executor:—Held, that a payment, during the minority of the children, of a part of the corpus of the personal estate of the testator, by the executor to the guardian, was a valiant payment. M'Creight v. M'Creight, 13 Ir. Eq. R. 314.

When persons entitled to a legacy under a will were minors domiciled in Scotland, and the executor lodged the money so bequeathed in court:—Held, that the money so lodged might be paid out on the joint receipt of the minors and their curator appointed according to the law of Scotland. Ferguson, In re, 22 W. R. 762.

To Married Woman.]—Legacy bequeathed to a feme covert, payment to her alone not good. Palmer v. Trevor, 1 Vern. 261.

Testator gave 5,000*l.* stock to a female infant, to be paid or transferred to or settled on her, by his executors, by such deed or instrument in writing as they should think most prudent and proper on her attaining twenty-one. The infant married in the testator's lifetime, and afterwards attained twenty-one. The court ordered the stock to be transferred to her on her sole receipt. Laing v. Laing, 10 Sim. 315; 9 L. J., Ch. 48; 3 Jur. 1119.

Where a part of a legacy had been paid to a married woman, under circumstances which primâ facie showed that the husband had assented to, or had at least ratified, such payment, it was referred to the master to inquire how much of the legacy had been so paid, and he was directed to give the executors credit for the sums received by the wife, either with the husband's express approbation, or under such circumstances as made her his agent for that purpose. Moses v. Levi, 3 Y. & C. 359.

A testator who died, and whose will was proved in England, bequeathed a legacy to a married woman, whose domicile, as well as that of her husband, was in Scotland. The husband died in a few months after the testator, without having received the legacy. After his decease the executors of the testator, with knowledge of the before-mentioned circumstance of domicile, paid the legacy to the widow. According to the Scotch law the payment should have been made to the husband's personal representatives :—Held, that in the absence of proof that the executor knew the Scotch law on the subject, the payment to the widow was a good payment. Leslie v. Baillie, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 91 ; 12 L. J., Ch. 153 ; 7 Jur. 77.

Where a testatrix bequeathed legacies of 250*l.* each to two French ladies, the wives of French subjects, the court ordered payment of the ladies' legacies to them. Sutherland v. Young, 5 L. T. 738.

A wife who has obtained a protection order under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 21, can give a valid discharge for a legacy to which she became entitled before the date of the order. Coward, In re, 44 L. J., Ch. 384 ; L. R. 20 Eq. 179 ; 32 L. T. 682 ; 23 W. R. 605.

To Trustee of Secret Trust.]—A fund bequeathed to A. to be applied in accordance with sealed directions (which had been admitted to probate) was ordered to be paid over to A. instead of being distributed by the court in an administration action. Hull v. Hill, 4 Ch. D. 97 ; 25 W. R. 223.

—— Of Charity.]—A testator directed his executors to invest a sum of money in the 3 per cent. stock, and bequeathed the stock to the treasurer of a charitable corporation in Scotland, in order that the dividends might be applied to the purposes of charity. The court ordered the stock to be transferred to the corporation. Emery v. Hill, 1 Russ. 112 ; 25 R. R. 11.

Where legacy is given for permanent charitable purposes to trustees not having corporate character, court will not transfer fund to them without reference. Wellbeloved v. Jones, 1 Sim. & S. 40 ; 1 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 11 ; 24 R. R. 146.

Charitable bequest to the rector and corporation of W. W. being a vicarage, payment was ordered to be made to the vicar and corporation. Hopkinson v. Ellis, 5 Beav. 34.

Where sums of stock are given to the churchwardens of a parish, or to the treasurer of a school, the court will not direct the stock to be transferred to them, but to be carried to a separate account, and the dividends to be paid to the churchwardens or treasurer for the time being. Tyrrell v. Clark, 2 Drew. 86 ; 23 L. J., Ch. 283 ; 18 Jur. 323 ; 2 Eq. R. 333 ; 2 W. R. 152.

To one Legatee in absence of others.]—A party beneficially entitled to one-fourth of a fund belonging to the estate of a testator who had been dead 150 years, having obtained letters of administration de bonis non to the testator, filed a bill for an account and payment of the whole fund ; it appearing that no part of the fund in question was required for the payment of the testator's debts, but that the beneficial interest in the other three-fourths had passed under the residuary bequest in his will, and had belonged successively to the estates of several persons who were named in the proceedings, but who were not represented on the record, the court ordered one-fourth only to be paid to the plaintiff, and the other three-fourths to be paid into court, with liberty to any party interested to apply, giving notice to the attorney-general. Loy v. Duckett, Cr. & Ph. 305.

To Legatee of Original Legatee Direct.]—In 1815, a sum of 1,000*l.* was bequeathed to J. R. and C. R., in equal shares, to be raised out of the share of E. A. D. in the testator's residue, on the death of his (the testator's) widow. In 1818 J. R. bequeathed his interest in the 1,000*l.* to C. R., and appointed him one of his executors. In 1822, by an indenture reciting that all J. R.'s debts and legacies were paid, C. R. assigned the 1,000*l.* to D. and L., from whom, by divers mesne assignments, the trustees of the Economic Life Assurance Society purchased it for valuable consideration. The testator's widow died, when the legacy fell into possession :—Held, that the whole of it might be paid to the said trustees, and that the 500*l.* which represented J. R.'s share ought not to be paid to his surviving representative, to be handed over to the said trustees. Revill v. Revill, 3 W. R. 541.

At what Time—In general One Year from Testator's Death.]—Legacies are not distributable till a year after testator's death. Hill v. Chapman, 1 Ves. 407.

The year allowed for executors, &c., is only for convenience, and does not prevent the vesting. Garthshore v. Chalie, 10 Ves. 13 ; 7 R. R. 311.

Where testator directs his executors, as soon as they should think proper after his death, to sell so much stock as would produce legacy of 12,000*l.*, legacy is not payable till end of year after testator's death. Benson v. Maude, 6 Madd. 15.

Where a testator gives to legatees who shall be living at the time of actual distribution, the court will fix a year as the proper period. Brooke v. Lewis, 6 Madd. 358 ; 23 R. R. 246.

A testatrix directed her trustees, as soon as possible after her decease, to invest in consols such a sum of money as might be necessary to realise such an amount of dividend as would be fully sufficient, with the rent of her land at Kenilworth, at that time payable, to make up the sum of 50*l.* per annum, which she directed to be paid to T. J. during his life, and after his decease the principal to go in the manner pointed out by her will :—Held, that the investment was to take place from the expiration of one year after the death of the testatrix. No provision was to be made for future reduction in the rent of the land at Kenilworth, and no deduction was to be calculated in respect of land tax or other taxes. Hues v. Jackson, 23 L. J., Ch. 51 ; 2 Eq. R. 462 ; 2 W. R. 83.

—— Immediately after Admission of Assets.]—Executors paid some interest on a legacy, and about nine years after testator's death passed their accounts at the Legacy Duty Office, showing a considerable residue :—Held, that the legatee was entitled to an immediate decree for payment of the legacy, without first taking the accounts of the testator's estate. Whittle v. Henning, 2 Beav. 396.

Upon the constructive admission of assets :—Held, that residuary legatees were entitled to immediate payment of their legacies, and under circumstances with interest beyond the time allowed by the Statute of Limitations, 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 40. Dinsdale v. Dudding, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 265.

Effect of Express Directions.]—Where the testator directed some of the legacies to be paid to infants at twenty-one, and afterwards added that it was his wish, "as far as it may be practicable, that all legacies should be paid within six months after her decease":—Held, not to accelerate the time of specified payment, but only where indefinite. Frost v. Capel, 2 Beav. 184; 9 L. J., Ch. 84.

Direction that particular legacies to children shall be paid at particular time, is not altered by direction subsequent, that all legacies should be paid at another time. Adams v. Clarke, 9 Mod. 154.

The testator bequeathed his residuary estate to trustees, upon trust to pay the interest thereof, after the decease of a tenant for life, to John, Robert, and Ann, for five years, and at the expiration of that term to pay them 5,000*l.* apiece, and then to pay the interest of the remainder, for a further term of three years, to John, Robert, and Ann, in equal shares; and at the expiration of that time, to pay the whole to John, Robert, and Ann, in equal shares. Soon after the death of the tenant for life, and before the expiration of the five years, John and Robert claimed and obtained from the trustees payment of the whole of their two-thirds of the residuary estate of the testator; but it was held that the husband of Ann was not entitled to immediate payment of her share of the capital, and that he was unable to give an effectual release or discharge for the same. Harley v. Harley, 10 Hare, 325.

E., being on bad terms with his eldest son, bequeaths him a trifling annuity, and bequeaths to M., the daughter of the said son, "if unmarried, and if she does not marry without the consent of his trustees, the sum of 400*l.*, one moiety to be paid her upon her marriage with such consent, the other moiety in one year after; but if said M. was then married, or should marry without consent, said sum to sink into his personal fortune." M., being unmarried, is not entitled immediately either to principal or interest. Ellis v. Ellis, 1 Sch. & Lef. 1.

Testatrix, by will, limited certain estates to her daughter O. for life, remainder to first and other sons successively in tail male, remainder to her daughters as tenants in tail general, and if an only surviving daughter, to her in tail general; and in default of all such issue of O., to trustees for 1,000 years, upon trust, to raise certain legacies as she should bequeath by codicil or codicils; and she afterwards by codicil bequeathed certain legacies after the decease and failure of issue of her daughter O. O. died without issue:—Held, that the legacies were payable when the term was to take effect. Morse v. Ormonde (Marquis), 5 Madd. 99; 21 R. R. 284. Affirmed, 1 Russ. 382; 4 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 158; 25 R. R. 85.

Payment at Age of Eighteen—Infant's Power to give Receipts—Payment out of Court.]—A testator gave a sum of money to be paid to the legatees when they attained the age of eighteen years, and directed that their receipts should be a sufficient discharge, notwithstanding infancy. The fund was in court:—Held, that the money might be paid out to the trustees on their undertaking to remit it forthwith to the legatees, who were still infants, but had attained the age of eighteen years. Deneken, In re, Peters v. Banchereau, 13 R. 294; 72 L. T. 220.

—— Where Deferred during Life Interest which lapses.]—Contingent legacy out of real and personal estate, payable two years after the event. By codicil, the testator reciting that he found his estate would not bear that payment during the life of A., being chargeable with an annuity for her life, declared he revoked that part of his will, and that the said legacy, upon the same event, was to be paid twelve months next after the death of A., and not before. A. dying before the contingent event, the legacy is not payable till the expiration of two years after it. Wordsworth v. Younger, 3 Ves. 73.

One devises lands to his wife for life, and after death to his son in fee, upon condition to pay his daughter 1,000*l.* within a year after the death of S., with a proviso, that if the money be not paid, the daughter may enter and receive the profits till payment. S. dies, living the wife. The daughter shall have the 1,000*l.* during the life of the mother, and in default of payment, equity will decree a sale of the reversion. Bacon v. Clerk, 1 P. Wms. 478; Pre. Ch. 500.

Where Deferred During Life Interest by Implication.]—Testator gave a real estate and a sum of stock to A. for her life, and after her death to his brother absolutely, and he gave legacies, which he directed to be paid as soon as convenient after his death to his nephews and nieces, and the residue of his property to his brother absolutely. The brother having died, the testator, by a codicil reciting that fact, and that thereby the devises and bequests to his brother had lapsed, gave an annuity to his brother's widow, and directed his trustees to pay the income of the residue of his personal estate to A. for life, and gave to her all his real estates for life, and after her death to his trustees in trust to sell, and the proceeds to fall into his personal estate; he then gave 10,000*l.* to each of his nieces, in addition to the legacies given to them by the will, and directed that that sum for each of them should be held by his trustees for their separate use, and he gave all the clear residue of his estate (after providing for the before-mentioned legacies, and also those given by his will) to his nephews:—Held, that the legacies given to the nieces by the codicil were not payable till after A.'s death. Overend v. Gurney, 7 Sim. 128.

Bequests to the sons and daughters of D. of 200*l.* each, also to the children of a son of D. 200*l.* to be equally divided among them, to be paid twelve months after the decease of the testator's widow:—Held, to be postponed as to all the bequests till after the widow's death. Child v. Elsworth, 2 De G. M. & G. 679.

A testatrix gave two legacies, and directed them to be paid out of a reversionary interest in stock to which she was entitled:—Held, that the legacies were payable when the reversion fell into possession, and that interest was payable from that time. Earle v. Bellingham, 24 Beav. 448; 27 L. J., Ch. 545; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1237; 6 W. R. 45.

Testatrix by her will devised all her fee-simple, freehold, and leasehold estates to R. E. for life, remainder to J. E. for life, with remainder, save a certain rent-charge, to the commissioners of charitable donations, in trust to pay the head-rent, and to apply the profits to certain charities specified in the will:—Held, that the charitable bequests were to be paid out of the rents and profits of the property devised, and not out of the general personal estate of the testatrix; and that no charitable trust attached upon the devised estates, until after the death of R. E. and J. E. Charitable Donations Commissioners v. Espinasse, Fl. & K. 164; 3 Ir. Eq. R. 324.

A. gave one-sixth of his personal estate to A. for life, and afterwards to a charity. He gave four separate sixths to B., C., D. and E. for life, with remainder to the same charity; he gave the remaining sixth to F. for life: and after the death of the survivor of A., B., C., D., E. and F., he gave the whole moneys, and all interest thereafter to become due thereon, to the same charity. F. died:—Held, that the charity was not entitled to F.'s sixth until the death of the survivor of the six legatees, and that there was an intestacy as to the intermediate income. Stevens v. Pyle, 28 Beav. 388.

A testator gave all his personal estate to his wife for life, and he bequeathed 40*l.* to A., and other pecuniary legacies, all of which were payable at her death. By a first codicil he gave a legacy of 200*l.* to B. (who was not mentioned in the will), and he directed that all things in his codicil should be performed as if the same were so declared in his will. By another codicil he revoked the legacy of 40*l.* to A., and gave her 50*l.*:—Held, that the legacy of 200*l.* was payable at the death of the testator, but that the payment of the legacy of 50*l.* was postponed until the death of the widow. Giesler v. Jones, 25 Beav. 418.

By his will a testator bequeathed 10,000*l.* upon trust for A. for life, and after her decease for eight persons named, in certain proportions, among whom was B., who was to receive 1,000*l.*; by a codicil to his will the testator gave to B. "2,000*l.* instead of 1,000*l.* as bequeathed by my said will":—Held, that following the general rule, the legacy by the codicil being given instead of that by the will, was subject to the same incidents, and the payment must be deferred until after the death of A. Collyer, In re, Millikin v. Snelling, 55 L. T. 344.

Testator directed his trustees to hold a residuary fund upon trust for his wife during widowhood, and on her marrying again upon trust to pay her an annuity of 2,000*l.*, and from and immediately after her decease upon trust to pay certain pecuniary legacies, the payment of which was expressly postponed until after the wife's death, and the will contained a gift of the residue of the trust fund. The testator's widow married again:—Held, that the pecuniary legatees were not entitled to payment until the death of the widow. Tredwell, In re, Jaffray v. Tredwell, 60 L. J., Ch. 657; [1891] 2 Ch. 640; 65 L. T. 399—C. A.

Discretion given to Executors as to Time and Mode of Payment—Legatee absolutely Entitled.]—A testatrix gave to her executors a sum of 1,000*l.* in trust for her brother, to be paid in such sum or sums, share or shares, and at such time and manner as they should think proper, and bequeathed the residue of her property to her executors in trust, as to one-half thereof, for her brother in like manner:—Held, that the brother was absolutely entitled to the legacy and share of residue, freed from the exercise of any discretion by the executors. Miller, In re, Clancy v. O'Callaghan, [1897] 1 Ir. R. 290.

Power of Deferring, how to be exercised by Executors.]—A testator gave to his five daughters a sum of 6,000*l.* each, to be invested in real or government securities within seven years from his death, such investment to be in the names of the executors, in trust for them or their children:—Held, that the executors were bound to invest the money as soon as they had assets, and not to wait for seven years from the testator's death, the postponement being for the convenience of the estate, and not for the benefit of the residuary legatee. Varley v. Winn, 2 K. & J. 700; 25 L. J., Ch. 831; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 661; 4 W. R. 792.

Legacy payable at Twenty-one—Attainment of Age by some Members of Class.]—Legacy by a grandfather in trust for the five children by name, and all and every the child and children of his son equally, the shares to be assigned at twenty-one, or upon marriage of the daughters, with power to advance money for putting out all and every, or any of the sons to business. The first attaining twenty-one is entitled to receive his share then. Prescott v. Long, 2 Ves. 690.

Legacy of stock at a particular age; order made upon the petition of one legatee having attained the age for a transfer of his share to his attorney. Hill v. Chapman, 11 Ves. 239.

Bequest of a personal fund to such of the children of I. N. as should live to attain the age of twenty-one years; I. N. had three children, two of whom, having attained twenty-one, applied for payment of their shares. Under the circumstances of the case, the court declined to pay over to them any part of the capital, but allowed them to receive the interest of two-thirds, without prejudice to the claim of after-born children of I. N. Brandon v. Aston, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 30.

A limited fund was given to A. B. until some child of his should attain twenty-one, and 1,000*l.* consols was to be paid thereout to each of his children as they attained twenty-one. The fund was insufficient to provide for all the children. A child attained twenty-one:—Held, that he was, notwithstanding the deficiency, entitled to 1,000*l.* consols. Evans v. Harris, 5 Beav. 45.

—— Payment when Age attained notwithstanding Life Interest.]—A testator having first given a small annuity charged on real estate to A. for life, which he gave over in case of A.'s death, leaving children, among such children, till they should attain twenty-one, and further charged the same lands with the payment of the sum of 100*l.* to the child or children of A., when and so soon as he, she, or they should respectively attain the age of twenty-one:—Held, that the sum was raisable for a child of A. on attaining twenty-one in his lifetime. Pearce v. Catton, 1 Beav. 352; 8 L. J., Ch. 239.

A testator gave the residue of his real and personal property to trustees to sell and stand possessed of the proceeds to pay the dividends and interest to his wife for life, to be by her expended in or about the maintenance of herself and the maintenance and education of his children, and after the decease of his wife he gave the principal of the estate unto or amongst all his children equally, and to be paid to them as they should severally attain twenty-one, with benefit of survivorship amongst them. There were seven children, and two of them upon attaining twenty-one, while four of the others were yet infants, petitioned jointly with the mother that the amount of their shares might be paid to them for their advancement in the world:—Held, that the shares became vested upon the children attaining twenty-one, and though the court would not usually sanction the payment of the shares, where the whole income was not ample for the maintenance of the children, yet such a course might be adopted here upon the undertaking of the two children to secure to the mother the dividends which would have accrued in respect of those sums. Berry v. Bryant, 31 L. J., Ch. 327. And see Young v. Burdett, ante, col. 1696.

—— Notwithstanding Contingency still pending.]—Legacy payable at twenty-one, with proviso to go over, if legatee should at any time become seised of the real estate, to which he was entitled in remainder after an estate tail limited upon an estate for life, subsisting when he became twenty-one. Even supposing there is a contingency left, he must have the legacy at twenty-one; but it may be disputed afterwards upon the happening of the contingency. Griffith v. Smith, 1 Ves. 97.

—— Payment ordered before Age attained.]—Legacy payable at twenty-one ordered to be paid out of money in cause in the name of the accountant-general before the legatee attained that age. West v. Welsh, Dick. 381.

—— Payment before Age by Mistake—Recouping Executor.]—See EXECUTOR AND ADMINISTRATOR.

Payment at Twenty-one implied from Gift over.]—Although no time is specified for payment of a legacy given as a portion, subject to a contingeney, provision to go over if legatee die before twenty-one, raises a necessary implication, that it is payable at twenty-one. Legacies to A. and B., and "in case the said A. and B., or either of them, shall become entitled to the said lands (real estate settled in remainder, on the event of C. dying without issue), my intention is, that she or they so becoming entitled shall not have, possess, or enjoy any part of my property; but in case A. and B. shall not become entitled to the settled estate, I leave each of them 300*l*.," with other provisions in the event of dying before twenty-one, or marriage with consent, that the legacies should go over. A. having attained twenty-one and married with consent:—Held, that her legacy became absolutely vested, not liable to be divested, notwithstanding the devolution of the settled estate by the subsequent happening of the event. Colhoun v. Thompson, 2 Moll. 281.

Where Legatee dies before Time fixed for Payment.]—Legacy payable at twenty-one, with a certain allowance in the meantime. The legatee dies before twenty-one; his administrator not entitled to the legacy till such time as he would have attained twenty-one. Roden v. Smith, Ambl. 588.

Legacy payable at twenty-one, before which time the legatee dies. If interest is payable, his executor shall have the legacy immediately; if not, he must wait till the legatee would have been twenty-one, and cannot then have the interest. Crickett v. Dolby, 3 Ves. 13.

Legacy payable at twenty-one, before which time the legatee dies. A person, claiming by limitation over, takes immediately, but the administrator of the infant must wait till the time at which the legacy is payable, unless the whole interest is given. Id. 16.

Legacy given to a child, payable when twenty-one; the child dies before; his administrator shall have the legacy, but shall stay for it till such time as the child, if he had lived, would have come to twenty-one. Anon., 2 Vern. 199; 2 Vent. 344.

One has several daughters, and being seised in fee, charges his lands with 1,000*l*. apiece to his daughters, payable at twenty-one or marriage; and if any die, then to the survivors, but no time limited when the additional portion should be paid to the surviving daughters. If one die unmarried before twenty-one the additional portion shall not be paid to the surviving daughters until the deceased daughter should have come to twenty-one. Feltham v. Feltham, 2 P. Wms. 271.

Legacy of 300*l*. to be paid to A. at his age of twenty-three; if he die before, to go over to B. A. dies before twenty-three. B. shall have it presently. Papworth v. Moore, 2 Vern. 283.

If I devise a legacy of 100*l*. to A. payable at his age of twenty-one, and A. died before twenty-one, A.'s executors or administrators shall not have the legacy till such time as A. (had he lived) should have attained twenty-one, and my executors shall have the interest at the same time. But if I give a legacy to A. of 100*l*., payable at his age of twenty-one, and if he dies before, then to B., and A. dies before twenty-one, B. shall have the legacy presently, and not stay till such time as A. should have come to twenty-one. Laundy v. Williams, 2 P. Wms. 478. S. P., Chester v. Painter, 2 P. Wms. 336.

Legacies are given to A., B. and C., to be paid at their respective marriages, and if any of them die, her legacy to go to the survivors. One of them dies unmarried; the survivors shall not receive her legacy before their respective marriages. Moore v. Godfrey, 2 Vern. 620.

Where Payment expressly Deferred beyond Twenty-one.]—An absolute vested bequest was accompanied with a direction that it should not be delivered till the legatee attained twenty-five:—Held, that he was entitled to payment on attaining twenty-one. Rocke v. Rocke, 9 Beav. 66.

Testator gave his residuary personal estate to J. J. an infant, and directed his executors to place it out at interest, to accumulate and to pay the principal to the infant on his attaining twenty-four, and, in the meantime, to allow 60*l*. a year for his maintenance, and the testator gave the residue over on the infant's dying under twenty-one. The court held that the residue was actually given to the infant, and that what followed the gift, was merely directory as to the management of it, and on the infant's attaining twenty-one, allowed the residue and accumulations to be transferred to him. Josselyn v. Josselyn, 9 Sim. 63.

When a legacy is directed to accumulate for a certain period, or where the payment is postponed, the legatee, if he has an absolute indefeasible interest, is not bound to wait until the expiration of that period, but may require payment the moment he is competent to give a valid discharge. Saunders v. Vautier, 4 Beav. 115. Affirmed Cr. & Ph. 240; 10 L. J., Ch. 354.

A legacy was given to A., when he should attain twenty-four; at twenty-one he received part, and the executor gave a bond to pay the remainder when A. should attain twenty-four. A. died in the meantime. The court doubted in this case, whether the money received should be repaid and the bond delivered up. Luke v. Alderne, 2 Vern. 31.

A residuary estate was bequeathed in the first instance to be paid into the hands of the legatee, on attaining the age of twenty-five years, and not till then unless she married; the whole property then to be settled on her and her children; the legatee, on attaining the age of twenty-one unmarried, was held entitled to the income and the accumulations thereof. Grant v. Grant, 3 Y. & C. 171; 7 L. J., Ex. Eq. 20.

A testator bequeathed one-third of his residue to his daughter, her executors, &c., to be vested at twenty-one, but not to be payable until twenty-five. He declared it should not be subject to the control of any husband, but should devolve and be settled by deed upon her, as a feme sole, and that the income should not be anticipated, and that, until her marriage, she should only be entitled to receive the dividends, and retain the power to bequeath the capital by will. The daughter being unmarried:—Held, that she took absolutely, and was entitled to payment of the fund out of court on attaining twenty-one. Young's Settlement, In re, 18 Beav. 199.

Bequest of residue to four sons equally, but the capital not to be divided until they should all become settled in life. The interest of their portions alone to be paid after they were all provided for, until they severally became thirty years old, when the capital to be placed at their disposal:—Held, that the sons were entitled to payment of the capital on attaining twenty-one. Jacob, In re, 29 Beav. 402.

Where a vested legacy is directed to accumulate for a certain period, or the payment is postponed for the benefit of the legatee, he is not bound to wait for the expiration of the period, but may, if he have an absolute interest in the legacy, have it paid to him so soon as he can give a valid discharge. Saunders v. Vautier, 4 Beav. 115. Affirmed Cr. & Ph. 240; 10 L. J., Ch. 354.

Of Stock Legacies—In what Stock.]—Where a testator directed his executors to pay legacies of different sums in 3 per cent. annuities, and at his death possessed stock in consols, new 3 per cent. annuities, and reduced 3 per cent. annuities:—Held, that the executors were bound to pay the legatees in consols. Watson, In re, Warren v. Pilgrim, 12 L. T. 631.

Testator having given to charities legacies, and also a residue in bank stock, and having no bank stock at his decease, but having 3 per cent. annuities which would satisfy the legacies in that shape, and leave a residue, but if sold would not purchase bank stock to satisfy the legacies in that form, a decree taken by consent, that the legacies should be paid in 3 per cents, according to the sums given; an infant not opposing, his legacy ordered to be paid in the same manner; but if the testator's property had been sufficient, the legacies should have been paid in bank stock. Finch v. Inglis, 3 Bro. C. C. 420.

The testator, by his will, gave to his son a legacy of 20,000*l.* in the joint stock of the 4 per cent. bank annuities of the Bank of England, commonly called "4 per cent. bank annuities;" the only 4 per cent. bank annuities existing at the date of his will were reduced to 3½ per cents. afterwards, and before his death a new stock of 4 per cent. bank annuities was created; the will speaks at the testator's death, and the son is entitled to a sum of 20,000*l.* in the then existing 4 per cent. bank annuities. Sheffield v. Coventry (Earl), 2 Russ. & M. 317. S. P., Banks v. Sladen, 1 Russ. & M. 216; Tam. 407; 8 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 101.

—— Amount.]—A testatrix bequeathed to her executors such a sum of money as would be sufficient to purchase 2,500*l.* stock, and directed them to pay the dividends thereof to A. for life, and, after A.'s death, "the said principal sum of 2,500*l.* stock" was to fall into the residue, and, after giving some pecuniary and specific legacies, she directed all her legacies to be paid within three months after her decease. In consequence of the testatrix's property being the subject of a suit in chancery, which was not decided till four years after her death, her executors were unable till that time to purchase the stock:—Held, that A. was entitled to have 2,500*l.* (minus legacy duty) purchased, and not merely such a sum as could then be purchased with the money, which would have been sufficient to purchase 2,500*l.* stock at the death of the testatrix, and that she was also entitled to the dividends on that amount immediately from the death of the testator. Owden v. Campbell, 8 Sim. 551; 6 L. J., Ch. 311.

A testator having, by his will, given an interest for life in a sum of stock to two persons, and the survivor of them, with remainder to another for life, and afterwards to the children of such other person, by a codicil substitutes an annuity nearly equal to the amount of the dividends of the stock, in the place of the first gift; the gift in remainder is not thereby accelerated; but its value is to be computed according to the price of the stock at the time of the testator's death, when, but for the substitution, the gift of the prior life interest would have taken effect. David v. Rees, 1 Russ. & M. 687.

A testator bequeathed 500*l.* to a person resident abroad, if he should be living at his widow's death. The executors invested 500*l.* in the sum of 600*l.* stock, under s. 32 of the 5 & 6 Geo. 3, c. 52:—Held, upon petition, that this section did not apply to contingent legacies, and the legatee was therefore only entitled to 500*l.*, minus the legacy duty, and not to the 600*l.* stock. Krans, Ex parte, 14 L. J., Ch. 453.

Where testator directs executors to convert his property, and invest it in stock, and thereout to pay an annuity of 250*l.* to his widow for life, and after her death gives principal sum that produced the annuity over; and the property be not in fact sold and invested till after widow's death, the legatees over are entitled to so much stock as would produce 250*l.* a year in dividends. Borrett v. Deady, 3 Madd. 449.

Persons entitled to a perpetual annuity were desirous of receiving a present payment in cash in lieu of the annuity out of funds in court upon which the annuity was charged:—Held, that the amount of cash to be paid to the annuitants was such a sum as at the price of the day (excluding brokerage) would purchase sufficient 2½ per cent. consolidated stock to produce the annuity. Hicks v. Ross, 60 L. J., Ch. 853; [1891] 3 Ch. 499; 65 L. T. 200; 40 W. R. 172.

—— Where Rise or Fall in Price.]—Direction for sale or transfer of stock, without attention to rise or fall, the party must take it as it happens at the time of appropriation. Pye, Ex parte, 18 Ves. 141; 11 R. R. 173.

Testator bequeathed a general legacy of 10,000*l.* consols to A. B. There was no deficiency of assets, but, owing to the institution of a suit for administration of testator's estate, the legacy remained unsatisfied for several years after testator's death, during which consols rose:—Held, nevertheless, that A. B. was entitled to have the full amount of his legacy purchased and transferred to him. Auther v. Auther, 13 Sim. 439.

—— Method of Transfer.]—Executors should transfer stock specifically bequeathed to the legatees without an intermediate transfer to themselves, and they will not be allowed the costs of such a transfer. Hopkinson v. Roe, 1 Beav. 183.

Of Specific Legacies.]—Specific legacy retained by the executor for assets, but was not wanted, in case of depreciation, the legatee is entitled to the original value. Chaworth v. Beech, 4 Ves. 566.

If an executor acting bonâ fide, and under a conviction that the assets are amply sufficient for the payment of the testator's debts, permits specific legatees to retain or possess themselves of the articles bequeathed to them; he will be answerable for the value of those articles with interest at 4 per cent. if there should ultimately be a deficiency of assets, although the deficiency should be occasioned by subsequent events which he had no reason to anticipate, and the court will direct an account to be taken of the value of the property so possessed by the legatees, and interest to be computed, unless it is certain that the assets will ultimately be sufficient to pay all the creditors. Spode v. Smith, 3 Russ. 511.

Leaseholds, specifically bequeathed to married women successively for life, for their separate use, with remainder to infants, proved damnosa hæreditas. The court decreed a sale notwithstanding the executors had so far assented to the bequest as to put the first tenant for life into possession. Lonsdale (Earl) v. Berchtold (Countess), 3 K. & J. 185; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 328.

And the second tenant for life, who had declined the property in specie:—Held, nevertheless, entitled to a life interest in the proceeds of the sale, and that without such life interest contributing to the charges on the estate which accrued since she became entitled in possession. Ib.

It is the duty of executors as far as possible to preserve articles specifically bequeathed according to the testator's wish, and unless compelled they ought not to apply them to the payment of debts. Clarke v. Ormonde (Earl), Jac. 108; 20 R. R. 8, 143.

It is the duty of executors to get in property specifically bequeathed at the expense of the general estate. Perry v. Meddowcroft, 4 Beav. 197; 12 L. J., Ch. 104.

—— Right of Selection.]—If a testator, dying solvent, bequeaths to A. a given number of articles, forming part of a stock of articles of the same description, as, for instance, if he has twenty horses in his stable, and bequeaths to A. six of them, A. has the right of selection. Jaques v. Chambers, 2 Coll. C. C. 435; 15 L. J., Ch. 225.

A widow devised an acre of land, which was "to be selected by" the devisee, to a clergyman absolutely, and devised all her other real estate to the trustees of her will to convert it into money. By a letter to the clergyman, dated the day her will was executed, but not intended to be, and not, in fact, delivered to him until after her death, she said that it would be gratifying to her memory if he of his own free will would dedicate the acre of land as a site for a church. He did select an acre for that purpose, but subsequently entered into an arrangement with the trustees of her will, whereby the trustees sold the acre so selected, and granted him permission to select another acre in lieu. The clergyman died without having selected another acre:—Held, that the permission to make a second selection was ultra vires, and that the purchase-money produced by the acre originally selected belonged to the personal representatives of the clergyman absolutely. Littledale v. Bickersteth, 24 W. R. 507.

Of Demonstrative Legacy where part of Fund lost.]—A. is entitled to 8,000*l.* in the chamber of London, and whilst a stop was put to payment there, he made his will, and declares that when the executors should receive the 8,000*l.* he gives 2,000*l.* to three hospitals. Afterwards an act passed for settling a fund for paying a perpetual interest for the orphan's debt, and the 8,000*l.* is then worth to be sold but 6,300*l.*, yet decreed the whole 2,000*l.* to be paid. Colwall v. Bonython, 2 Vern. 547.

In what Currency.]—Legacies are to be paid in the currency of the country where the testator resided, where there were assets and executors in that and this country also; but legatee residing here not entitled to be paid in the foreign currency. Bourke v. Ricketts, 10 Ves. 330.

Legacies, no fund being described, to be paid in the currency of the country where the will is made. Pierson v. Garnet, 2 Bro. C. C. 38; Pre. Ch. 201. See S. C., 2 Bro. C. C. 226.

One by will made in England devises an annuity in trust for his wife out of lands in Ireland, the testator and his wife and the trustee residing in England, the annuity shall be paid in England, and the estate bear the charge of the return. So if one in England gives by will a legacy out of lands in Ireland, the legacy shall be paid in England and in English money. Wallis v. Brightwell, 2 P. Wms. 88.

Testator gives legacies in money, and dies abroad, where the will was made; currency shall be understood, if sterling is not expressed. Semble, that as to the interest on such legacies, an inquiry ought to be directed to ascertain in what country the fund, out of which the legacy is payable, has been deposited, and interest shall be paid according to the rate of interest in that country. Malcolm v. Martin, 3 Bro. C. C. 50.

A., living in Antigua, and having a plantation there, devises 50,000 lbs. weight of sugar to the children of B., to be paid by his executors in ten years after his death. The executors not delivering the sugar within the time, on a bill brought by one of the children, decreed the value of the plaintiff's legacy to be computed according to the medium rate of sugars in Antigua, at the end of ten years, and paid with interest from the time it became due. Symes v. Vernon, 2 Vern. 553.

Legacy in a foreign country, and coin, as sicca rupees, by a will in India, if paid by remittance to this country, the payment must be according to the current value of the rupee in India, without regard to the exchange or the expense of remittance; so as to other countries. Cockerell v. Barber, 16 Ves. 461.

A testator, domiciled in Jamaica, gave legacies in Jamaica currency to J. C., H. C., and M. C., persons also domiciled in that island, and desired them to be paid out of the money due to him on certain bonds, which the will specified. At his death, which happened in Scotland in 1790, no such bonds were to be found, but J. C. was then indebted to his estate upon other bonds, in a sum which exceeded the value of his legacy, and which a year after the testator's death, including interest, was equal to the amount of the penalties. In 1794 actions were brought in Jamaica upon these bonds by the testator's personal representatives there, and judgments recovered against J. C. for the full penalties and costs; but no attempt was made to levy execution upon the judgments, and they remained unsatisfied. In 1818 H. C. and M. C. assigned their respective legacies to the plaintiff, who was the personal representative of J. C., the other legatee: and he, in 1821, when administration was for the first time taken out of the testator's estate in England, filed the bill for the purpose of enforcing payment:—Held, that as the legacies were payable out of assets in this country, their value was to be computed according to the standard par of exchange between Jamaica and British currency, and not according to the actual rate at the time of payment. Campbell v. Graham, 1 Russ. & M. 453; 9 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 234.

Bond given in Dublin, or not in Jamaica, must be paid in current money; the same with regard to a will. Legatees, living in England, makes no distinction, for the residence of persons devising must decide it. Though testator's effects are partly in Jamaica, and partly in England, yet, as the devise is of a compound residue, without separating the funds, no argument can be drawn from it in favour of the plaintiff. Testator living in Jamaica gave legacies to be paid in sterling money in the first place, and the two legacies immediately following (one of which was to the plaintiff), generally without saying in sterling money; and at the end of the will, several more to be paid in sterling money:—Held, that the plaintiff must make his legacy in Jamaica money, for testator's expressing himself differently shewed a different intention. Saunders v. Drake, 2 Atk. 465.

Whether in Specie.]—Where a testator devises residuary estate which includes freeholds and leaseholds to one for life with remainder over, neither the use of the word "rents," nor a power of distress given to annuitants, nor both these circumstances together, constitute any sufficient indication of intention that the leaseholds are to be enjoyed in specie. Rule in Howe v. Dartmouth (Lord) (7 Ves. 137a) applied. Harris v. Poyner (1 Drew. 174; 21 L. J., Ch. 915), and Craig v. Wheeler (29 L. J., Ch. 374) followed. Crowe v. Crisford (17 Beav. 507), Wearing v. Wearing (23 Beav. 99), and Vachell v. Roberts (32 Beav. 140) not followed. Game. In re, Game v. Young, 66 L. J., Ch. 505; [1897] 1 Ch. 881; 76 L. T. 450; 45 W. R. 472.

The rule in Howe v. Earl of Dartmouth (7 Ves. 137) only applies where the testator has given no indication of his intention as to the time of conversion. A discretion given to trustees as to time of sale is an indication of intention that the property should not be immediately converted, and prevents the application of the rule. Pitcairn, In re, Brandreth v. Colvin, 65 L. J., Ch. 120; [1896] 2 Ch. 199; 73 L. T. 430; 44 W. R. 200.

P. gave all his property to trustees upon trust to pay the income to his mother for life, and after her death to pay legacies, and pay the residue to a charity. The will contained no express direction to convert, but contained a power for the trustees to sell if and when they should think fit. The bulk of the testator's estate consisted of reversionary interests expectant on his mother's death. The mother survived the testator for fourteen years. The reversionary interests were not realised during her life:—Held, that she was not entitled to have the reversions realised on the testator's death; and that her estate had no claim against the trust fund in respect of the income she would have received if this had been done. Ib. And see CONVERSION AND RECONVERSION.

A testator gave 5,000*l.* to trustees upon trust to spend the same in planting trees upon an estate (of which he was tenant for life) in the places he should designate, if any, and if none he directed his trustees to have regard, in the place and manner of planting, to the wishes of the owner of the estate. He died without designating any place. It was proved that from its position and natural character, the estate could not be planted with profit or advantage:—Held, that the gift was intended for the benefit of the owners of the estate, and that the persons absolutely entitled to the estate were entitled to the money free from any condition. Bowes, In re, Strathmore (Earl) v. Vane, 65 L. J., Ch. 298; [1896] 1 Ch. 507; 74 L. T. 16; 44 W. R. 441.

Enforcing—Right of.]—A legacy, given to a child by a stranger, at the child's death vests in the father by the Statute of Distributions, although he took not out administration to such child. Grice v. Goodwin, Pre. Ch. 260.

Where a person gives a debt by will to a corporation, it vests in them in law, and they may recover it in the Ecclesiastical Court. Att.-Gen. v. Pyle, 1 Atk. 435.

Legacy assigned upon certain trusts; trustee, notwithstanding notice of former decree for administration of assets, files bill for payment of legacy. Court refused to assign legacy to him, he having acted improvidently, or to give him costs; and executors refused costs, because they should have moved to stay proceedings, instead of answering trustee's bill. Packwood v. Maddison, 1 Sim. & S. 232; 1 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 107.

Action by the husband for a legacy due to his wife does not lie. Macaulay v. Philips, 4 Ves. 19.

The mere allegation without proof of collusion between the assignees of an insolvent with a debtor, and refusal to sue for a legacy which passed under the assignment, and which, if recovered, would satisfy all the debts, and leave a balance, will not entitle the insolvent to sue for the legacy, although the provisional assignee submits to be bound by the decree, and the suit to be prosecuted in his name; and quære, if such collusion and refusal were proved, if the insolvent could sustain such suit. Major v. Aukland, 3 Hare, 77; 8 Jur. 16.

—— By Suit in Equity.]—Legacies are suable in chancery, which has a concurrent jurisdiction with the Spiritual Court, and a bill may be filed in the exchequer for a legacy. In some cases an executor may be compelled to give security for a legacy; as where 1,000*l.* was given to A. to be paid at twenty-one; upon a bill, suggesting a devastavit, security was decreed to be given. Duncumban v. Stint, 1 Ch. Cas. 121.

A legatee is not obliged in every instance to bring a bill against an executor for a recovery of legacy; for after he has assented, trover will lie. Williams v. Lee, 3 Atk. 224. And see Atkin v. Hill, Cowp. 284; Hawkes v. Saunders, Cowp. 289.

Legatees, who have mortgaged their interest in a legacy, will be restrained by a court of equity from prosecuting a suit in the county court to obtain payment from the executors. Neighbour v. Brown, 26 L. J., Ch. 670.

To a bill against an executor for payment of a legacy, he pleaded that the testator was, at the time of making his will and of his death, domiciled in France, and all the bequests of personal estate affected to be made by his will were, by the laws of that country null and void:—Held, that the plea was not double, as it did not state two bars, but two averments leading up to one bar or conclusion. Although probate of a will is conclusive, so far as relates to the appointment of executors, it is not conclusive as to the validity of the particular dispositions therein contained, and the above plea therefore was held not to be bad on that ground. Campbell v. Beaufoy, 1 Johns. 320; 28 L. J., Ch. 645; 7 W. R. 513.

—— Against Executor.]—If an executor admits that all the testator's debts, &c., have been paid, the court will on motion order the income of balance paid in by the executor to be paid to the person entitled to the residue. Dando v. Dando, 1 Sim. 510.

A plaintiff claimed a fund which had been given by will, subject to other legacies. There was no allegation that the legacies had been paid:—Held, not a sufficient ground for demurrer. Rolfe v. Gregory, 8 Jur. (N.S.) 606; 10 W. R. 711.

An executor and trustee having committed a devastavit, precluded from proving under his bankruptcy, and liberty to be given (in the first instance, and without previous application to the commissioners) to a legatee on behalf of himself and others, with a direction that the dividends be paid into the bank, in trust in the matter. Moody, Ex parte, 2 Rose 413.

A bill was filed by a legatee against the executors of a testator, for the payment of his legacy. Upon the executors paying into court the amount of the legacy, together with costs of the suit to the plaintiff, the bill was ordered to be dismissed against all the executors except one, who was the representative of an incumbrancer of the legacy, and between whom and the plaintiff a question of account was raised in the suit. Sawyer v. Mills, 1 Mac. & G. 390; 1 Hall & Tw. 569; 19 L. J., Ch. 242; 13 Jur. 1061.

—— Executor's Representative.]—An executor paid interest on a legacy, and died. The legatee filed a bill for payment of the principal against the executor's representative. The legatee afterwards presented a petition consenting to abandon his suit, and praying for liberty to prove for his legacy and for the costs of his suit, and of the petition against the executor's estate, in a suit subsequently instituted by creditors of the executor. The prayer of the petition was granted. Turner v. Wardle, 7 Sim. 80.

—— Debtor.]—A residuary legatee cannot have writ of ne exeat regno against a debtor of the testator, on the ground that he colludes with the executor. Graves v. Griffith, 1 J. & W. 646.

—— Purchaser.]—Legatees allowed to follow money of testator laid out in land, &c., by executor. Ryall v. Ryall, 1 Atk. 59; Ambl. 411 cited.

Evidence of Age required for.]—Where a legacy was given to A., to be paid on her attaining the age of twenty-one years, and in case of her death before that time, was given over, the evidence on which the master made a report as to her age, with a view to allowing her a suitable maintenance, though sufficient for that purpose, may not be sufficient to establish the time of her birth so clearly as to sustain an application for the payment of the legacy. Anon., 1 L. J., Ch. 77.

On Security to Refund.]—A., by will, gives portions to his daughters, but mentions no time when to be paid, but adds a proviso, that his daughters should marry with the consent of his wife, and if any married without such consent her portion to go over. On a bill brought by the daughters for their portions, the court decreed the portions to be paid, but on security to refund if the condition should be broken. Aston v. Aston, 2 Vern. 452; 1 Ch. R. 164; Pre. Ch. 226.

A. devised 600*l.* apiece to his two daughters, and the residue of his personal estate to his son; and, if either of his children died during their minority, the survivors to be heirs to the deceased by equal portions. The son died, and one sister brought a bill against the executors and the other sister, to have her own 600*l.* and one-half of her brother's personal estate; which was decreed, upon her giving security to pay back her own 600*l.* in case she died during her minority. Pate v. Hatton, 1 Ch. Cas. 199.

The master by his report found that the estate of the testator in the cause was liable to certain contingent demands, in respect of covenants entered into by the testator for payment of rent, repairs, insurance, &c., of certain collieries and premises held by him and others, under a lease from the Earl of B.; but the liabilities, if any, in respect of the covenants could not be ascertained until the expiration of the lease, in 1855; and that until that time nothing could be done in getting rid of or providing for such liabilities. The residue of the estate, which had been ascertained and paid into court, was ex concessis inadequate to meet the liabilities under the covenants. Upon a bill being filed by the widow of the testator and tenant for life, under his will, of his residuary estate, for payment of the income of the fund to her for life, ordered that the fund should be left in court to accumulate till the expiration of the lease, unless the widow were prepared to give security to refund in the event of the capital proving to be insufficient to meet the liabilities under the covenants. Fletcher v. Stevenson, 13 L. J., Ch. 202; 8 Jur. 307.

—— Where one Party has disappeared.]—Payment order where one party entitled had not been heard of for twenty years upon recognizance to refund. Bailey v. Hammond, 7 Ves. 590.

A. went abroad in September, 1830; his father died in September, 1833; about twenty months previous to that time A. was heard of for the last time. The court ordered a share of the father's residue bequeathed to A. to be transferred to his brother, as the sole next of kin of the father living at the father's death, on the brother giving security to refund it in case A. should be living, or should have died after his father. Dowley v. Winfield, 14 Sim. 277; 8 Jur. 972.

A sum of money was set apart, in 1815, to answer an annuity to a woman then supposed to be resident in India, but who was never afterwards heard of. In 1837, the master having certified, upon presumption, that she was dead, but without finding when she died, the court ordered payment of the principal money to the party entitled to it, subject to the annuity. In 1842, the master having certified, upon presumption, that she had died in 1822, and that no personal representative had been heard of, the court ordered immediate payment to the same party of the accumulations since that time. And in 1847 it ordered payment of the rest of the fund to the same party though resident abroad, upon his giving his personal security to refund in case the annuitant or her personal representative should ever establish a claim. Cuthbert v. Purrier, 2 Ph. 199.

A testator gave the interest of his residue to W. and his wife, with remainder to the testator's grandchildren. W. died twenty-nine years after the testator, and his wife applied for the income. The court, being unable to decide on her right, in consequence of the absence of some parties, allowed her, in the meanwhile, to receive a portion of the income, on her undertaking to refund if necessary. Maffat v. Burnie, 16 Beav. 298.

See also EVIDENCE (DEATH, PRESUMPTION OF)—PRACTICE (PAYMENT OUT OF COURT).

Pending Administration Suit.]—Payment in part of a legacy ordered on motion with consent, the fund admitted to be ample. Pearce v. Baron, 12 Ves. 459.

Where the existence and amount of a testator's debts are contingent and depend upon the result of legal proceedings before a foreign tribunal, which are not likely to be speedily settled, the court, in administering his assets, will not be induced by that circumstance to direct an appropriation of the fund in court to answer pecuniary legacies, subject to such demands as creditors may eventually establish. If, in a suit to administer a testator's assets, it clearly appears that a surplus will remain after discharging all his debts and liabilities, although the exact amount of the surplus cannot be ascertained for a considerable time, the court will, by anticipation, direct proportional payments to be made to pecuniary legatees, as far as that can be done with safety to the creditors. Principles on which such anticipated payments are to be applied in reduction of the claims of the legatees. Thomas v. Montgomery, 1 Russ. & M. 729.

In a suit for the administration of testator's assets, which were more than sufficient to pay the legacies with interest, it was ordered that the master should ascertain one-fourth of what was due to each of the legatees for principal and interest in respect of their legacies, and that the same should be paid out of a fund in the cause: —Held, that the whole of the interest on the legacies was to be first paid, and then a part of the principal. S. C., 2 Sim. 348.

In a suit instituted in 1814, to administer the personal estate of an intestate who died in 1807, the master reported that no debts had been proved, and, by the decree on further directions in 1817, the whole of the residue was apportioned and distributed; but as the plaintiff was then an infant, his share, amounting to four-ninths of the fund, was retained and carried to his separate account. In 1825 a foreign prince, claiming to be a creditor of the intestate, petitioned for leave to prove his debt against the sum remaining in court; and the plaintiff, coming of age soon after, applied to have that sum paid out:—Held, that the creditor was not precluded by the previous proceedings, or the lapse of time, from tendering such proof before the master; but that every defence should be allowed those which would have been competent upon a new bill; that the debt, if established, must be restricted, as against the fund in court, to that proportion which the plaintiff's share bore to the whole amount distributed, and therefore that, after reserving a sum equal to four-ninths of the claim, the residue of the fund ought to be paid out to the plaintiff. Greig v. Somerville, 1 Russ. & M. 338.

Where court can be satisfied that the fund is clear, allowance for maintenance will be allowed, pending the account, to the residuary legatee; not if an accounting party. Warter v. ——, 13 Ves. 92.

An allowance of income pendente lite, under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 57, will only be made upon the admission by the executors of assets. Knight v. Knight, 16 Beav. 358.

An order had been made in the cause, by the court, that such a sum of stock as would raise 10*s.* in the pound on certain legacies, should be sold out and paid to the respective legatees thereof, the amount to be verified by affidavit. It was objected, in the accountant-general's office, that the amount to be paid must, under the twenty-eighth order of court, of December, 1833, be specified and expressed in the order; but the court determined that that order did not apply to cases where the amount could not be ascertained at the time the order for payment was made. Piggott v. Garaway, 9 Sim. 260; 7 L. J., Ch. 243; 2 Jur. 806.

It is not the course of the court to pay annuities charged upon incumbered property, pending the litigation. A testator, by a will of 1805, gave R., one of the plaintiffs, an annuity of 300*l.*, and by a subsequent will of 1812, revoking the former will, he devised the same plaintiff an annuity of 600*l.* per annum. The will of 1805 was admitted to be valid, but the will of 1812 having been impeached, a suit was instituted to establish it. Semble, that R., the annuitant, notwithstanding that in any event she was entitled to an annuity of 300*l.*, was not entitled to an order that the receiver in the cause should pay her, out of the rents of the estate, the annuity of 300*l.* D'Alton v. Trimleston (Lord), 2 Dr. & War. 531.

Where it appeared upon affidavit in an administration suit that the estate was large, with but few debts or charges thereon, the court ordered the jointure of the widow of the testator, and annuities given by his will, to be paid out of the income of the estate before decree, but refused to direct the payment of pecuniary legacies. Digby v. Boycott, 4 Hare, 444.

Stock of an intestate dead nearly twenty years, being brought into court, an order for selling part thereof for costs in the lunacy of the sole next of kin, and for applying the dividends for such lunatic's maintenance before any report of the debts of the intestate, was refused. Radcliffe v. Carter, C. P. Cooper, 250.

Personal Liability of Executor—On Admission of Assets.]—Decree for payment of legacies, made against an executor, without reference to the state of the assets, upon the ground of his having, by his acts and admissions, rendered himself personally liable for the payment. Barnard v. Pumfrett, 5 Myl. & Cr. 63; 10 L. J., Ch. 124.

H. died in 1811, having bequeathed a legacy to a woman, who afterwards married the plaintiff. In December 1825 the two executors of H. gave the plaintiff a written acknowledgment, whereby they separately and jointly acknowledged that they owed the plaintiff 150*l.* for the legacy, and 50*l.* for interest. In 1835 the plaintiff's wife died:—Held, that, whether the written memorandum amounted to an admission of assets or not, it gave the plaintiff no right of action; that, unless equivalent to an admission of assets, it did not create a personal demand against the defendants enforceable in a court of equity; and that it had not the effect of barring or prejudicing the right of the plaintiff's wife in the legacy, or his title in right of his wife as a legatee. Holland v. Clarke, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 151.

—— After Representations to Legatee.]—An executor denied assets, but his answer disclosed a personal liability for payment of the plaintiff's legacies. The court made an order for immediate payment without directing the accounts to be taken. Rogers v. Soutten, 2 Keen, 598; C. P. Cooper, 96; 7 L. J., Ch. 118.

One of the legatees had on his marriage assigned a part of his legacy to the trustees of his settlement, covenanting to pay the amount by instalments. The marriage was contracted, and the settlement made on the faith of representations by the executor, that the legacy was substantial and sure, and would be paid, though at a future time:—Held, that the estate of the executors thereby became indebted for the whole amount. Hutton v. Rossiter, 7 De G. M. & G. 9; 3 Eq. R. 589; 3 W. R. 387.

A legatee charged the share to which he was entitled, under his father's will, to A., who gave notice to the executor. The executor endorsed on the notice that he had no objection to pay the money that might become due to the legatee on the final distribution of his father's property. There was at this time a prior charge, of which the executor had notice, but he did not disclose it to A. The executor, on a subsequent occasion, also represented that the legatee's share would certainly be as much as 1,500*l.*, which estimate turned out to be erroneous:—Held, that the executor was not liable for the suppression of the existence of the first charge, or bound to make good the representation as to the value of the share. Stephens v. Venables, 31 Beav. 124.

—— For Payment made Pendente lite.]—Where an administrator possessed himself of the intestate's goods, and gave legacies, and died, and his executor without compulsion, and pending a suit in right of intestate to recover the goods, paid the legacies; the court will not relieve him, because the payment was voluntary, and with notice of the suit. Hodges v. Waddington, 2 Ch. Cas. 9.

—— Where Executor Legatee.]—Where in a case of election a legatee elected to take under a bequest giving her a life interest in a certain sum which was directed to be invested in stock, with which direction the legatee, who was also trustee of the will, did not comply, but appropriated the money:—Held, that she was responsible for that sum only, and not for what would have been its value at the time of the suit, if invested at the proper time. Palmer v. Wakefield, 3 Beav. 227.

—— Where Executor has become Trustee for Legatee.]—Where a person, executor, and trustee of legacy to be laid out in stock, has fully administered estate and assented to legacy, and retains legacy in his hands, not as assets, but as trustee, he is liable for breach of trust, and ordered to purchase stock at price of time when he was first able to invest it. Byrchall v. Bradford, 6 Madd. 13, 235; 23 R. R. 204.

Release—What Amounts to.]—An executor contracted with legatees for the purchase of their legacies, which were accordingly assigned to a trustee for him, in consideration of sums of money less in amount than the legacies. It was admitted that the transaction could not be sustained for the benefit of the executor:—Held, that the deed of assignment did not operate as a release of the estate, and could not be upheld as against the legatees who executed it, for the benefit of their co-legatee. Barton v. Hassard, 3 Dr. & War. 461.

—— Right to.]—An executor is not entitled to call for a release and an indemnity from legatees, their receipt alone being a sufficient discharge. Roberts, In re, 38 L. J., Ch. 708; 17 W. R. 639. And see Fortune, In re, infra.

—— Effect of.]—A testator bequeathed two legacies of 2,000*l.* The executor rendered an account of the estate to A., one of the legatees, showing it to be about 1,750*l.* in the whole. The legatee, on receipt of half, executed a general release. Afterwards, there was a further asset of 2,000*l.* belonging to the estate which had been omitted:—Held, that the release was binding pro tanto, and the executor was ordered to pay to A. a moiety of the 2,000*l.* Anon., 31 Beav. 310.

—— When Given in Ignorance of Rights.]—A testator bequeathed an annuity of 100*l.* out of money to be invested in the public funds or other good security, the capital, after the death of the annuitant, to be divided equally among his children. Upon the death of the annuitant, in 1843, the administrator paid 2,000*l.* to the children, who executed a release which recited that the administrator had set apart that sum to answer the annuity. Upon bill filed in 1854, after the death of the administrator, to set aside the deed:—Held, in the absence of evidence, that the 2,000*l.* had been invested; and upon proof that the parties had executed the release without professional assistance, and in ignorance of their rights, that lapse of time was no bar to the claim, and that the administrator's estate was liable to make good such an amount as, if invested in consols, would have produced an annuity of 100*l.* Aspland v. Watte, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 968; 3 W. R. 562.

If on the footing of a supposed illegitimacy the title of the cestui que trust to a legacy is disputed and denied by the trustee, and the former is thereby induced to accept from the trustee a smaller sum than that to which he is entitled under the will, and by deed to release the trustee from the payment of the legacy, equity will not permit such a transaction to stand. Even without any evidence of fraud, such a transaction is null and void. Thompson v. Eastwood, 2 App. Cas. 215—H. L. (Ir.)

—— Costs of.]—Executors refused to pay a legacy to the legatee until he would execute a release and pay the costs of it. He offered to execute the release, but refused to pay the costs. The executors, therefore, brought the amount of the legacy into court, deducting from it the costs of bringing it into court. On a petition by the legatee to have the money paid out to him :—Held, that the executors had no right to call on him to pay the costs of a release, and that they should pay the costs of the petition. Fortune's Trusts, In re, Ir. R. 4 Eq. 351.

22. INTEREST.

General Principles.]—If the circumstances of the gift are such that of itself it will carry interest, it is immaterial whether the testator be silent upon the subject of interest, or generally directs the payment of interest. Purcell v. Purcell, 2 Dr. & War. 217 ; 1 Con. & L. 371 ; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 558.

Interest on legacies is given for delay of payment, and, consequently, until the day of payment arrives, no interest is, in general, demandable. Donovan v. Needham, 9 Beav. 164 ; 15 L. J., Ch. 193 ; 10 Jur. 150.

A legatee who has no notice of his legacy till the executor publishes it in the Gazette shall have no interest for it. Knap v. Powell, Pre. Ch. 11.

Interest was not decreed on a legacy, where it appeared that though not actually appropriated to the legatee, it had been lodged at a bank, where he enjoyed the benefit of it by the banker's remitting to him, in consequence, the interest on a sum of equal amount due by him to the bank. Bury v. Charlevill, Wall. Lyn. 358.

A testator, who died in 1838, left a legacy to a person of weak intellect. At the end of a year after the testator's death the executors invested the amount in the funds, and regularly invested the dividends arising therefrom. A suit was instituted by the legatee, by her next friend, against the executors, in which the amount of legacy, with 4*l.* per cent. from a year after the testator's death, and the costs of the suit, were claimed :—Held, that the executors were not bound to pay the legacy and interest ; and it was ordered that the stock should be tranferred into court, and that the costs of the suit should be paid out of the testator's general estate. Pothecary v. Pothecary, 2 De. G. & Sm. 738 ; 18 L. J., Ch. 48 ; 12 Jur. 1016.

On refunding sums paid under an erroneous construction of a will, a legatee entitled to other funds making interest, in the hands of the court, is to be charged with interest ; not a legatee who has no further concern in the estate. Gittins v. Steele, 1 Swanst. 199 ; 18 R. R. 7, 57.

Interest recovered for a legacy though after a receipt given in full for the legacy, and the principal legacy paid. East v. Thornbury, 3 P. Wms. 126.

Where Intention shewn.]—The testator gave to each of certain infant nephews and nieces, by name, 400*l.* "with compound interest at 5 per cent. per annum, from the day of their birth, to be settled on their marrying or attaining twenty-one years, whichever may first happen" :—Held, that compound interest at 5 per cent. was to run on each of the legacies from the birthdays of the several legatees till their marriage or majority respectively, and not merely to the day of the testator's death. Arnold v. Arnold, 2 Myl. & K. 365.

Interest of legacy from death of testator on the intent as to maintenance. Beckford v. Tobin, 1 Ves. Sen. 300.

Interest from the death of the testator allowed upon legacies payable at a future period to infant grandnephews, upon the intention of the testator that they should be maintained out of the property bequeathed to them. Leslie v. Leslie, Ll. & G. t. Sugd. 1.

Where Gifts of Capital and Income separate.]—Under a direction to raise 5,000*l.* for the benefit of A. and her issue, followed by a direction to raise and pay interest at 5 per cent. on that sum, to A. during her life, with a gift over to her children of the principal sum : — Held, that interest at 5 per cent. was not to be charged on the estate during the whole life of A., but merely until the 5,000*l.* had been raised. Cole v. Lee, 20 Beav. 265.

On what Legacies.]—As to whether a specific legacy payable in futuro carries interest, see Gordon v. Rutherford, Turn. & R. 378 ; 2 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 50 ; 26 R. R. 183. Chaworth v. Hooper, 1 Bro. C. C. 82. Shaw v. Cunliffe, 4 Bro. C. C. 151.

A legacy out of a rent-charge shall carry interest. Stonehouse v. Evelyn, 3 P. Wms. 254.

Legacy of 50*l.* for a ring is not specific, therefore it shall carry interest like other pecuniary legacies. Apreece v. Apreece, 1 V. & B. 364.

Charge by will on real estate of simple contract debts of another person, considered as a legacy carrying interest from the death of the testator at 4 per cent. Shirt v. Westby, 16 Ves. 393 ; 10 R. R. 210.

Direction in a will to pay and discharge all the just and lawful debts owing by a deceased brother at the time of his death :—Held, upon the terms of the will, and looking to the circumstance that the brother had been dead about forty years at the date of the will, to comprise debts, but not interest. Askew v. Thompson, 4 K. & J. 620.

A testatrix directed her trustees to pay and apply the sum of 800*l.* in and upon the education of her grandson, it being her desire that her trustees should follow all the reasonable suggestions of the infant's father as to the school and mode of learning in which he should desire to have his son educated :—Held, that this was an absolute legacy vesting immediately, and fell within the general rule of legacies upon which interest was payable from a year after the death of the testatrix. Noel v. Jones, 16 Sim. 309 ; 17 L. J., Ch. 470 ; 12 Jur. 906.

Devise upon trust, by demise, sale, or mortgage, or by rents and profits, to raise, &c., with all convenient speed, after death of devisor, a sum, and subject thereto on other trusts :—Held, interest payable at 4 per cent. from death. Spurway v. Glynn, 9 Ves. 483 ; 7 R. R. 279.

Legacies charged on a reversion directed to be raised by sale or mortgage, and declared to carry interest from the death of the testator, it not appearing from the will that the estate charged was a reversion. Davies v. Davies, Dan. 84.

Legacy to Infant Executor.]—Testatrix by her will appointed an infant one of her executors, and gave to him, as such executor, a legacy of 1,000*l.* :—Held, that as an infant cannot accept the office of executor before attaining twenty-one, the legacy would not carry interest until he attained that age, and also agreed to act as executor. Gardner, In re, Long v. Gardner, 3 R. 96 ; 67 L. T. 552 ; 41 W. R. 203.

Legacy by Parent or Person in Loco Parentis.] —Legacy from a parent to a child, bears interest before the time of payment, and from the death of the testator, and is the only instance. A legacy from an uncle to a niece, to be paid at twenty-one, or marriage, does not carry interest before the time of payment. Crickett v. Dolby, infra, col. 1725.

When a legacy is given by a father to a child as a provision, though payable at a future day, yet the child has an immediate right to the interest of the money ; otherwise, if the legatee be a stranger to testator. Green v. Belchier, 1 Atk. 507.

Portions devised by a father to his younger children, payable at twenty-one or marriage, shall carry interest from his death till that time, if he made no other provision for them : but otherwise, if devised by a stranger, who is under no obligation to provide for them. Att.-Gen. v. Thompson, Pre. Ch. 337.

A. gives a legacy to his grand-daughter, an infant, to be paid at such time and in such manner, as his wife, who was his executrix, should think fit for his grand-daughter. The executrix lived nearly twenty years after the death of A., and died without paying the legacy. Decreed, the legacy to be paid with interest from the death of A., though no demand made in the lifetime of the executrix. Churchill v. Speake, 1 Vern. 251.

Where a testator puts himself in loco parentis of the legatee, the legacy will bear interest at 4 per cent. from the death of the testator. Wilson v. Maddison, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 372 ; 12 L. J., Ch. 420 ; 7 Jur. 572.

A testator who had voluntarily entered into a bond with a parish, to pay a weekly maintenance for a natural child as his own, and had continued such payments up to his death, was considered to have so far placed himself in loco parentis to such child as that interest was payable from his (testator's) death, upon a legacy given by him to such child, to be paid at twenty-one. Rogers v. Soutten, 2 Keen, 598 ; C. P. Cooper, 96 ; 7 L. J., Ch. 118.

A., amongst other legacies, leaves 1,000*l.* to his niece B. at eighteen or marriage, and gives the residue of his personal estate to be laid out in land, and settled in strict settlement on C. for ninety-nine years, remainder to his first son, &c., in tail ; afterwards A., by codicil, devises that the 1,000*l.* given by his will to his said niece should be made up to 6,000*l.* payable at twenty-one or marriage. The niece was eighteen at the time of the testator making his codicil, and under twenty-one. Decreed she should have the interest of the 6,000*l.* from the death of the testator, and that C. was only entitled to the residue exclusive of the 6,000*l.* Archerley v. Wheeler, 1 P. Wms. 783 ; 9 Mod. 68 ; 10 Mod. 518 ; Fort. 183 ; Comyns, 381, 513. See note (z) Id. Affirmed sub nom. Archerley v. Vernon, 3 Bro. P. C. 89.

—— Where no Maintenance given.]—Legacy to a child at twenty-one ; it shall have interest in meantime, especially where no maintenance is provided for it. Anon., 2 Vent. 346.

If the legacy be given by a parent to his child at twenty-one, or marriage, and the child has no other provision, the court will give interest by way of maintenance, though the legacy is not vested. Heath v. Perry, 3 Atk. 102.

A testator gave to his infant son a legacy of 6,000*l.* and a share of residue. Both gifts were contingent on the child attaining twenty-one, and a provision ceasing at fifteen was made for his maintenance :—Held, first, that a limited allowance for maintenance does not exclude an implied gift of interest on a contingent legacy during the period for which maintenance is not provided :—Held, secondly, that as the benefit of the infant must determine out of which fund he should be maintained, interest was payable on the 6,000*l.* from the time the infant attained fifteen. Martin v. Martin, 35 L. J., Ch. 281 ; L. R. 2 Eq. 369 ; 14 L. T. 129 ; 14 W. R. 421.

Interest on legacies from the end of one year from the death of testator, except as between parent and child. In the principal case, the legacies being vested, the interest allowed for maintenance equally subject to the mother's reasonable variation. Coleman v. Seymour, 1 Ves. Sen. 209.

—— Where Power for Maintenance only given.]—Legacies to infants, payable at twenty-one, with benefit of survivorship in the event of death under that age, and a power to the executors to apply any part of the legacies towards the maintenance of the legatees, bear interest from the death of the testatrix ; the infants being her cousins, and destitute of other provisions. Pett v. Fellowes, 1 Swanst. 561.

—— Where Gift over.]—Testator gave 500*l.* to his daughter to be paid at twenty-one or marriage, and if she died before either contingency, he bequeathed it over to B. :—Held, that as it is given over, nothing vests in the daughter, and therefore she is not during her infancy, either entitled to interest, or to have the principal secured. Palmer v. Mason, 1 Atk. 505.

Testator gives part of his stock in trade to R. provided he attained twenty-one ; he dies before twenty-one. The administrator of R. is not entitled to intermediate profits from testator's death to infant's. Atkinson v. Turner, 2 Atk. 41 ; Barnard. 74.

A., having a niece an infant about the age of seventeen, devised to her the surplus of the personal estate payable at twenty-one, the niece shall have the interest paid her in the meantime, though the surplus be devised over, if the niece died before twenty-one or marriage, the devise over being but a condition subsequent. Nicholls v. Osborn, 2 P. Wms. 149.

One devises personal estate to his son, and, if his son died within age and without issue, then the personal estate to go to the testator's brother. The son shall have the produce of the personal estate ; and only the capital, in case of the infant's death, &c., shall go to the brother. Tissen v. Tissen, 1 P. Wms. 500.

A. by will devises 500*l.* to his infant grandson without appointing any time for payment, with proviso, that if the grandson dies before twenty-one, then the legacy to go over to B.; the grandson shall have the interest of the legacy during his infancy. Taylor v. Johnson, 2 P. Wms. 204; Mos. 98.

Bequest to grandchildren if they attain twenty-one, with gift over:—Held, that they were entitled to the interest for maintenance during their minority. Bowden, In re, 6 L. J., Ch. 146.

The testator gave legacies out of a sum of stock to the grandchildren named in his will on their attaining the age of twenty-one, and if any of them should die under twenty-one, their portion to be equally divided among such of them as should attain twenty-one, but if the whole of his said grandchildren should die under that age, then he gave the interest of the sum of stock to the father of the said grandchildren for his life, and after his decease the principal as therein mentioned:—Held, that the grandchildren were entitled to the interest during their minority. Boddy v. Dawes, 1 Keen, 362.

Where a testator gives legacies to children, provided they attain twenty-one, with a gift over if the children die before twenty-one, and appoints trustees and guardians to the children, with a request that they will attend to their education, the children are entitled to the interest of their legacies for their maintenance and education, until they attain twenty-one or die under that age. Mills v. Robarts, 1 Russ. & M. 555; Tam. 476; 8 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 141.

—— Exception where Children Adult.]—The rule as to interest on legacies given to infants by persons standing in loco parentis, does not extend to an adult, though she had during the life of testator received a voluntary annuity from him. Raven v. Waite, 1 Swanst. 553; 1 Wils. Ch. 204.

A testator made a settlement on his daughter, who was adult, and gave her a legacy by his will:—Held, that the legacy did not bear interest from the death of the testator, but only from the end of the first year after that event. Wall v. Wall, 15 Sim. 513; 16 L. J., Ch. 305; 11 Jur. 403.

—— Where Maintenance given—Out of same Fund.]—Legacy from a parent to child, payable in future; if maintenance is given generally, it shall carry interest; but if an annual sum less than the interest is given for maintenance, the executor paying that shall have the rest. Crickett v. Dolby, 3 Ves. 17.

A grandfather left a fund in trust for his grandson, absolutely, when he should attain twenty-five, with a gift over if he should die without issue under that age, and provided that a sum not exceeding 200*l.* per annum might be applied for his maintenance. On an application that such sum might be increased to 500*l.* out of the interest of the fund:—Held, that the presumption that the infant was entitled to interest on the fund was rebutted, and that, the testator having fixed a definite sum for maintenance, the court would not exceed it. May v. Potter, 25 W. R. 507.

A testator, standing in loco parentis, gave to trustees a legacy of 4,000*l.* on trust to pay it to A. B. on his attaining twenty-one. He authorised them to raise it by mortgage of his real estates; and out of the moneys thereby bequeathed to raise such sum, not exceeding the interest at 4 per cent. of the expectant's portion, as to them should seem sufficient for maintenance:—Held, that the legatee, during minority, was entitled to maintenance only, and not to the whole amount of interest on the legacy. Rudge v. Winnall, 12 Beav. 357; 18 L. J., Ch. 469; 13 Jur. 737.

Devise of real estates to testator's daughter for life, with remainder to his two sons in fee, and in case daughter should leave child living at her death, sons to pay child 200*l.* at twenty-one, and interest meantime for maintenance, &c. Daughter left one child, who died before twenty-one:—Held, child was entitled to interest from mother's death till his own. Harris v. Finch, M'Cle. 141.

A testator directed his trustees as soon as convenient after the decease of his wife to raise 10,000*l.* for his nephew and infant, and to invest it and apply the income towards his maintenance. The testator had previously given his wife an annuity of 1,000*l.*, payable quarterly. The wife predeceased the testator:—Held, that the infant was entitled to interest on his legacy from the testator's decease. Pickwick v. Gibbes, 1 Beav. 271; 3 Jur. 101.

C., by his will, devised all his freehold and copyhold estates to his two daughters, A. and M., and all other daughters that he might thereafter have, as tenants in common in fee; he had afterwards another daughter, L.; he then gave directions for another will, by which he gave all his real estates to his two eldest daughters, and a sum of 15,000*l.* to his daughter L. The attorney took the minutes of this second will in writing, but before it was prepared the testator died; these minutes were proved in the spiritual court as a testamentary paper:—Held, first, this paper being proved in the spiritual court is sufficient to pass the copyhold estate; secondly, but is so totally void as to the freehold, that it will not put L. to her election, and she therefore will take her share of the freeholds under the first will, as well as the 15,000*l.* under the second; thirdly, the testator gave the 15,000*l.* to his daughter L., to be paid to her at twenty-one or marriage, without interest for the same in the meantime, but if she died before twenty-one or marriage, then the 15,000*l.* was not to be raised, but was to sink into the residue of his personal estate. And he directed that, out of the interest of the 15,000*l.*, certain sums of money should be applied for the maintenance of L. The interest of this legacy beyond the maintenance is vested in L., and must be appropriated to accumulate for her benefit. Cary v. Askew, 2 Bro. C. C. 58; 1 Cox, 241. And see 8 Ves. 492, 498, 499.

A testatrix gave legacies to J. and R., the legacies to be paid to each on attaining thirty, with a power to the executors to advance part of the income for maintenance, and directed that the surplus should be accumulated, and added to the principal, with limitation over in case of either, or both, not attaining thirty. The will then directed that, in every case in which any person should under the will be entitled to an estate for life in the income of any sum of money, such sum should bear 3 per cent. interest, and no more, until the principal should become payable; and in case any of her personal property should produce a greater amount of interest than that rate, that the surplus should belong to, and form part of, her residuary property:—Held, that the legatees were entitled to have the whole income of the funds in which their legacies were invested, after providing for their maintenance and education, accumulated for their benefit, and that the interest on their legacies was not to be limited to 3 per cent. Bayley v. Birch, Ir. R. 4 Eq. 142.

—— Out of other Funds.]—Where a father gives a legacy to a child, payable at a future day, and makes an express provision for maintenance out of another fund, the legacy shall not carry interest until the time of payment. Wynch v. Wynch, 1 Cox, 433.

Upon the ground of an express maintenance, and other indications of the intention the Lord Chancellor inclined to the opinion, that the rule for interest upon a legacy given by a parent to a child till the time of payment, was not applicable; but the bill of the children was dismissed upon circumstances of acquiescence, laches, and the consequent difficulty of taking the accounts. Mitchell v. Bower, 3 Ves. 283.

The presumption that a legacy given by a person in loco parentis to an infant on his attaining twenty-one, carries interest by way of maintenance in the meantime, is rebutted if the testator makes any other provision for such maintenance. George, In re, 47 L. J., Ch. 118; 5 Ch. D. 837; 37 L. T. 204; 26 W. R. 65—C. A.

A legacy to a child carries interest, on the ground of the presumed intention of the parent to fulfil his moral duty of providing for the maintenance of his child; but if he has discharged that duty by providing for the maintenance of the child out of another fund, the legacy does not necessarily carry interest. Rouse's Estate, In re, 9 Hare, 649.

A father bequeathed 1,500*l.* to each of his younger children surviving him, to be paid as they should respectively attain twenty-one, or marry with consent; and he directed that out of the profits of his farm annual sums, graduated according to the ages of his children (but considerably less than the ordinary rate of interest on the legacies would have produced), should be allowed for their maintenance up to fifteen, after which period the amount of the allowance was to rest upon the discretion of his executors. The will contained no provision as to interest, and the surplus profits of the farm were to go towards the creation of a fund for payment of legacies:—Held, that the legacies were vested, but that the personal representative of a child dying a spinster under twenty-one was not entitled to payment till the time at which such child would have attained age; and that the legacy did not carry intermediate interest. Maher v. Maher, 1 L. R., Ir. 22.

Where a legacy, payable at a future period, is given by a parent to his child, interest is payable thereon from the death of the parent, to afford the means of maintenance to the child. The court, however, proceeds on the presumption that the parent would not allow his child to be unprovided for. Where, therefore, the will otherwise provides for the maintenance of the child, the presumption is rebutted, and interest is not payable until after the day of payment has arrived. Donovan v. Needham, 9 Beav. 164; 15 L. J., Ch. 193; 10 Jur. 150. See S. C., 5 L. J., Ch. 120.

Gift to Illegitimate Children.]—Interest upon a legacy to a wife or a natural child not allowed from testator's death, as it is in the case of a legitimate child, by way of maintenance. Lowndes v. Lowndes, 15 Ves. 301. See 19 R. R. 287, n.

Interest from testator's death upon legacies to his grandchildren, by implication, the object being a provision and maintenance for the legatees, described as infant orphans, and some of them illegitimate. Hill v. Hill, 3 V. & B. 183; 13 R. R. 175.

On legacies to a natural child of the testator, with directions to apply a competent part of the interest for maintenance, interest is payable from the testator's death. Newman v. Bateson, 3 Swanst. 689; 19 R. R. 286.

No interest given by way of maintenance upon a legacy, simply to grandchild or natural child. Perry v. Whitehead, 6 Ves. 546.

Where a legacy is given to a natural child, with direction to apply the interest for his maintenance, the interest is payable from the death of the testator. Dowling v. Tyrrel, 2 Russ. & M. 343.

Where provision is made by a testator for his illegitimate daughter, by bequeathing her a large sum of money, and she had no other provision:—Held, that she was entitled to interest thereon for maintenance from testator's death. Russell v. Dickson, 1 Con. & L. 284; 2 Dr. & War. 133; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 339. And see Rogers v. Soutten, supra, col. 1723.

From what Time payable—General Rules.]—If a legacy be given out of land, it carries interest from the death of the testator, if out of personal estate, it yields interest from a year after testator's death; but if a time of payment be mentioned, then interest from that time. If a legacy be given only out of a reversion or remainder, it shall not yield interest from the end of the year; if out of a personal estate consisting of mortgages, or funds carrying interest, then it shall carry interest from the death of the testator. Maxwell v. Wettenhall, 2 P. Wms. 27. Sed quære. See 1 Sch. & Lef. 11; 9 R. R. 1.

Although a gift or a bequest of a sum of money charged upon lands by deed or will is vested, it will not in general bear interest until it is raisable, unless there is something on the face of the deed or will to shew a contrary intention. If a gift or a bequest of a sum of money charged on land is contingent, and there is no express gift or bequest of interest, interest will not accrue or be payable before the contingency on which the principal is payable takes place. A testator by will, executed in 1853, after a gift of an annuity charged on his real and freehold estate to his wife for life, bequeathed to his nephew 2,000*l.*, and charged the same on his real and freehold estate, with interest thereon at the rate of 5*l.* per cent. from the death of the testator's mother, expressing his intention to be, that the same should not be raised or carry interest during the testator's mother's life, but that the same should be a vested interest in his nephew on his attaining twenty-one, and not before; but in case he attained that age in the testator's mother's lifetime, payment of the principal was to be postponed till his death; and if he died under twenty-one, the said sum was not to be raised or payable:—Held, that such legacy was contingent on the event of the nephew attaining twenty-one, and that interest was not payable on the 2,000*l.* until the nephew attained that age. Gillman v. Gillman, 16 Ir. Ch. R. 461.

A legacy bequeathed generally, without assigning any time for payment, bears interest only from a year after the death of the testator, though the fund out of which it is to be paid consists of stock and other matters yielding immediate profit. Pearson v. Pearson, 1 Sch. & Lef. 10; 9 R. R. 1.

Interest of legacies to be computed from a year after testator's death, unless some other time appointed by testator, but he cannot make executor answer interest beyond what the law has done. Estate devised on trust to be sold with all possible diligence, or in reasonable time considered as sold from testator's death. Hutcheon v. Mannington, 1 Ves. 367; 2 R. R. 115.

General rule for convenience, considering the personal estate to be reduced into possession a year from the death of the testator, and therefore interest upon legacies is given from that period, unless some other is fixed by the will, though actual payment within that time may in many instances be impracticable. Wood v. Penoyre, 13 Ves. 333; 9 R. R. 185. S. P., Bourke v. Ricketts, 10 Ves. 333.

Tenant for life of residue, under will, has no claim to interest till one year after testator's death. Stott v. Hollingworth, 3 Madd. 161.

The rule that general legacies bear interest only from end of a year from the death of the testator, applies to similar legacies under a feme covert's will made in exercise of a power of appointment. Tatham v. Drummond, 2 H. & M. 262.

—— Exceptions—Where Legacy payable out of Mortgage Money.]—Legacies to be paid out of money due on mortgage when recovered. The right to interest at 4 per cent., the mortgage producing 5, does not depend upon the time when the money is recovered. Wood v. Penoyre, supra.

—— Annuity.]—Legacy does not in general carry interest till the end of the year after death. Interest on annuity commences from death, and the first payment is made at the end of the year. Gibson v. Bott, 7 Ves. 96; 6 R. R. 87. But see Storer v. Prestage, 3 Madd. 167.

—— Gift for Benefit of Infant.]—Interest on a legacy bequeathed in trust to apply the income or the principal, for the benefit of an infant, is payable from the death of the testator. Chidgey v. Whitby, 41 L. J., Ch. 699.

A contingent legacy, which is given to an infant, and which, or the income of which, the executors are empowered to apply for the maintenance, education, or benefit of the infant during minority, carries interest from the death of the testator, although he may not have stood in loco parentis to the infant. Richards, In re, L. R. 8 Eq. 119. And see Pickwick v. Gibbes, supra, col. 1726.

Gift to Widow of Testator.]—A testator gave 1,000*l.* to his executors upon trust for investment, and to pay the interest as the same should arise therefrom to his widow during her life and widowhood, and after her death or second marriage one moiety to his son absolutely, and the other moiety upon trust for his daughter and issue:—Held, that interest on this legacy did not begin to run until one year after the death of testator. Whittaker, In re, Whittaker v. Whittaker, 51 L. J., Ch. 737; 21 Ch. D. 657; 46 L. T. 802; 30 W. R. 787.

Under a gift by A. to his wife of 10,000*l.*, "afterwards to go to the understated residuary legatee E.":—Held, that the legacy of 10,000*l.* was given to the wife absolutely, but that interest upon such legacy did not begin to run until after one year from the testator's death. Percy v. Percy, In re, 24 Ch. D. 616; 49 L. T. 54.

A testator devised and bequeathed his real and residuary personal estate to trustees, upon trust to sell, and out of the proceeds to set apart and invest 2,000*l.*, and permit his wife to receive the income during widowhood. And the testator declared that the provision made for his wife should "be accepted by her in lieu of all claim to dower or freebench":—Held, that interest on the legacy was only payable from the end of a year from the death of the testator. Bignold, In re, Bignold v. Bignold, 59 L. J., Ch. 737; 45 Ch. D. 496; 63 L. T. 542; 39 W. R. 184.

—— To Charity.]—J., by her will bequeathed 100*l.* to ministers and churchwardens, in trust to invest the same, with the approbation of her executors, in land, for certain charitable purposes. The legacy remaining unpaid, application was made to the Lord Chancellor, who directed the master to compute what was due for the said legacy of 100*l.*, with interest at 4 per cent. from the end of one year from the testator's death, the whole to be invested for the charitable purposes mentioned in the will. Att.-Gen. v. Hayes, 1 Atk. 356.

Charity legacies were given for the erection of a church, parsonage, and schools, which were to be paid as soon as they might be required for those purposes without interest in the meantime. Great delay had occurred in carrying this into effect, in consequence of adverse litigation in respect to their validity:—Held, that the charities were entitled to interest from the end of a year from the testator's death. Fisher v. Brierley, 30 Beav. 268.

A testatrix directed a church to be built, and as soon as built she gave 5,000*l.* for the endowment of the minister, "but without any interest in the meantime." The building of the church was delayed several years by litigation, and no minister had been appointed. The court declined to decide, in the absence of the minister, whether any interest was payable on the legacy, but intimated that the interest before the appointment of a minister would not form part of the capital. S. C., 32 Beav. 602.

Trust for Sale—Legacies payable out of Proceeds.]—Devise of real estate upon trust for sale, and out of the proceeds of such sale to pay legacies:—Held, that interest on the legacies was payable from the period of a year after the testator's death. Turner v. Buck, 43 L. J., Ch. 583; L. R. 18 Eq. 301; 22 W. R. 748.

A testator devised his real estate to his wife for life, and after her death to trustees in trust for sale, and out of the proceeds to retain a sum of 1,000*l.* to be held upon the trusts after declared; the residue of the proceeds to be divided into four equal shares, of which one was to be invested and held in trust for his daughter M. for life, with remainder to her children; and similar trusts were declared of the other three shares in favour of his three other daughters and their children. And he declared that the 1,000*l.*, together with interest at 4 per cent. to the date of retainer, should be held upon the trusts declared of the said one-fourth share in favour of M. and her children. And he empowered his trustees to postpone the sale of his real estate for three years after the death of his wife, and declared that the rents of the unsold real estate should be applied as the income of the proceeds of sale would be applied if the premises had been sold and the proceeds invested. The testator's widow survived him and died. The trustees proposing to sell the real estate about two years and a half after her death, and to retain the 1,000*l.* out of the proceeds as directed by the will, the question arose whether, until such retainer, the 1,000*l.* carried interest at 4 per cent. from the death of the widow, or only from the expiration of one year afterwards:—Held, that the 1,000*l.* carried interest at 4 per cent. from the death of the widow. Turner v. Buck, supra, considered. Waters, In re, Waters v. Boxer, 58 L. J., Ch. 750; 42 Ch. D. 517; 61 L. T. 431; 38 W. R. 57.

Where Fund not immediately Disposable—Interest from end of Executor's Year.]—Pecuniary legacies bear interest from the expiration of a year, although the fund may not become disposable till afterwards. Pearson v. Pearson, supra, col. 1729.

Legacy to A. on condition that she gave 3,000*l.* to purchase an annuity for B. In consequence of a litigation between A. and the residuary legatees, A. did not, for several years, obtain possession of the legacy, which did not, in the meanwhile, make interest. Payment to B., who elected to take the 3,000*l.* in lieu of the legacy, was consequently postponed:—Held, that interest on the 3,000*l.* was payable by A. to B. from the end of a year after the testator's death. Hertford (Marquis) v. Lowther (Lord), 9 Beav. 266; 15 L. J., Ch. 126.

—— From Death of Testator.]—A., by will, gives 300*l.* to a feme covert without creating any separate trust of it, made payable out of a reversion expectant on an estate for life. The legatee's husband makes an assignment of this legacy to trustees for the benefit of his children, and after, by will taking notice of the legacy, devises it in like manner for the benefit of his children, and makes his wife executrix and dies. The estate for life drops, and the widow applies to the executor of the first testator for the 300*l.* legacy; the widow and executor come to an agreement that she should accept of 200*l.* in full, and the land was sold. The widow joined in the sale, and the 200*l.* was paid, and the widow gave a release; bill brought by the children for the 300*l.* legacy under their father's assigment and will; decreed that the husband had a power to extinguish or release the legacy, and had made a good assignment in equity (though not at law as a chose in action only) which he confirming by his will, had bound his wife the legatee. The widow giving no notice of this assignment, the executor should be answerable for the 200*l.* to the children, but as to the 100*l.* which the executor had drawn her into release, he should stand charged with, for he ought at first to have paid the whole legacy; and though this legacy was charged on a fund which was not immediate for raising it, yet being given to the wife in præsenti, when the fund comes in, it shall carry interest from testator's death, which must likewise go to the children. Atkins v. Dawbury, Gilb. Eq. Rep. 88. Vide 1 Ch. Cas. 232; 3 Ch. Rep. 90; 1 Rol. Abr. 380.

A testator devised his real estates to the use of trustees for years, on trust for his wife for life, or durante viduitate, and after the decease or second marriage of his wife, and subject as aforesaid, and without prejudice to the same, upon trust to raise out of the lands by sale, &c., for all or any part of the residue of the said term, the sum of 3,500*l.*, which he bequeathed to three persons; and he desired that the said several sums might be paid to the legatees respectively "as soon after his decease as might be convenient," and that in the meantime they should be paid interest thereon at the rate of 5*l.* for each 100*l.* by the year:—Held, that the legatees were not entitled to interest out of the wife's life estate, but that it was to be raised after her decease or marriage out of the residue of the term. Pennefather v. Bury, 3 Jo. & Lat. 727; 9 Ir. Eq. R. 586.

A testator by his will created a term in his estates upon trusts for raising a jointure and portions, and on further trust, in case of the insufficiency of his personal estate for the payment of debts and legacies, to raise, after his wife's death, a sufficient sum to pay the legacies. Of the legacies he directed some to be paid in any event, and with interest, and others in the event of his leaving no issue, without mentioning interest; he afterwards directed that all the legacies should bear interest from the time they should become payable. He died without issue; the personal estate was exhausted in payment of the debts and the legacies that were to be paid at all events:—Held, that the unpaid legacies were not to be raised till the death of the wife, but that interest on them during her life should be paid out of the rents. Milltown v. Trench, 4 Cl. & F. 276; 11 Bligh (N.S.) 1.

A testator bequeathed a legacy, "with interest for the same from my decease," in trust to pay the income to A. for life, and then to transfer the capital. Money was paid by the executors from time to time on account of the legacy:—Held, that the legatee for life was entitled to receive such a proportion of such payments as would represent interest on each payment from the date of the testator's death. Tinkler, In re, 45 L. J., Ch. 135.

Where Legacy brought into Court.]—If a legacy be brought into court, legatee shall lose the interest while the legacy remains in court; but if the legacy is by the court placed out at interest, legatee shall have such interest. Maxwell v. Wettenhall, 2 P. Wms. 27.

Where Time fixed for Payment of Legacy.]—Where a legacy is to be paid at a certain day, it shall carry interest from that time if not paid. Palmer v. Trevor, 1 Vern. 262.

Real estates were directed to be sold at the end of two years, and legacies paid out of the purchase-money:—Held, that interest was payable from that time. Buxton v. Buxton, C. P. Cooper, 97.

Bond to pay an annuity till a legacy recited to have been bequeathed by the last will of obligor to obligee, should be paid. By a previous will he had given a legacy; but that was revoked by a subsequent will, and a less legacy given, payable six months after testator's death, "over and above the annuity which I have secured to him for his life." The annuity and bond were assigned by the obligee as some provision for his mother, "to be received by her during the life of the obligor as fully and beneficially as it could have been by the obligee." The bond and assignment were put into the possession of the testator, and continued so till his death. The legatee is entitled to the legacy with interest, if not paid at the time; and also to the annuity for his life in trust for his mother. Crosbie v. Murray, 1 Ves. 555.

A., living in Antigua, and having a plantation there, devises 50,000 lbs. weight of sugar to the children of B., to be paid by his executors in ten years after his death. The executors not delivering the sugars within the time, on a bill brought by one of the children, decreed the value of the plaintiff's legacy to be computed according to the medium rate of sugars in Antigua, at the end of ten years, and paid with interest from the time it became due. Symes v. Vernon, 2 Vern. 553.

The testator, by his will, gave several pecuniary legacies, and directed them to be paid within three calendar months after his decease; and by a codicil he directed that two of those legacies, consisting of 30,000*l.* each, should not be paid out of his general personal estate, but should be raised out of the rents and profits of his real estates thereby devised, and of those to be purchased with his residuary personal estate; and until they should be raised and paid, the first tenant for life was not to be entitled to the whole profits but only to a fixed annual sum thereout:—Held, that interest was payable on the two legacies from three months after the death of the testator. Londesborough (Lord) v. Somerville, 19 Beav. 295; 23 L. J., Ch. 646.

A testator gave legacies to his two brothers, and directed that if either of them "die in my lifetime" his legacy should go to his children, but the legacies were not to be paid till six months after his wife's death. By a codicil reciting the effect of his will and the death of one of his brothers, he directed his legacy to be held for the benefit of his widow for life, and after her death the principal to be paid to her children; and he directed that if his other brother "shall die leaving a widow," such widow should have an interest in the legacy given him in like manner as he had directed the legacy of the deceased brother:—Held, that the words "shall die leaving a widow" meant die in the testator's lifetime, and that interest was payable from the death of the widow. Hood v. Hood, 18 W. R. 88.

A legacy payable at a certain time shall, notwithstanding, carry interest only from the time it is demanded. Jolliff v. Crew, Pre. Ch. 161.

—— Gift to Testator's Widow.]—An annuity left the wife by the husband's will, shall carry interest from the day on which it was payable, and not only from the subsequent day of payment after the arrears incurred. Litton v. Litton, 1 P. Wms. 543.

Where a testator gives his wife a legacy to be paid to her within three months after his death, in lieu of her jointure, and she elects to accept the legacy, she is not entitled to interest upon it during the interval between the death of the testator and the time of payment. Elton v. Montague, 1 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 212.

—— To Infant.] — The general rule that a legacy payable in future shall not carry interest before the time of payment, applies to a legacy to infant, payable at twenty-one. The exceptions are, the case of parent and child, the case of a residue, and where from other special circumstances, an intention to give interest clearly appears. Tyrrell v. Tyrrell, 4 Ves. 1.

Legacies in general do not carry interest but from the day of payment; and although the legacy is given to infants, the exceptions to the rule are where the infant is the child of the testator, and therefore has a right to demand maintenance, and where it clearly appears to have been the testator's intention to give interest in the meantime. In the case of a legacy to a child, let the testator give it how he will, either at twenty-one or marriage, or payable at twenty-one or marriage, and the child has no other provision, the court will give interest by way of maintenance; for it will not presume a father so unnatural as to leave a child destitute. A. bequeathed to five persons 100*l.* apiece, to be paid to them at twenty-one, if they attain that age, and not otherwise; and if they die before, the legacy to be utterly void. On a bill for interest on these legacies, it was held that the legatees not being entitled to immediate payment, shall not have interest, nor the principal secured, till twenty-one. Though a legacy is actually vested, as if given to B. payable at twenty-one, yet it shall not carry interest in the meantime, unless something in the will shews that such was testator's intent. Heath v. Perry, 3 Atk. 102.

Legacy of 1,000*l.* which devisor had on mortgage on college lease, to be paid when devisee came of age:—Held, first, that it was vested; but, secondly, it should not carry interest from testator's death; and, thirdly, that it was a specific legacy, and chargeable on mortgage. Chambers v. Jeoffrey, 2 Eq. Abr. 541.

Where a testator bequeathed an annuity to his granddaughter for her life, and directed that if she should die during the lifetime of his widow the annuity should be paid for the maintenance of the children of the granddaughter, and that from and after the decease of his widow and granddaughter the value or the amount of the annuity (such a sum as would produce it according to the then legal rate of interest) should be paid to all and every the child and children of the granddaughter; if more than one, to be equally divided amongst them when and as they should respectively attain the age of twenty-one years, and if there should be but one then the whole to such one child, with a gift over, in case of the death of the granddaughter without issue who should attain the age of twenty-one; the children of the granddaughter are not entitled to the annuity or interest of the fund after the death of the widow and their mother until they attain the age of twenty-one years. Festing v. Allen, 5 Hare, 575.

Where, by marriage settlement, A. had power to leave 1,500*l.*, and she duly executes power by leaving it to B. at twenty-one, interest shall be given in the meantime. Mansell v. Price, 2 Eq. Abr. 532.

—— To Infant Executor.] — See Gardner, In re, supra, col. 1723.

—— To Illegitimate Children.] — Testator having three illegitimate children (two sons and a daughter), gave 18,000*l.* to trustees in trust, out of the interest to pay 100*l.* a year for the maintenance and education of each of them during their minorities, and to accumulate the residue and add it to the principal, and to pay one-third of the aggregate fund to each of the sons on his attaining twenty-one, and out of the remaining third to pay 1,000*l.* to the daughter on her attaining twenty-one, or marrying under that age with the consent of the trustees, and to stand possessed of the residue in trust for her separate use for her life: and the testator directed all the legacies given by his will to be paid within three months after his death. The sons attained twenty-one in the testator's lifetime, and the daughter married under that age with the testator's consent:—Held, that the legacies to the sons and daughters became payable on the testator's death, and consequently that they bore interest from that time. Coventry v. Higgins, 14 Sim. 30; 8 Jur. 132.

—— Where Estate not immediately sufficient.]—A testator bequeathed his personal estate to trustees, upon trust to place out so much money in the funds as would produce a yearly sum of 100*l.*, to be paid to his wife, and then to place out the further sum of 2,120*l.* upon the like securities, and pay the dividends of part thereof to W. H. for life, and afterwards to his children, and the remainder of the 2,120*l.* to other persons named; and the testator declared that, in case his estate should not be sufficient to pay the legacies in full previously to the death of his wife, then such legacies should only be paid in part during the life of his wife, and the same should be made up after her decease. The estate proved to be insufficient to pay the legacies in full during the life of the testator's wife:—Held, that the legatees were only entitled to interest upon the unpaid portion of their legacies from the time at which the remainder should be capable of being paid up. Holmes v. Crispe, 18 L. J., Ch. 439.

—— Gift of Remainder.]—A. was entitled to 7,000*l.*, payable on the death of B. A. by her will bequeathed legacies payable out of the 7,000*l.* B. survived A. thirty-three years:—Held, that the legacies carried interest only from the death of B., and not from the death of the testatrix. The period from which the Statute of Limitations begins to run, and the period from which interest is payable on a legacy, are identical. Earle v. Bellingham, 24 Beav. 448; 27 L. J., Ch. 545; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1237; 6 W. R. 45.

Of Contingent Interest.]—A testatrix gave property to which she was contingently entitled to a trustee, and declared "that as soon as proceedings in law and equity shall be terminated, and the same property shall come into his possession, that he shall pay 2,000*l.* to each of my brothers and sisters":—Held, that such a direction was not a general direction to pay a legacy, but was a direction by way of a trust to distribute a trust fund on an event which might not happen for some time after the death of the testatrix, and that interest did not begin to run on these legacies till the termination of the proceedings in law and equity. Lord, In re, 36 L. J. Ch. 533. Affirmed 17 L. T. 105; 15 W. R. 1118.

Where Time for Payment of Legacy not definitely fixed.]—Where a testatrix directed her executor to pay the legacies as soon after her death as might be convenient, or within three years if it should suit his convenience:—Held, that the legatees were not entitled to interest on their legacies before the expiration of the three years. Thomas v. Att.-Gen., 2 Y. & C. 525.

A., by will in 1699, creates a trust term for twenty-one years, for the payment of debts and legacies, to be paid within five years after his death, and by a codicil devises the same estates to trustees and their heirs, to pay the wife during her life 300*l.* per annum and with the surplus profits, his debts and legacies. The testator's widow did not die till 1736:—Held, that interest on a legacy began at the expiration of the five years, and interest allowed on a simple contract debt from the time it was ascertained by the master's report, and confirmed in 1717. A legacy in its nature carries interest, and there is no distinction between a reversionary estate and any other. Lloyd v. Williams, 2 Atk. 108; Barnard. 229.

Legacy without any interest to A., if claimed within five years from the testator's death, if not the said sum without interest as aforesaid to B. No claim having been made by A., decreed to B., with interest from the end of five years, at 4 per cent. Careless v. Careless, 19 Ves. 601; 1 Mer. 384; 15 R. R. 134.

Where Gift immediate but Payment of Legacy deferred.]—A gift of certain legacies, followed, in a subsequent part of the will, by the words, "I wish all legacies to be paid duty free after the death of my father and mother," is an immediate gift with the time of payment deferred, and carries interest with it from the time of the death of the testator. Humphreys v. Humphreys, 15 L. T. 557; 15 W. R. 391.

Death of Legatee under Age.]—Testator gave to A., B., C., D. and E. 500*l.* each, to be paid to them at their respective ages of twenty-three years, and if they should die before that time, then their respective legacies were to sink into the residue of his personal estate. These legacies do not carry interest, and no maintenance can be allowed to the legatees. Descrambes v. Tomkins, 1 Cox. 133.

Where a legacy of residue is given in such a way as to vest, but so as to be liable to be divested on a given event, the interest in the meanwhile, and until the devesting, belongs to the legatee. Barber v. Barber, 3 Myl. & Cr. 688; 8 L. J., Ch. 36; 2 Jur. 1029.

A bequest of a vested legacy, directed to be paid at twenty-one or marriage, and subject to be divested by death before those events (the testator not being in loco parentis), does not carry interest until the time for payment. Bullen's Trusts, In re, 12 L. T. 763.

A testator gave his residuary estate to trustees in trust for his sister's younger children equally, and to vest in them at the usual periods; and he directed his trustees, during the minorities of the children, to pay the interest of their shares to his sister, or to the guardians of the children, to be applied for their maintenance and education:—Held, that the sisters were entitled to receive the interest of their children's shares during the minorities of their children. Berkeley v. Swinburne, 6 Sim. 613; 3 L. J., Ch. 165.

—— Before Event happens.]—A testatrix, by her will, directed her executors to pay to F. and G., both then unmarried women, 5,000*l.* each upon their marriage, with all the accumulations of interest thereon from the time of the testatrix's death. The executors set apart sums for the above legacies, and accumulated the dividends.

The will gave the interest of the residue to H. for life, with remainders over. G. died without ever having been married, but having survived H., the tenant for life of the residue:—Held, that the estate of H. was entitled to the interest of the legacy of 5,000*l.* given to G. from the death of the testatrix to the death of H. Morgan v. Morgan, 20 L. J., Ch. 109; 15 Jur. 319.

—— Before Time for Payment of Legacy.]—Bequest of residue payable at a future time, carries interest, though the legatee does not live to receive the principal. Sisson v. Shaw, 9 Ves. 289; 7 R. R. 190.

Rate—General Rules.]—Interest upon a legacy where no rate is fixed by the testator, is to be calculated at 5*l.* per cent. pursuant to the 209th new rule, although the will be made prior to the 1st January, 1835. Brown v. Brown, Ll. & G. t. Plunk. 249.

Residuary personal estate of a testator which at the time of his death stood invested in securities not recognised by this court, having been valued by the master as at the period of one year after the testator's death, the court ordered the interest on the value so taken (not exceeding 4*l.* per cent.) to be paid to the tenant for life from the testator's death. Caldicott v. Caldicott, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 737; 11 L. J., Ch. 158, 414; 6 Jur. 232, 1032.

A testator, domiciled at Bombay, directed his trustees to invest two sums in the government public loans of India or other securities therein mentioned, and to pay the interest to certain legatees. The bulk of the property was invested in Indian securities, producing 5 per cent. interest, but seven years after his death no interest had been paid on the legacies, nor any investment or appropriation made to answer them:—Held, that until appropriation the legacies bore interest at 4 per cent. only. Bowyer, In re, Bellamy v. Bowyer, 19 L. T. 482.

It was the rule in Lord Hardwicke's time to give interest at 5 per cent. on legacies out of personal estates, and 4 per cent. out of real. It has now long since been altered, and the general rule is, that they shall all carry interest at 4 per cent. from the end of a year after the testator's death. The case of maintenance is an exception. Bryant v. Speke, 1 Ves. Sen. 171.

From 1725 the court has never allowed more than 4 per cent. interest, in cases of account as to a portion. Wood v. Briant, 2 Atk. 523.

When legacies are charged on personal estate, and interest is directed to be paid, the court always allows legal interest; but where they are charged on real estate, the rule is to allow 1 per cent. less, as the land is a good security for the principal. Moore v. Moore, 3 Atk. 402.

General rule that legacies where no interest is given by will, shall carry interest at 4 per cent. only, and from end of year after testator's death, except where given by way of maintenance. Sitwell v. Bernard, 6 Ves. 520; 5 R. R. 374.

—— In Special Cases.]—Interest at 5 per cent. allowed for money paid as legacy for mourning. Swynfen v. Scawen, 1 Ves. Sen. 99; Dick. 117.

No exception in favour of a wife, as for a child, to the rule that a legacy does not bear interest before it is payable. Claim of 5 per cent. upon a legacy as being out of a capital in trade, not decided. Stent v. Robinson, 12 Ves. 461.

—— Where Gift in Exoneration of Mortgaged Property.]—A testator having an estate subject to a mortgage, bearing interest at 5 per cent., devised it to B., "he paying the mortgage thereon," and he bequeathed to the mortgagee, through his executor, 2,000*l.* to exonerate the estate. The mortgagee foreclosed, and it having been decided that the devisee was entitled to the 2,000*l.*, it was held that he was entitled to interest thereon, after the rate of 3 and not 5 per cent. Lockhart v. Hardy, 10 Beav. 292.

Compound Interest.]—Subsequent interest on a mortgage to be calculated upon the principal and interest reported due, but upon bonds or legacies on the principal only. Perkyns v. Baynton, 1 Bro. C. C. 574.

An administrator of an intestate's estate paid to seven out of eight of the next of kin 1,250*l.* on account of each share, and made only small payments on account of the remaining shares. In distributing the residue of the estate, after a lapse of thirty years, the persons claiming the last-mentioned share insisted that, for the purposes of distribution, 1,250*l.* ought to be treated as having been set apart on account of their share, and interest at 4*l.* per cent. to be allowed thereon, and that the small payments ought to be treated as having been made on account of the interest on that 1,250*l.*:—Held, that this would be conferring a benefit in the nature of compound interest on the claimants of the unpaid share, and that the only mode of equalisation which the rules of the court allowed was to charge each recipient with the amount paid to him, together with simple interest at 4*l.* per cent. from the date of payment. Lambe v. Orton, 33 L. J., Ch. 81; 11 W. R. 1043.

An executor having a gross sum in his hands, made advances to the parties entitled, by way of loan on security, and in one instance made an advance out of his own money, taking a deposit of deeds of the private property of the party to whom the advance was made, at 5*l.* per cent. A decree directed an account of those sums with 4*l.* per cent. interest, but was silent as to interest on the security of the private estate, and did not contain any declaration as to priorities of the trust estate and the executor's own advance; and containing ample directions to deal with the whole estate, reserves further consideration. A petition of rehearing is presented, setting out the decree, and also what had taken place, and seeking to vary the decree:—Held, first, that although a party entitled to a share in an estate does not receive it till years afterwards, he can only have simple interest upon it. That the estate was entitled to sums recovered on securities for sums advanced by the executor in priority to his own claim; and moneys received from the subject of the security by him must go first in satisfaction of the sum due to the estate. Held, also, that where cestuis que trustent elect to take advances made by the executor as loans, they are entitled to the benefit of them at the same rate of interest which they bear, and if they are deficient, cannot turn round and treat them as advances on account. Ib.

—— Where Express Trust for Accumulation.]—By will, dated in 1825, A. gave "500*l.* to be laid out at interest; and if my sister B. survive her husband, she to have interest, both what may have accumulated, and during her life. If B. die before her husband, the principal and accumulated interest to be divided equally between her daughters. My remaining property I will have made the most of till B.'s youngest daughter attain twenty-five, when the daughters of B. are to take it; and if but one, she to take it all." The testatrix died in 1831. B. died in 1855, in the lifetime of her husband. B. had one daughter, who attained twenty-five in 1832, and married the plaintiff. On attaining twenty-five she had signed a settlement of accounts with the acting trustee, P., by which only simple interest at 4*l.* per cent. was charged on the residuary estate. P. had retained all the moneys in his own hands:—Held, first, that there was an express trust for accumulating the legacy of 500*l.* at compound interest. Held, secondly, that the memorandum of 1832, regulating the mode of calculating interest on the residuary estate, did not bind the plaintiff (in right of his wife) to calculate the interest on the 500*l.* legacy in the same manner. Wilson v. Peake, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 155. And see Bayley v. Birch, supra, cols. 1726–7.

Gift of Residue for Life—Deficiency of Interest on Amount of Legacies, how borne.]—A testator, by his will, gave pecuniary legacies, and bequeathed his residuary estate to M. for life, and then over. The investments of the general estate produced an income amounting, on an average, to less than 4 per cent.; but this income exceeded 4 per cent. on the amount of the legacies:—Held, that the difference between the interest actually produced on the amounts of the legacies, and interest thereon at 4 per cent., should be deducted from the capital of the residue as from the testator's death, and that M. was entitled to the interest actually realised on the net residue. Massy v. Gahan, 23 L. R., Ir. 518.

Local Interest.]—Money charged on estate in Nevis, held to carry only English interest. The sum which was charged in favour of W. held to be included in the bequest of a larger sum to W.'s younger children, the testatrix supposing that they were entitled to the charge, although it was not the case, and decreed that no more should be raised than the sum bequeathed. Stapleton v. Conway, 1 Ves. Sen. 427.

Legacy of a sum of money, Jamaica currency, decreed with Jamaica interest from the death of the testator. Raymond v. Brodbelt, 5 Ves. 199.

Testator gives legacies in money, and dies abroad, where the will was made. Currency shall be understood, if sterling is not expressed. Semble, that as to the interest on such legacies, an inquiry ought to be directed to ascertain in what country the fund, out of which the legacy is payable, has been deposited, and interest shall be paid according to the rate of interest in that country. Malcolm v. Martin, 3 Bro. C. C. 50.

In the administration, in an English court, of property bequeathed by a testator domiciled in France, the interest payable on legacies given by the will is governed by the law of the country in which the estate is being administered. Hamilton v. Dallas, 38 L. T. 215; 26 W. R. 326.

By a settlement B. was empowered to charge lands in Ireland with any sum not to exceed 400*l.* a year, as a jointure for his wife, and with any sum not to exceed 2,000*l.* sterling for his younger children. In exercise of the power B. charged the lands with 2,000*l.* late Irish currency, to be vested in and paid to his younger children in equal shares on their attaining twenty-one or marriage: and he directed, in the event of his dying before the shares became vested, that his children should be entitled to interest on their presumptive portions at 5*l.* per cent. by way of maintenance from the time of his death until such portions should be payable:—Held, that the 2,000*l.* carried interest at 5*l.* per cent. Irish currency from the death of B. until the shares of the younger children became payable. Denny v. Denny, 14 L. T. 854.

Under Decree.]—Practice in Ireland to compute interest on legacies, though the decree does not contain an express direction for the purpose. Birmingham v. Kirwan, 2 Sch. & L. 447.

Interest not given from the confirmation of the report upon demands liquidated by it, but not bearing interest in their nature, as legacies and arrears of annuities, though both legacies and annuities were charged upon land, and the annuities were not paid out of the rents and profits, as possession was taken by mortgagees, and though one of the annuities was the provision of a widow. Creuze v. Hunter, 2 Ves. 157; 4 Bro. C. C. 157; 2 R. R. 38.

The allowance of interest upon a legacy charged upon real estate, and due upwards of six years, is to be calculated from the filing of the bill, and not from the date of the decree, though the bill is not filed by the legatee. Chappell v. Rees, 1 De G. M. & G. 393; 3 Mac. & G. 683; 16 Jur. 415.

A suit having been instituted by trustees of A.'s will, against B., who was his heir, executor and residuary devisee, and several others, for carrying the trusts of the will into execution, was, after the death of B., revived against his real and personal representatives, and C., to whom he had devised for life, and D., to whom he had devised in tail in remainder, and against all the other parties interested under B.'s will; and a decree was made directing accounts to be taken of the personal estates, debts and legacies of A. and B. respectively. By a subsequent decree, certain unpaid legacies of B., and the interest on them, were declared, in the event of his personal estate being found insufficient, to be charged on his real estates, the principal not to be raised until after the death of C., but the interest to be paid out of the rents and profits during C.'s life. On a question subsequently arising between C. and D., whether a fund in court, part of B.'s personal estate, should be applied exclusively in payment of arrears of interest on the legacies, or ratably in payment of the legacies and of the interest, the Master of the Rolls and Lord Chancellor of Ireland made orders directing the fund to be applied exclusively in payment of the arrears of interest; and the Lord Chancellor refused to direct an inquiry as to how much of the fund in court was principal, and how much accumulated interest:—Held, that any question, as to the application of B.'s personal estate, could not be regularly adjudicated in this form of suit between the co-defendants C. and D.; and the orders appealed from were affirmed, with a declaration that they should be without prejudice to any question between C. and D. as to the manner in which the principal and interest of the legacies should be paid. Coote v. Trench, 9 Cl. & F. 74.

23. ACCRETIONS AND ACCUMULATIONS.

Accretions—To Specific Legacies—Stocks and Shares.]—Dividends on specific legacy of stock given with the dividends are due from death of testator. Barrington v. Tristram, 6 Ves. 345.

A., by will, gives 100*l.* South Sea stock to B.; another 100*l.* South Sea stock to C., payable in six months after his death. Before time expired, an addition was made by the company to every 100*l.* stock:—Held, that the legatees were entitled to the additional as well as the original stock. Mason v. Hawkins, 4 Bro. P. C. 8.

If a specific bequest of shares is made under an impression that they are not subject to any increase, an accidental increase caused by a payment out of the general personal estate of the testator himself will pass to the legatee. Maclaren v. Stainton, 30 L. J., Ch. 723; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 691; 4 L. T. 715; 9 W. R. 908. Reversing 27 Beav. 460.

A., under the impression that he was not indebted, dealt with his entire estate, and made a specific gift of shares held by him in a company. A suit was afterwards instituted against his executors by the company to which he was found to be indebted. The debt was paid out of the testator's general personal estate, and, in consequence, bonuses were declared upon all the shares of the company. A specific legatee claimed the bonuses in respect of his bequeathed shares:—Held, that the bonuses on the bequeathed shares did not form part of the general personal estate of the testator, but belonged to the specific legatee. Ib.

Some of the shares were bequeathed to parties for life, with remainder to other persons:—Held, that the bonuses belonged wholly to the legatees, and not to the estate. Ib.

A testator bequeathed all the interest arising out of what money he had in any banks:—Held, that a bonus or extraordinary dividend on the shares of the capital stock of a bank, paid in addition to the usual half-yearly dividend, and out of the net annual profits of the bank for the year, was not an accretion to the capital, and passed under the bequest. French v. Craig, 8 Ir. Ch. R. 142.

Testator gave several legacies in stock, and directed his executors to transfer stock to the legatees to the amount of their respective legacies, either in consols or reduced annuities, within twelve months after his death. Some of the legacies were not transferred till after twelve months from the testator's death:—Held, that, notwithstanding the discretion, the legacies were specific, and that the legatees were entitled to the dividends from the death of the testator. Chester v. Urwick, 23 Beav. 402.

A testator, at the time of his death, was entitled to one hundred and twenty shares in the Great Western Railway Company. For thirty-eight of these he had been an original subscriber, and had signed the parliamentary contract, undertaking to pay the amount subscribed within ten years to the directors to be appointed by the Railway Act. The remaining eighty-two shares had been purchased by him as scrip. By the act, which was passed in his lifetime, the directors had power to compel payment of the moneys subscribed, and also to make calls, and to enforce the payment of such calls by action, or otherwise to declare the shares forfeited, and to sell the shares. The act also gave the proprietors of shares the right of sale and transfer, declaring, in effect, that the vendor ceased to be liable for calls after a proper memorial of such sale and transfer. All the calls had not been paid on the shares at the time of the testator's death. After his death the company passed a resolution, declaring that the proprietors of shares should be entitled to two new quarter shares in respect of each whole share. By his will, the testator had bequeathed thirty shares to A. and thirty shares to B., declaring that the legacies should be deemed specific so as to be capable of ademption:—Held, first, that the legatees were entitled to the income of the shares from the death of the testator; secondly, that the legatees were entitled to a proportional number of new quarter shares; thirdly, that the legatees were not entitled to have the deposits and calls on the new quarter shares, or the calls due on the eighty-two whole shares, or semble, the calls due on the thirty-eight original shares, paid out of the testator's general estate; fourthly, that the legatees, and not the executors, had the right of electing out of which class of shares their legacies should be delivered to them. Jaques v. Chambers, 2 Coll. C. C. 435; 15 L. J., Ch. 225; 16 Id. 243; 10 Jur. 151; 11 Id. 295.

A testatrix had power to dispose by will of property which she enjoyed under the residuary gift of her brother; a part of this property consisted of 7,000*l.* bank stock, which, after the brother's death, was increased by a bonus to 8,750*l.* The testatrix in her will, made shortly after the bonus was declared, described the bank stock as consisting of 7,000*l.* The court decreed that the 8,750*l.* passed by force of general expressions, which plainly manifested an intention to bequeath all that the testatrix derived from her brother. Matthews v. Maude, 1 Russ. & M. 397; 8 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 106.

Legacy of 1,000*l.* stock, held not to pass additional capital given by Bank of England as bonus under 56 Geo. 3, c. 96, subsequent to will and before testator's death. Norris v. Harrison, 2 Madd. 268.

A testator gave to W. H. and M. H. the amount of the bond he held for 1,000*l.*, "when they got their principal money paid to them, they then to give to their uncle J. B. the sum of 50*l.*, and also their father and mother the sum of 50*l.* each, arising from the bond":—Held, that W. H. and M. H. were entitled to the interest accrued due upon the bond in the lifetime of the testator, as well as to the principal. Harcourt v. Morgan, 2 Keen, 274.

Under bequests of the interests, dividends and proceeds of a sum in stock to S. for life, and of the stock to A. after S.'s death; but if A. should die before twenty-one, &c., to S., a bonus of the stock given under statute 56 Geo. 3, c. 96, was held to belong to A. as legatee of stock. Hooper v. Rossiter, 13 Price, 774; 1 M'Cle. 527.

A testator gave all his estates and effects to trustees upon trust, after paying debts and legacies, to employ the residue for the use and behoof of his grandson G. C. and the heirs of the body of G. C. till he or they arrived at majority, when the trustees were to denude thereof in his or their favours; and failing

G. C. or his lawful issue, before either of their attaining to majority, then such residue was to pertain to any posthumous heir male of testator's son T. C. (the father of G. C.), who had just died, at his or the heirs of his body attaining to majority; and failing of him without lawful issue, then to the daughters of T. C. equally. By a codicil he declared that, failing heirs of T. C.'s body, then in place of the residue pertaining to the daughters of T. C. equally it should solely pertain to the eldest heirs female of T. C. and their issue, the eldest heir female through the whole course of succession succeeding always without division, and secluding heirs-portioners. By another codicil, failing G. C. and the heirs of his body, he gave 4,000*l.* to each of his grand-daughters (except the eldest at the time) who should survive him, and the heirs of their bodies. G. C. came of age in 1799, and died unmarried in 1811; and there was no posthumous child of T. C.:—Held, upon the construction of this will and the codicils, affirming the interlocutor of the Court of Session, that G. C. on attaining twenty-one years did not take absolutely, so that on his death the whole residue would become divisible among his next of kin; but that he took only as first substitute in tail, and that upon the failure of the entail (upon his death leaving no heirs of his body) his eldest sister succeeded as heir substitute to him:—Held, further, that the accumulations of interest and profits from the death of the testator until G. C. attained majority belonged to G. C.; as did also some bonuses on bank stock, part of the testator's property, which had been declared a few weeks before G. C. attained majority, but were payable at a day subsequent to that date. Cuming v. Boswell, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1005; 4 W. R. 752.

In June, 1865, a dividend of 7 per cent. per annum upon certain shares held by the testatrix was declared payable on the 15th July, 1865, and the 15th January, 1866. She died on the 31st December, 1865:—Held, that the January dividend formed part of the corpus of her residuary estate, and did not pass under a bequest of the annual income of such residuary personal estate. De Gendre v. Kent, L. R. 4 Eq. 283; 16 L. T. 694.

In the case of a specific legacy of bank stock, if the testator has died a few days before the dividend day, the legatee would take the dividend, although payable in respect of profits earned during the testator's life. Clive v. Clive, Kay, 600; 2 Eq. R. 913; 23 L. J., Ch. 981.

The dividend on shares in a public company, partly earned before the testator's death, but declared afterwards, belongs entirely to the specific legatee of the shares; and the Apportionment Act, 1870, does not introduce any new rule in this respect. Whitehead v. Whitehead, R. 16 Eq. 528; 29 L. T. 289.

Tenant for life of bank stock held entitled to a dividend of 5 per cent. interest and profits for the half year. Barclay v. Wainwright, 13 Ves. 66. And see Mullins v. Smith, 1 Dr. & Sm. 204, 210; 8 W. R. 739; Witts v. Steere, 13 Ves. 363; Clayton v. Gresham, 10 Ves. 288; Paris v. Paris, 10 Ves. 185; Brander v. Brander, 4 Ves. 800.

—— Insurance Policies.]—The testator, after reciting that he was entitled to a policy of insurance on his life for 2,000*l.*, bequeathed 400*l.*, part thereof, to E.; 100*l.* and 100*l.*, other parts thereof, to two other legatees; and he left "the residue" to J. H. C. At the time of the testator's death, considerable sums by way of bonus were added to the policy:—Held, that the gift of "the residue" of the moneys, payable on foot of the insurance, was residuary and not specific, and that J. H. C. took the entire residue of the proceeds of the policy, including the bonuses, but subject to any liabilities for the satisfaction of which the policy was liable to be resorted to, and that such liabilities were to be borne primarily by the legatee of such residue in exoneration of the specific legatees of the insurance. Corballis v. Corballis, 9 L. R., Ir. 309.

A testator having two policies upon his life for 1,000*l.* each, by will gave to his wife "the 2,000*l.* insured on his life." Subsequently he surrendered one policy. At his death bonuses were due on the other:—Held, that his widow was entitled to the 1,000*l.*, and also to the bonuses due upon the unsurrendered policy. Roberts v. Edwards, 33 Beav. 259; 33 L. J., Ch. 369; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1219; 9 L. T. 360; 12 W. R. 33.

By the rules of an incorporated assurance company each shareholder was required to effect an assurance of a stated amount, and it was provided that one-third of every bonus on the policy should be added to the capital of the company. A shareholder, by his will, bequeathed all and every his shares and interest in this company, and all the advantages to be derived therefrom, and he bequeathed shares in other companies, in reference to which he also used the expression "shares and interest":—Held, that the policy effected by the testator, and the bonus which had been declared thereon, did not pass to the legatee. Harington v. Moffat, 4 De G. M. & G. 1; 22 L. J., Ch. 775; 1 W. R. 294.

A testator, being possessed of a policy of assurance for 1,000*l.*, on which a bonus of about 400*l.* had lately been declared, gave to his wife his "premium of assurance in the R. Company":—Held, that the bonus alone passed. Barrow v. Methold, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 994; 3 W. R. 629.

A testator gave specific bequests by his will, and to his niece a leasehold house held for lives, together with a policy of insurance on one of the lives, and all bonuses and additions, she paying the future premiums; and he directed that, if she should be married at his death, the house should be settled on her and her children; and he gave the residue of his personal estate, including his furniture, to L. After the date of the will the testator married, and he then made a codicil giving to his wife all the income, dividends and annual proceeds of his entire estate, and postponing the payment of all legacies and the distribution of all estates vested in him until after her decease. Subject thereto he confirmed and republished his will. A portion of the property consisted of Egyptian 7 per cent. bonds of the nominal amount of 4,000*l.* On a bill by the widow for the administration of his estate, and claiming the enjoyment of all the estate in specie during her life:—Held, that there was nothing to exempt the case from the operation of the rule in Howe v. Lord Dartmouth (7 Ves. 137), and that therefore the residuary estate, including the furniture and bonds, ought to be converted, and the income paid to the widow. Macdonald v. Irvine, 47 L. J., Ch. 494; 8 Ch. D. 101; 38 L. T. 155; 26 W. R. 381.

Held, also, that the bonuses ought to be added to the sum insured, and not taken in reduction of the premiums; but that the premiums ought not to be charged on the rents of the leasehold property, but should be charged upon the policy money. Ib.

To Trust of Share in Partnership Business.]—A testator gave his real and personal estate to trustees in trust, to permit his wife to receive "the annual produce, interest, rents, and profits thereof for life," and after her death in trust for A. and B.; and he directed his trustees to carry on his partnership trade in which he was engaged, or such part as they should think proper for the benefit of his wife and those in remainder:—Held, that the widow was entitled to any increase in the value of the testator's capital which took place between the death of the testator and expiration of the partnership; but this decision was reversed on appeal. Mousley v. Carr, 4 Beav. 49; 10 L. J., Ch. 260.

Pecuniary Legacies.]—A testator by his will gave his real and residuary personal estate upon trust for sale and conversion, and as to the sum of 20,000*l.*, part of the trust moneys, upon trust for his son C. for life, with remainder to C.'s children, giving the residue of the trust moneys between his other two sons, and giving his trustees a discretionary power to postpone the sale and conversion of the estate so long as seemed to them expedient. The trustee, who was one of the residuary legatees, neither paid nor appropriated funds to meet the legacy of 20,000*l.*, but retained the trust estate in its original state of investment, meanwhile paying C. interest at 4 per cent. upon the amount of the legacy. The investments of the estate having risen considerably in value, C. and his children, more than ten years after the death of the testator, claimed to participate in the increase of value, on the ground that the trustee, being a residuary legatee, could not retain profits caused by his own default:—Held, that the residuary legatees must be treated as owners of the estate, subject to a charge thereon of the legacy, and that C. and his children were only entitled to the amount of their legacy with interest at 4 per cent. from the end of the year after the death of the testator. Campbell, In re, Campbell v. Campbell, 62 L. J., Ch. 878; [1893] 3 Ch. 468; 69 L. T. 134.

A particular sum having been set apart to answer a pecuniary legacy, which was given to one for life, with remainder to his children, and an increase in the value of that fund having taken place, which made its value greater than the amount of the legacy:—Held, that the legatees were entitled to the benefit of the increase. Kimberley v. Tew, 4 Dr. & War. 139; 2 Con. & L. 366; 5 Ir. Eq. R. 389.

General Residuary Bequest — Stocks and Shares.]—A holder of shares in both departments of the Sun Fire and Life Office bequeathed his personal estate to trustees to permit his wife to receive the dividends, interest, and income for her life, remainder over. He died in December, 1870. In January, 1873, an extraordinary dividend was declared on the life shares for five years previously; and in July, 1873, a "special dividend was declared on the fire shares for the half-year previously":—Held, that these dividends were income, and belonged to the tenant for life. Hopkins, In re, 43 L. J., Ch. 722; L. R. 18 Eq. 696; 30 L. T. 627; 22 W. R. 687.

—— Insurance Policy.]—A testator, possessed of shares in an insurance company, by his will, dated in 1846, gave his property to trustees for the benefit of his wife for life, and after her death for his children. Two years after his death, namely, in 1848, a bonus was declared:—Held, that the widow, as tenant for life, was entitled to the bonus as income. Johnson v. Johnson, 15 Jur. 714.

—— Stock on Farm.]—General residuary bequest, including a leasehold farm with the stock, to be converted into money as soon as conveniently may be, upon trust to pay the interest, &c., for life, and as to the capital, for the children. The stock considerably increased between the death in April and the sale at Michaelmas; it was decreed that the conversion was in a reasonable time, and the party entitled for life should have interest from the conversion; and as to premises which from a defect in title could not be sold, that being for the interest of all that they should not be sold, a value should be set upon them to carry interest at 4 per cent. from the death. Gibson v. Bott, 7 Ves. 89.

Under Power of Appointment.]—Bonuses on bank stock are capital. A. had a power of appointment over 7,150*l.* stock; certain bonuses accrued thereon, which were laid out upon stock, upon the trusts and subject to the appointment; and after the accretion of these, A. exercised his power, but only noticed the original stock and the first bonus thus: "And also the said sum of 715*l.* 5 per cent. &c., together with all such further additions, in the nature of profit, to be made to the said bank stock in my lifetime":—Held, that all the bonuses passed under the appointment. Carver v. Bowles, 9 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 91. And see Matthews v. Maude, supra, col. 1742.

What Persons Entitled to—On Stocks and Shares.]—In 1832 a testator bequeathed ten Carron shares to his widow for life, with remainder over. She died in 1847, and in 1854 the executor sold the shares for 10,000*l.* to the manager. After this large sums were recovered from the estate of a former manager, and thereout, in 1858, a bonus of 470*l.* per share was declared, whereupon the executor insisted on setting aside the sale, and obtained an additional 8,000*l.* by way of compromise. A bill by the executor of the widow claiming to be entitled to participate in the 8,000*l.* was dismissed with costs, the court holding first, that the widow's interests (if any) were not comprised in the compromise, and secondly, that the whole bonus belonged to the persons entitled to the shares at the time it was declared. Edmondson v. Crosthwaite, 34 Beav. 30.

A testator bequeathed East and West India Dock stock to life tenants and others in succession. Some time after his death bonuses were declared upon the stock. On the 8th February, 1865, by an order made in a suit for the administration of the estate, the bonuses were invested in 3*l.* per cent. annuities, and the dividends directed to be paid to the tenants for life. On the 12th January, 1871, that investment order was discharged:—Held, that the bonuses were income, and not capital of the estate, and belonged to the life tenants. Dale v. Hayes, 40 L. J., Ch. 244; 24 L. T. 12; 19 W. R. 299.

—— On Insurance Policy.]—An insurance company by a deed of settlement, was directed to create a reserve fund, and pay no dividend till a specified amount was realised. This provision was departed from by the consent of a majority of the shareholders, and a bonus was distributed every three years. The company afterwards amalgamated with another company, and it was agreed that 50*l.* per share should be paid upon all shares, and also a proportionate part of the surplus assets. A tenant for life of ten shares in the company, claimed the share of the surplus assets which had been paid over to her trustee as part of her annual income :—Held, that these surplus assets, which must be considered as the reserve fund, were capital, and not income. Nicholson v. Nicholson, 30 L. J., Ch. 617; 9 W. R. 676. And see Hebert v. Bateman, 1 W. R. 191.

Where a devisee for life of leaseholds for lives, in the erroneous belief that he was bound to renew, insured the life of the younger cestui que vie in the names of himself and the executors, and paid the premiums, and died, leaving the executors him surviving : — Held, that the insurance moneys were subject to a resulting trust in favour of the devisees under the will, but that the estate of the tenant for life was entitled to the bonuses, but not to be recouped the amount of the premiums. Browne v. Browne, 2 Giff. 304; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1143; 8 W. R. 726.

Apportionment.]—Where a testator has bequeathed his residuary personal estate to trustees upon trust for conversion, with power to postpone such conversion at their discretion, and to hold the proceeds upon trust for a person for life with remainders over, and such residue includes outstanding personal estate, the conversion of which the trustees, in the exercise of their discretion, postpone for the benefit of the estate, and which eventually falls in some years after the testator's death—as, for instance, a mortgage debt with arrears of interest, or arrears of an annuity with interest, or moneys payable on a life policy—such outstanding personal estate should, on falling in, be apportioned as between capital and income, by ascertaining the sum which, put out at interest at 4 per cent. per annum, on the day of the testator's death, and accumulating at compound interest calculated at that rate with yearly rests and deducting income tax, would, with the accumulations of interest, have produced, at the day of receipt, the amount actually received; and the sum so ascertained should be treated as capital, and the residue as income. Chesterfield's (Earl) Trusts, In re, 52 L. J., Ch. 958; 24 Ch. D. 643; 49 L. T. 261; 32 W. R. 361. S. P., Beavan v. Beavan, 52 L. J., Ch. 961, n.; 24 Ch. D. 649, n.; 49 L. T. 263, n.; 32 W. R. 363, n.

A testator by his will bequeathed his residuary personal estate upon trust, after payment of debts and legacies, to lay out and invest the residue as therein mentioned, and to pay the income to the plaintiff for life, with remainders over. Part of the residuary estate consisted of a contingent reversionary interest in some settled funds. The testator died in 1832, and the reversion first became saleable in 1846, but it had never been sold. Since 1846 the reversion had enormously increased in value. Upon an application in effect to have the value of the reversion apportioned as between tenant for life and remainderman :—Held, that the principle of Chesterfield's Trusts, In re (supra), applied, and that assuming the reversion to have been sold at an agreed price, it must be ascertained what principal sum would, with compound interest from the date of the testator's death, make up the agreed price, and such principal sum alone must be attributed to corpus, and the whole of the rest to income. Hobson, In re, Walker v. Appach, 55 L. J., Ch. 422; 53 L. T. 627; 34 W. R. 70.

—— Under Apportionment Act.]—The word "dividends" in the Apportionment Act, 1870, includes payments by way of bonus or surplus profits to the shareholders of a public company, even though such payments may be only occasional and not strictly periodical: as, for instance, where the payments are made under the deed of settlement of a life assurance society, providing for distribution of a bonus or surplus profits among its shareholders once in every five years, "unless a special meeting of shareholders shall otherwise direct." Griffith, In re, Carr v. Griffith, 12 Ch. D. 655; 41 L. T. 540.

The words "trading or other public companies" in s. 5 of the Apportionment Act, 1870, includes any public company, but not a private partnership. Ib.

A life assurance society, unincorporated, but established in 1843 by a deed of settlement, with a board of directors, 100,000*l.* capital, and list of shareholders, and possessing certain powers and concessions under a special act of parliament passed in 1868, held to be a "public company" within the meaning of s. 5 of the Apportionment Act, 1870. Ib.

A bonus or surplus profits accruing on shares in the company specifically bequeathed by a will dated in 1875, held to be apportionable under the Apportionment Act, 1870. Ib.

Incidence of Loss—Power to continue Business.]—A. gave all his real and personal estate to trustees upon trust for sale, conversion, and investment, and to pay the income of one-fifth part to his wife for life, and subject thereto, to divide the whole into four parts, and pay the income of one such part to each of his four daughters for life, and after her death to hold such part in trust for her children equally; and he empowered his trustees to carry on any business carried on by him, and directed that the net profits of any business so carried on should, except such parts thereof as the trustees should in their discretion reserve for the purpose of increasing the capital in such business, be treated as income of his said trust estate; and he directed that, should any losses (not being the result of neglect) fall on his trustees in consequence of their carrying on such business, the same should be defrayed out of his estate. The testator left property employed in business, and other property. The trustees carried on the business, and duly invested the other property. For some years the business was successful, and the profits were duly divided among the tenants for life. In a subsequent year losses were incurred, and the trustees claimed that they should be recouped out of the income of the trust estate generally :—Held, that the losses must be borne by the capital of the testator's estate, and not by the tenants for life. Millichamp, Goodale and Bullock, In re, 52 L. T. 758.

—— Bequest of Share of Business.]—A trader devised and bequeathed to trustees all his real and personal estate, including his share in the business in which he was a partner, on trust as to one moiety thereof, to pay the annual proceeds (including the net profits of the business) to his daughter for her life, for her separate use without power of anticipation, and after her death the moiety was to be held in trust for her children or remoter issue. He directed his trustees to carry on the business after his death until the expiration of the partnership term, and authorised them to use, not only such capital as he should have in the business at the time of his death, but also such other part of the trust premises as they should think fit. The partnership deed authorised the partners to dispose of their shares by will; it did not provide how any loss in carrying on the business should be borne. The will contained no provision as to the mode in which any loss should be borne as between the persons interested in the testator's estate. It had been the practice of the firm in prosperous years to divide the whole profit among the partners, and in years in which there was a loss to write off each partner's proportion of the loss from his share of the capital. The testator died in 1879. After his death the business was carried on by his trustees in partnership with the other partners. Up to the end of 1880 it was carried on at a profit, and half the testator's share of that profit was paid by the trustees to the daughter. For the year 1881 there was a loss, and the testator's share of the loss was written off from his share of the capital in the books of the firm. For the year 1882 there was a profit:—Held, that the daughter was entitled to receive half that share of the profits which the testator, according to the practice of the firm, would have received if he had been alive, and that, consequently, she was entitled to receive half his share of the profits for the year 1882, without any deduction for the purpose of making good the corpus of the settled share in the interest of the remaindermen. Gow v. Foster, 26 Ch. D. 672; 51 L. T. 394; 32 W. R. 1019.

Accumulations—Who Entitled to—Where Express Direction to accumulate.]—A testator, after bequeathing to his daughter (a widow) an annuity, and directing his trustees to set apart a sufficient sum of stock to answer the growing payments, bequeathed his residuary personal estate to and to be equally divided between his grandson and grand-daughter (by name) as tenants in common; but in case of the death of the grand-daughter under twenty-one and unmarried in the lifetime of the grandson, or in case of the death of the grandson in the lifetime of the grand-daughter under twenty-one, he bequeathed the whole to the survivor; and after directing payment during the minority of the grandchildren for their maintenance, the testator directed that the clear surplus of the income of his residuary estate should accumulate in the hands of his executors, and be added to the principal of the share of his grandchildren in the residue, and directed that his grandchildren respectively should not be entitled to receive his or her share of the accumulation until after the death of their mother (the annuitant). The grand-daughter married under age, and articles were executed on her marriage, whereby it was agreed, when she became entitled to the absolute and immediate possession of any part of the residuary estate, the same and all accumulations should be settled on certain trusts for the separate use of the wife for life, with subsequent trusts for the husband and children, and a proviso referring to and dependent on the trust for accumulation in the will. On a bill filed by the grand-daughter during her mother's lifetime for a transfer of the fund:—Held, that the direction to accumulate in the will was precarious and ineffectual, and was not rendered otherwise by the settlement, and that the grand-daughter's moiety became capital at her marriage, and that the accumulations since that period belonged to her for her separate use. Sheffield v. Orton, 1 De G. & Sm. 326.

Where, after a devise for successive estates for life, with remainders in tail, subject to a term of ninety-nine years, the trusts of such term were declared to be that the trustees should, out of the rents and profits of the estates, insure the messuages, and keep the same in good repair during the respective lives of the several tenants for life, and should, during the respective minorities of each and every person thereby made tenants for life or in tail, apply the surplus or residue of the rents and profits for and towards the maintenance and education of the tenants for life or in tail, who for the time being should be entitled in possession to the estates; and in case the whole of the surplus of the said rents and profits should not, during the minority of any such tenant for life or in tail as aforesaid, be applied for his or her maintenance and education, then the surplus thereof was from time to time to be laid out on real or government securities, at interest, in the names of the trustees, upon trust for such person or persons from time to time as for the time being should under the limitations of the will be entitled in possession to the said estates; and if any person who might become entitled in possession or remainder to an estate tail in the estates under any of the said limitations should die under twenty-one, without issue inheritable to such estate tail, then so often as any such event should happen within the period of time in which executory devises were allowed by law to take place, the absolute interest in the moneys so directed to be laid out and invested was to be considered as not having been vested in such person, but the same was to go over to the next taker:—Held, that the first tenant for life in possession of the estates was not absolutely entitled to the accumulations of the rents and profits which had accrued during his minority, but was only tenant for life of such accumulations. Crosse v. Glennie, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 237; 7 Jur. 274.

Testator devised his estate at E. to trustees, upon trust to apply the rents for the maintenance and support of B. till she should attain the age of twenty-five or marry with consent, and to lay out the surplus of such rents in government securities, that the same might accumulate for the uses and purposes of his will; and from and after the said B. should attain twenty-five, or marry with consent, then to pay her the whole of the rents for her life; and after her decease, upon trust for her children. The testator then gave his estate at S. to the same trustees, upon trust, in case the said B. lived to attain twenty-five, or married with such consent as aforesaid, to let her receive the rents for her life; and, after her decease, upon trust for her children in manner before mentioned. Provided that in case B. should marry without consent, the testator revoked all the devises and bequests in favour of her and her issue. All the residue of his real and personal estate, and likewise his estate and premises thereinbefore devised for the benefit of B., in case she should die under twenty-five unmarried, and without issue, the testator devised and bequeathed to the trustees in trust for X., Y., and Z. B. attained twenty-five and married with consent. Between the death of the testator and her attaining twenty-five there was an accumulation of the surplus rents of the E. estate, after providing for her maintenance, and an accumulation of the rents of the S. estate:—Held, that she was entitled for her life to the income of the former accumulation, as to which the court did not further declare the right, and absolutely entitled to the latter accumulation. Greene v. Potter, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 517; 7 Jur. 736.

Testator directed the proceeds of his estate to be invested and accumulated till the youngest child of his brother should attain twenty-one, and then to be in trust for all the children who should then be living, or their issue. All the children except the second in age died without issue before the youngest if living would have attained twenty-one:—Held, that the second, who had attained twenty-one, was entitled to the fund in possession upon the death of the last of the other survivors who died under twenty-one. Evans v. Pilkington, 10 Sim. 412.

A residue was given to accumulate, and to be in trust for all the children of J. B. other than A., and to be paid on attaining twenty-three, with a gift over in the event of the death of all the children under twenty-three: there were three children, A., B., and C., of whom C. was born three years after the death of testatrix:—Held, that the shares were vested, notwithstanding there was a direction to accumulate till the time of payment, and also, that C. in his own right, and as representing B., who died an infant, was entitled to the whole fund. Blease v. Burgh, 2 Beav. 221; 9 L. J., Ch. 226.

Bequest of residue, in trust for the maintenance of the testator's five children, the surplus to accumulate for the benefit of the residuary legatees, and subject thereto to pay, &c., the residue in certain shares to the children on attaining twenty-five, but their shares to be vested at twenty-one, and at that age to be entitled to receive all the interest on their "respective shares"; and he authorised advancements to be made to the sons, to be deducted out of their shares, before any "final division." One having attained twenty-one, and received her share of the aggregate fund:—Held, not to retain any interest in the accumulations subsequently accruing during the minorities of the other children. Routh v. Hutchinson, 8 Beav. 581; 9 Jur. 1051.

—— Direction to accumulate till Mortgage paid off—Sale of Part by Mortgagees.]—A testator who died in 1875 devised his estate to trustees, and directed that the rents should be accumulated until the amount of the accumulations was sufficient to discharge the principal money due on mortgages on the estate, and that thereupon the trustees should pay off the same. And he declared that the tenants for life should not be entitled to any portion of the rents until the mortgages had been paid off. There were two mortgages on the estates. The trustees accumulated the rents and paid off one mortgage. The mortgagees of the other mortgage in 1884 sold the part of the estates subject to it for less than the amount of the mortgage debt, and the residue was paid off out of the accumulations of which a surplus still remained:—Held, that the tenant for life was entitled to be let into possession of the rest of the estates, and to payment of the remainder of the accumulations. Norton v. Johnstone, 55 L. J., Ch. 222; 30 Ch. D. 649; 34 W. R. 13.

—— Jurisdiction of Court to allow Maintenance—Tenant for Life.]—A testator directed the income of his real and personal estate to be accumulated for twenty-one years, and gave the accumulated estates to his sister J. C. for life, then to her son W. for life, and after his decease to his children in tail male, and then to her son J. for life, and then to her son A. in tail male. The court directed an annual sum to be paid to J. C. out of the income of the personal estate for the maintenance and education of her three sons. Havelock v. Havelock (17 Ch. D. 807) followed. Collins, In re, Collins v. Collins, 55 L. J., Ch. 672; 32 Ch. D. 229; 55 L. T. 21; 34 W. R. 650; 50 J. P. 821.

Where a testator has by his will made a settlement of his estate, subject to a prior trust for the accumulation of the whole income during a term of years not exceeding the legal limit, the court has, in the absence of special circumstances, no jurisdiction to order an allowance to be paid out of the income for the maintenance and education of the person who will, if he is living at the end of the term, be a tenant for life, even if there is no other way in which a provision can be made for his maintenance and education. Havelock v. Havelock (17 Ch. D. 807) distinguished. Alford, In re, Hunt, or Hurst v. Parry, 55 L. J., Ch. 659; 32 Ch. D. 383; 54 L. T. 674; 34 W. R. 773.

A testator devised his real estate to trustees for a term of twenty years after his death, and, after the expiration of the term, and in the meantime subject thereto, to the use of the plaintiff for life, with remainder to the use of his first and other sons successively in tail, with remainders over. Under the trusts of the term the rents were to be accumulated for a period of twenty years after the testator's death. The income of the testator's residuary personalty was subject to a similar trust. At the end of the twenty years the residuary personalty and the accumulations of the income and of the rents were to be laid out in the purchase of real estate, which was limited to the same uses. The will contained no provision for the maintenance of the plaintiff during the term. He was not the heir-at-law of the testator, but he was the eldest son of a favourite niece of the testator, who had before her marriage lived a good deal with him and had been educated at his expense. The testator was a tenant-farmer. The rental of his real estate was about 440*l*. per annum; his personal estate was about 10,000*l*. An order had been made in the action allowing 300*l*. a year for the maintenance and education of the plaintiff during his minority. After he had attained twenty-one the plaintiff applied for the continuance of the allowance until further order:—Held, that there being no special circumstances, there was no jurisdiction to interfere any further with the trust for accumulation. Ib.

A testator devised to trustees real estate, producing an estimated income of 1,300*l*. a year, in trust to accumulate the rents and profits at compound interest for a term of twenty-one years, and at the end of the said term, or as soon as circumstances would permit, to lay out the accumulations in the purchase of lands, to be settled subject to the said trust term to the use of A. for life; remainder to B., the eldest son of A., for life; remainder to B.'s first and other sons in tail male; remainder to A.'s younger sons (then in being) successively for life; with like remainders to their first and other sons in tail male respectively; with several remainders over. The testator also bequeathed his residuary personal estate (which was above the value of 58,000*l.*) in trust to be invested in the purchase of lands, to be settled to the like uses as were thereinbefore directed in relation to the accumulations of the rents and profits of the lands comprised in the term. The directions as to accumulation contained in the will were repeated in the codicils. A.'s sons were minors. An application was made on behalf of the eldest for an allowance to A. out of the rent, profits, and income for the maintenance of the sons, on the ground that A.'s own means were not sufficient to enable him to educate and maintain them suitably to their prospective position:—Held, that as there was an imperative trust to accumulate, the court could not make an allowance for maintenance. Havelock v. Havelock (17 Ch. D. 807) not followed. Kemmis v. Kemmis, 15 L. R., Ir. 90—C. A.

Where no Direction to Accumulate.]—A testator bequeathed to his trustees and executors, the sum of 3,750*l.* Bank of Ireland stock, and directed them to retain it in their names for the purpose of securing the punctual payment of an annuity of 300*l.* to his wife; and after her death he directed the annuity to be paid to the governor and trustees of the Hospital for Incurables, Donnybrook Road, Dublin; and by a codicil he bequeathed the residue of his estate to the trustees for the time being of the Mater Misericordiæ Hospital, Dublin. The dividends on the bank stock were more than sufficient to pay the annuity, and a large surplus had been accumulated and invested by the trustees in three per cent. stock:—Held, on a petition presented by them for the advice of the court, that they were at liberty to pay over accumulations of the surplus dividends to the trustees of the latter hospital as residuary legatees. Tharel's Trusts, In re, 13 L. R., Ir. 337.

Accumulations Act, 1892—Effect of.]—The Accumulations Act, 1892, does not invalidate a direction by will that during twenty-one years after the testator's death the net profits of leasehold premises shall be capitalised and become capital moneys of a settlement of realty and subject to the powers of the Settled Land Acts. Danson, In re, Bell v. Danson, 13 R. 633.

24. INTERMEDIATE RENTS AND PROFITS.

Where Interests Vested Subject to Gift Over.]—Where a legacy of residue is given in such a way as to vest, but so as to be liable to be divested on a given event, the interest in the meanwhile, and until the divesting, belongs to the legatee. A testator, after bequeathing certain shares of his residuary estate (the produce of a mixed fund) to his son and daughter respectively, directed that the interest of the share given to the son should be applied for his maintenance and education till twenty-one, and that after that period he should have power to receive and dispose of such interest till his age of twenty-five, when the whole of the property bequeathed to him was to be at his own disposal. He further directed that half the property given to his daughter should be invested, in trust, for her maintenance, education, use, and benefit, during her life, and for her children, if any, after her decease; and, if there was no issue living at her decease, the said property was to devolve to his son; and in case he was dead also, and had left no issue, the said property was to devolve to his executors thereinafter named. The other half of the property bequeathed to his daughter he directed to be invested for her sole use and benefit till twenty-one, and that the said property should then be at her own disposal; and if either the son or daughter should die under twenty-one, the property bequeathed to the one so dying should devolve to the other; and if both should die under that age, then the property bequeathed to them should devolve to and become the property of the four persons therein named and described, to be divided betwixt them in equal proportions, and their heirs for ever; which four persons he also appointed his executors. One of the four persons named executors renounced probate, and declined to act; and afterwards both the son and daughter died under twenty-one, and without issue:—Held, that the interest which accrued upon the shares of the son and daughter during their respective minorities, so far as it had not been applied to their maintenance and education, vested absolutely in them, and passed to their personal representatives. Barber v. Barber, 3 Myl. & Cr. 688; 8 L. J., Ch. 36; 2 Jur. 1029.

Where a testator gives legacies to children, provided they attain twenty-one, with a gift over if the children die before twenty-one, and appoints trustees and guardians to the children, with a request that they will attend to their education, the children are entitled to the interest of their legacies for their maintenance and education, until they attain twenty-one or die under that age. Mills v. Robarts, 1 Russ. & M. 555; Tam. 476; 8 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 141.

Bequest of stock, &c., and interest and dividends to accrue to testator's two great-nieces, equally to be divided and to be assigned, transferred, &c., to them, when and as they should respectively attain twenty-one, with limitations of their respective shares, on the event of death under twenty-one, to their respective children; survivorship in case of no children, and a direction that the executors should, during the respective minorities of the legatees, receive the dividends, interest, &c., and that so much as should be necessary should be applied for maintenance, &c., and the residue accumulate for their benefits respectively, until they should respectively become entitled to their respective parts. The surplus interest held to go with the principal upon the death of one under twenty-one without children. Sisson v. Shaw, 9 Ves. 285.

Devise of residue to an infant, payable at twenty-one, remainder over; the infant died under age; the interest from the death of the testator to that of the infant shall go to her representative, not to the remainderman. Chaworth v. Hooper, 1 Bro. C. C. 82.

A. by will devises 500*l.* to his infant grandson without appointing any time for payment, with proviso, that if the grandson dies before twenty-one, then the legacy to go over to B. The grandson shall have the interest of the legacy during his infancy. Taylor v. Johnson, 2 P. Wms. 204; Moseley, 98.

Where an interest in personalty is vested in a legatee subject only to being divested by there being issue of a woman who is past the age of child-bearing, the court will order payment of the income to the legatee. Lowman, In re, Devenish v. Pester, 64 L. J., Ch. 567; [1895] 2 Ch. 348; 12 R. 362; 72 L. T. 816—C. A. And see Laundy v. Williams, 2 P. Wms. 481.

—— Where Testator not in Loco Parentis.]—A bequest of a vested legacy, directed to be paid at twenty-one or marriage, and subject to be divested by death before those events (the testator not being in loco parentis), does not carry interest until the time for payment. Bullen, In re, 12 L. T. (O.S.) 763.

—— Where Trust for Accumulation and Gift over of Capital only.]—Where legacies are given upon trust to accumulate, the interest and dividends will not pass by a gift over of the principal sums, unless the court is satisfied, by a reference to other clauses of the will, that the interest and dividends were omitted in the gift over by clerical mistake. Harvey v. Cooke, 4 Russ. 34; 6 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 84.

Devise of real estate with the residue of the personal estate upon long limitations in strict settlement, including persons unborn. A subsequent direction that none of the devisees shall take or come into possession before the age of twenty-five, was held confined to the actual possession, and not to operate by way of revocation; and therefore, upon the death of the first tenant for life under twenty-five, the accumulation belonged to his personal representative. Montgomerie v. Woodley, 5 Ves. 522.

A testator bequeathed to trustees the money secured by a mortgage of Tilt Wood in trust for his nephew R. T. B., and after devising the legal estate in the premises, subject to the trusts and equities thereof, to the trustees, proceeded to provide that, "If the said R. T. B. shall not live to the age of twenty-one years, I give the money secured on Tilt Wood and the legal estate therein, subject as aforesaid to the trustees of my will, to become part of my residuary estate." The will further contained a declaration of the testator's intention that the clauses applicable contained in 23 & 24 Vict. c. 145, should apply thereto, but did not otherwise contain any clause relating to the maintenance of infants, or directions as to what was to come of the unapplied income of the estates, shares, and interests under the will. R. T. B. survived the testator, and died under twenty-one. The trustees of the mortgage debt having received and invested (at compound interest) the interest thereupon down to R. T. B.'s death, paid a small sum of uninvested cash, part thereof, into court under the Trustee Relief Act:—Held, on a petition by the trustees of the residuary estate for payment out to them of this money, that the legal personal representative of R. T. B. was entitled to the accumulations of interest down to his death. Buchley's Estate, In re, 52 L. J., Ch. 439; 22 Ch. D. 583; 48 L. T. 109; 31 W. R. 376.

Between Death of Testator and Birth of Children.]—Legacy in trust for the children of A., to be equally divided between them with benefit of survivorship, and a provision for maintenance out of the interest: A. having no children at the death of the testator:—Held, that after-born children would take, and that the interest till the birth of a child fell into the residue. Harris v. Lloyd, Turn. & R. 310; 24 R. R. 68.

Devise of the residue of real and personal estate, after provision made for payment of annuities and legacies, to the child or children of testator's natural daughter, and in case she should die without issue to S. and J.:—Held, the intermediate profits till a child was born should go to the residuary devisees, and not to the heir-at-law. Gibson v. Rogers, Ambl. 96; 1 Ves. Sen. 485; 4 Ves. 288, n.

Devise of real and personal estate to the first son of A. when he should attain twenty-one, with a direction for his proper maintenance and education. A. having no son at the time of the will, the testator's death, or the decree:—Held, that the profits of the personal estate should accumulate; and that as to the real estate, it was a good executory devise, but that the profits thereof descended to the heir until a son should be born, when they should be applied to his maintenance. Bullock v. Stones, 2 Ves. Sen. 521.

Rents and profits undisposed of belong to the owner of the inheritance, or persons entitled to the enjoyment. Hopkins v. Hopkins, 1 Ves. Sen. 268; Cas. t. Talb. 44; 1 Atk. 581. And see S. C. as cited in 4 Bro. C. C. 390.

Where on an executory devise the words "all the rest and residue" include intermediate profits. Gibson v. Montfort (Lord), 1 Ves. Sen. 491. And see Haughton v. Harrison, ante, col. 906.

—— And Payment of General Legacy.]—General legatee of "the sum of l., long annuities:—Held, not entitled to dividends accruing before the expiration of a year from the testator's decease. Collyer v. Ashburner, 2 De G. & Sm. 404.

—— And Payment of Specific Legacy.]—Where a testator directs a specific sum to be sold, and a certain sum out of the sale moneys to be paid to A., and the residue to B., each of the legacies is specific, and the legatees are entitled to share the income of the fund from the testator's death between them, in proportion to the values of their respective legacies at that time. Jefferys' Trusts, In re, 35 L. J., Ch. 426; L. R. 2 Eq. 68.

—— And Conveyance of Land adeemed by Contract for Sale.]—When a testator had specifically devised certain lands, but such lands were contracted to be sold in his lifetime, so that the devise was adeemed:—Held, that the rents received between his death and the conveyance of the property passed to the devisee. Watts v. Watts, 43 L. J., Ch. 77; L. R. 17 Eq. 217; 29 L. T. 671.

—— And Completion of Contract to Purchase Lands Mortgaged to Testator.]—Where a testator, having contracted to purchase an estate and taken a transfer of a mortgage on it, specifically devised it:—Held, that the devisee was not entitled to the interest on the mortgage between the testator's death and the completion of the purchase. Puxley v. Puxley, 1 N. R. 509; 8 L. T. 570.

Gift to Class—Class still open.]—Bequest of residue of real and personal estate to the children of A., equally with a bequest over thereof to other persons, if A. should die without leaving issue; this is a vested interest, defeasible, and the children, as they are respectively born, shall take the accruing interest equally. Shepherd v. Ingram, Ambl. 448.

—— Where some Members have attained Age.]—T. gave the residue to trustees, inter alia, to lay out one-third part in securities, the interest to accumulate for the benefit of the children of his niece, and if she should survive her husband, and have issue under twenty-one years of age, the trustees were to apply the interest for their maintenance till twenty-one, and upon the children attaining their ages of twenty-one, equal shares of the principal to be transferred to them; the interest accrued between the elder and the younger children coming of age, decreed to be divided between them. Hawkins v. Combe, 1 Bro. C. C. 335.

A testator gave 200*l.* a year to S. for her life, and after her decease he gave 6,666*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* consols to be divided equally among such of her children as should attain twenty-one. S. survived the testator, and died, leaving six children, five of whom had attained twenty-one in her lifetime:—Held, that the testator's residuary legatee was excluded from claiming any portion of the dividends of the fund. Stone v. Harrison, 2 Coll. C. C. 715; 15 L. J., Ch. 421; 10 Jur. 609.

Bequest of a personal fund to such of the children of N. as should live to attain the age of twenty-one years. N. had three children, two of whom having attained twenty-one, applied for payment of their shares. Under the circumstances of the case the court declined to pay over to them any part of the capital, but allowed them to receive the interest of two-thirds, without prejudice to the claim of afterborn children of N. Brandon v. Aston, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 30.

Under a disposition by will to the children of A. and B., payable at twenty-one or marriage, with a limitation over, upon failure of issue in the lives of A. and B., it was held that all the children without restriction were entitled; and an apportionment being directed and the interest ordered to be paid to those who had attained twenty-one; children born afterwards, though entitled to a share of the capital, were not allowed to claim the bygone interest. Mills v. Norris, 5 Ves. 335; 5 R. R. 56.

W. J. by his will directed his trustees to hold his residuary estate in trust for his grandchildren, who being sons should attain twenty-one, or being daughters should attain that age or marry, as tenants in common, with provisions for settling the shares of grandchildren born in his lifetime:—Held, that the income belonged to such of the grandchildren as had attained twenty-one at the time when the income accrued, to the exclusion of those who were then still infants; that such infants would not be entitled to any back income on attaining twenty-one. Jeffery, In re, Burt v. Arnold, 60 L. J., Ch. 470; [1891] 1 Ch. 671; 64 L. T. 622; 39 W. R. 234.

A testator, after giving the income of his residuary estate to his widow during widowhood, after the determination of that interest gave legacies to each of his two sons who should be living at his death and attain twenty-one, and subject thereto, disposed of his residue:—Held, that a son who attained twenty-one after the death of the widow was not entitled to interest on his legacy from her death till he attained twenty-one. Inman, In re, Inman v. Rolls, 62 L. J., Ch. 940; [1893] 3 Ch. 518; 8 R. 293; 69 L. T. 374; 42 W. R. 156.

—— Where all existing Members have attained Age.]—In the case of a bequest to a class, where all the existing objects of it had attained vested interests, they were declared entitled to the annual income of the whole fund, though their shares might be diminished by other objects coming into being. Testator gave a sum of 15,000*l.*, due to him as a charge upon an estate, to his trustees, upon trust after making certain payments thereout to accumulate the interest thereof for twenty years, and at the expiration thereof the trustees to stand possessed of the interest of the said sum, upon trust to make certain payments; and he also directed that the trusts of the sum of 15,000*l.* should be dealt with as the trusts of a certain other term, and that, subject thereto, the said sum and the interest and accumulation should be in trust for a certain class of children; and there was a direction that the capital should sink into the estate upon which it was charged:—Held, that the accumulated interest only of the said sum after payment of the sums charged on it was given to the children specified. Scott v. Scarborough (Earl), 1 Beav. 154; 8 L. J., Ch. 65.

Residuary personal estate was bequeathed in trust for all the sons and daughters of A. and B. (who were living), the shares to be vested at twenty-one, though "not payable or transmissible" until the death of A. and B. The will contained powers of maintenance:—Held, that the sons and daughters, on attaining twenty-one, acquired vested interests, subject to the rights of future-born children, and that, after attaining twenty-one, they were entitled, in the life of A. and B., to payment of their shares of the income, though not of the capital. Ellis v. Maxwell, 12 Beav. 104; 10 L. J., Ch. 266.

A residuary gift to trustees, with a direction to apply such part of the interest as they might deem necessary in the maintenance of all and every the testator's grandchildren, the children of the testator's two sons, until they severally attained the age of twenty-one, and to accumulate the surplus; and when and as each of such grandchildren should attain the age of twenty-one years, to pay to each of them 2,000*l.*; and as soon as all and every the said grandchildren should have attained their ages of twenty-one, to pay and divide the trust fund unto and amongst all and every his said grandchildren:—Held, to be a gift for the benefit of all the children of the testator's two sons, born or to be born, not confined to children living at the death of the testator, and not distributable upon the youngest grandchild for the time being attaining twenty-one; but that, on attaining twenty-one, the grandchildren were entitled to the interest on their presumptive shares, until another grandchild should be born. Mainwaring v. Beevor, 8 Hare, 44; 19 L. J., Ch. 396; 14 Jur. 58.

—— Where Class Determined and some Members of Age.]—A testator bequeathed 20,000*l.* upon trust, after the decease of his daughter (a married woman), for all or such of her children as she should appoint; and in default, for all her children who should attain twenty-one, in equal shares as tenants in common. He gave powers of maintenance out of the income of the share to which any such child might be presumptively entitled; and powers of advancement to the extent of one-fourth of the portion to which any child should be presumptively entitled. The daughter, by her will, appointed the fund upon trust to raise for each of her two younger children, F. and M., who should attain twenty-one, 2,000*l.*, and subject thereto, as to the whole of the fund, to all her children who should attain twenty-one, in equal shares as tenants in common. She died leaving four children, the eldest of these having attained twenty-one:— Held, that the child who had attained twenty-one was entitled to one-fourth of the income which had accrued since the death of her mother on the whole of the 20,000*l.*, and that she would, after payment to her of her share of capital, be entitled during the minorities of F. and M. to one-fourth of the income of the two sums of 2,000*l.* appointed to them in the event of their attaining twenty-one respectively. Gotch v. Foster, L. R. 5 Eq. 311.

Future Specific Bequest.] — The income of chattels real specifically bequeathed, pending the vesting thereof, falls into the residue of the personalty. Hodgson v. Beetive (Earl), 2 N. R. 269; 1 H. & M. 376; 32 L. J., Ch. 489; 9 L. T. 18. See S. C., sub nom. Beetive (Earl) v. Hodgson, 10 H. L. Cas. 656; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 375; 10 L. T. 202; 12 W. R. 625.

A testator gives a sum of stock to trustees, which they are to stand possessed of upon trust for D. G. until he shall attain the age of twenty-five years, and are to transfer to him when they, in their discretion, shall think proper; he likewise directs that if D. G. dies without lawful issue before receiving the bequest the stock shall sink into the residue of his, the testator's estate; and he bequeaths the residue to W. F., while D. G. is under twenty-five years of age, and has not had the stock transferred to him, neither he nor W. F. is entitled to receive the accruing dividends; but these dividends must accumulate to accompany the capital in its final destination. Gordon v. Rutherford, Turn. & R. 373; 2 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 50; 26 R. R. 183.

Where a legacy depends on a contingency, the intermediate interest between the death of the tenant for life and the contingency happening does not follow the principal, but falls into residue. Shaw v. Cunliffe, 4 Bro. C. C. 144.

Bequest of 1,000*l.*, the "interest" for A. for life, with power to dispose of the "principal" to her children by will, and if no will, then "the said legacy" to go to her children "at twenty-one years of age." A. died in 1840, and her only child attained twenty-one in 1858:—Held, that he was entitled to the intermediate interest on the legacy. Thruston v. Austey, 27 Beav. 335.

A testator directed 6,000*l.* to be settled on the marriage of his daughter, and then went on to give it to trustees, with a separate life interest to his daughter; after her death for her children on their attaining twenty-one if the mother should be then dead; but if not, then not till after her decease; and if no child should live to attain a vested interest, then to fall into his residue. And he gave his residue to A. for life, remainder to B.:—Held, first, that the testator had made a positive settlement, and the court could not add to it in any way:—Held, secondly, that the income undisposed of after the wife's death fell into the residue:—Held, thirdly, that it was undisposed-of income merely, and passed as such to the tenant for life of the residue. Fullerton v. Martin, 1 Dr. & Sm. 31; 29 L. J., Ch. 469; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 265; 8 W. R. 289.

A testator bequeathed a sum of 5,000*l.*, bank annuities, in trust for such child or children of A., a bachelor, as should attain twenty-one, and directed that the same and the income thereof should be transferable and payable to him, her, or them, on their respectively attaining such age; and in case no child of A. should attain twenty-one, he directed the bank annuities and unapplied income thereof to fall into his residuary personal estate, which he bequeathed upon trusts for tenants for life, with remainders over:—Held, that the dividends accruing between the death of the testator and birth of a child of A. fell into the residue as income. Fullerton v. Martin, supra, followed. Edmunds v. Waugh, 2 N. R. 408—L.JJ.

Under a bequest in trust for a parent for life, and after her death for her children at twenty-one, with an executory trust over in the event of all the children dying under that age:—Held, that the intermediate income between the death of the tenant for life and that of her only child, who died a minor, belonged to the child. Ridgway v. Ridgway, 4 De G. & Sm. 271; 20 L. J., Ch. 256; 15 Jur. 960.

A testator devised one-fifth part of his freehold and copyhold estates to the use of his daughter J. for life; with remainder to the use of all and every the child and children of such daughter who should attain twenty-one; with remainder over if there should be no child who should attain that age. He then bequeathed his leasehold estates in trust for the persons entitled to the real estates, and to go in the same manner, or as near thereto as the rules of law and equity would permit; and he gave his residuary estate upon the same trusts as were declared with respect to his real estate, or as near thereto as might be. J. died in 1851, leaving one child only, H., who attained twenty-one in 1860:—Held, that the interim income of the fifth residuary personal estate followed the residue, and became vested in H. at twenty-one. Held, also, that assuming the remainder in the freeholds was contingent, H., on attaining twenty-one, became entitled to the corpus of the leaseholds, there being no rule of law to prevent the testator's intention taking effect as to them. Held, also, that the remainder in the freehold estates was contingent, and, therefore, that the interim income of the leaseholds fell into the residue. Holmes v. Prescott, 33 L. J., Ch. 264; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 507; 11 L. T. 38; 12 W. R. 636.

The interim income subject to the interim burden of a contingent specific legacy until the happening of the contingency falls into the residue of the testator's estate, or goes to his next of kin, as the case may be. Guthrie v. Walrond, 22 Ch. D. 573; 47 L. T. 614; 31 W. R. 285.

—— When Contingency imported by Appointment.]—C., having power to appoint a money fund to all and every or any child or children of hers, and to the exclusion of any one or more of them, in such shares and payable at such times as she should appoint, and in default of appointment to be equally divided between them, by her will appointed different sums to several of her children; and reciting that her daughter M. had declared her intention of becoming a nun, and had retired into a convent preparatory thereto, she declared that she deemed her patrimony in that case sufficient for her maintenance, but in case M. should change her mind, and return to her family and friends, she bequeathed to trustees 1,000*l.*, in trust for M. to receive the interest of the same during her life, and at her decease to be divided amongst her children if any; or in either case of her not leaving the convent or not leaving issue, the 1,000*l.* to be divided amongst her three daughters therein named, and she bequeathed to her said three daughters any residue of the fund that might be after paying the several legacies in her will mentioned:—Held, that the power authorised an appointment to take effect upon the happening of a contingency; and that the interest which should accrue on the 1,000*l.*, while the contingency was undetermined, passed under the residuary bequest in the will. Caulfield v. Maguire, 2 Jo. & Lat. 141; 3 Ir. Eq. R. 164.

Future Specific Devise.] — Devise upon a future contingency, and no intermediate disposition of the rents and profits, a resulting trust for the heir. Att.-Gen. v. Bowyer, 3 Ves. 725; 4 R. R. 132.

Devise when the devisee attains twenty-one, a resulting trust for the heir until that period, and by the previous death of the devisee, the remainder accelerated. Chambers v. Brailsford, 18 Ves. 368; 11 R. R. 214.

A. devised lands in trust for B. for life, remainder in trust for his sons successively, remainder in trust for the future sons of C., remainder over, and the testator provided for the disposition of the rents and profits during the minorities of those who were to take in future. B. died in testator's lifetime, and it was decreed, the contingent limitations should enure as executory devises, and that the profits from the death of the testator till the birth of a son of B. should go to the heir; and afterwards, a son being born to B., upon the death of that son it was decreed, that the rents and profits should belong to the heir, until some person should become entitled under the limitations of the will. Hopkins v. Hopkins, 1 Atk. 581; 1 Ves. Sen. 268; Cas. t. Talb. 44. A corrected copy of this case was stated by Lord Loughborough, in Habergham v. Vincent, 4 Bro. C. C. 390.

The resulting trust of a freehold, to support remainders of a trust, may connect with the limitation in tail, though not created together with it. There may be a resulting trust under a trust to appoint contingent remainders for the heir-at-law, in the same manner as under an executory devise. S. C., 1 Atk. 597.

Lands were devised in trust to maintain an infant till twenty-three, and then to convey them to him, and if he die before, to convey them to another. The infant is not entitled till twenty-three, and as the estate is not devised over if he dies under, the surplus of profits will go to testator's heir. Tilly v. Simpson, Moseley, 244.

Term to raise portions, and the trustees to hold the estate till the son attain twenty-one, and then to convey to the son, there being no directions as to the intermediate profits:—Held, that they should go to the heir-at-law as undisposed of; that case was distinguished from the present by reason that the trustees were to convey at twenty-one and nothing given before to the son. Bland v. Bland, cited Ambl. 96.

A testator devised estates to trustees and their heirs upon trust to accumulate the rents until the expiration of the term of twenty-one years, and after the expiration thereof to stand possessed of the estates in trust for the second and every other younger son successively of his nephew W. in tail male, and failing such issue, in trust for the first and every other son of his nephew H. in tail male, with divers limitations over: and he gave a fund of personal estate to be held on similar trusts. At the expiration of the term W. and H. were both living, and each had an only son:—Held, that until it should be ascertained whether there would be a second son of W., the rents of the real estates and the income of the personal estate were undisposed of, and belonged respectively to the heir-at-law and next of kin. Wade-Gery v. Handley, 45 L. J., Ch. 712; 3 Ch. D. 374; 35 L. T. 85—C. A.

Devise of a house and appurtenances to wife during widowhood, but that the eldest son, when twenty-one or married, might have it on notice; the wife having married after the death of the former eldest son unmarried, and during the minority, &c., of the existing eldest son, it was declared that he would be entitled to the enjoyment on attaining twenty-one or marriage, upon giving notice; the intervening interest in the premises and appurtenances, being undisposed of, held to fall into the residue of the real and personal estate. Bridgewater (Duke) v. Egerton, 2 Ves. Sen. 122.

Devise of freehold and leasehold estates to trustees in trust by rents and profits, or by sale or mortgage, to pay debts and legacies which his personal estate should not be sufficient for, and, subject thereto, in case J. B. should attain twenty-one, in trust for him, his heirs and executors:—Held, that the rents and profits till J. B. attained twenty-one were not undisposed of, but passed by the devise to the trustees, and were, after payment of legacies, annuities, and interest of the debts, to be applied to sink the principal of the debts. Popham v. Aylesbury, Ambl. 68. Report of this case corrected in 11 Ves. 662.

Specific Devise of Lands charged with Legacies — Rents received after Death of Testator and before Sale.]—A testator who died in January, 1887, by his will dated in August, 1879, gave his real estate at North and South Collingham and his residuary real estate to his nephew, "he also paying thereout the following legacies: that is to say, the legacy or sum of 1,000*l.* to my trustees to be held by them upon the trusts hereinafter declared concerning the same; the like legacy or sum of 1,000*l.* to the four daughters of my late niece Mary Holroyd in equal shares; and the legacy or sum of 200*l.* to my niece Sarah Woodruff, to whom I give and bequeath the same respectively." The testator directed that such legacies should be paid at the end of six months after the death of his sister, and he directed his trustees to stand possessed of the sum of 1,000*l.* thereinbefore directed to be paid to them and "charged on my Collingham estate," upon certain trusts. The question was, whether the testator's nephew was liable to account for the occupation rent of so much of the testator's real estate at North and South Collingham as was in his possession or occupation at the date of the testator's decease for the period between that date and the completion of the sale of that estate by the direction of the court, and with any profits made by him in respect of the crops and other produce of the estate during such period:—Held, that the testator's nephew was not a trustee of the legacies for the legatees, but that the same were merely charged on the North and South Collingham estate; and that that being so, he was not liable to account for the back rents and profits thereof. Oliver, In re, Newbald v. Beckitt, 62 L. T. 533.

Where Fund set apart for Contingent Legacy.]—Where an annuity for a term of years forms part of a residue, the executors, until they can sell it, must invest the payments, and interests of the investments will belong to tenant for life of the residue. Where sums are set apart to answer contingent legacies, the interest of them until the contingency happens is part of the income of the residue. Where the interest of a legacy is directed to be accumulated beyond the legal period, the interest of the legacy and the accumulations after that period, and until the time of payment, is part of the capital of the residue. Crawley v. Crawley, 7 Sim. 427; 4 L. J., Ch. 265.

Portions of a fund constituting the residuary personal estate of a testator were set apart by his executors to meet contingent legacies payable on infants attaining twenty-one:—Held, that the tenant for life of the general residue was entitled to the income derivable from those portions of the residuary estate set apart until such capital, or portions of it, were wanted for the payment of those contingent legacies in case they should become payable:—Held, also, that the tenant for life was not entitled to the income which might have been derived from what was clearly necessary for the payment of debts and legacies out of the capital of the residue. Allhusen v. Whittell, 36 L. J., Ch. 929; L. R. 4 Eq. 295; 16 L. T. 695.

Testator ordered his trustees, out of certain funds, to pay to his wife what should be to be returned to her of her portion, and to invest the residue in funds to pay her the interest for life, then to pay the interest to his niece for life, then to pay the principal to her children if any; if not, to the younger children of H. if any; if not, to the defendant W.; and gave the residue of his effects to his wife. The niece and nephew had neither of them children; the intermediate interest from the death of the niece to that of the nephew, shall not follow the principal, but fall into the residue, and go to the wife's executors as personal estate of the testator undisposed of. Wyndham v. Wyndham, 3 Bro. C. C. 58.

Gift by will of various annuities, with a direction by the testator that a sufficient part of his personal estate should be invested in 3 per cent. consols to meet the annuities, and that on the deaths of the annuitants the amount respectively set apart to answer these annuities were to sink into residue. The testator bequeathed the residue of his estate as to two equal fourth parts thereof to his wife absolutely, and as to the other two equal fourth parts thereof upon certain trusts for the persons in his will named. The testator made a codicil to his will whereby he directed that the annuities should not commence till after the death of his wife. On bill filed by the annuitants asking for a sufficient sum to be set apart to meet these annuities, the question was raised who would be entitled to the income thereof during the life of the widow:—Held, that such income formed part of the residuary estate of the testator. Cranley v. Dixon, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 531.

A testator appointed executors and trustees, and bequeathed to his trustees the sum of 750*l.* upon trust to pay and divide the same amongst certain persons contingently upon their surviving him and attaining twenty-one; and in default of any such person attaining a vested interest he directed that the 750*l.* and the investments representing the same should fall into his residuary personal estate; and he gave his residue not thereinbefore otherwise disposed of to his trustees upon trust to convert the same, and out of the moneys thereby arising pay his debts and legacies, and invest the residue of the same moneys, and pay the income to his wife for life. The persons contingently interested in the 750*l.* were infants:—Held, that as the 750*l.* was by the terms of the will directed to be set apart for the benefit of the contingent legatees, there was a gift to them of the intermediate income, which was therefore applicable for their maintenance. Medlock, In re, Ruffle v. Medlock, 55 L. J., Ch. 738; 54 L. T. 828.

The circumstances that trustees are directed to invest a fund and pay the same to legatees upon a contingency, with an accruer clause, and that there is no direction that the fund shall fall into residue upon failure of the trusts, indicate sufficiently that the severance is for the benefit of the contingent legatees, who are therefore entitled to interest or income (as the case may be) until payment. Medlock, In re, Ruffle v. Medlock (supra) followed. Snaith, In re, Snaith v. Snaith, 8 R. 561; 71 L. T. 318; 42 W. R. 568.

Where a contingent deferred legacy has been severed from the general estate of the testator, such severance will not entitle the legatee to interim interest thereon unless the severance has been necessitated by something connected with the legacy itself. A testator by will, after giving his real and personal estate to trustees upon trust for sale and conversion and payment of debts and legacies, directed the trustees to stand possessed of the residue of the trust moneys upon trust, in the first place, to pay thereout 1,500*l.* to be equally divided between such of six legatees whom he named as should be alive at the death of A. B.; such shares to be paid to them respectively on attaining twenty-one or marriage. And as to the rest of his residuary estate upon trust for X. Y. A. B. and the six legatees all survived the testator and were still living. The trustees having set apart and invested 1,500*l.* to meet the legacy, X. Y., the six legatees, and the next of kin of the testator, all claimed to be entitled to the income thereof during the life of A. B.:—Held, that such income passed under the gift of the rest of the testator's residuary estate, and that X. Y. was entitled thereto during the life of A. B. Judkin's Trusts, In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 496; 25 Ch. D. 743; 50 L. T. 200; 32 W. R. 407.

—— For Vested Legacy.]—When a legacy is severed from the residue for the benefit of a tenant for life and a remainderman, the residuary legatees cannot claim the income accruing after the death of the tenant for life, though the remainderman has not yet attained a vested interest in the legacy. Kidman v. Kidman, 40 L. J., Ch. 359.

A testatrix directed the trustees of funds over which she had a power of appointment, from and immediately after her death, to stand possessed thereof, to raise thereout 5,000*l*., and to pay the same to the five children of her deceased sister in equal shares, the shares of sons to be paid at twenty-one, the shares of daughters at twenty-one or marriage, and to apply the income arising from the residue of the funds as in the will mentioned:—Held, that this was a vested legacy, that it was severed from the remainder of the trust funds, and that the legatees were entitled to the interest of the fund set apart to answer it. Dundas v. Murray, 1 N. R. 429; 32 L. J., Ch. 151; 11 W. R. 359.

Under an executory devise of a life interest in real and personal estate, to take effect upon the death of an annuitant, the surplus rents and dividends which accrue due during the life of the annuitant belong to the parties entitled for life. But a specific devise, liable to be resorted to for payment of the annuity, will not contribute pro ratâ to the annuity so as to increase the amounts of the surplus rents and dividends. Thornton v. Thornton, 3 N. R. 23.

The interim interest from a fund set apart to meet future vested legacies, which do not carry interest in the meantime, is capital and not income of residue, and must, therefore, be invested, and the income only of such investment paid to the tenant for life of the residuary estate. The rule adopted in Allhusen v. Whittell (supra), in reference to contingent legacies, has no application to vested legacies. Whitehead, In re, Peacock v. Lucas, 63 L. J., Ch. 229; [1894] 1 Ch. 678; 8 R. 142; 70 L. T. 122; 42 W. R. 491.

—— For Annuity—Deficiency followed by Surplus—Right to Arrears.]—A testator gave his whole estate to trustees to sell, and after payment of debts, expenses, and certain legacies, to pay out of the residue two annuities of 400*l*. each to F. and P., and one of 200*l*. to B., for their respective lives. And for the better fulfilment of that purpose, he directed them to vest sufficient capital sums on securities; and if the residue should not be sufficient, to vest whatever residue there might be, and pay the dividends to the annuitants in the same proportions; and if more than sufficient, to vest the surplus, and divide it and the capital sum set apart for the annuities, as the same should become tangible by the death of each annuitant, among other residuary legatees. B. predeceased the testator. The residue did not yield sufficient income every year to pay F. and P. 400*l*. each. On the death of F., her personal representatives and P. claimed payment of all the arrears out of the then enlarged income of the residue:—Held, by the Lords, that F. and P. were entitled to payment of 400*l*. each only in those years in which the income of the residue was sufficient; that when in any year that income was more than sufficient the excess belonged to the residuary legatees; that on F.'s death half the capital of the residue became divisible among them, and then P. became entitled to the income in each year of the other half; but when in any year this income exceeded 400*l*. the excess belonged to the residuary legatees, and neither P. nor F.'s representatives were entitled to any payment of arrears. No benefit accrued to the residuary legatees from the lapse of the annuity to B., except when thereby the income of the residue exceeded the amount of the other two annuities. Casamajor v. Pearson, 8 Cl. & F. 69.

Future Residuary Bequest.]—Under a bequest of the residue of a personal estate to A., if he attain twenty-one, the profits will accumulate. Trevanion v. Vivian, 2 Ves. Sen. 430.

Where there is a devise of a residue, with devise over on a contingency, the devisee is entitled to the rents and profits till the contingency happens. Shepherd v. Ingram, Ambl. 450. And see Lowther v. Cavendish, id. 358.

A residuary estate was bequeathed, in the first instance, to be paid into the hands of the legatee on attaining the age of twenty-five years, and not till then, unless she married; the whole property then to be settled on her and her children; the legatee, on attaining the age of twenty-one unmarried, was held entitled to the income and the accumulations thereof. Grant v. Grant, 3 Y. & Coll. 171; 7 L. J., Ex. Eq. 20.

Devise to A., an infant, for life, and his first and other sons in strict settlement, with remainders for similar estates; the will farther directed, "during the minority of the A. family," an accumulation of the rents to be laid out on a purchase, "until the minor arrives at the full age of twenty-five years," and then "the heir to take full possession of this estate." A., being residuary legatee, is entitled absolutely to the accumulation. Bingley v. Broadhead, 8 Ves. 415.

Testator, after bequeathing an annuity and goods to his wife for her life, directs the whole of his fortune, in default of his own issue, and of a second son of his brother, and second son of his sister, to be divided between the plaintiff and the defendant, making the latter the residuary legatee:—Held, that under the words "whole fortune," the interest of the moiety, till the determination of the contingency, did not belong to the plaintiff; and that the residuary legatee was entitled to that and the reversionary interest in the goods left to the wife. Mitford v. Wicker, 2 Ken. Ch. 61. And see Green v. Elkins, infra, and Heath v. Perry, 3 Atk. 102.

Distinction between Profits of Real and Personal Estate.]—A testator gave his real and personal estate to trustees upon trust to pay the income to four persons for life as tenants in common, and after the death of the survivor to sell the real estate and stand possessed of the proceeds and of the stocks, funds, and securities upon which his personal estate should then be invested upon certain trusts for a class of children. By the death of one of the four his portion of the income became released, and was accumulated until the death of the survivor of the four:—Held, that the accumulation of the real estate was undisposed of and passed to the heir, but that the accumulation of the personalty passed as residue to the children. Drakeley's Estate, In re, 19 Beav. 395; 2 W. R. 613.

There is a material difference between the profits of a real and personal estate; rents never can become part of the personal estate, but the profits of the personal estate are the estate itself. In the case of real estates, the thing itself is not disposed of, but descends till the contingency happens; personal estate neither descends nor goes to the next of kin, but is vested in the executor. Testator bequeathed residuary personal estate to his daughter B. (an infant), to be paid to her at twenty-one or marriage; and if she should die before twenty-one or marriage, he bequeathed the same to such son of E. as should first attain twenty-one: and if no son attain twenty-one, then to P. F. died under twenty-one, and unmarried:—Held, that the interest of the residue, from the death of F. to the time it will vest in the son of E., who is an infant, must accumulate, and is part of the residue, till the bequest to the son vests. Green v. Ekins, 2 Atk. 473.

A residuary devise of realty does not carry with it income not expressly disposed of, but it results to the heir-at-law as undisposed of. Secus, as to personalty, a residuary bequest of which, or of a share of which, carries with it ex vi termini all the income of such residue or share of residue, though not expressly disposed of, for the benefit of the legatees. Therefore, where a testator gave the residue of his real estate to uses commencing with an executory devise to an unborn person, and gave two-thirds of the residue of his personalty to trustees upon trust to invest in real estate, to be settled to uses, which were the same as those declared of his residuary realty:—Held, that the ordinary rule applied to the intermediate income of each class of property. As to the realty, that there was an intestacy as to such income, and it resulted to the heir-at-law. As to the personalty, that there was no intestacy, and that the income should be accumulated, and be added to the corpus to be laid out in land. Hodgson v. Bective (Earl), 2 N. R. 233; 1 Hem. & M. 376; 32 L. J., Ch. 489; 9 L. T. 18. But see S. C. varied on appeal as to the residuary personal estate, sub nom. Bective (Earl) v. Hodgson, 10 H. L. Cas. 656; 3 N. R. 654; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 373; 10 L. T. 202; 12 W. R. 625.

Future Residuary Devise.] — The testator devised all his real estate to a trustee, upon trust to pay the rents to A. for life, and after his death, and after the happening of a certain contingency, to settle the estate upon B. A. died before the contingency happened:—Held, that the intermediate rents belong to the heir-at-law of the testator. Wills v. Wills, 1 Dr. & War. 439; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 531.

Testator devised the residue of his real estate to a trustee in fee, upon trust to accumulate the rents until one of his grandsons should attain twenty-one, and in case his grandson T. should attain that age, upon trust to pay to him the future rents for life, with remainder to his eldest son who should attain twenty-one, remainder in default to another grandson. And the testator bequeathed the residue of his personal estate to the same trustee, upon trust to accumulate until one of his grandsons should attain twenty-one, and then to pay the dividends arising from the aggregate accumulations of his (the testator's) residuary real and personal estate to T. from and after his age of twenty-one for life, and after his decease to pay the principal of such accumulations to his eldest or only son. One of the testator's grandsons attained twenty-one three years before T. arrived at that age:—Held, that the rents of the real estate during the intervening period were undisposed of, and passed to the heir-at-law. Marriott v. Turner, 20 Beav. 557.

A testator, by his will dated in 1851, after making divers specific devises and bequests, and giving a life interest to his wife in his residuary real estate, devised such residuary real estate, after the death of his wife, to his trustees in trust for his grandson during his life, and from and after his decease in trust for "all and every his child and children who shall attain the age or respective ages of twenty-one years, and his, her, or their heirs and assigns for ever"; but in case there should be no child of his grandson who should attain the age of twenty-one years, then, as to the same residuary real estate, upon trusts over as in the will mentioned. The will contained a gift of the residuary personal estate, but it was distinct from the above devise, and upon different trusts from those declared concerning the real estate, although some of the trusts were the same. The will also contained powers for the trustees to grant leases, and apply the rents and profits of the real estate in making repairs. The testator died in 1853, and his widow died in 1866. The grandson died in October, 1867, leaving an only child, who was born on the 11th February, 1864. The question arose whether the accumulated rents accruing between the date of the death of the testator's grandson and the time when the grandson's only child attained the age of twenty-one years, were undisposed of by the will or passed to such child:—Held, that the accumulated rents belonged to the testator's heir-at-law. Held, further, that the doctrine of attraction, as established by Genery v. Fitzgerald (infra) and Dumble, In re, Williams v. Murrell (infra, col. 1771), did not apply. Williams, In re, Spencer v. Brighouse, 54 L. T. 831.

Real estate was given to F. W. R. in tail; and failing issue, or in the event of F. W. R.'s death before returning from India, it was to sink into the residue of testator's estate, which was given to F. R. The trustees invested rents in real estate at and after the death of testator, and on the death of F. W. R. without issue in India, his personal representative claimed the investments; but held they belonged to the residuary devise and legatee. Robertson v. Dewsbury, 5 Jur. 260.

A testator devised a freehold to trustees for the benefit of E. for life for her separate use, and after her death upon trusts for such of the children of E. as being sons should attain twenty-one, or being daughters should attain that age or marry. E. died after the testator, leaving an infant daughter who did not marry before attaining twenty-one:—Held, that the legal estate was in the trustees, and the daughter of E. took the property on attaining twenty-one, but the interim rents went to the residuary devisee. Eddels, In re, 40 L. J., Ch. 316; L. R. 11 Eq. 559; 24 L. T. 223; 19 W. R. 815.

Future Gift of a Mixed Residue.]—Under an executory devise of a residue of real and personal estate, the intermediate rents and profits of the real estates pass as well as the interest of the personalty. Genery v. Fitzgerald, Jac. 468; 23 R. R. 121.

Devise of the residue of real and personal estate, after provision made for payment of annuities and legacies, to the child or children of testator's natural daughter, and in case she should die without issue to S. and J.:—Held, the intermediate profits till a child was born should go to the residuary devisees, and not to the heir-at-law. Gibson v. Rogers, Ambl. 96; 1 Ves. Sen. 485; 4 Ves. 288, n.

A. by his will devised all his lands, &c., and all other his real and personal estate, upon trust as to the real estate, to repair and let the same, &c. and upon further trust, notwithstanding any limitation of uses or trusts thereinbefore mentioned, at discretion to sell and convey the same, except the messuage given to his wife, and as to the money to arise upon such sales, upon trust to add the same to his personal estate, to constitute a part thereof. The testator then gave the residue of his personal estate, upon trust, after payment of debts, &c., and expenses of management and repairs, to be accumulated, by way of compound interest, until J. C. should arrive at the age of twenty-four years, and then upon trust to convey, assign, &c., to J. C. (upon his giving security, &c., for the regular payment of the annuities thereinbefore bequeathed) all the legal estate and interest in all his freehold, copyhold, and leasehold messuages, lands, &c., and all other his real and personal estate and effects not thereinbefore devised and bequeathed, &c. The testator also directed that his trustees should, for the purpose of J. C.'s education, appropriate out of the income of the testator's personal estate a sum not exceeding 800*l.* per annum until he should attain twenty-one years of age, and afterwards 1,500*l.* per annum until he should attain the age of twenty-four; with limitation over in case J. C. should die without issue before he attained the age of twenty-four:—Held, that the benefit intended to be given to J. C. was the produce of a mixed fund of the real and personal estate of the testator, and that the rents of the real estate until J. C. attained twenty-four did not result to the heir-at-law of the testator as undisposed of, but passed to J. C. as part of the fund given in trust. Ackers v. Phipps, 9 Bligh (N.S.) 430; 3 Cl. & F. 665. Reversing on this point 5 Sim. 44; 1 L. J., Ch. 96.

T. settled his freehold estates (subject to appointment) on himself in tail, remainder to L. and his sons in strict settlement, remainder to C. for life, provided that if L. or any issue male of his body should become entitled in possession to his father's family estates, then the uses before declared of T.'s estates for the benefit of him or them who should so become entitled, and for the benefit of his or their issue male, should cease, and those estates should go over, as if the person or persons so becoming entitled were dead without issue male. L. having afterwards become entitled in possession to his father's family estates, T. by his will appointed his said estates to H. (the eldest son of L.) and his sons in strict settlement, remainder to the heirs of A., deceased, provided that if any tenant for life in possession under the will should become entitled in possession to L.'s family estates, his interest in the devised estates should cease, and those estates go over to the person next in remainder under the will, as if the tenant for life were dead. The testator devised his copyhold estate upon such trusts as would nearest correspond with the uses and trusts of his freehold estates, and then gave all the residue of his real and personal estates to M. and W., their and each of their heirs, executors, &c., absolutely in equal third parts. On the testator's death, in 1824, H. entered upon his estates under the will, and in 1833 he became entitled in possession to L.'s family estates, and had no son. A bill was filed by the residuary legatees claiming the rents of all the estates accruing between 1833 and L.'s death or his having a son against A.'s heir, who claimed the same rents, and against C. and B. (second son of L.), who claimed adversely to each other the rents of the freehold estates under the limitations in the settlement, in default of appointment of them by T.:—Held, by the Lords, first (partly affirming a decree made on that bill), that the plaintiffs were entitled to the rents of the copyhold estate under the residuary devisee; secondly (partly reversing the decree), that no adjudication could be made in the cause as to the rents of the freeholds, the question as to them being between co-defendants. Sanford v. Morrice, 11 Cl. & F. 667. And see S. C. nom. Morrice v. Langham, 11 Sim. 260; 10 L. J., Ch. 38; 6 Jur. 334. S. C. nom. Morrice v. Sandford 8 Jur. 967. And see S. C. at law, 8 M. & W. 196; 10 L. J., Ex. 289.

Gift by the testator to his wife for her life, or until her second marriage, of the interest of his real and personal estate, which, whether arising from rents or public securities, was to be applied for the benefit of herself and children; and if she married again, he declared that her power and benefit under his will should cease; and when thirty years were expired, he ordered all his property, both freehold and leasehold, to be sold, and two-thirds to be divided among his children living at that period or their heirs, and one-third to be invested for the benefit of his wife; and after her decease, he bequeathed such third to his children then living and to their heirs:—Held, that the gift at the end of thirty years was not liable to objection on the ground of remoteness; that there was no substitution of the legatee created by the gift to the children "or to their heirs," but that the word "or" must be read "and"; and that the children of the testator living at the end of thirty years (who were also the same children as were living at the death of the widow) were entitled to the proceeds of the sale of the estate, and also to the intermediate rents after the death of the widow and before the expiration of the thirty years. Lachlan v. Reynolds, 9 Hare, 796.

A testator devised his residuary real estate to trustees, on trust to pay the rents to his wife for her life, and upon her death to apply the rents for the maintenance of his daughter, and to accumulate the surplus, and on the daughter attaining twenty-one, to pay to her the accumulations and the future income for her life, and upon her death on trust to convey the residuary real estate unto and equally between all and every her child and children who should live to attain twenty-one, as tenants in common in fee, but in case his daughter should die without leaving any child or children who should attain twenty-one, then on trust to convey the residuary real estate to such person or persons as the daughter should by deed or will appoint. And by another clause the testator bequeathed his residuary personal estate to the same persons as trustees, on the same trusts as those declared of the real estate, except the clause as to maintenance and accumulation. The will contained no disposition of the income of the realty or the personalty during the suspense of vesting. The daughter survived the testator and his wife, and died leaving an only daughter, who was an infant. The testator's daughter had, by her will, exercised the power of appointment in favour of other persons in the event of her leaving no child who should live to attain a vested interest under the trusts of her father's will:—Held, that the testator had in effect mixed up the whole of his property in one mass, and that the rule in Genery v. Fitzgerald (supra) applied; and that, consequently, the interim rents of the real estate, until the happening of the contingency, as well as the interim income of the personalty, must be accumulated, and follow the destination of the corpus. Dumble, In re, Williams v. Murrell, 52 L. J., Ch. 631; 23 Ch. D. 360; 48 L. T. 661; 31 W. R 605. And see Bective (Earl) v. Hodgson, supra, col. 1767.

A. CONTRACTS FOR.

By Tender and Acceptance—When a Binding Contract.] — A tender and acceptance may amount to a contract, although the acceptance refers to a formal contract to be drawn up afterwards. Lewis v. Brass, 3 Q. B. D. 667; 37 L. T. 738; 26 W. R. 152—C. A.

A defendant sent in a tender to do work for the plaintiff. The plaintiff's agent replied, accepting the tender, and adding, "The contract will be prepared by," &c. :—Held, that the tender and acceptance formed a complete contract. Ib.

A., a railway contractor, met B. and several others, in order to receive tenders with reference to certain work. A. read a specification with reference to the work; after which B. and the others handed in their tenders. B.'s tender was signed with his name; but there was no evidence that it was in his handwriting:—Held, notwithstanding, that such tender, taken with the specification, sufficiently proved the contract. Allen v. Yoxall, 1 Car. & K. 315.

A contractor sent in a tender to a railway company for the execution of part of the works either with a double or single line of rails. He was informed, in writing, by the engineer of the company, that his tender was accepted; and that intimation was confirmed by the directors, upon his attendance at one of their board meetings, but no document accepting the tender was executed by the company, in such a manner as to be binding at law; nor was any conclusion ever come to whether there should be a single or a double line. The railway was afterwards abandoned, and the contractor then filed a bill, seeking to have a binding contract executed by the company, or to recover from them the loss which he had sustained in preparing for the works:—Held, upon demurrer, that he had no claim to relief in equity upon the general merits of the case; and that an allegation, unsupported by any additional facts, that the company held money in their hands for the purpose of paying the plaintiff, and were trustees of it for his benefit, under an instrument in writing, was not sufficient to sustain the bill. Jackson v. North Wales Ry., 1 H. & Tw. 75; 6 Railw. Cas. 112; 18 L. J., Ch. 91; 13 Jur. 69.

—— When not under Seal.]—The agent of a railway company made a verbal agreement with the contractor for the line, that if he would build on the land of the company some cottages more substantially than would be required for his own purposes, and would leave them for the use of the company, then the company would pay him 5,000*l.* The cottages were accordingly built, and when the railway was completed the contractor left them on the land, and the agent of the company made an agreement with the contractor that he should be paid 500*l.* a year for the cottages by way of rent, with an option to the company to purchase them for 5,000*l.* This agreement was confirmed by a resolution of the board of directors. The company paid the 500*l.* a year for some years, and then refused to pay:—Held, that the claim of the contractor being simply for payment of money could not be enforced in the court of chancery; and that though the contractor was unable to sue at law because the agreement was not under seal, he did not thereby obtain an equity to enforce a claim for money. Crampton v. Varna Ry., 41 L. J., Ch. 817; L. R. 7 Ch. 562; 20 W. R. 713. See also COMPANY.

Held, also, that inasmuch as the contractor did not act in ignorance of the rights of the company, he could not claim compensation for having been induced to build on the land of the company. Ib.

—— When a mere Proposal.] — Guardians issued an advertisement stating that they would receive tenders for the supply of the workhouse with meat for three months, from thirty to fifty stone (setting out the description of meat), that sealed tenders were to be forwarded, and that all contractors would have to sign a written contract after acceptance of the tender. A butcher wrote to the guardians as follows: "I propose to supply your house with meat according to advertisement for the next six months at 6*d.* per pound." His proposal was accepted, and he was informed that he was appointed butcher, upon which he immediately declined the appointment:—Held, that the transaction amounted merely to a proposal for a contract, and that there was no binding agreement till a written agreement had been signed. Kingston-upon-Hull Governors v. Petch, 10 Ex. 611; 3 C. L. R. 196; 24 L. J., Ex. 23.

—— Implied Undertaking to accept Lowest.]—The defendants issued a circular in which they stated that they had been instructed to offer to the wholesale trade for sale by tender the stock-in-trade of E. & Co., amounting as per stock book to 2,503*l.* 13*s.* 1*d.*, and which would be sold at a discount in one lot. They also stated in the circular the day and the hour when the tenders would be received and opened at their offices. The plaintiffs made a tender which they alleged was the lowest. In an action against the defendants for not accepting such tender:—Held, that the circular was only an invitation for offers, and that there was no implied undertaking by the defendants to accept any tender at all. Spencer v. Harding, 39 L. J., C. P. 332; L. R. 5 C. P. 561; 23 L. T. 237; 19 W. R. 48.

Evidence of usage in a trade where the plaintiff sent in to N. (the agent of defendants) a tender for the execution of certain buildings:—Held, that the judge was right, on the evidence before him, in concluding that according to the custom in the trade, the plaintiff's being the lowest tender, had been accepted, although N. had no absolute authority to accept the lowest. Pauling v. Pontifex, 1 W. R. 64.

Work and Labour or Sale of Goods.]—A. ordered of B. a set of artificial teeth, which were by the terms of the contract to be fitted to her mouth; before they were so fitted A. died:—Held, a contract for the sale of goods within s. 17 of the Statute of Frauds; and that B. could not sue A.'s executor for work and labour done and materials provided for the testatrix. Lee v. Griffin, 1 B. & S. 272; 30 L. J., Q. B. 252; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1302; 4 L. T. 546; 9 W. R. 702.

A printer having agreed to print a work for the defendant printed it but the defendant refused to accept it:—Held, to be a contract for work and labour and not for the sale of goods within s. 17 of the Statute of Frauds. Clay v. Yates, 1 H. & N. 73; 25 L. J., Ex. 237; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 908; 4 W. R. 557. See also SALE OF GOODS.

Agreement not to Tender—Validity.]—Tenders for the supply of stone were invited by a corporation. Four neighbouring quarry owners entered into an agreement to supply the stone in certain proportions inter se, and that the plaintiffs should make the lowest tender to the corporation. The plaintiffs entered into contracts with the other quarry owners to purchase the proportion of stone agreed upon from each. Notwithstanding the agreement, one of the quarry owners sent in a tender, which was accepted by the corporation. The plaintiffs then filed a bill for an injunction to restrain the defendants from supplying the stone during 1875. They demurred:—Held, overruling the demurrer, that the corporation were not necessary parties, and that the agreement was not void, either as against public policy or for want of equity. Jones v. North, 44 L. J., Ch. 388: L. R. 19 Eq. 426; 32 L. T. 149; 23 W. R. 468.

An agreement having been made between A. and B. not to tender in competition with each other for certain gas tar, A., in answer to an advertisement sent in a mere nominal tender, in consequence of which B. obtained the contract. On the expiration of the contract, fresh advertisements were issued, and a tender by B. was rejected, whereupon A., without communicating with B., sent in a tender on his own account:—Held, that the agreement between them was still pending, and A. was liable to B.

for the breach of it. Metcalf v. Bouck, 25 L. T. 539.

Mistake of Contractor.]—A builder made a tender undertaking to sign a contract to execute for a sum works described in the rough sketches and verbal explanations of an architect. The architect subsequently sent by special messenger to the builder a contract to perform for the sum named the works delineated and described in the plans and specifications thereto annexed. These differed materially from the works described in the rough sketches and verbal explanations on which the builder had made his tender. The builder, however, signed the contract without any examination, and completed the works according to the plans annexed to it. He afterwards filed a bill in equity claiming to have an account taken of the works executed by him on the basis on which he had made his tender:—Held, that as the mistake under which he had signed the contract was due to his own negligence, and he had not taken proceedings for rectifying the contract as soon as he had discovered it, he was not entitled to any relief in this respect. Kimberley v. Dick, 41 L. J., Ch. 38; L. R. 13 Eq. 1; 25 L. T. 476; 20 W. R. 49.

Assignment of Moneys due—Contractor Bankrupt—Completion by Trustee—Power to take Work out of Contractor's Hands.]—A building contract provided that payments should be made, as the work proceeded, of such sums on account of the price of the work as should be stated in the certificates of an architect, such certificates to be given at the architect's discretion at the rate of 80 per cent. upon the contract value of the work done at the dates of such certificates, and that the remaining 20 per cent. should be retained till the completion of the work. The contract empowered the building owners, in the event of the contractors committing an act of bankruptcy, to discharge them from the further execution of the work, and employ some other person to complete it, and to deduct the amount paid to such other person for completing the same from the contract price. The contractors assigned a portion of the retention moneys, i.e. the price of work done under the contract retained under the above-mentioned provision, by way of mortgage to secure a debt, and notice of the assignment was given to the building owners. After making such assignment the contractors filed a petition for liquidation, the works then remaining incomplete. A trustee in liquidation and a committee of inspection were appointed. The trustee, in pursuance of a resolution of the committee, completed the work, himself advancing money for that purpose, of which an amount exceeding that of the retention moneys assigned as aforesaid was still unpaid, there being no other assets from which he could be recouped in respect thereof. The trustee and the mortgagees both claim the amount of the retention moneys assigned as aforesaid from the building owners. On an interpleader issue to try the title to such moneys:—Held, that, in the absence of anything to show that the building owners had exercised the power of taking the work out of the contractor's hands, the trustee must be taken to have completed the work under the original contract as trustee of the contractors' estate, and not as a person employed to complete the work in substitution for the contractors; that the assignment of the retention moneys held good as against the trustee; and that the mortgagees were therefore entitled to succeed. Tooth v. Hallett (L. R. 4 Ch. 242) distinguished. Drew v. Josolyne, 56 L. J., Q. B. 490; 18 Q. B. D. 590; 57 L. T. 5; 35 W. R. 570—C. A.

Adoption by Trustees.]—A contractor entered into an agreement for the completion of a building at a certain time, in a certain specified manner, and the contractor was to set out the works and be responsible for errors, to provide and employ workmen, to provide and keep at the building a competent general foreman, to provide materials, labour, &c.: also if the contractor should, from any cause not comply with the terms of the contract within three days after being requested to do so in writing, the architect should have power to prevent his further execution of the works, and cause the same to be finished by others. After he had received notice from the employer that he was neglecting and delaying to complete and finish the building, the contractor, on the following day, entered into a composition deed for the benefit of his creditors under s. 192 of the Bankruptcy Act of 1861, and in the form prescribed:—Held, that the trustees of the deed were not at liberty to adopt the contract, containing, as it did, obligations of a personal character. Knight v. Burgess, 33 L. J., Ch. 727; 10 L. T. 90.

Right of Employer to Re-enter.]—The language of a contract, where it admits of it, must receive such a construction as is consistent with reason and justice; but where it appears from the whole tenor of the agreement that the parties thereto intended, the one to insist upon and the other to submit to, conditions, however unreasonable and oppressive, the court will in such case give effect to them. Stadhard v. Lee, 3 B. & S. 364; 32 L. J., Q. B. 75; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 908; 7 L. T. 850; 11 W. R. 361.

The plaintiff contracted to execute certain works for the defendants, the agreement containing the following proviso: "That if the works did not proceed as satisfactorily as required by the defendants, they should have power to enter thereupon, pay whatever number of men should be left unpaid by the plaintiff, and set to work whatever number of men they might consider necessary; the amount so paid, and the cost of the men so set to work, to be deducted from whatever moneys might be due to the plaintiff":—Held, that the intention of the parties was, that the defendants, if dissatisfied with the progress of the work, should be at liberty to avail themselves of the terms of the proviso, and deduct from the money due to the plaintiff such sums as had been expended in pursuance thereof. Ib.

—— Sufficiency of Notice.] — An engineer contracted with a corporation by deed to execute works. The deed contained a clause, by which it was covenanted that the corporation's own engineer should have power to direct the way in which portions of the work should be done; and if it should appear to him that they were not properly executed, and with due expedition, it should be lawful for him to give notice in writing to the plaintiff to alter any improper work, and to supply proper and sufficient materials and labour, and with due expedition to proceed therewith; and if the plaintiff should, for seven days after such notice, fail to comply therewith, then it should be lawful for the engineer to take the work out of the plaintiff's hands. It appearing to the engineer that the works were not being properly executed, and with due expedition, he gave the following written notice to the plaintiff: "I give notice to you to supply all proper and sufficient materials and labour for the due prosecution of the works, and with due expedition to proceed therewith: and, further, that if you shall, for seven days after the giving of this notice, fail or neglect to comply therewith, I shall as engineer, and on behalf of the corporation, take the works wholly out of your hands:"—Held, that the notice was sufficiently specific. Pauling v. Dover Corporation, 10 Ex. 753; 24 L. J., Ex. 128.

—— Injunction to restrain Seizure.]—By a contract between a contractor and a railway company, under which the former was to execute the company's works, it was provided (amongst other things) that surplus chalk should be the contractor's property, and that if the contractor should in the judgment of the company's engineer fail in the due performance of the contract, the engineer might, by order of the board of directors, take the further performance of the contract out of the contractor's hands, and employ for the purposes of the contract such persons and on such terms and conditions as the engineer should think fit. In alleged exercise of the power conferred by the latter provision the company resumed possession, and took the further performance of the contract out of the contractor's hands, who thereupon filed a bill for an injunction, alleging impropriety of conduct and duress on the part of the engineer, and that the chalk taken would, upon the completion of the work, become the plaintiff's property as surplus, allegations the truth of which was bonâ fide disputed by the company:—Held, that the contract being one where, if the company was wrong, the contractor could be amply compensated in damages, whereas if the contractor were allowed to resume work the court could not enforce specific performance of the contract in order to compel the completion of the works, the contractor was not entitled to an interlocutory injunction. Garrett v. Banstead and Epsom Downs Ry., 4 De G. J. & S. 462: 11 Jur. (N.S.) 591; 12 L. T. 654; 13 W. R. 878. See also Jennings v. Brighton Intercepting and Outfalls Sewers Board, 4 De G. J. & S. 735, n.

A railway company consenting to the removal of its plant by the plaintiffs, the contractors for works, and the latter not having on affidavits made out a case of mala fides on the part of the engineer or the company in determining the contract, a motion for injunction against the company was refused, and the latter was left to assert at law its rights under the agreement. Waring v. Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Ry., 2 H. & Tw. 239; 18 L. J., Ch. 450; 14 Jur. 613.

A contractor agreed to execute the works of a railway within a certain time, and on being paid in a certain manner, and under a condition that if he failed to proceed with the works as required by the engineer of the company, the contract should be void, and the implements and materials belonging to the contractor should be forfeited. The contractor did not satisfy the engineer of the company, and the company proceeded to take possession of the works. The contractor alleged that the proper payments had not been made to him:—Held, that the court would not restrain the company by interlocutory injunction until the questions between the company and the contractor were decided. Munro v. Wivenhoe and Brightlingsea Ry., 4 De G. J. & S. 723; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 612; 12 L. T. 655; 13 W. R. 880.

A contractor agreeing to execute the public works of a company, and binding himself for the due performance of his contract, by forfeitures subjecting himself to the arbitrary decision of a person nominated by the company as to his liability thereto, is not entitled to relief in equity against the forfeiture. Ranger v. G. W. Ry., 2 Jur. 787.

In a contract with a railway company for the execution of works, there was a clause empowering the company, after notice, to take possession of the plant and to finish the work; the company acted on this clause:—Held, that this did not furnish ground for a bill in equity as putting an end to the contract, though it might be the subject of an action for damages. Ranger v. G. W. Ry., 5 H. L. Cas. 72.

—— Granting Periods of Indulgence.]—Under a clause in a building agreement, under which rent had not been paid (and not amounting to a demise), that in case of default in not completing the buildings, at successive periods, the owner should be at liberty to re-enter and seize the materials there, and successive defaults having been made and several periods of indulgence granted, but there was no waiver of the last default, and no alteration of the builder's position to his prejudice, and no default on the part of the owner:—Held, that the owner was entitled to re-enter and seize the materials. Stevens v. Taylor, 2 F. & F. 419.

—— Extending Time for Completion.]—Where a building contract contained a clause empowering the defendants, in the event of the works being delayed by the contractors, to take the contract out of their hands and employ others for the completion thereof; and also a clause enabling the engineer in certain events to extend the time limited for the completion of the contract, and the engineer, in pursuance of the clause, granted such extension:—Held, that it was not competent for the defendants to avail themselves of the power of taking the works out of the contractors' hands, simply on the grounds of delay, till or up to a time within the extended period, or simply on the grounds that the work was not finished before the expiration of that period. But, aliter, if other sufficient grounds were relied on for exercising the power. Mohan v. Dundalk, Newry and Greenore Ry., 6 L. R., Ir. 477.

Where the same contract contained a clause enabling the defendants, upon taking the works out of the contractors' hands as aforesaid, to use the plant and materials of any description belonging to the plaintiffs which should be on, or near to, or employed in the execution of the works, without making any payment for the same:—Held, that a defence alleging that the defendants had taken up the works under the terms of the contract for delay, and relying on this clause, was a sufficient answer to an action for the conversion and detention of such plant and materials by the defendants. Ib.

Contractors agreed to construct a dock and other works for a railway company. The contract contained the following clauses: "Should the contractors fail to proceed in the execution of the works in the manner and at the rate of progress required by the engineer, or to maintain the works as hereinafter mentioned to the satisfaction of the engineer, their contract shall, at the option of the company, but not otherwise, be considered void as far as relates to the works or maintenance remaining to be done, and all sums of money that may be due to the contractors, together with all materials and implements in their possession, and all sums named as penalties for the non-fulfilment of the contract, shall be forfeited to the company, and the amount shall be considered as ascertained damages for breach of contract." "Time of completion. The whole of the works are to be entirely completed on or before 31st August, 1873, and the contractors will be subject to a penalty of 100*l.* per week for each week the works remain unfinished beyond the time stated." By other clauses, if the contractors failed to complete the works within the period limited, the company had power, without giving previous notice, to take the works out of their hands and employ other contractors; and if the engineer was dissatisfied with the mode of proceeding and progress of the works, he had power to procure and make use of all labour and materials from money due or to become due to the contractors; but this was not to relieve them from their obligation to proceed with the works. The works were not finished on the 31st August, 1873, and the contractors continued working till 22nd January, 1874. On 22nd January, 1874, the company gave notice to the contractors under the above clause to avoid the contract, and afterwards took possession of the implements and materials:—Held, that the clause in question could only be acted on and enforced within the time fixed for the completion of the works, and therefore, the notice of 22nd January, 1874, was not valid and sufficient to avoid the contract, and the company was not justified in taking possession of the implements and materials. Walker v. L. & N. W. Ry., 45 L. J., C. P. 787; 1 C. P. D. 518; 36 L. T. 53; 25 W. R. 10.

—— Exercise of Right to rescind.]—The exercise of a right of election to rescind a building agreement must be signified in an unqualified manner and within a reasonable time, or, at all events, not after the other party to the agreement has gone to expense in the belief of the right of election not being exercised. Marsden v. Sambell, 43 L. T. 120; 28 W. R. 952.

A contractor agreed to do certain work according to plans and specifications with a provision that if he was guilty of delay the defendants might give a three days' notice of their intention to employ another person to complete the work, and that at the expiration of the notice the agreement should be void and the amount already paid to the contractor should be considered the full value of the work executed by him up to that time. There was also a proviso as to the scale of payment:—Held, that the power of determining the agreement might be exercised before any payment had been made. Davies v. Swansea Corporation, 8 Ex. 808; 22 L. J., Ex. 297.

If one of the parties to a building agreement in which a right to rescind is stipulated for, himself rescinds it, he is not entitled to make entry on the premises for the purpose of removing the goods after the date of rescission. Marsden v. Sambell, 43 L. T. 120; 28 W. R. 952.

—— Mistaken Claim to rescind.]—A mistaken claim by one of the parties to such an agreement to rescind it does not ipso facto operate to rescind the agreement, unless the other party claims a rescission on the ground of the mistaken claim. Ib.

—— Restraining Contractor from continuing.]—Disputes having arisen between a railway company and a contractor employed in making the railway, the company insisting upon a right under the contract, owing to the alleged default of the contractor, to discharge him, take possession of the line and materials, and complete the works itself. The contractor resisted such claim, imputing the backward state of the works to the acts of the company, and held forcible possession. Collisions occurring between the workmen of the two parties, each being charged with impeding the operations of the other, and the completion and opening of the railway for traffic being in the meantime delayed, the court, on the application of the company, restrained the contractor from continuing on the line, or interfering with the operations of the company; directed an account of what was due to the contractor for works and materials done and provided, without regard to the formal certificates of the company's engineer, and without an issue to try whether the company, at the time it proceeded to enter upon the works and remove the contractor, was lawfully justified in so doing; reserving as well the question of the right of the contractor to compensation for loss of profit on unexecuted works, as all other directions, until after the trial and the report. East Lancashire Ry. v. Hattersley, 8 Hare, 72.

—— Evidence of Negligence.]—When a patent agent who was employed to procure a patent, being not aware of the decision (which makes it necessary, notwithstanding provisional specification has been filed, to take care that the patent is sealed before another patent for the same invention is obtained by a later applicant), delayed four months between filing the provisional specification and applying to have the patent sealed, whereby a subsequent applicant for a patent for the same invention was able to get his patent sealed first, and so prevent such agent from procuring a patent for his employer: —Held, evidence of negligence, for which such patent agent was liable in an action by his employer. Ib.

An intending mortgagor, at the request of the solicitors of an intending mortgagee, applied to a firm of valuers for a valuation of the property proposed to be mortgaged. A valuation at the sum of 3,000*l.* was sent in by the valuers direct to the mortgagee's solicitors, and the mortgage was subsequently carried out. Default having been made in payment by the mortgagor, and a loss having resulted to the mortgagee, he commenced an action against the valuers for damages for the loss sustained through their negligence, misrepresentation, and breach of duty. The court being satisfied on the evidence that the defendants knew at the time the valuation was made that it was for the purpose of an advance, and that the valuation as made was in fact no valuation at all:—Held, that, under the circumstances, the defendants were liable on two grounds: (1), that they (independently of contract) owed a duty to the plaintiff which they had failed to discharge; (2), that they had made reckless statements on which the plaintiff had acted. George v. Skivington (L. R. 5 Ex. 1) and Heaven v. Pender (11 Q. B. D. 503) followed. Peek v. Derry (37 Ch. D. 541) discussed. Cann v. Willson, 57 L. J., Ch. 1034; 39 Ch. D. 39; 59 L. T. 723; 37 W. R. 23. Mortgagees advanced money to a builder upon the faith of certain certificates given by a surveyor. The certificates contained untrue statements, the result of the negligence of the surveyor, but there was no fraud on his part, and no contractual relation between him and the mortgagees:—Held, that the surveyor owed no duty to them to exercise care in giving the certificates, and that he was not liable to them in an action for negligence. Cann v. Willson (39 Ch. D. 39) overruled; Heaven v. Pender (11 Q. B. D. 503) distinguished; Derry v. Peek (14 App. Cas. 337) followed. Le Lievre v. Gould, 62 L. J., Q. B. 353; [1893] 1 Q. B. 491; 4 R. 274; 68 L. T. 626; 41 W. R. 468; 57 J. P. 484—C. A.

The plaintiff purchased the goodwill, stock, and effects of a business at a valuation, the amount of which was to be fixed by valuers, one to be appointed on each side for that purpose, and in case of difference by an umpire to be chosen by the valuers. The plaintiff employed the defendant as his valuer, and he and the valuer appointed by the vendor fixed between them the amount of valuation. In an action for negligence in making such valuation, by which the value of the goodwill was fixed too high, the plaintiff applied to administer interrogatories to the defendant to ascertain the basis on which he had agreed with the valuer of the defendant to calculate the valuation:—Held, that the defendant had not acted in the matter as an arbitrator, but as a valuer only, and was therefore liable to his employer for negligence, and the plaintiff accordingly was allowed to administer the interrogatories. Turner v. Goulden, 43 L. J., C. P. 60; L. R. 9 C. P. 57.

A broker made a contract for the seller as follows: "Oct. 26, 1869. Sold by order and for account of Mr. P., to my principals, Messrs. S. H. & Son, to arrive, 500 tons black Smyrna raisins, 1869 growth, fair average quality in opinion of selling broker, to be delivered here in London at 22*s.* per cwt. Shipment November or December, 1869":—Held, that the broker was employed as an arbitrator to determine between the parties any difference which might arise as to the quality of the raisins tendered in fulfilment of the contract; and, consequently, that he was not liable to an action for failing to exercise reasonable care and skill in coming to a decision, he having acted bonâ fide, and to the best of his judgment. Pappa v. Rose, 41 L. J., C. P. 187; L. R. 7 C. P. 525; 27 L. T. 348; 20 W. R. 784—Ex. Ch.

L., exercising the avocation known among the mercantile community as an average adjuster, was employed by A. and B., under the terms of an agreement, to examine into and decide upon a disputed claim between them as to the salvage and loss of cargo upon a wreck. Having pronounced his decision, with which A. was dissatisfied, A. brought an action for damages, imputing that L. had not used due diligence in ascertaining the facts as to the matters submitted to him, and for negligence in the performance of the duty which he had undertaken for reward. To this L. pleaded that he had decided bonâ fide:—Held, that he was, in reference to the question into which he was commissioned by A. and B. to inquire, in the position of an arbitrator, and that as they must be held to have bound themselves to abide by his award, he in the character that had been imposed upon him by the parties was not liable to an action at the suit of either of them. Tharsis Sulphur and Copper Co. v. Loftus, 42 L. J., C. P. 6; L. R. 8 C. P. 1; 27 L. T. 549; 21 W. R. 109.

A bill for improving a town and its surrounding hamlets was passed through the Commons, and carried into the House of Lords. In due course the standing orders committee reported upon it, that the notice to the inhabitants, which was the foundation of the bill, was not in conformity with the standing orders in two respects; first, that it did not sufficiently state the intention on the part of the commissioners to take compulsory powers for levying rates; and secondly, that there were compulsory clauses for the purchase of houses and lands, but no application had been made to the owners of the houses and lands for their consent; and thereupon the bill was rejected. Upon an action brought by the parliamentary agents against the promoters of the bill for their costs, they pleaded wilful negligence on the part of the plaintiffs in the conduct of the bill:—Held, that it was a proper question for the jury, whether the standing orders in the first respect had not been virtually complied with, at least in so far as to relieve the defendants from the charge of wilful negligence; and as to the second objection, held, that the standing orders did not apply, because it was impossible to give notice to parties that their land in particular was intended to be purchased, when no land was set out; in which respect the bill had not the same reference to the standing orders as bills for making canals and railways or altering turnpike roads. Bulmer v.

Proper Performance—Condition Precedent to Remuneration.]—Where a person undertakes, and is employed to perform a work of skill and labour, and fails therein, so that his employer derives no benefit from the work, the former is not entitled to recover his demand, as the employer buys both his labour and his judgment, and he ought not to undertake the work, if he does not know whether he can succeed or not. Duncan v. Blundell, 3 Stark. 6.

If a surveyor makes an estimate which turns out to be incorrect to a considerable amount, through his omitting to examine the ground for the foundation of the work, he is not entitled to recover anything for his plans, specifications, or estimates made for that work. Moneypenny v. Hartland, 1 Car. & P. 352.

Semble, that although maps, &c., of an engineer may be incorrect, yet he is entitled to a remuneration for journeys made respecting them. Taylor v. Higgins, 1 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 19.

In an action on a special contract for work done under the contract, and for work, labour, and materials generally, the defendant may give in evidence that the work has been done improperly, and not agreeably to the contract ; and the plaintiff in that case will only be entitled to recover the real value of the work done and the materials supplied. Chapel v. Hickes, 2 C. & M. 214 ; 4 Tyr. 43 ; 3 L. J., Ex. 38.

—— By an Engineer.]—If an engineer is employed by a committee for erecting a bridge and forming a road to it, to make an estimate of the expense, he is bound to ascertain for himself, by experiments, the nature of the soil, although a person previously employed by such committee, having made the experiments, gives him, by their desire, information of the result. Moneypenny v. Hartland, 2 Car. & P. 378 ; 31 R. R. 672.

—— By a Herald.]—In an action by heralds, for work and labour in making out a pedigree, they are bound to give general evidence of the pedigree being true, unless this has been dispensed with by the defendant. Townsend v. Neale, 2 Camp. 191.

—— Action by Contractor no Bar to Action against Contractor.]—A. having been employed by B. to do work according to a specification, brought an action to recover the price agreed to be paid upon the completion of the work. The action was settled by payment of the whole amount, after which B. brought an action against A. to recover damages for an alleged non-performance of the contract and for an alleged improper performance of the same :—Held, that he was not precluded from maintaining the action by reason of the settlement of the action brought against him by A. Davis v. Hedges, 40 L. J., Q. B. 276 ; L. R. 6 Q. B. 687 ; 25 L. T. 155 ; 20 W. R. 60.

Incapacity by Act of God.]—Incapacity, by reason of the intervention of an act of God, to perform personal service, is an excuse for its non-performance, notwithstanding a covenant to serve absolute and unconditional in its terms ; because the parties at the time of entering into the covenant must be supposed to have contemplated the continuance of the covenantor's ability to perform the service, as one of the conditions of the contract. Boast v. Firth, 38 L. J., C. P. 1 ; L. R. 4 C. P. 1 ; 19 L. T. 264 ; 17 W. R. 29.

In contracts to render services purely personal there is implied a condition that the parties will be exonerated from the contract if the performance is prevented by inability resulting from the act of God. Robinson v. Davison, 40 L. J., Ex. 172 ; L. R. 6 Ex. 269 ; 24 L. T. 755 ; 19 W. R. 1036.

A contract by a musician to play at a concert at a specified time, being a contract dependent on the personal skill of the artiste, is, though no condition is expressed in words, based on the assumption of sufficient health, and is subject to an implied condition that if the musician is, without his own default, disabled by illness to perform, he will be excused. Ib.

When Impossible to do Work Properly.]—A workman being bound to do his work in a workmanlike manner, it is no excuse for his doing it so as to be useless, that it was not possible to do it otherwise, unless he told his employer so. Pearce v. Tucker, 3 F. & F. 136.

In an action for negligence in galvanizing wire sent by the plaintiff to be galvanized by the defendant, it is no misdirection on the part of the judge if he tell the jury that if, when the wire was sent by the plaintiff to the defendant, it was in such a state that he could not galvanize it without spoiling it, it would be negligence on the part of the defendant to galvanize it. Combe v. Simmonds, 1 W. R. 289.

Plans and Specifications — Warranty.] — A person asking for tenders for the execution of a certain work prepares plans and a specification for the information of intending contractors ; he does not thereby enter into any implied warranty that the work can be successfully executed according to such plans and specification. The contractor for the work cannot therefore sustain an action for damages as upon a warranty should it turn out that he could not execute it according to such plans and specification. Thorn v. London Corporation, 45 L. J., Ex. 487 ; 1 App. Cas. 120 ; 34 L. T. 545 ; 24 W. R. 932—H. L.

Semble, that the remedy (if any) of the contractor in the event of his not being able to execute the work according to the plans and specifications, will be for compensation as upon a quantum meruit. Ib.

The mere employment of an architect to prepare plans and a specification for a house, and to procure a builder to erect it, does not render the employer responsible for the accuracy of the bill of quantities by such architect to the builder. Scrivener v. Pask, 18 C. B. (N.S.) 785. Affirmed L. R. 1 C. P. 715—Ex. Ch.

—— Form of.]—Semble, that it is not a usual course with architects to prepare specifications of the exact quantities of work to be performed by contractors ; but if they do prepare such specifications, they ought to be in detail, to enable parties to judge not only of the gross quantities but also of the quantity of labour to be employed. Kemp v. Rose, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 919.

2. TIME FOR PERFORMANCE.

When of the Essence of the Contract.]—B. engaged to supply an engine and boilers for a steam vessel of A., in conformity with the drawings and specification furnished by C., the engine to be got under the superintendence of C., and when approved by him at the works, to be delivered by B. into the East India Docks, when B.'s liability would cease. One of the terms contained in the specification was, that the engine should be completed within two months:—Held, that time was of the essence of the contract, and B. was liable to an action at the suit of A. for not delivering the engine and boilers within the two months. Wimshurst v. Deeley, 2 C. B. 253.

By a building contract, it was agreed that the plaintiffs should, in the most workmanlike manner, and with the best materials, before the 1st of December, 1867, roof in, and before the 15th of May, 1868, completely finish, according to certain specifications, a farmhouse and buildings, but subject to extras, alterations, or additions, which might be made as in the agreement mentioned; and that the time mentioned in the agreement for the completion of the works should be of the essence of the contract, so that if the plaintiffs should not, on the 1st of December, 1867, roof in, and on the 15th of May, 1868, complete and make fit and ready for occupation the works, the plaintiffs should pay to the defendants as and for liquidated damages 3*l.* for every day from and after the 1st of December, 1867, and 15th of May, 1868, until such day as the works should be roofed in and completed, and the defendants might deduct such sum of 3*l.* per day from any moneys which might be due at any time from the defendants to the plaintiffs, or obtain payment of the same in any way they might think fit:—Held, that the plaintiffs undertook to execute not only the works specified, but also all alterations within the time prescribed in the contract, and that it was no implied condition of the contract that the alterations should be such as could reasonably be completed within this time. Jones v. St. John's College, Oxford, 40 L. J., Q. B. 80; L. R. 6 Q. B. 115; 23 L. T. 803; 19 W. R. 276.

—— Waiver of Condition.]—The plaintiff contracted to build cottages by the 10th October, they were not finished till the 15th; the defendant having accepted the cottages:—Held, that the plaintiff might recover the value of his work, on a declaration for work and labour. Lucas v. Godwin, 3 Bing. (N.C.) 737; 4 Scott, 502; 3 Hodges, 114; 6 L. J., C. P. 205. S. P., Thornhill v. Neats, infra.

Right to Damages for Default.]—A count stating that, in performing works, the plaintiff retained the defendant, a carpenter, to repair a house before a given day, that the defendant accepted the retainer, but did not perform the work within the time, per quod the walls of the plaintiff's house were damaged, cannot be supported. Elsee v. Gatward, 5 Term Rep. 143.

3. PENALTIES FOR NON-PERFORMANCE.

Right to Recover—Engineer's Discretion.]—A contractor engaged, by the terms of his contract, to have a line open by the 1st of October. At the end of the specifications annexed to the contract were the words, "The time for the completion of the contract is to be the 1st October, 1864, under a penalty of 50*l.* per week, at discretion of the company's engineer":—Held, that this was a discretion to impose, and not merely to remit; and that, therefore, on behalf of the contractor, there was no liability which could be the subject of set-off by the company in an action by the contractor, until the engineer had actually imposed the penalty. Munro v. Ennis and Athenry Ry., 15 W. R. 255.

—— Grounds of Excuse.]—To an action for work, the defendant pleaded that it was done under an agreement in writing whereby the plaintiff was to build for him six houses, and completely finish and give up the premises to him on or before a specified day, under a penalty of 1*l.* for each house, for each and every week the works should remain incomplete, and possession withheld after that date, the amount of penalty to be paid out of the moneys which might become due to the plaintiff under the agreement; that the houses remained incomplete, and possession was withheld from the defendant for twelve weeks after and beyond the day stipulated, wherefore he claimed to deduct a certain sum of money. The plaintiff replied, that before any of the penalties had been incurred, it was mutually agreed that the plaintiff should perform other work in and upon the houses, in addition to the work in the first agreement, such additional work to be done within a reasonable time; that the work under the second agreement was so mixed up with the work under the first agreement, being part and parcel thereof, that it became impossible to complete the work in the first until the work under the second agreement was also completed, as the defendant at the time of making that agreement well knew, and that the plaintiff had performed all the work under both agreements within a reasonable time:—Held, a good legal answer to the claim for penalties, on the ground of waiver. Thornhill v. Neats, 8 C. B. (N.S.) 831; 2 L. T. 539.

A clause respecting penalties, in a contract for the building of a ship, imposed a penalty of 5*l.* a day on B. for every day after a certain day if the ship should not then be delivered to A. The ship was not delivered till long after the day appointed, but a large portion of the delay arose from the interference of A. or his agent:—Held, that no sum in the nature of a penalty was recoverable by A. Russell v. Sa Da Bandeira (Viscount), 13 C. B. (N.S.) 149; 32 L. J., C. P. 68; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 718; 7 L. T. 804.

A contractor undertook to execute works, with additions, enlargement, &c., within a specified time, the architect having power to extend the time for completion in proportion to the extra work so ordered. Additions were ordered and executed, and caused delay in completion of the works beyond the time specified, but the architect did not extend the time:—Held, that the contractor was bound to complete the works within the time specified and was liable to pay damages for non-completion within the specified time. Tew v. Newbold-on-Avon School Board, 1 Cab. & E. 260.

In an action for extras upon a contract for building steamers, the value of which had not been ascertained by the engineer or any third party, the employer pleaded a set-off for penalties for delay, and the contractor replied that the additions ordered made it impossible to complete the vessels in time:—Held, that the set-off for penalties could not be sustained assuming the fact to be as stated in the replication. West- wood v. Secretary of State for India, 1 N. R. 262; 7 L. T. 736; 11 W. R. 261. S. P., Courtnay v. Waterford Ry., 4 L. R., Ir. 11.

Where, under a building contract the builder agrees to complete certain specified works by a specified date under a penalty for delay, and also undertakes to execute any additional works that may be ordered, if the building owner orders additional works which necessarily delay the completion of the works, he cannot recover penalties for delay, unless the builder has agreed to complete both the specified and the additional works by the specified date. Westwood v. Secretary of State for India (7 L. T. 736; 11 W. R. 261) followed. Jones v. St. John's College, Oxford (40 L. J., Q. B. 80; L. R. 6 Q. B. 115) distinguished. Dodd v. Churton, 66 L. J., Q. B. 477; [1897] 1 Q. B. 562; 76 L. T. 438; 45 W. R. 490—C. A.

—— Transfer of Contract.]—By a contract between a waterworks company and a building contractor for the building of a reservoir, it was agreed that the contractor should be liable to certain penalties, as and for liquidated damages, for each day from the date fixed for completion, and the day when the completed works should be delivered to the company. A further clause provided that in certain events the company might terminate the contract, so far as respected its performance by the contractor, but without thereby affecting in any other respect his liabilities, and might enter into possession of the works. The company did terminate the contract, and entered into possession of the works. The defendant, who had been surety for the contractor, then entered into an agreement with the company to complete the works in accordance with the original contract, upon the express condition that nothing in this agreement should be construed to rescind or vary any term in the original contract, but that everything should stand upon the same footing, both during the completion of the works and in finally settling the accounts, as if the latter agreement had not been made. Through no delay of the defendant, but owing solely to the delay of the original contractor, the works were not completed and delivered until some time after the day fixed for completion. The company claimed from the defendant penalties at the rate agreed upon in the original contract:—Held, upon the true construction of the two contracts, that the defendant was liable to the penalties at the rate agreed upon in the original contract. Yeadon Waterworks Co. and Wright, In re, 72 L. T. 832—C. A.

—— Agreement to pay Interest.]—The plaintiffs claimed in this case to receive from the defendants, the contractors, a sum in their hands, and a further sum for non-completion of the line within the stipulated time. By counterclaim the defendants sought to recover similar sums from the Trustees Corporation on their guarantee. By an agreement of November 21, 1889, the price to be paid for the construction of the works was fixed at the whole capital of the company. The money as received was to be paid to the bankers, and made applicable for payment to the contractors. By agreements of December, 1889, a sale of shares and debentures was arranged, and the bankers guaranteed the interest on the debentures and preference shares up to the time fixed for completion of the works. By agreement of December, 31, 1889, the contractors entered into an undertaking with the company for the payment of such interest. During the progress of the works the business of the bankers was transferred to a limited company, which eventually went into liquidation, and such banking company were allowed to continue as bankers on the guarantee of the Trustees Corporation. The works were not completed for more than a year after the time fixed for completion. Interest on the debentures and preference shares in the meantime became due which was not paid by the contractors, and was paid by the company only so far as concerned the debentures. Subsequently this action was brought, and the matters in dispute were referred to arbitration. The award was made in November, 1894:—Held, on the evidence, that the contractors had not completed within the time fixed, and there was no agreement to relieve them from payment of interest, but that the arbitrator, having found that the company were liable for not taking over the line when it was completed, the contractors were entitled to have the amount for which the company was so liable applied in reduction of the interest. Alcoy and Gandia Ry. v. Greenhill, 76 L. T. 542.

Set-off.]—See SET-OFF.

C. PROPERTY IN MATERIALS.

1. RIGHTS OF EMPLOYER.

Lien on what Materials.]—A railway company entered into a contract (dated December 27th, 1836) with certain builders for building a bridge, all necessary implements and materials to be found by the builders, with power to the company if, in the opinion of its architect, the contractors should not proceed with sufficient expedition, to employ other or additional workmen to complete the works on giving them seven days' notice, and in such case to use the cranes, machines, implements, and materials used on or about the works by the contractors, who were to defray the extra expenses incurred. The contract provided that the company should have a lien upon such machines, implements, and materials as should, for the time being, be in and upon the land, as a security for the completion of the bridge. On the 26th July, 1837, the contractors committed an act of bankruptcy, and a fiat was issued on the 31st. Divers goods, timbers, &c., for building the bridge had been previously deposited by them on it and the land adjoining. These consisted of four kinds:—1. Those actually on the line of the railway. 2. Those upon land adjoining the line (not the property of the company, but inclosed and taken possession of by them under the act). 3. Those deposited upon the line of a temporary railway made by the bankrupts, over land not belonging to the company, for the convenience of conveying materials. 4. A crane erected by the contractors at the end of the temporary railway. On the 31st July the company took possession of all these goods. On the 1st August it gave the seven days' notice, that other workmen would be employed, and on the 2nd they took upon themselves the completion of the bridge, using some of the goods, and retaining the remainder. In trover brought by the assignees for these goods:—Held, that the company had a lien upon the first and second classes, but not upon the third and fourth, which, nevertheless, at the expiration of the notice, it had a right to retain and use about the work, for the agreement was lawful, not being made in contemplation of bankruptcy. Hawthorn v. Newcastle-upon-Tyne and North Shields Ry., 2 Railw. Cas. 288.

Held, also, that these rights of the company were not invalidated by the possession of the bankrupt, under 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 72, he being the true owner; nor by other implements and materials so used having been removed without any objection from the company's authority, the lien being a shifting one, and attaching to such articles as were brought, from time to time, and ceasing as to such only as were removed; nor by the implements and materials not being scheduled. Ib.

Absolute Property of Employer.]—A contract by a trader to do certain works contained a clause, that if he should become bankrupt, or delay proceeding with the works, his employer should have power, after seven days' notice to him to proceed, to employ others to do the work. the advances made to the trader before his default should be taken as full payment, and that all tools and materials being upon the works should become the property of the employer. The trader, having delayed to proceed with the works, was served on the 11th April by his employer with notice to proceed. On the 17th April the trader committed an act of bankruptcy; on the 19th April the notice to proceed not having been complied with, his employer took possession of the tools and materials. In June a fiat issued against the trader. In trover by his assignees, against the employer for tools and materials left upon the works by the bankrupt: —Held, that they did not become the property of his employer at the expiration of the seven days' notice, because they had vested in his assignees by relation on the 17th April, before the notice had expired. Rouch v. G. W. Ry., 2 Railw. Cas. 505; 5 Jur. 821.

An agreement between a railway company and a contractor provided that, in case the contractor should be guilty of any delay or default in the fulfilment of the contract, the company might take the execution of the works out of his hand, and might use all or any of his plant, materials, or implements; and that in addition to all other rights and remedies which the company might have against the contractor, the company might apply any moneys to which the contractor would otherwise be entitled under his contract towards satisfaction of all losses or expenses occasioned to the company by the delay; and that all the materials, plant, and implements which at the time of such delay or default should be in or about the site of the works, should thereupon become the absolute property of the company, and be valued or sold, and the amount of such valuation or sale credited to the contractor in reduction of the moneys (if any) recoverable from him by the company. The company took the execution of the works out of the contractor's hand under this clause. The contractor brought an action for breach of contract, which, with all matters in difference between the parties, was referred to arbitration: —Held, that the plant and materials did not become the absolute property of the company, unless loss or expense had been occasioned to it; and an interlocutory injunction was awarded to restrain them from removing and selling the plant and materials pending the arbitration. Garrett v. Salisbury and Dorset Junction Ry., L. R. 2 Eq. 358; 14 W. R. 816.

—— Sale of Goods—Delivery—Bankruptcy of Vendor.]—By the law of Scotland the effect of the appropriation and acceptance of a specific chattel by the contracting parties is to perfect the contract of sale, and to give the purchaser a right to demand delivery, but the property in the chattel does not pass to him until he has obtained delivery under the contract; and s. 1 of the Mercantile Law Amendment (Scotland) Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 60), imposes no limitation upon the right of the vendor's creditors to attach goods in his custody until the contract of sale has been so perfected. C. & Son, a firm of engineers, undertook by different contracts to supply and fit up engines in various ships which were being built by the appellants, who were shipbuilders, and advances were made by the appellants as the work progressed. An agreement was subsequently entered into between the parties by which it was stipulated that on payment being made on account of any contract "the portions of the subjects thereof, so far as constructed, and all materials laid down" in C. & Son's yard "for the purpose of constructing the same, shall become and be held as the absolute property of" the appellants, "subject only to the lien of C. & Son" for the "payment of the price, or any balance thereof that may remain due." At the date of this agreement C. & Son were insolvent to the knowledge of the appellants, and the only considerable contracts they had on hand were the contracts with the appellants, which it was then known would result in a loss. It was important to the appellants that the contracts should be completed, and they continued to make advances to C. & Son until the most important contract was completed. After that C. & Son became bankrupt: —Held, that there had been no sale of any specific goods to the appellants within the meaning of s. 1 of the Mercantile Law Amendment (Scotland) Act, 1856, nor delivery of possession, and that the appellants were not entitled, as against the trustee in C. & Son's bankruptcy, to take possession of the materials to be used in carrying out their contracts, which were in C. & Son's yard at the date of their bankruptcy. Seath v. Moore, 55 L. J., P. C. 54; 11 App. Cas. 350; 54 L. T. 690; 5 Asp. M. C. 586—H. L. (Sc.)

—— Materials delivered but not fixed—Engineer's Certificates.] — By an agreement made between the plaintiff company and the defendant, a contractor, for the construction of a railway, it was provided that, once a month, the company's engineer should certify the amount payable to the contractor in respect of the value of the materials delivered, and that such certificates should be paid by the company seven days after presentation:—Held, that the property in the "materials delivered," upon their being certified for by the engineer, passed to the company, though the materials were not fixed. Banbury and Cheltenham Direct Ry. v. Daniel, 54 L. J., Ch. 265; 33 W. R. 321.

Forfeiture by Contractor—Bankruptcy—Entry by Employer.]—A builder contracted with the trustees of a company to build for them an hotel for a specified sum, and to provide all necessary materials (except ironwork and papering) to the satisfaction of their superintendent; with a proviso that, in the event of the contractor becoming bankrupt, it should be lawful for the trustees to take possession of the work then already done by him, and put an end to the agreement for the future, paying him a fair proportion for the work actually done. Before the work was completed the contractor (who had received several sums of money on account, to an amount greater than the value of the work done) became bankrupt, having in his workshop some wooden sash frames destined for the hotel, and approved of by the superintendent for that purpose, into which certain pulleys, the property of the trustees, had been inserted; which frames having been brought by the trustees to the hotel, a demand of the sash frames, without mentioning the pulleys, was made by the assignees, to which the trustees returned a general refusal to give them up:—Held, that the property in the sash frames was not vested in the trustees by force of the contract and subsequent approval by their superintendent; secondly, that the circumstances of these pulleys being inserted in the sash frames did not render the trustees tenants in common with the assignees of the entire chattel; thirdly, that the money advanced by the trustees did not give them such a lien on the sash frames as authorised the refusal to deliver them up; fourthly, that, by the true construction of the contract, a property passed to the trustees in such work only as was actually done and affixed to the realty by the bankrupt previously to his bankruptcy; fifthly, that the general demand and general refusal were sufficient evidence of a conversion of the sash frames by the trustees; and that it was not necessary for the assignees to have made a special demand of the sash frames as distinguished from the pulleys. Tripp v. Armitage, 4 M. & W. 687; 1 H. & H. 442; 8 L. J., Ex. 107; 3 Jur. 249.

A. agreed to build a ship for B. within a certain period, B. paying instalments of the price from time to time; and it was provided, that if A. should fail to complete the ship as stipulated, it should be lawful for B. to enter upon and take possession of the ship (which from the payment of the first instalment was to be the property of B.), and to cause the works to be completed by any persons whom he should employ, using such of the materials of A. as should be applicable to the purpose. A. failed to complete, and B. took possession of the ship. A. committed an act of bankruptcy, and after that B. proceeded to finish the ship, using applicable materials which were in the yard at the time of the act of bankruptcy, but were not then incorporated with the ship, nor had been specifically appropriated by A. for the ship. Some of the materials had been selected by B. before the bankruptcy, and some were piled within the ship, and the rest in a shed adjoining, but none had been actually used before the bankruptcy:—Held, that B. was not entitled to the materials under the agreement, as they had never been used, and therefore that the property in them passed to the assignees of A. Baker v. Gray, 17 C. B. 462; 25 L. J., C. P. 161; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 400; 4 W. R. 297. See also BANKRUPTCY, vol. ii., cols. 370, et seq.

Right to on Bankruptcy—Protected Transaction.]—A builder contracted with a building club to erect houses for them on their own land. The contract contained a stipulation that, if the contractor should neglect or refuse to proceed with the work in a proper manner to the satisfaction of the architect of the club, or become bankrupt, or insolvent, or otherwise rendered incapable of completing the contract, the architect should have power, after giving two days' notice in writing to the contractor, to appoint other persons to complete the work, and to provide the requisite materials, and also to seize and retain all materials, plant, and implements; provided that the contractor should have drawn money on account of his contract. The contractor commenced the works and carried them on for some time, receiving a considerable sum from the club. On the 30th of May he filed a liquidation petition. On the 2nd of June the architect of the club gave notice to the contractor that, as he had neglected to proceed with the works, they should, on the expiration of two days, employ other means of completing the works, and that he must not remove any materials, implements, or plant from the works, and on the expiration of this notice the club took possession of the materials, implements, and plant:—Held, that the club was entitled, as against the trustee in the liquidation, to retain what they had seized, the seizure being a protected transaction within s. 94 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869. Waugh, In re, Dickin, Ex parte, 46 L. J., Bk. 26; 4 Ch. D. 524; 35 L. T. 769; 25 W. R. 258.

—— Fraud on Bankruptcy Law.]—An agreement, dated the 17th of September, 1878, between an owner of land and a builder provided that, in consideration of the rent thereby reserved and certain agreements on the part of the builder, the landowner would, as the builder should erect and completely cover in the messuages thereinafter agreed to be erected by him, demise to him a piece of land for ninety-nine years, at a yearly rent of 300*l.*; and the builder agreed to erect and completely finish forty houses each of a specified value, within fifteen months from the date of the agreement, and vigorously and effectually to proceed continuously with all buildings once commenced by him on the ground, and to accept leases of the land and houses as the same should be erected and covered in. Until the leases should be granted the builder was to hold the premises subject to the payment of the rent, and to the observance and performance of his part of the terms and stipulations of the agreement, and subject to the power of distress and entry in default of any of the stipulations on his part, or on his becoming bankrupt or insolvent, in either of which cases all improvements, materials, and effects on the land, or adjacent thereto, which should not have been actually demised to the builder, should become absolutely forfeited to the landlord, but without prejudice to any right of action which might have accrued to him under the agreement (which was not to be construed as an actual demise), and the landlord was to be at liberty to re-enter and take possession of the ground, premises, chattels and effects, and to relet or sell the same, or otherwise to use and enjoy the same, as fully as if the agreement had never been made. In January, 1879, the builder filed a liquidation petition. At this time there was a large quantity of building materials on the land comprised in the agreement, which had been placed there by the builder. Up to the time of the filing of the petition the builder had made no default in performing his agreement:—Held, that the provision for forfeiture of the materials to the landlord on the bankruptcy of the builder was void, as contrary to the policy of the bankruptcy law, and that the materials on the land were the property of the trustee in the liquidation. Jay, Ex parte, Harrison, In re, 14 Ch. D. 19; 42 L. T. 600; 28 W. R. 449; 44 J. P. 409—C. A. Reversing 49 L. J., Bk. 47.

A shipbuilding contract contained a clause to the effect that if at any time the builder should cease working on the ship for fourteen days, or should allow the time for completion and delivery of the ship to expire for one month without the same having been completed and ready for delivery, or in the event of the bankruptcy or insolvency of the builder, it should be lawful for the buyer to cause the ship to be completed by any person he might see fit to employ, and to employ such materials belonging to the builder as should be then on his premises, and which should either have been intended to be or be considered fit and applicable for the purpose:—Held, that the clause, so far as it related to the bankruptcy of the builder, was a fraud upon the bankrupt law and void as against the trustee. Barter, Ex parte, Walker, In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 802; 26 Ch. D. 510; 51 L. T. 811; 32 W. R. 809—C. A.

The buyer having on the liquidation of the builder seized and used materials belonging to him for the purpose of completing the ship:—Held, that such user could not be justified under the contract by a subsequent cesser of work upon the ship. Ib.

Liability to Execution.]—A contractor supplied materials to a railway company for the purpose of carrying out his contract. By the terms of the contract it was provided that the materials brought upon the railway should immediately become the absolute property of the company, except that they were to remain under the dominion of the contractor; that, if he should duly complete his contract, the company would give to the contractor, as part of his payment, the unconsumed materials; and that if instead of the contractor the company should use the materials, the company should compensate him in respect of them:—Held, that the materials were not, by the terms of the contract, so absolutely the property of the company as to be seizable by the sheriff under an execution upon a judgment against the company. Beeston v. Marriott, 4 Giff. 436; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 960; 8 L. T. 690; 11 W. R. 896.

By a building contract between A., the landowner, and B., the builder, A. was to grant leases on the erection of the buildings, and to assist the building operations by making advances to B., according to the progress of the buildings. The 7th clause of the contract stated that all materials and other things brought on the premises by B. for the purpose of erecting the buildings were to be considered as immediately attached to and belonging to the premises, and were not to be removed therefrom without the consent of A. The 8th clause empowered A. to enter upon and take possession of the land, with all buildings and other materials standing thereon, in case B. should fail to proceed with the completion of the buildings:—Held, that the 8th clause did not qualify the 7th clause, and that the effect of the 7th clause was to give A. such an equitable interest in the materials for the buildings brought afterwards on the land by B. that they could not be taken in execution by a judgment creditor of B. Brown v. Bateman, 36 L. J., C. P. 134; L. R. 2 C. P. 272; 15 L. T. 658; 15 W. R. 359. S. P., Blake v. Izard, 16 W. R. 108.

Clause vesting Materials in Landowner—Bill of Sale.]—An agreement, by a clause in an ordinary building contract, that all building and other materials bought by the builder upon the land shall become the property of the landowner, is not a bill of sale within the Bills of Sale Act, 1878. Brown v. Bateman, (L. R. 2 C. P. 272) and Blake v. Izard (16 W. R. 108), followed. Reeve v. Whitmore (4 De G. J. & S. 1), and Holroyd v. Marshall (10 H. L. C. 191), distinguished. Reeves v. Barlow, 53 L. J., Q. B. 192; 12 Q. B. D. 436; 50 L. T. 782; 32 W. R. 672—C. A. See also BILLS OF SALE.

Property in or Right of User.]—A contract for executing sewage works made between a contractor and improvement commissioners, provided that all plant brought by the contractor on to the works should be deemed to be the property of the commissioners, and should not be removed during the progress of the work without the written order of their engineer; and in case of suspension of the works by their engineer for any default of the contractor, or of the work being taken out of the contractor's hands, the same should be subject to be used as should be ordered by the engineer in and about the completion of the works. The engineer suspended the works, and the commissioners took possession of the plant and completed the works. The contractor having become bankrupt, and a sum of 2,876*l.* 7*s.* 5*d.* having been certified to be due to the commissioners from him for default under the contract, the commissioners claimed to retain the plant, which was sold by consent for 685*l.*:—Held, first, that the contract gave the commissioners no property in the plant, but only a right of user. Winter, In re, Bolland, Ex parte, 47 L. J., Bk. 52; 8 Ch. D. 225; 38 L. T. 362; 26 W. R. 512.

Held, secondly, that this right of user was not such a dealing within s. 39 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, as to give them a right to set off the value of the plant against the sum due to them from the contractors. Ib.

Construction of Agreement—Substituted Contract.]—A contract for the construction of a railway provided that if the contractor should make default the company might enter and complete the works, and make use of the contractor's waggons, machinery and plant, and also have a lien on the same, with power of sale to reimburse themselves any loss or damage they might sustain by reason of such default. The contractor having become embarrassed, the company made a second contract with him, which provided they should take to and complete the works, and for that purpose should be allowed 10,000*l.*, and the use of all the contractor's plant, &c., which should, on the completion of the works, be restored to the contractor in whatever state it might then be. And this second contract provided that, if it should then be found that anything was due to or from the company from or to the contractor, the amount should be paid by the one to the other within three months after the engineer should have certified the amount that should be due. And it provided that, "in all other respects the original contract should stand, except so far as it was altered by or should be inconsistent with the second contract." The contractor had made no default down to the date of the second contract. The company completed the works, and the engineer certified that a large sum was due to them from the contractor. The company thereupon refused to deliver up the plant to the contractor, and claimed power to sell the plant, and to reimburse themselves out of the proceeds :—Held, that they were not so entitled, for the provisions of the second contract were in substitution of the corresponding provisions in the first contract; the two instruments were not to be read as one, nor were the clauses of the first, conferring the lien and power of sale, to be taken as incorporated into the second contract. Hunt v. S. E. Ry., 45 L. J., C. P. 87—H. L. (E.)

Appropriation by Assent.]—A., a carpenter, contracted with B. to make him a greenhouse for 50*l.* A. completed the greenhouse, informed B. that it was ready, and requested payment. B. paid A. the 50*l.*, and requested A. to keep the greenhouse for him. A. sent the greenhouse to the premises of C., informing him that it belonged to B., and requesting him to take care of it for B.; which C. agreed to do. B. never saw the greenhouse, and knew nothing of its being sent to C. While it remained on C.'s premises, A. became bankrupt:—Held, that the property in the greenhouse vested in B., by his assent to its appropriation to himself. Wilkins v. Bromhead, 6 Man. & G. 963; 7 Scott (N.R.) 921; 13 L. J., C. P. 74; 8 Jur. 83.

Loss of Subject-Matter.] — A contract was made for new boilers and parts of machinery for a ship, to be paid for by instalments on certificates of the plaintiffs' surveyor. Two instalments of 2,000*l.* were paid, when the ship was lost at sea :—Held, that the contract was substantially one for work and labour to be done by the defendant, and that the two payments of 2,000*l.* each were intended only to be paid on account of a contract to be performed as a whole, and that therefore as a full performance of the contract had been rendered impossible by the loss of the vessel, no property in any portion of the work certified by the inspector to have been properly done, and in respect of which the two sums were so respectfully paid, had passed to the plaintiffs, so as to entitle them to recover in detinue for its detention. Anglo-Egyptian Navigation Co. v. Rennie, 44 L. J., C. P. 130; L. R. 10 C. P. 271, 571; 32 L. T. 467; 23 W. R. 626.

2. Rights of Person Employed—See Lien.

D. REMUNERATION.

1. Recovery of—Amount.

Physician.]—A physician may recover upon an express contract to remunerate him for his attendance. Veitch v. Russell, 3 G. & D. 198; 3 Q. B. 928; Car. & M. 362; 12 L. J., Q. B. 13.

Barrister.]—So, a barrister, upon an express contract for remuneration, may recover for his services, as an assessor at an election of guardians. Egan v. Kensington Union, 3 Q. B. 945, n.; 3 G. & D. 204. But see Barrister.

Arbitrator.]—So, an arbitrator may recover fees on an express promise, for which he otherwise would have no legal claim. Hoggins v. Gordon, 1 G. & D. 656; 3 Q. B. 466; 11 L. J., Q. B. 286; 6 Jur. 895.

Accountant—Custom—Clerks.]—On strong evidence of general usage a jury may find that an accountant was entitled to charge at the same rate for his clerks as for himself, even during such portion of the time as he was not himself personally engaged in the work. Price v. Hong Kong Tea Co., 2 F. & F. 466.

Members of Society against Committee.]—By the rules of a society for the protection of trade, the professed object of which was to watch the progress of measures through parliament affecting the trade interests, and to protect its members from the practices of the fraudulent and dishonest, the committee had the appointment of the printer and stationer, to be elected from among the members of the society: and to the committee was to be referred the defraying of the expenses, and the applying and the disposing of the moneys of the society. And it was provided by the rules that 10*l.* should be left in the secretary's hands, to meet the current expenses; but that all orders for the payment of money should be drawn by the secretary upon the treasurer at a committee meeting. C. was appointed printer and stationer to the society, and shortly afterwards paid his subscription. The defendants, who were members of the committee, passed the resolutions for the orders for printing and stationery, which were supplied by C.:—Held, that he was not precluded by the rules from suing the defendants, as the rules did not create a partnership between the members of the society; and that it was not to be inferred from the rules that C. looked to the fund and not to the parties who gave the orders. Caldicott v. Griffiths, 8 Ex. 890; 23 L. J., Ex. 54; 1 C. L. R. 715.

Surveyor's Fees.]—On taxation of a bill of costs, the master allowed an item in respect of surveyor's charges, calculated according to "Ryde's scale," by which a commission of from one-half to 1 per cent. on the amount of the purchase-money, according to the nature of the case, is allowed. A summons to review the taxation in respect of this item was dismissed. Att.-Gen. v. Drapers' Co., L. R. 9 Eq. 69; 21 L. T. 651.

No custom exists by which surveyors engaged in compensation cases on the compulsory purchase of property are entitled to be remunerated on a percentage of the sum awarded, according to Ryde's scale. Debenham v. King's College, Cambridge, 1 Cab. & E. 438.

Quantity Surveyor's Fees.]—The plaintiff, a quantity surveyor, was employed by an architect on behalf of the building owner to take out quantities. The defendant tendered for the work to be done, and in such tender inserted the surveyor's fees among his charges, as payable by him out of the first moneys received by him. His tender was accepted, and he received payments on account. Evidence was given at the trial on behalf of the plaintiff of a custom in the building trade in such cases for the builder to pay the surveyor's fees; but the judge held that there was no privity of contract between the parties and nonsuited the plaintiff:—Held, that the custom was good, and that the nonsuit must be set aside. North v. Bassett, 61 L. J., Q. B. 177; [1892] 1 Q. B. 333; 66 L. T. 189; 40 W. R. 223; 56 J. P. 389.

The owner of a house desiring to make alterations, employed an architect to prepare plans. The architect having done so, employed the plaintiff, a surveyor, to take out the quantities which were lithographed, and sent to various builders—including the defendant and his son, who were in partnership—to invite tenders, the circular informing them that the builder whose contract was accepted should pay the plaintiff's fees. The defendant and his son had themselves, previously to the employment of an architect, prepared a plan for the owner, but one with which he was not satisfied. The tender of the defendant and his son was the lowest; but, it being greatly in excess of the expenditure contemplated by the owner, the plaintiff prepared a bill of reduction, but this reduced plan the owner also considered too expensive, and then employed the defendant (whose son had since died) to execute a modification of the original plan prepared in his office. The works were eventually executed by the defendant under a contract, in which it was agreed between the owner and the defendant that the defendant should not be liable for the plaintiff's fees. The plaintiff brought an action for his fees against the defendant, relying on a custom of the building trade, by which the builder whose tender is accepted, or who is employed to carry out the plans, or any modification of them, is directly liable for the surveyor's fees, the owner being liable, if the work is abandoned altogether, or he adopts an entirely independent plan. Evidence to support this custom was given, but one of the plaintiff's witnesses stated that, in his opinion, the liability depended on the agreement between the owner and the builder. The defendant's foreman stated that the works were carried out according to the defendant's own original plan, and that the plaintiff's calculations were not used at all for them. The plaintiff's witnesses stated that there was the strongest similarity between the work as carried out and the plaintiff's reduced plan:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover. Taylor v. Hall, Ir. R. 4 C. L. 467.

Appraiser — Necessity of Licence.] — To a declaration for work the defendant pleaded, that the work consisted of an appraisement of personal property, which the plaintiff appraised in expectation of reward to be therefore paid by the defendant to him, without being duly licensed according to 46 Geo. 3, c. 43:—Held, that the plea was sufficient, without stating that the plaintiff did the work as an appraiser, as it followed the words of the statute. Palk v. Force, 12 Q. B. 666; 17 L. J., Q. B. 299; 12 Jur. 797.

On Assignment of Contract.]—The defendant contracted with B. and C. for machinery to be made by them for him, and while the work was in progress paid money on account. Before the machinery was finished B. and C. assigned it to the plaintiff. This circumstance was communicated by the plaintiff to the defendant who said that the plaintiff must go on with the work, and that he should see him paid. The machinery having been completed and delivered:—Held, that the plaintiff might sue for the price of such parts of it as had been made by him after the assignment. Oldfield v. Lowe, 9 B. & C. 73; 7 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 142.

Two persons contracted with a railway company to execute certain works, and after some progress had been made with the works a judgment creditor of one of the contractors took in execution his share of the plant and effects, which the sheriff sold and assigned to the other contractor; the other contractor assigned the interest of the firm in the contract and all the effects and moneys due or to become due in respect of the same, to a third person by way of security, with power to such assignee to enter on the works and take possession and execute the contract. The assignee afterwards took possession of the works, and proceeded to complete them. The company had notice of the execution and sale by the sheriff of the property of one contractor, and of the assignment to the other, and by the other to the assignee; and the company allowed the works to be continued by the two latter persons respectively, and made payments to them on account. The assignee having, after the insolvency of his assignor, filed a bill in equity against the company for an account of what was due from the company in respect of the contract:—Held, that the subsequent prosecution of the works by the other contractor or his assignee did not necessarily involve any new contract with the company, but was consistent with that theretofore made; and that the contractor, or his assignee, who, without objection from the company, prosecuted the works, could sustain a suit against the company for payment of what had become due from them in respect of the works done under the contract. Aspinall v. L. & N. W. Ry., 11 Hare, 325; 1 W. R. 518.

A. and B. having entered into a joint agreement with a railway company to execute a contract for the construction of a tunnel upon the line, A. assigned all his right and interest in the contract to B., and the latter agreed to pay A. a given sum on the completion of the contract. After this agreement had been entered into between A. and B., it became necessary to alter the levels of the line, and B. by agreement with the company, abandoned the contract, and another was entered into between the company and other persons, under which the tunnel at the altered level was completed:—Held, that A. was not in a position, upon the completion of the substituted contract, to maintain an action against B. for the payment of the sum stipulated to be paid by his agreement with A. Humphreys v. Jones, 5 Ex. 952; 20 L. J., Ex. 88.

A., employed by B. to transport goods to a foreign market, delegated the entire employment to C., who performed it without the privity of B.:—Held, that C. could not recover from B. compensation for such service. Schmaling v. Thomlinson, 6 Taunt. 147; 1 Marsh. 500. And see Cull v. Backhouse, 6 Taunt. 148, n.; and Guy v. Gower, 2 Marsh. 273.

Employment by One Person for Another.]—When one man employs another to do work for a third party, for whose benefit, it is known, the work is to be, and such third party gives instructions about it, there is not, even primâ facie, an implied contract in the first employer to pay: but the question is whether, on the whole, he led the person employed to understand that he, and not the third party, was to pay for the work. Chidley v. Norris, 3 F. & F. 228.

A. having a patent for spinning machinery, received an order from B. to have some spinning frames made for him. A. employed C. to make the machines for B., informing B. that he had done so. After the machines had been completed, A. ordered them to be altered; they were afterwards completed according to the new order, and packed up in boxes for B., and C. informed B. that they were ready; but B. refused to accept them:—Held, that C. could not recover the price from B. in an action for work and labour, or materials. Atkinson v. Bell, 2 M. & Ry. 292; 8 B. & C. 277; 6 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 258.

Earnings of Personal Labour by Undischarged Bankrupt.]—The plaintiff, who was an architect, sued for remuneration in respect of employment under a contract made in 1877, and for damages for an alleged wrongful dismissal from such employment in 1880. The plaintiff was adjudicated bankrupt in 1878, and had never obtained his discharge:—Held, that the cause of action for remuneration and damages passed to the trustee, and that the proper course was to add him as co-plaintiff in the action, and give him the conduct of the action. Emden v. Carte, 51 L. J., Ch. 41; 17 Ch. D. 768; 44 L. T. 636—C. A. Affirming 29 W. R. 600.

2. When Contract Implied.

General Rule.]—Services, however long continued, create no claim for remuneration without a bargain for them, express or implied, from circumstances shewing an understanding on both sides that there should be payment. Reeve v. Reeve, 1 F. & F. 280.

The plaintiff, in a letter, proposed to take a lease of the defendant's house for a term of years, if the defendant would carry out certain alterations. A correspondence and interviews followed, and it was ultimately agreed that the alterations should be made, the plaintiff to pay 75*l.* towards them. The plaintiff wished to have the drawing-room painted in a particular way, and the defendant consented that the plaintiff should send in his own workmen to paint it, which he accordingly did, and also laid down gas pipes, with the defendant's consent. Ultimately the plaintiff was prevented from taking possession of the house owing to the default of the defendant in carrying out the alterations to be performed by him, and brought an action for breach of the agreement, with the common counts for work done. The correspondence disclosed no agreement sufficient to satisfy the Statute of Frauds:—Held, that the plaintiff could, under the common counts, recover for the value of the work done by the defendant's consent. Pulbrook v. Lawes, 45 L. J., Q. B. 178; 1 Q. B. D. 284; 34 L. T. 95.

The employing of a professional person implies an undertaking to remunerate him, but the inference may be rebutted by circumstances. Manson v. Baillie, 2 Macq. H. L. 80.

A defendant employed the plaintiffs to find a purchaser or mortgagee of an estate. Thereupon they went down to the estate, valued it, put it in their books, advertised it in their circulars and in newspapers, and took some journeys, and had communications about it, and ultimately, while negotiating with one N. upon the matter, the plaintiffs and the defendants agreed that a letter should be written by the plaintiffs to N., and that if such letter induced N. to become purchaser or mortgagee, the plaintiffs should be paid 100*l.* N. ultimately became mortgagee, but denied that he was influenced in any way by the letter:—Held, that the plaintiffs could not recover on a quantum meruit for work and labour, with particulars claiming commission as agreed. Green v. Mules, 30 L. J., C. P. 343.

The plaintiff repaired certain leasehold premises, held by the defendant under a covenant to repair, on a parol promise by the defendant to assign him his lease:—Held, that the defendant upon refusal to assign, was liable to an implied assumpsit to pay the plaintiff for such repairs. Gray v. Hill, R. & M. 420; 27 R. R. 766.

A lessor contracted to pay his tenant at a valuation, for certain erections pursuant to a plan to be agreed on, provided they were completed in two months: no plan was agreed on, and after the condition broken, the lessor encouraged the lessee to proceed with the work:—Held, that the lessee might recover as for work and labour, on an implied promise arising out of so many of the facts as were applicable to the new agreement. Burn v. Miller, 4 Taunt. 745; 14 R. R. 655. See also Thorn v. London Corporation, ante, col. 1784.

Work obtained by Fraud.]—When a person has, by fraud, induced another to perform a service for him, intending not to pay for the performance of it, still there is a liability implied by the law which may be enforced in the same way as an obligation arising out of an express contract. Rumsey v. N. E. Ry., 14 C. B. (N.S.) 641; 32 L. J., C. P. 244; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 208; 8 L. T. 666; 11 W. R. 911.

When Written Agreement Unstamped.]—If an agreement cannot be read for want of a stamp, the plaintiff cannot recover the value of the work and labour, although the defendant may have had the benefit of it. Hughes v. Budd, 8 D. P. C. 478.

Agent's Authority Rescinded.] — When an agent employed for an agreed commission to sell land at a given price succeeds in finding a purchaser at the stipulated price, but the principal, from whatever cause, declines to sell, and rescinds the agent's authority, the latter is entitled to sue for a reasonable remuneration for his work and labour, and is not bound to resort to a special action for the wrongful withdrawal of the authority. In such a case, a contract to pay what is reasonable is implied by law; it is not a question for the jury. Prickett v. Badger, 1 C. B. (N.S.) 96; 26 L. J., C. P. 33; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 66; 5 W. R. 117.

Promise of a Present.]—A request to a tradesman to shew the defendant's house, and the defendant would make him a handsome present, is evidence of a contract to pay a reasonable compensation for the work and labour bestowed in that service. Jewry v. Busk, 5 Taunt. 302.

Promise of what is Right and Proper.] — Where a person performed a work for a committee, under a resolution entered into by them, "that any service to be rendered by him should be taken into consideration, and such remuneration made as should be deemed right" :—Held, that an action would not lie to recover a recompense for such work, as the resolution only imported that the committee was to judge whether any remuneration was due. Taylor v. Brewer, 1 M. & S. 290 ; 21 R. R. 831. S. P., Briant v. Flight, 5 M. & W. 111 ; 8 L. J., Ex. 189. Owen v. Bowen, 4 Car. & P. 93.

On a parol contract with a public board to perform work and labour for whatever "recompense the board might allow as right and proper," an action will lie to recover a reasonable recompense, although the board tenders what they consider right and proper. Bird v. M'Gahey, 2 Car. & K. 707.

Services with a View to a Legacy.]—If a man undertakes to perform services without any view to a reward, but with a view to a legacy, he cannot after the death of a person for whom they were performed set up a demand for such services against the testator's estate. Le Sage v. Cousmaker, 1 Esp. 187.

A surgeon for several years bestowed surgical attendance on a lady, but, expecting that she would amply compensate him by a legacy, sent in no bill. She died, and left him nothing, whereupon he sued her executors, claiming 500*l*. The jury awarded him 250*l*. The court refused to disturb the verdict. In such a case, to disentitle the party to sue, there must be something more than the mere expectation of a legacy. Baxter v. Gray, 4 Scott (N.R.) 374 ; 3 Man. & G. 771 ; 11 L. J., C. P. 63.

3. Under Special Contracts.

a. Generally.

Printer—Compositors—Time or Scale.]—An agreement between master printers and journeymen, fixing the amount and mode of calculating the work done and the price to be paid for it, contained the following rule : Standing advertisements or stereo blocks, if forming a complete page, or when collected together making one or more complete pages, in a wrapper or an advertising sheet of a magazine or a review, not to be chargeable ; the compositor to charge only for his time in making them up. The remainder of the matter in such wrapper or advertising sheet, including standing advertisements or stereo blocks not forming a complete page, to be charged for by the compositor, and cast up according to the 8th and 20th articles of the scale as they may respectively apply :—Held, that when there were complete pages containing one of several standing advertisements, the compositor was to charge only for time, but that he was entitled to charge according to the scale whenever a page was composed in part of standing materials and in part of new matter. Hill v. Levey, 3 H. & N. 702 ; 28 L. J., Ex. 80 ; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 589 ; 6 W. R. 691—Ex. Ch.

Payment in Shares—Winding-up of Company.]—A contractor with a company was by his contract bound, at the option of the company, to accept payment to a certain amount in shares :—Held, that after the company had been ordered to be wound up, the contractor could not be called upon to accept payment in shares, the option not having been exercised till after the winding-up. Sharon, Ex parte, Alexandra Park Co., In re, 12 Jur. (N.S.) 482 ; 14 W. R. 855.

Fraud by Employer.]—A. engaged to convey away rubbish for B. at a specified sum, under a fraudulent representation by B. as to the quantity of the rubbish which was to be so conveyed : —Held, that in an action for the value of the work actually done, A. could recover only according to the terms of the special contract ; although when he discovered the fraud, he might have repudiated the contract, and sued B. for deceit. Selway v. Fogg, 5 M. & W. 83 ; 8 L. J., Ex. 199.

b. Deviations and Alterations.

Payment for—In what Cases.]—Where work is done under a special contract and for estimated prices, and there is a deviation from the original plan by the consent of the parties, the estimate is not excluded, but is the rule of payment so far as the special contract can be traced ; and for any excess beyond it the party is entitled to his quantum meruit. Robson v. Godfrey, Holt, 236 ; 1 Stark. 275 ; 17 R. R. 629.

Where a tradesman finishes work differing from the specification agreed on, he is not entitled to the actual value of the work, but only to the agreed price, minus such a sum as it would take to complete the work according to specification. Thornton v. Place, 1 M. & Rob. 218.

A contractor agreed with an incorporated company to do certain works, the contract being under seal. In this contract there was a stipulation that if the company should think proper, at any time, to make any addition to the original works, the company should be at liberty to do so on giving him written instructions for that purpose, signed by the principal or assistant engineer. A verbal arrangement was afterwards made by the principal engineer for the execution of certain extension works, allowing for a variance in the prices, but stipulating, with the exception of that variance, all the provisions of the contract should be considered as applicable to the extension work. This work was executed by the contractor under this arrangement :—Held, that he could not afterwards reject the terms of the contract, and claim remuneration for the work as upon a quantum meruit, nor could he ask in equity for accounts to be taken independently of the contract. Ranger v. G. W. Ry., 5 H. L. Cas. 72.

Where work is undertaken on contract at a given price, the employer is not liable to any greater amount by consenting to alterations from the original plan, unless he is either expressly informed, or must necessarily, from the nature of the work, be aware that the alteration will increase the expense. Lovelock v. King, 1 M. & Rob. 60.

If a builder undertakes a work of specified dimensions and with specified materials, and deviates from the specification, he cannot recover upon a quantum valebat for the work, labour and materials. Ellis v. Hamlen, 3 Taunt. 52 ; 12 R. R. 595.

If A. agrees to make an article of certain materials for a stipulated price, but puts in materials of a better kind, he is not at liberty on that account to charge more than a stipulated price, nor can he require the article to be returned because the buyer will not pay an increased price on account of the better materials. Wilmot v. Smith, 3 Car. & P. 453.

Where, in the progress of building work done under a contract, some process more expensive than contracted for was ordered by the architect with the knowledge of the employer, and the builder's sub-contractor was told it was to be paid extra for :—Held, that there was evidence of a contract to pay him extra for it, and of authority in the architect to make such a contract with him. Wallis v. Robinson, 3 F. & F. 307.

Alteration of Contract by Architect.]—The plaintiff entered into a written contract with the defendant to build a house on the defendant's land upon certain terms and conditions therein contained, the contract containing certain provisions for payment on the certificates of the defendant's architect, and also as to orders for extra work, the fulfilment of the provisions being, in fact, a condition precedent to the plaintiff's right of payment. The agreement, while in the custody of the architect and after execution by the plaintiff was altered in a material particular, the alteration having reference to the provision with regard to extras. The plaintiff built the house and received payment from time to time for the work so done by him ; the payments were made according to the provisions of the contract, and, in fact, the contract was fully acted on by both parties to it. Payment for extra work under the contract being refused by the defendant on the ground that the plaintiff had not complied with the terms relating thereto, which were a condition precedent to his right to recover for the same, the plaintiff brought an action upon a quantum meruit on the ground that the agreement having been altered by defendant was void, or at least that the defendant could not in any way avail himself of it as against the plaintiff, and that, therefore, the plaintiff could recover on a quantum meruit for extras actually done by him. The written agreement was put in evidence at the trial by the plaintiff himself :—Held, that this being an action on an executed contract for work done on real property, the plaintiff was bound to shew what the terms of the contract were, and that, therefore, the document, though altered in a material part by the defendant's architect, was either still an instrument binding upon the plaintiff, or at least might be looked at to see what the terms were ; and that the plaintiff could not recover on a quantum meruit. Pattison v. Luckley, 44 L. J., Ex. 180 ; L. R. 10 Ex. 330 ; 33 L. T. 360 ; 24 W. R. 224.

—— Authority to Vary or Alter.]—An obligor, who binds himself to perform certain works according to a specification and other detailed and working drawings, to be furnished during the progress of the works, with power for the obligee, by his surveyor, to direct additions or omissions, must, in a plea of performance quoad such parts in which no orders were given by the surveyor to vary and deviate from the original plan, shew an authority in the surveyor to give such directions, or aver that the deviation or variation was an omission or an addition. Rex v. Peto, 1 Y. & J. 37.

Action on an agreement to build a house according to certain drawings, plans and specifications, and to the satisfaction of the plaintiff, and with the best materials, alleging as breaches that the defendant did not build the house to the satisfaction of the plaintiff, and that he did not perform the work with the best materials ; the defendant pleaded, that he deviated from the drawings by the direction of the plaintiff's architect :—Held, that this plea was bad on general demurrer, the architect not being shewn to be the plaintiff's agent to bind him by any deviation from the drawings. Cooper v. Langdon, 9 M. & W. 60 ; 1 D. (N.S.) 392 ; 11 L. J., Ex. 222.

A contract for the construction of a railway made between a firm of contractors, and the company formed for the purpose of making and working the railway, provided that the company should not, under any circumstances, be liable to pay to the contractors a greater sum than 1,745,000*l*., and that the contractors should execute and provide, not only all the works and materials mentioned in the first schedule thereto, but also all such other works and materials as in the judgment of the company's engineer-in-chief were necessarily or reasonably implied in and by, or inferred from, such specification, and the plans and sections of the railway and works. The contract also provided that all accounts relating to the contract should be settled by the company's engineer-in-chief, and his certificate of the ultimate balance of the accounts should be final and conclusive on both parties. After the railway had been constructed the contractors filed a bill claiming to be entitled to payment in respect of extra works which they had executed under the directions of the company's engineer-in-chief, alleging that they had done so upon the faith of his promise that they should be paid for the same, but for which he refused to certify: —Held, that the contractors were bound by the contract to complete the railway for a specified sum ; that the company's engineer-in-chief had no power to alter the terms of the contract ; and that the contractors had agreed to abide by the certificates of the company's engineer-in-chief. Sharpe v. San Paulo Brazilian Ry., L. R. 8 Ch. 605, n. ; 27 L. T. 669. Affirmed L. R. 8 Ch. 597 ; 29 L. T. 9.

c. Extras.

Contract with Company—Not under Seal.]—An incorporated company entered into a contract, under seal, with A. for the execution of works according to the terms of a specification annexed, which contained provisions for extra work. A. entered upon the work under the superintendence of the company's engineer, and also under such superintendence, and with his approbation, executed extra works, which, however, could not be considered as coming within the provisions of the contract under seal. A. afterwards made a claim upon the company to a much larger amount than that specified by the contract, and the directors paid him a sum generally on account. By 8 & 9 Vict. c. 16, s. 97, the directors of such a company may make parol contracts without the same being reduced into writing, where such contract would, if entered into between private persons, be valid ; and by s. 98, the directors are bound to enter minutes of such contracts in a book ; and, by one of the clauses of the special act of the company under which it was incorporated, three directors constituted a quorum :—Held, that as there was not any evidence that the company had contracted for this extra work under seal, or that the company had entered into a contract for the same under the terms of their special act, or of any general act authorising the same, the company was not liable to A. for the extra work so performed by him. Homersham v. Wolverhampton Waterworks Co., 6 Railw. Cas. 790 ; 6 Ex. 137.

A contractor agreed with an incorporated company to do certain works, the contract being under seal. In this contract there was a stipulation that if the company should think proper at any time to make any addition to the original works the company should be at liberty to do so on giving him written instructions for that purpose, signed by the principal or assistant engineer. A verbal arrangement was afterwards made by the principal engineer for the execution of certain extension works, allowing for a variance in the prices, but stipulating that with the exception of that variance all the provisions of the contract should be considered as applicable to the extension work. This work was executed by the contractor under this arrangement:—Held, that he could not afterwards reject the terms of the contract and claim remuneration for the work, as upon a quantum meruit, nor could he ask in equity for accounts to be taken, independently of the contract. Ranger v. G. W. Ry., 5 H. L. Cas. 72.

Work comprised in Specification, though not Mentioned.]—A. agreed to build a house for B., who prepared a specification, which contained particulars of the different portions of the work. Under the head of "Carpenter and joiner," there were specified the scantling of the joists for the different floors, the rafters, ridge, and wall, but no mention was made of the flooring. The specification stated that "the whole of the materials mentioned or otherwise in the foregoing particulars, necessary for the completion of the work, must be provided by the contractor." At the foot of the specification A. signed a memorandum, whereby he agreed with B. "to do all the works of every kind mentioned and contained in the foregoing particulars, according, in every respect, to the drawings furnished, or to be furnished, for 1,100*l*. The house to be completed and fit for occupation by the 1st of August, 1858." A. prepared the flooring boards, brought them to the premises, and planed and fitted them to the several rooms, but refused to lay them down without extra payment, because the flooring was not mentioned in the specification, whereupon B. put an end to the contract, took possession of the works, and proceeding to complete the building, used the flooring boards so prepared and fitted by A.:—Held, first, that A. was not entitled to recover for the flooring as an extra, because it was included in the contract, though not mentioned in the specification. Williams v. Fitzmaurice, 3 H. & N. 844.

Held, secondly, that A. could not maintain trover for the flooring boards left on the premises by him, and subsequently used by B. Ib.

When Written Orders stipulated for.]—Where a clause in a contract stipulated that for all extra work written directions should be given, under the hand of the architect:—Held, that a sketch made by the architect, and not signed by him, was not such a direction as complied with the contract. Myers v. Sarl, 30 L. J., Q. B. 9; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 97; 9 W. R. 96.

When in a builder's written contract it is stipulated therein that any order given for extras shall be in writing, there must be something beyond an order to entitle a person to obtain payment for such extras. Franklin v. Darke, 3 F. & F. 65; 6 L. T. 291.

A. contracted with B., that B. shall, within a certain time, build A. a ship, complete and ready for sea; and that the price in the contract mentioned should be inclusive of all charges for the ship, finished and fitted perfectly in every respect; and that no charges should be demanded for extras, but any additions which might be made, by order in writing of A.'s agent, should be paid for at a price previously agreed upon in writing. During the progress of the building of the ship, several additions and alterations were made by the direction of A.'s agent, but no written order was given for them. When the ship was nearly completed, A.'s agent gave B. notice that he should require from him a supply of a quantity of articles for the use of the ship. It was stipulated in the contract that the ship should be fitted, formed, and equipped in manner similar in all respects to that which is practised with ships of the same class in her majesty's navy under contracts with the Admiralty. A.'s agent, upon B. at first declining this last-mentioned quantity of goods, afterwards arranged with B. that they might be supplied by B., without prejudice to the question, whether B. was bound to supply them under his contract, and B. supplied them accordingly:—Held, that B. could not recover for extras, alterations or additions made during the course of the performance of the contract, unless where he had received previous written orders, agreeably to the contract. Russell v. Sa Da Bandeira (Viscount), 13 C. B. (N.S.) 149; 32 L. J., C. P. 68; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 718; 7 L. T. 804.

As the last-mentioned parcel of goods must be considered to have been delivered on board after the ship was delivered and completed:—Held, that A. was liable for this quantity of goods independently of the contract. Ib.

An act empowered a corporation to scour an inland harbour, and they did so by taking up the mud in barges, and letting it out at the mouth of the harbour, so as to be carried down the river. The corporation employed the plaintiff to excavate and remove certain estimated quantities of earth down the river at certain prices, the contract (not noticing the scouring process) providing only for extra work ordered by the engineer of the plaintiff in writing. In consequence of the cleansing process, which was continued while the plaintiff was engaged in the work, the quantity of soil he had to remove was vastly increased by great deposits of mud. The plaintiff applied for and was refused any additional remuneration, and after the work was completed sued the corporation for compensation, but the case of the plaintiff, as stated at the trial, did not shew that the mode of cleansing adopted by the corporation was unusual or unreasonable, and, on the contrary, it appeared rather to be a proper mode of carrying out the powers of the act:—Held, that, as it did not appear that the process was unlawful or wrongful, it was no cause of action. Rigby v. Bristol Corporation, 29 L. J., Ex. 359.

Account directed of extra works done by a contractor under his contract:—Held, not to authorise an account to be taken of works (other than the specified works) done with the privity of employer without written instructions, but liberty was given to bring an action in respect of works done without such instructions. Nixon v. Taff Vale Ry., 7 Hare, 136. Affirmed sub nom. Taff Vale Ry. v. Nixon, 1 H. L. Cas. 111.

By a contract for the execution of railway works after specifying certain works to be done for a gross sum, it was provided that extra works which the company or the engineer should by any writing under his hand require to be executed, should be deemed to be included in the contract, and should be paid for at a certain rate, and that the contractor should not be entitled to make any claim for any alteration or addition which he might make without such written and signed instructions :—Held, that a suit for an account of the moneys due to the contractor in respect of works done under the contract was a proper subject of jurisdiction in equity. Ib.

A builder agreed, by a written contract under seal, with a board of guardians, to build a workhouse according to a certain plan for a certain sum ; and any deviations from the plan which the board or their architect might order in the course of the work were to be valued in a particular manner, and the value added to or deducted from the stipulated price as the case might be ; but it was expressly provided that no allowance was to be made to the builder for additional work, unless the same should be ordered in writing. After the builder had been paid for all the work done pursuant to the written agreement, he filed a bill against the board, alleging that much additional work had been done with the knowledge and sanction of the board, and on the faith of an assurance from their agent that no written order for it was necessary, and praying an account and payment of what was due in respect of such work. On a general demurrer to the bill :—Held, first, that the subject-matter of the claim was not of itself within the jurisdiction of this court ; and, secondly, that the alleged fraud on the part of the board in taking advantage of the want of a written order to avoid paying for work which they had sanctioned, would not give the court jurisdiction, and that bills to enforce parol contracts within the Statute of Frauds, on the ground of part performance, were different, the court having jurisdiction in those cases over the original subject-matter, viz., the contract, and the question being whether that jurisdiction was ousted by the want of a writing, whereas, here the attempt was to make the want of a writing the ground of jurisdiction. Kirk v. Bromley Union, 2 Ph. 640 ; 17 L. J., Ch. 127 ; 12 Jur. 85.

—— Insufficiency of Stamp — Evidence.]—When work had been done under a written contract not admissible for want of a stamp, evidence of extra work cannot be given without proof of the written contract, and if that is inadmissible the judge cannot look at it for the purpose of seeing whether or not the proposed evidence refers to it. Buxton v. Cornish, 1 D. & L. 585 ; 12 M. & W. 421 ; 13 L. J., Ex. 91 ; 8 Jur. 46 ; S. P., Jones v. Howell, 4 D. P. C. 176, and Vincent v. Cole, 3 Car. & P. 481.

Assessment of Amount—Condition Precedent.]—In a contract for building steamers (to the satisfaction of the engineer), to be completed within six months, with penalties for delay, it was provided that the engineer might allow an extension of time, and might also order additions or alterations by orders in writing, and that the value of such additions or alterations should be ascertained, and added to or deducted from the contract price, as the case might be ; and further, that any dispute or difference as to such additions or alterations should be referred to the engineer, whose decision or valuation should be final. Additions and alterations were duly ordered, and the steamers were not completed in time. In an action for extras, the value of which had not been ascertained by the engineer or any third party, the employer pleaded a set-off for penalties for delay, and the contractor replied that the additions ordered made it impossible to complete the vessels in time :—Held, that the action was not maintainable until the value of the additions had been ascertained. Westwood v. Secretary of State for India, 1 N. R. 262 ; 7 L. T. 736 ; 11 W. R. 261.

See also ARBITRATION (CONDITION PRECEDENT).

Liability for—Construction of Contract.]—A. agreed to do for B. & Co. all the woodwork on an iron ship which they were building for M. & Co., according to a tender, the whole to be completed for 38,000*l.* The contract or tender contained the following clause : "Any important work not mentioned in this tender that may be required to be done by the owners to be paid for by them, in addition to the amount herein specified." The work was undertaken by A. for B. & Co., upon the faith of a guarantee by C., as follows : "In consideration of your contracting with Messrs. B. & Co. for the woodwork of an iron ship now building by them for Messrs. M. & Co. we hereby guarantee the payment to you according to the contract." The word "important" in the contract was inserted by A. with the consent of B. & Co. after the guarantee was signed by C. : —Held, that the contract bound B. & Co. for extra work done, they being the persons referred to therein as the owners, and that the insertion of the word "important" had no material effect upon the liability of C. under the guarantee. Andrews v. Lawrence, 19 C. B. (N.S.) 768.

Action by Sub-Contractor.]—A sub-contractor suing an employer for work extra the original contract, must put in that contract, if in writing, and also prove a separate and distinct contract with the employer to do the work sued for. Eccles v. Southern, 3 F. & F. 142.

Under a Certificate.]—See post, col. 1813.

4. COMPLETION OF CONTRACT.

Necessity of—No Claim for Unfinished Work.]—Upon an entire contract—as to repair a damaged chandelier and make it complete for 10*l.*—an action will not lie for the value of a partial repair, though such repair was beneficial to the defendant, and consisted partly in a supply of fresh materials, such materials not having been demanded back. Sinclair v. Bowles, 4 M. & Ry. 1 ; 9 B. & C. 92 ; 7 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 178.

Where A. contracts to do work and supply materials upon the premises of B. for a specific sum, to be paid on completion of the whole, A. is not entitled to recover anything until the whole work is completed, unless it is shewn that the performance of his contract was prevented by the default of B. Appleby v. Meyers, 36 L. J., C. P. 331 ; L. R. 2 C. P. 651 ; 16 L. T. 669—Ex. Ch. Reversing 14 W. R. 835. See also ante, col. 1783.

Time for Payment.]—Where A. contracts to do work on materials supplied to him by B. (as where he contracts to survey a parish and to set down the results of such survey in a map, upon paper furnished to him by B.), his right to sue for work and labour is complete as soon as he has finished the work, and has given B. a reasonable opportunity of ascertaining its correctness; and if (there being no contract for a specific price) he demands more for the work than a reasonable price, and refuses to deliver it except on payment of such larger price, that does not preclude him from suing for and recovering a reasonable price. Hughes v. Lenney, 5 M. & W. 183; 2 H. & H. 13; 8 L. J., Ex. 177.

Loss of Subject-Matter.]—The plaintiffs contracted with the defendant to erect machinery upon his building and premises, and in his occupation, for a specified sum, and to keep the whole in order under fair wear and tear for two years. When the machinery was only partly erected, a fire accidentally broke out in the buildings, and, without any fault by either party, destroyed both the buildings and machinery then erected thereon:—Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover anything in respect of any portion of the machinery which had been erected and destroyed, as the whole work contracted to be done by them had not been completed. Appleby v. Meyers, supra. S. P., Adlard v. Booth. 7 Car. & P. 108.

An action lies by a shipwright for work and labour done, and materials delivered in repairing a ship, though burnt in dock before the repairs are completed. Menetone v. Athawes, 3 Burr. 1592.

A contract was made for new boilers and parts of machinery for a ship, to be paid for by instalments on certificates of the plaintiffs' surveyor. Two instalments of 2,000*l.* were paid, when the ship was lost at sea:—Held, that the contract was substantially one for work and labour to be done by the defendant, and that the two payments of 2,000*l.* each were intended only to be paid on account of a contract to be performed as a whole, and that therefore as a full performance of the contract had been rendered impossible by the loss of the vessel, no property in any portion of the work certified by the inspector to have been properly done, and in respect of which the two sums were so respectively paid, had passed to the plaintiffs, so as to entitle them to recover in detinue for its detention. Anglo-Egyptian Navigation Co. v. Rennie, 44 L. J., C. P. 130; L. R. 10 C. P. 271, 571; 32 L. T. 467; 23 W. R. 626.

Held, also, that the plaintiffs could not recover back the two sums of 2,000*l.* or either of them in an action for money had and received. Ib.

Exoneration—Incapacity by Act of God.]—Incapacity by reason of the intervention of an act of God to perform personal service is an excuse for its non-performance, notwithstanding a covenant to serve absolute and unconditional in its terms, because the parties must be supposed to have contemplated the continuance of the covenantor's ability to perform the service as one of the conditions of the contract. Boast v. Forth, 38 L. J., C. P. 1; L. R. 4 C. P. 1; 19 L. T. 264; 17 W. R. 29.

In contracts to render services purely personal—as, for example, a contract by a musician to play at a concert—there is coupled a condition that the parties will be exonerated from the contract if the performance is prevented by inability resulting from the act of God. Robinson v. Davison, 40 L. J., Ex. 172; L. R. 1 Ex. 269; 24 L. T. 755; 19 W. R. 431.

Bankruptcy of Contractor before Completion—Substituted Price.]—A member of the Stock Exchange contracted with another member to purchase certain shares. Before completion the purchaser failed to meet his engagements, and was declared a defaulter on the Stock Exchange. By the rules of the Stock Exchange the price of shares, contracted to be bought or sold by such a defaulter, are to be fixed by the official assignee of the Stock Exchange, and the differences paid to or claimed from the assignee:—Held, that the price fixed by the assignee is substituted for the original contract, and is a liquidated sum due under the contract, and, therefore, that a bankruptcy petition may be founded upon a claim for such price. Ward, Ex parte, Ward, In re, 52 L. J., Ch. 73; 22 Ch. D. 132; 48 L. T. 332; 31 W. R. 112—C. A.

Performance Prevented or rendered Impracticable by Employer.]—The defendants employed an architect to draw a specification of a building, and he employed the plaintiff to make out the quantities; the plaintiff's work was to be paid for by the successful competitor for the building contract; but a dispute having arisen between the architect and the defendants, they refused to go on with the building, upon which the architect sent in his bill to them, together with the plaintiff's bill for making out the quantities; the defendants paid the architect's account only:—Held, that as the defendants had by their own acts rendered it impossible that the successful competitor should defray the plaintiff's charges, according to the understanding, they were liable to him for the amount of his charges. Moon v Witney Union, 3 Bing. (N.C.) 814; 5 Scott, 1; 3 Hodges, 206; 6 L. J., C. P. 305. See Planché v. Colburn, 8 Bing. 14; 1 M. & Sc. 51; 1 L. J., C. P. 7.

Where, by the terms of a contract, a service to be performed by A. for B. is to be paid for in goods, A. cannot declare for the value of the service, but must sue on the special contract. But if B. by his own act renders the delivery of the goods impossible, A. may sue for the value of the service. So if B. allows the goods to be sold under an execution against him. Keys v. Harwood, 2 C. B. 905; 15 L. J., C. P. 207.

A printer having agreed to print for the defendant a work which was to contain a dedication, to be thereafter sent to him, printed the work, and also the dedication, but on the latter being returned to him revised, discovered for the first time that it contained libellous matter, whereupon he refused to continue the printing of it; and on the defendant refusing to accept or pay for the work, without the dedication, brought an action against him for the price of the work, without the dedication:—Held, that the dedication being libellous, the printer was justified in refusing to publish it, and was entitled to recover the expense of printing the body of the work. Clay v. Yates, 1 H. & N. 73; 25 L. J., Ex. 237; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 908; 4 W. R. 557.

The defendant, a builder, contracted with the plaintiff, a building surveyor, that if the plaintiff would supply the quantities for a certain projected building, the defendant would, if he was accepted as the building contractor, pay the plaintiff out of the first instalment; the plaintiff furnished the quantities, but the defendant subsequently abandoned the building contract:—Held, first, that it was implied that the defendant should duly proceed with the building contract. M'Connell v. Kilgallen, 2 L. R., Ir. 119.

Held, secondly, that performance of his contract with the plaintiff having been rendered impossible by his own act, he was bound to pay the plaintiff for the quantities furnished. Ib.

A count stated that, by a deed between the plaintiff and the defendants acting under the Public Health Act, 1848, as the local board of health for a borough, the plaintiff contracted with them that he would execute and complete all the works mentioned in a specification annexed, in and about the constructing a sewer in the town, according to the specification and a plan prepared by a surveyor; the several portions of the works to be completed on or before the time mentioned in the specification, and to the satisfaction of the surveyor. And it was provided that if the plaintiff, from bankruptcy, insolvency, or any other cause whatever, should be prevented or delayed in proceeding with the works, or should not proceed to the satisfaction of the surveyor, it should be lawful for the local board, after three days' notice, signed by their clerk, to be given to the plaintiff of their intention so to do, to employ any other person to complete the work, and, at the expiration of the notice, the deed should, at the option of the local board, become void as to the plaintiff, and the amount already paid to him should be considered the full value of the works executed by him up to that time, and no further claim should be made for contract or additional works, and the materials at that time on the premises should become the property of the board without further payment for the same. And it was provided that one-fourth of the whole amount should be paid when one-third of the works should have been certified by the surveyor to have been completed to his satisfation, another fourth part when two-thirds of the works should have been so completed, another fourth part on completion of the works so certified, and the remaining part within two months from that time. Averment, that the plaintiff in part executed the works, and was ready to complete the works:—Held, that the declaration was good, since there was an implied contract on the part of the defendants to allow the plaintiff to complete the work subject to the provisions for determining the employment in the events mentioned. Davies v. Swansea Corporation, 8 Ex. 808; 22 L. J., Ex. 297.

—— Bankruptcy of Employer.]—A company employed a broker to dispose of their shares, on the terms that he should be paid 100*l.* down and 400*l.* in addition, upon the allotment of the whole of the shares of the company. The broker disposed of a considerable number of shares when the company was wound up:—Held, that the broker was prevented earning the 400*l.* by the act of the company, and was therefore entitled to recover a proportion of the 400*l.* Inchbald v. Western Neilgherry Coffee Co., 17 C. B. (N.S.) 733; 34 L. J., C. P. 15; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1129; 11 L. T. 345; 13 W. R. 95.

—— When Payment Conditional in Certain Events.]—An agreement was made between the plaintiff, who was an architect, and A., who was possessed of land, by which the plaintiff agreed to lay out the land for building purposes, and to make all the requisite plans, on the condition that he should make A. no charge for such services, but that, in the event of the land being disposed of for building purposes, the plaintiff should be appointed the architect on A.'s behalf, and parties building on the land should pay the plaintiff a percentage on the outlay, provided they did not employ him as their architect; but that, in the event of A. or his executors wishing to dispense with the plaintiff's services at any time, he or they should be at liberty to do so, on remunerating him for his time and trouble in making the preparations. The declaration alleged that the plaintiff had prepared all the plans, according to the agreement, and that the land had not been disposed of for building purposes; and that after the death of A. his executors dispensed with the further services of the plaintiff in respect of the contract, and put it out of their power to dispose of any part of the land for building purposes, whereby the plaintiff claimed to be paid for making the preparations:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover, as there was no understanding on the part of A. to dispose of the land for building purposes only; and the land not having in fact been so disposed of, the plaintiff was not, according to the contract, to be remunerated. Moffatt v. Laurie, 15 C. B. 583; 24 L. J., C. P. 56; 1 Jur., (N.S.) 283; 3 W. R. 252.

Mutual Abandonment.]—The plaintiff agreed with the defendant to prepare and issue advertisements and notices for the purpose of selling tickets to see a procession, and to use his best endeavours in selling them, being paid 10*l.* per cent. upon the proceeds of the tickets sold. The plaintiff issued the advertisements and notices, but before the sale of the tickets the defendant countermanded his authority to sell, and the plaintiff therefore sold none, but sent the applicants to the defendant. The plaintiff then brought an action for the work done:—Held, that he was not entitled to recover in this form of action, it not being shewn that the contract was mutually abandoned. De Bernardy v. Harding, 8 Ex. 821; 1 C. L. R. 884; 22 L. J., Ex. 340; 1 W. R. 415.

Readiness to Complete — Questions for the Jury.]—In an action by architects whose plans, after having been accepted, are rejected on the ground that the work cannot be done for the amount of their estimates, it is for the jury whether it is an express or implied condition of the contract, that the estimates shall be reasonably near the actual cost. Nelson v. Spooner, 2 F. & F. 613.

The plaintiffs declared upon a contract, by which they were to manufacture and fix complete for the defendant a copper necessary for the fitting up of a brewhouse, according to a specification; and the defendant was to permit the plaintiffs to put up the work, and pay for the same on the delivery and fixing up thereof; assigning as a breach that the defendant would not permit the plaintiffs further to proceed with and to complete the work, but discharged them therefrom. Upon the trial of an issue on the readiness of the plaintiffs to manufacture and complete the copper, it was left to the jury to say, upon the evidence, which party was in fault in occasioning the contract not to be carried into effect. Held, no misdirection. Pontifex v. Wilkinson, 1 C. B. 75.

The plaintiff contracted to fit up for the defendant a brewery at the house of a third person, the whole to be fixed complete for a certain sum, nothing being said about the time or mode of payment. When a portion of the work was done, the plaintiff refused to complete it without security, which the defendant refused to give. In an action against the defendant for not permitting the plaintiff to proceed with or complete the work, or paying for what was done, it was left to the jury to say by whose default the work was stopped. The jury having found a verdict for the defendant the court declined to interfere. Pontifex v. Wilkinson, 2 C. B. 349.

5. Subject to Certificates.

Architect's Certificate, Effect of.]—In a building contract, the architect's certificate is final, as between the builder and the building owner, but not as between the building owner and the architect himself. Rogers v. James, 56 J. P. 277—C. A.

When Certificate a Condition precedent.]—In a building contract it was provided that the contract should not be vacated by any additions or alterations, but that the price to be paid for such alterations should be settled by a surveyor, who was to be sole arbitrator in settling such price, and all disputes arising in or about the premises; and the employer agreed to pay certain proportions of the contract price upon receiving a certificate in writing, signed by the surveyor, testifying that certain portions of the building had been done, and his approval thereof, and the balance that should be found due after deducting the previous payments, within two months after receiving the surveyor's certificate that the whole of the works had been completed to his satisfaction:—Held, that the surveyor's certificate was a condition precedent to the builder's right to sue upon the contract in respect of alterations. Morgan v. Birnie, 3 M. & Scott, 76; 9 Bing. 672.

Where a building agreement contained a proviso that no instalment should be paid, unless the plaintiff delivered to the defendant a certificate, signed by the surveyor of the defendant, that the works were performed according to a specification:—Held, that the want of a certificate was a good defence under the general issue to an action for the instalments. Milner v. Field, 5 Ex. 829; 20 L. J., Ex. 68.

Upon an application for production by the defendant of an agreement between the plaintiff and the defendant, in order that it might be made a rule of court under the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, s. 17, it appeared that the agreement was for the erection of four houses by the plaintiff, which were to be inspected by S. and C., or some other architect or valuer, to be appointed by the defendant, who were to give a certificate of the progress and value of the works. The agreement contained a power for the defendant to employ other persons to execute the contract, if "the plaintiff should become bankrupt . . . or if there should be any unreasonable delay or unsatisfactory conduct on his part with regard to the erection of such buildings, or with regard to any work, matter or thing connected therewith: the fact of such delay or unsatisfactory conduct to be ascertained and decided by S. and C., or other the architect or valuer for the time being, against whose decisions there should be no appeal":—Held, rejecting the application, that the agreement was not a "submission to arbitration by consent," within s. 17, as the decision of the architect was not in the nature of a judicial proceeding, but was intended to be the sole foundation of any liability on the part of the defendant. Wadsworth v. Smith, 40 L. J., Q. B. 118; L. R. 6 Q. B. 332; 19 W. R. 797.

In an action on a builder's contract, which provided that all the works should be left complete and clear, to the satisfaction of the architect, and did not contain any provision for payment by instalments:—Held, that the completion of the works to the satisfaction of the architect was a condition precedent to the builder's right to recover on foot of the contract. Richardson v. Mahon, 4 L. R., Ir. 486.

Where by a contract an engineer is interposed between the parties to it, and made the absolute judge of the performance of the works, there is no right in the one party to demand payment, and no liability on the other to pay, throughout the contract, unless the condition of obtaining a valuation by the engineer and his certificate has been fulfilled. Scott v. Liverpool Corporation, 3 De G. & J. 334; 28 L. J., Ch. 230; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 104; 7 W. R. 153.

—— Condition Waived.]—By a building agreement between A. and B., it was stipulated that A. should complete for a specified price certain works on certain houses of B., the whole to be completed on a specified day, and to be done to the satisfaction of a surveyor named, upon whose approval payment was to be made. A. failed to complete the work. He sued B. on the agreement for the agreed price, and for a reasonable price according to measure and value. There was evidence, on the trial, that B. had resumed possession of the houses, and was so far enjoying the fruits of A.'s labour:—Held, that there was no evidence in support of the claim, for that he could not recover on the special count, not having fulfilled it; and that the mere fact of B.'s taking possession of his own land, on which the buildings had been erected, or where repairs had been done, or alterations made to a building thereon, did not afford an inference that he had dispensed with the conditions of the special agreement under which the works were done, or of a contract to pay for the work actually done according to measure and value. Munro v. Butt, 8 El. & Bl. 738; 4 Jur. (N.S) 1231.

Nature and Sufficiency of Certificate.]—Where the architect checked the builder's charges, and sent them to the employer:—Held, that this did not amount to such a certificate of satisfaction as to enable the builder to sue the employer, although he had not objected to pay, on the ground that no sufficient certificate had been rendered. Morgan v. Birnie, 3 M. & Scott, 76; 9 Bing. 672.

By a contract for building a borough gaol it was provided, that "no alterations should be made without the written authority of the architect, by whom the value of such alterations should be ascertained; and that no allowance for alterations should be made, unless the value of the same was ascertained at the time the work was done, and entered in a book, such entry to be submitted to and approved of by the architect." "That no payments should be made to the contractors, except on the production of a certificate from the architect, that a certain amount of work had been done, and that the architect should deliver his certificate thereof at the end of every fourteen days;" and "that the contractors should be entitled to receive at the end of every fourteen days the amount for which the architect should have given such certificate, the amount of such certificate to be less, by certain varying proportions, than the value of the work done, until ninety per cent. of the whole should be completed; that no further payments should be made to the contractors until three calendar months after the architect should have certified the completion of the whole work to his satisfaction, when one-half of the remainder should be paid, and the balance at the end of twelve months from the date of the architect's certificate of completion" :—Held, that the architect's certificate of final completion was sufficient, without mentioning the amount remaining due. Pashby v. Birmingham Corporation, 18 C. B. 2.

A building contract contained a clause for payment of the price of the building by instalments, with a proviso that, before each payment, the architect should certify that the works were carried out to his satisfaction :—Held, that the certificate need not be in writing. Roberts v. Watkins, 14 C. B. (N.S.) 592; 32 L. J., C. P. 291; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 128; 8 L. T. 460; 11 W. R. 783.

Who disqualified from giving Certificate.]—Where payments to a contractor are to be certified for by the engineer of a railway company, he is not disqualified from so doing on account of his having become lessee of the railway, at a rent depending on the amount so certified for. Hill v. South Staffordshire Ry., 11 Jur. (N.S.) 192; 12 L. T. 63—L.JJ.

A building contract contained a clause, appointing the architect arbitrator in respect of extra works; the architect had guaranteed to his employer that the total cost should not exceed a specific sum, but that fact had not been disclosed to the builder at the time when he signed the contract :—Held, that the guarantee was a material fact tending to influence the architect's decision, and as it was not disclosed to the builder, he was not bound by the submission to the architect's arbitration, and the court would perform the part of arbitrator in the matter. Kimberley v. Dick, 41 L. J., Ch. 38; L. R. 13 Eq. 1; 25 L. T. 476; 20 W. R. 49.

Where a builder by his contract bound himself to abide by the decision and certificates of an architect as to the amounts to be paid for his work, not knowing that the architect had given an assurance to the employer that the cost of the building should not exceed a specified amount, although he refused to guarantee that amount, the court did not consider that the decision of the architect made under such a bias as binding, but gave directions so as to ascertain under the authority of the court how much remained justly due to the builder. Kemp v. Rose, 1 Giff. 258; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 919.

Certificates are not Written Orders.]—A contract for the construction of large iron buildings for a lump sum, contained a clause, that no alterations or additions should be made without a written order from the employers' engineer, and no allegation by the contractors of knowledge of, or acquiescence in, such alterations or additions on the part of the employers, their engineers or inspectors, should be accepted or available as equivalent to the certificate of the engineer, or as in any way superseding the necessity of such certificate as the sole warrant for such alterations and additions. During the execution of the contract the contractors alleged it was impossible to cast certain iron trough-girders of a specified weight, and subsequently, they were allowed to erect girders of a much heavier weight; and the actual weights were entered in the engineer's certificates issued from time to time authorising interim payments. On the completion of the contract the contractors claimed a considerable amount in excess of the contract price for the extra weight of metal supplied :—Held, that the engineer's certificates were not written orders, and the claim was therefore excluded by the terms of the contract. Tharsis Sulphur and Copper Co. v. M'Elroy, 3 App. Cas. 1040—H. L. (Sc.)

By an agreement under seal between the plaintiff and the guardians of the poor, after reciting that he had proposed to contract to erect a workhouse and perform all the works particularised in a specification prepared by the architects for 5,500*l.*, the plaintiff agreed with the guardians that he would in a workmanlike manner do all the works mentioned in the specification, at the times mentioned, and would completely finish the whole by the 24th June, 1840. That if the architects should think proper to make any alterations or additions in the progress of the works, they should give to the plaintiff written instructions for the same, signed by them; and the plaintiff should not be considered as having authority to do such additional works without such written instructions. And the guardians agreed with the plaintiff that they should pay him 5,500*l.* at the rate of 75*l.* per cent. on the amount of the work done, and the remaining 25*l.* per cent. within thirty days from the full completion of the contract, provided that the plaintiff should not be entitled to receive any payment until the works on which such payments were made to depend should have been completed to the satisfaction of the architects, who should examine and make a valuation of the amount so completed from time to time, and certify the same to the defendants, after which the plaintiff should be entitled to receive the amount of payment at the rate aforesaid, which should be then due in respect of the work so certified to be completed. During the progress of the works, the architects from time to time delivered to the plaintiff certificates in the form of letters signed by them and addressed to the clerk of the board of guardians, stating that the board might safely advance l. to the plaintiff on account of works executed. Certificates in this form to the amount of 5,000*l.* were given, but in fact payments were made by the guardians to the amount of 6,300*l.* These payments were made generally in respect of the works actually done, without distinguishing the one description from the other. No written directions were given by the architects for the additional works, except that letters were in evidence signed, some by one of the architects, and others by both, in which allusion was incidentally made to some of the additional works in progress, and containing suggestions as to the mode of executing them, and save also that long after the works were complete, the architects, on the application of the plaintiff, made a valuation of the additional works, which they estimated at 3,133*l.*, and signed a paper stating that to be the amount of their valuation :—Held, first, that the deed, in requiring written directions, meant written directions before the additional work should be done, and that the certificates, letters and final valuation of the architects did not amount to such directions.

Lamprell v. Billericay Union, 3 Ex. 283; 18 L. J., Ex. 282.

Held, secondly, that the payments made on the certificates of the architects were to be treated as sums paid on account of whatever the plaintiff might eventually be entitled to recover, and the want of written directions being an answer to any claim in respect of the additional works, he could not apply any part of the 6,300*l.* in satisfaction of them. Ib.

Effect of Certificate upon Stipulation for Written Orders for Extras.]—A. engaged B. to build a market house, and the contract and conditions stipulated that no deviations in the way of extras or omissions should be made without the written authority of an architect, and that they should be priced at the contract prices; that no claim should be made for extra or additional works without the production of the written order of the architect, signed when the intructions for them were given; that certain proportionate payments should be made from time to time, on the certificate of the architect, that the sum claimed was a proper one, the architect's opinion to be final as to the value; that if any dispute should arise as to the meaning of the specifications or contract, the architect was to define the meaning, that his decision as to the nature, quantity and quality of the works executed, or to be executed, should be final, and also his decision as regarded the value of the extras and additions, which was to be regulated by the contract of price. The architect gave a certificate that a certain sum, which included extras and additions, was to be regulated by the contract price. The architect gave a certificate that a certain sum, which included extras and additions, was proper to be paid:—Held, that neither party could raise the question of whether or not there was a sufficient order in writing; that a pump, drains, &c., though separately ordered, came within the meaning of works connected with the contract, and that the architect's decision as to their value was final. Goodyear v. Weymouth and Melcombe Regis Corporation, 1 H. & R. 67; 35 L. J., C. P. 12.

The plaintiff contracted to execute for the defendants specified works, and also all such additional works as should be deemed necessary by the defendants' principal or resident engineer. The contract deed provided that no extra works should be made without an order in writing, signed by the principal engineers or engineer, or by the resident engineer; that such extra works should be valued by such engineers or engineer, having regard to the schedule of prices in the specification, and that the decision of such engineers or engineer should be final as to the value of such extra works; that if any extra works should be ordered, the contractors should send in accounts thereof within one month; and that in default of their doing so, the defendants should not be bound to pay for them. That the defendant should not be bound to pay for any works, except upon the production of a certificate signed by some principal or resident engineer; and that the principal engineers or engineer for the time being should be the exclusive judges of the execution of the works and of everything connected with the contract; and that the certificates under their or his hands or hand should be binding and conclusive on both parties:—Held, that the engineers having given a certificate for the extra works, the defendants were precluded from setting up as defences to the action for the price of the extra works, that the extra works had not been ordered in writing, and that no accounts had been sent in for them, as required by the deed. Connor v. Belfast Water Commissioners, Ir. R. 5 C. L. 55.

Where a building contract contained a clause that no extras should be paid for unless ordered in writing, and weekly bills delivered for the same, and this had not been done, though extras had been executed:—Held, that the fact that the architect's certificate for the final balance awarded a certain sum in respect of extras did not entitle the builder to recover, beyond the certified sum, for extras in respect of which no written orders had been given nor weekly bills delivered. Brunsden v. Staines Local Board, 1 Cab. & E. 272. And see Lapthorne v. St. Aubyn, post, col. 1821.

When Certificate Conclusive.] — Where a contract for the erection of certain works provided that all extras or additions, payment for which the contractor should become entitled to under the said contract, should be paid for at the price fixed by the surveyor appointed by the contractor's employer:—Held, that this provision impliedly gave power to the surveyor to determine what were extras under the contract, and consequently that his certificate awarding a certain amount to be due for extras was conclusive. Richards v. May, 52 L. J., Q. B. 272; 10 Q. B. D. 400; 31 W. R. 708.

In an action for a balance due under a building contract, with a plea of set-off for penalties incurred by reason of delay, and a replication of hindrance and exoneration on the part of the defendant, evidence of such hindrance and exoneration admitted; but a certificate of the defendant's architect that the balance was due, is conclusive. Arnold v. Walker, 1 F. & F. 671.

In order to bind a contractor to the certificate or decision of an architect or engineer appointed by the party for whom the work is done, there must be very conclusive language in the contract. Lawson v. Wallasey Local Board, 52 L. J., Q. B. 302; 11 Q. B. D. 229; 47 L. T. 625. Affirmed, 52 L. J., Q. B. 309, n.; 48 L. T. 507; 47 J. P. 437—C. A.

In an action on a builder's contract, which provided that all the works should be left complete and clear, to the satisfaction of the architect, and did not contain any provision for payment by instalments:—Held, 1st. That the completion of the works to the satisfaction of the architect was a condition precedent to the builder's right to recover on foot of the contract. 2ndly. That he was not entitled to recover for the value of work done, as to which while incomplete, the architect had expressed approval so far as then partially executed, but which was not subsequently completed to the architect's satisfaction. Richardson v. Mahon, 4 L. R., Ir. 486.

—— Collusion — Deductions — Defective Work.]—An action is maintainable by a railway against a contractor for not doing brickwork of the specified thickness, although certified to have been so done by the company's engineers, in collusion with a sub-contractor; but the fraud or neglect of the engineer is material to be considered in regard to the question of damage, though not affecting the right of action against the contractor. S. E. Ry. v. Waiton, 2 F. & F. 457.

A builder agreed to repair a house according to certain plans and specification, and to the satisfaction of the architect, the work to be done under the architect's directions. By the specification the builder was to allow for the value of the old lead, and he alleged that he made this allowance in his estimate. The architect certified his satisfaction of the completion of the contract:—Held, that, in an action by the builder against the owner of the house for the money agreed to be paid by the latter, no evidence could be received that the work was not done according to the plans and specification, and that unless he could prove that he had informed the owner or the architect of his having allowed for the old lead in his estimate, he must deduct the value from the amount of his charge. Harvey v. Lawrence, 15 L. T. 571.

An English company, who owned a railway in Russia, entered into a contract for the manufacture and delivery to them of rails for their railway. The contract provided that a sample should be sent to the company's engineer for approval, before the commencement of the work. It was, however, "to be expressly understood that such approval is not in any way to relieve the contractor from any of the conditions or stipulations contained in this specification." During the progress of the works tests were to be applied by the engineer at his discretion, and the entire contract was to be executed in every respect to the satisfaction of the engineer, "who shall have the power of rejecting any rails or fishing plates he may disapprove on any ground whatever, and whose decision on any points of doubt or dispute that may arise in reference to this contract shall be final and binding on all parties. . . . The engineer will inspect, either personally or by deputy, every stage of the process of the manufacture of the works. . . . This examination at the works is not in any way to commit the company to the approval and acceptance of any rails or fishing plates, which, when delivered, shall not be strictly in accordance with the drawings and specification." After the rails had been delivered to the company and paid for by them, and more than half of them laid down in Russia, it was discovered that they were defective. An action being brought by the company for breach of contract:—Held, that it could not be maintained, as the contract shewed that the parties intended the final expression of the engineer's satisfaction with the entire contract to be conclusive. Dunaberg and Witepsk Ry. v. Hopkins, 36 L. T. 733.

—— As to Collateral Question.]—The plaintiff contracted with the defendants to erect certain buildings. By a clause of the specification. It was agreed that, if the plaintiff should not, according to the determination of the architect, exercise due diligence, the defendants might determine the contract and enter on the works. The architect certified that the plaintiff was not exercising due diligence, and the defendants determined the contract. To an action by the plaintiff for not allowing him to complete the works the defendants pleaded a justification under the clause of the specification; to which the plaintiff replied that his failure to exercise due diligence was caused by their delay and default, and their architect in not providing plans and setting out the land. The defendants rejoined that the non-exercise of due diligence was not, according to the determination of the architect, caused by their default or of their architect:—Held, that under the contract, the architect could not bind the plaintiff by his determination that the defendants had not by their default prevented him from proceeding with the work, and that consequently the replication was good, and the rejoinder bad. Roberts v. Bury Improvement Commissioners, 39 L. J., C. P. 129; L. R. 5 C. P. 310; 22 L. T. 132; 18 W. R. 702—Ex. Ch.

—— As to further Claims.]—On a building contract, whereby additions and alterations were not to avoid it, but to be allowed for at amounts to be named by the employer's surveyor, the contract being made up of a tender framed on quantities calculated by the surveyor, and specifications referred to them, and signed by the builder alone:—Held, that the builder having completed the work, and claimed payment under the contract, could not claim for work as excess of the quantities on which it was based, nor for any additions or alterations beyond the amount allowed by the surveyor. Coker v. Young, 2 F. & F. 98.

The engineer of a railway company prepared a specification of the works on a proposed railway, and certain contractors fixed prices to the several items in the specification, and offered to construct the railway for the sum total of the prices affixed to the items. A contract under seal was thereupon made between the contractors and the company, by which the contractors agreed to construct and deliver the railway completed by a certain day at a sum equal to the sum total above mentioned. If the contractors failed to proceed with the works the company might take possession and proceed with them; in which case a valuation should be made by the engineer, or if either party required it, by arbitration. The contract contained provisions making the certificate of the engineer conclusive between the parties; and it was provided that all accounts relating to the contracts should be submitted to and settled by the engineer, and that his certificate for the ultimate balance should be final and conclusive; it was further provided that all questions, except such as were to be determined by the engineer, were to be referred to arbitration. The railway was completed and the engineer gave his final certificate as to the balance due to the contractors. The contractors had assigned their interest in the contract to trustees on trust for their creditors and for themselves, in certain proportions. The contractors filed a bill against the company, making claims on several grounds, and praying an account and payment:—Held, that the contractors could not, on mere verbal promises by the engineer, maintain against the company a claim to be paid sums beyond the sums specified in the contract under seal. Sharpe v. San Paulo Ry., L. R. 8 Ch. 597; 29 L. T. 9.

Held, also that, although the amount of the works to be executed might have been understated in the engineer's specification, the contractors could not under the circumstances maintain any claim against the company on that ground. Ib.

In the absence of fraud on the part of the engineer, and where his certificate has been made a condition precedent to payment, his certificate must be conclusive between the parties. Ib.

The defendant contracted to do certain work for the plaintiff, which was to be subject to the approval of an architeet, and no payment was to be made without his certificate. The defendant demanded a larger sum than was certified by the architect, and brought an action for the amount. The plaintiff filed a bill for an injunction to restrain the action:—Held, that he could as well plead at law as in chancery that the architect's certificate was conclusive under the contract, and there was no equity to justify the bill. De Worms (Baron) v. Mellier, L. R. 16 Eq. 554.

A building contract provided (1) that the builders were not to vary or deviate from the drawings or specifications, or execute any extra work of any kind whatsoever, unless upon the authority of the architect, to be shown, as in the contract stated, and that in all cases where such extras or variations exceeded the sum of 10*l.* the order or plan was to be further countersigned by two members of the building committee; (2) that the contract price should be paid within one month after the architect should be certified in writing that the whole of the said building had been completed and finished to his satisfaction: (3) that the decision of the architect with respect to the amount, state, and condition of the works actually executed, and also in respect of any and every question that might arise concerning the construction of the present contract, or the said plans, drawings, elevations, and specifications, or the execution of the work thereby contracted for, or in anywise relating thereto, should be final and without appeal. On the completion of the work the architect certified that a certain sum was due, which sum included the price of extras above 10*l.* which had not been countersigned as required by the contract:—Held, that the building owners could not resist payment of any part of this sum on the grounds (1) that the architect had by mistake certified for work not done and improperly done; (2) that his certificate included extras for an amount over 10*l.*, the order for which had not been countersigned by two members of the building committee: (3) that the architect had not made sufficient allowances for work not done. Lapthorne v. St. Aubyn, 1 Cab. & E. 486.

—— Liability of Surety—Laches of Employer.]—A surety for a contractor is not discharged from liability, although his position has been altered by the conduct of the employer, where that conduct has been caused by a fraudulent act or omission of the contractor against which the surety has, by the contract of suretyship, guaranteed the employer. Kingston-upon-Hull Corporation v. Harding, 62 L. J., Q. B. 55; [1892] 2 Q. B. 494; 67 L. T 539; 41 W. R. 19—C. A.

The defendants, as sureties, contracted with the plaintiffs that the contractors for certain works would "well and truly" execute their contract. The contract gave to the plaintiffs a right of superintending the works through their engineer. It also provided for the retention of a certain percentage of the contract price of the works until a final certificate should be given by such engineer, six months after his certificate of the completion of the work. The contractors did portions of the work in a defective manner, and fraudulently concealed the defective work so as to prevent its being discovered. The engineer ultimately gave his final certificate, upon which the retention money was paid to the contractors. In an action brought by the plaintiffs against the defendants as sureties, the jury found that the engineer's certificate for the work done had been obtained by fraud, but also that there was an omission on the part of the plaintiffs to properly superintend the work which led to the scamping of it:—Held, that the mere non-exercise by the plaintiffs of their right of superintendence did not discharge the defendants from their liability as sureties; and, also, that they were not discharged by the fact that the plaintiffs' engineer had given his final certificate, although the work was not properly done, or that the retention money had been thereupon paid, inasmuch as the mere giving of the certificate was not shewn to have altered the position of the defendants for the worse, and both that and the payment of the retention money were procured by a dishonest execution of the work against which the defendants had by their contract guaranteed the plaintiffs. Ib.

What matters can be decided by Architect.]—By a contract it was provided, that if any dispute or difference should arise with the contractors in any way relating to the contract, or if any question should arise between any of the several contractors relating to the proposed building, such dispute, difference, or question should be settled by the architect, whose decision should be absolute and final:—Held, that this condition applied only to disputes as to the mode of carrying on the several works, and not to differences between the contractors and their employers as to their claim for extras. Pashby v. Birmingham Corporation, 18 C. B. 2.

The plaintiff entered into a contract with the defendants to remove 10,000 cubic yards of the bed of the Mersey contiguous to Seacombe Ferry for 5,000*l.*, and to completely finish the work under the direction and to the satisfaction of the defendants' engineer by the 1st of October, 1878, subject to such an extension of time as the engineer might think reasonable, in case a temporary staging then erected on the site of the work should not be removed within such a time as would enable the plaintiff to complete the work by the 1st of October, 1878. The defendants were to make monthly payments on the certificate of the engineer to the amount of 80 per cent. of the value of the work done during each month, and the balance of the sum of 5,000*l.* on the completion of the work. There was also a clause in the contract providing that if any difference should arise between the local board and the contractor concerning the work contracted for, or concerning anything in connection with the contract, such difference should be referred to the engineer, and his decision should be final and binding on the local board and the contractor. The work was completed on the 11th November, 1879, and then a correspondence took place between the plaintiff and the engineer with reference to the plaintiff's claims against the defendant board. The engineer admitted that the plaintiff was entitled to compensation for the expense caused by delay in consequence of the non-removal of the staging, and agreed to allow 15*l.* 10*s.* per day for thirty-eight days, but they could not agree upon the amount due to the plaintiff for extra work and other expenses. In June, 1880, the engineer sent a certificate to the works committee of the defendant board, stating that the work was finished to his satisfaction, and that 1,065*l.* 19*s.* was due to the plaintiff, and the defendants sent the plaintiff a cheque for 962*l.* 6*s.* 2*d.*, being the balance of the sum certified after making certain deductions. The plaintiff, after giving credit for this sum, brought an action against the defendants for 2,489*l.* 13*s.* 11*d.*:—Held, that it was not a difference concerning a matter in connection with the contract, and as to which the decision of the engineer was conclusive. Lawson v. Wallasey Local Board, 52 L. J., Q. B. 302; 11 Q. B. D. 229; 47 L. T. 625. Affirmed 52 L. J., Q. B. 309, n.; 48 L. T. 507; 47 J. P. 437—C. A.

A building contract between the plaintiff and the defendants (commissioners of public works), contained the following arbitration clause:—"It is hereby agreed that in case of any difference between the commissioners and the contractor in relation to any of the works, matters, and things herein contracted for, or to the meaning of these presents or to the plans, sections, specifications, descriptions, or particulars, or to any money to be paid or retained, or to any act, matter or thing done, or omitted to be done, by either of the parties hereto, under or by virtue of any of the provisoes, covenants or stipulations of these presents, and whether such difference shall relate to any act done by the commissioners for the purpose of determining this contract . . . then, and in any such case, the same shall be referred to such arbitrator as the commissioner shall appoint, whose decision shall be based upon the provisions of these articles, and shall be final, binding and conclusive upon the parties hereto." The plaintiff alleged that, whilst the works were in progress the commissioners directed some of them to be suspended, and that they directed additional works, not provided for by the contract, to be executed; and in the present action, he claimed; (1) 1,112*l.* 10*s.* damages for the suspension; (2) 3,658*l.* 8*s.* 6*d.* for materials and labour in the additional works; (3) 570*l.* 10*s.* 2*d.* for furniture supplied to the commissioners at their request; and (4) 66*l.* 15*s.* 4*d.* interest on these sums:—Held, that item No. 1 of the claim was clearly outside the submission in the building contract; and the remaining items not being satisfactorily shewn to be within the submission, and all the items being so far connected as to make it doubtful whether complete justice would be done to the parties, uless all were disposed of by the same tribunal, the court, in the exercise of its discretion, refused the application. Meyers v. Soady, 18 L. R., Ir. 499.

In rebuilding a church, the architect employed by the defendants, after giving them an assurance that the whole of the works should not exceed the sum named, prepared a statement or bill of particulars showing the quantities of the works to be performed by the contractors, and also prepared plans and a specification. The plaintiffs tendered for portions of the works, and their tender was accepted at a fixed sum. The architect then prepared a form of contract, whereby the plaintiffs agreed to do certain things mentioned "according to the plans and the quantities there given by the architect"; and they signed the specification, the conditions of which stated, that if any doubt should arise during the execution of the works, in making out the accounts "the admission or allowance of claims should be judged of, determined, and adjudged by the architect, without reference to any other person," and that "in all matters the decision of the architect should be final." Although no time for completion of the contract was named, it being left in blank, they were to be subject to a penalty if the works should remain unfinished. The plaintiffs performed quantities of works in excess of the quantities stated by the architect in his bill of particulars, and claimed to be paid over and above the fixed sum; but the architect rejected the greater portion of such claims, and debited the plaintiffs with a sum (to which, however, they would not consent) for delay in completing their contract. On a bill for a declaration that the plaintiffs were not bound by the conditions in reference to their claims being adjusted and all matters decided by the architect, that an account might be taken of what was due to the plaintiffs, and that they were not chargeable with any sum in respect of penalty for delay:—Held, first, that there was no ground for imposing the penalty for delay, and secondly, that the plaintiffs were entitled to be paid, in addition to the fixed sum, for all quantities of work done by them beyond the quantities mentioned in the bill of particulars. Kemp v. Rose, 1 Giff. 258; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 919.

Neglect to Certify—Collusion between Employer and Architect.]—Where a sum of money is agreed to be paid for work and materials, upon the certificate of a third person, if such third person, in collusion with and by the procurement of the person who has agreed to pay, improperly neglects to certify, an action may be maintained against the latter for the agreed sum, notwithstanding the certificate was made a condition precedent to the payment of the money. Batterbury v. Vyse, 2 H. & C. 42; 32 L. J., Ex. 177; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 754; 8 L. T. 283; 11 W. R. 283.

Although the giving of a certificate by the architect be a condition precedent to a builder's right of payment for work done, the builder may nevertheless recover for the work done if the withholding of the certificate be due to the improper interposition of the employer, who prevented the architect from giving his certificate. Brunsden v. Beresford, 1 Cab. & E. 125.

A contractor contracted to do certain works for a railway company, and the price was to be paid on the engineer of the company certifying the due performance of the work. The works were completed, but the engineer refused his certificate at the alleged instigation of the company. The contractor filed his bill, charging collusion between the company and the engineer; praying discovery, relief, and payment against the company; and seeking discovery from their engineer and their secretary. All the defendants demurred, but the demurrers were overruled. M'Intosh v. G. W. Ry., 2 Macn. & G. 74; 2 H. & Tw. 250; 19 L. J., Ch. 374; 14 Jur. 819.

Where actions were commenced by a builder against his employer for payment of moneys alleged to be due under certain contracts, and where these actions had been consolidated at the instance of the employer, who afterwards commenced, on his part, two actions against the builder for breaches of contract; on a bill by the builder alleging that, through the act of the employer in preventing his getting a conclusive certificate from the inspecting architect, he had been unable to continue his action, and had consequently been driven to equity to obtain an inquiry as to what was due to him:—Held, that he was entitled to such inquiry, without prejudice, however, to any question as to breaches of contract that might arise on his part. Dabbs v. Nugent, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 943; 13 L. T. 396; 14 W. R. 94.

Bill by a contractor alleging unfair conduct on the part of an architect whose decision was by the terms of the contract made final, and who ousted the contractor and finished the buildings; the court, on proof of such unfair conduct, decreed payment of the balance due on the contract, and relieved the contractor from penalties, declared the architect's decision not binding, and ordered both the architect and the contracting party to pay the costs of the suit. Pawley v. Turnbull, 3 Giff. 70; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 792; 4 L. T. 672.

The plaintiff covenanted with the defendant (a railway company) to do certain works within a given time to the satisfaction of the engineer of the company, and that if the works should not be so done the company might enter into possession of the plaintiff's plant and complete the works. The company covenanted to pay for the works from time to time during their progress, according to the certificate of the engineer. All disputes were to be referred to the latter. The works were not completed within the period originally limited, and some time afterwards the company gave notice of its intention to enter, under the agreement, and complete the works. The plaintiffs filed a bill, stating that they had done all which they contracted to do, except what the company had prevented them from doing, and that they had not been fully paid for the work done; alleging that the engineer fraudulently and collusively with the company certified a less amount than what was due to the plaintiffs, and praying for an injunction and account. A demurrer for want of equity was overruled, on the ground that the plaintiffs would be entitled to some relief at the hearing, and that the species of fraud alleged in the bill gave jurisdiction to the court, although the plaintiffs had not completed the whole of their work. Waring v. Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire Ry., 7 Hare, 482; 18 L. J., Ch. 450; 14 Jur. 613. Affirmed 2 H. & Tw. 239.

Where by contract an award of the architect is final, and is fairly and impartially made, the court will not relieve against it, however severe it may be in its effects; but where the arbitrator is found guilty of unfairness or partiality, the court will relieve against his award. Ormes v. Beadel, 2 Giff. 166. Affirmed 30 L. J., Ch. 1; 3 L. T. 344; 9 W. R. 25.

Where a contractor, under pressure occasioned by the refusal of the architect to pay what was justly due under the contract, was induced by the architect to enter into a disadvantageous agreement, the court set it aside, though by the terms of the original contract the decision of the architect was made final. Ib.

In building contracts a court of equity interferes where there is collusion between the employer and the architect to injure the contractor. Bliss v. Smith, 34 Beav. 508.

Where, by the terms of a contract, works were to be done for the defendants by the plaintiffs, according to plans and specifications, and to be paid for by instalments, "on production by the contractors to the defendants, or one of them, of the certificate of L., or other the surveyor for the time of the defendants, that they (the contractors) had duly and efficiently performed and completed such works to his satisfaction," and in an action upon this contract, the declaration averred that all things necessary had been done by the plaintiffs, to entitle them to have the certificate of the surveyor, that the work had been duly and efficiently performed and completed to his satisfaction; but that the surveyor had not given such certificate, but had wrongfully and improperly neglected and refused so to do:—Held, that, in the absence of collusion, the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover without producing the surveyor's certificate; nor were the defendants responsible for the refusal of the surveyor to give one. Clarke v. Watson, 18 C. B. (N.S.) 278; 34 L. J., C. P. 148; 11 L. T. 679; 13 W. R. 345.

Where all complaints as to delays of a vexatious kind are by a contract left to the absolute discretion of an engineer, a court of equity has no power to impose upon either of the parties to the contract any other terms than those which they have prescribed for themselves, and by which they have agreed to be bound; but if the evidence establishes a case of gross misconduct in the engineer, or of wilful neglect or refusal, or absolute incapacity in him to perform his duties, the case might be brought within the jurisdiction of the court. Scott v. Liverpool Corporation, 27 L. J., Ch. 641; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 402; 6 W. R. 136, 493. S. C., on appeal, infra.

A contractor engaged to execute in a "workmanlike manner" certain buildings for a burial board, to the entire satisfaction of the architect; the payment in respect of the works to be made to the contractor from time to time as the work proceeded, and the balance on the final certificate of the architect that the work had been executed according to the contract. Certificates from time to time had been given by the architect, and the contractor received payments on account. It appeared, subsequently, that parts of the work had not been done in a "sound and workmanlike manner," and the final certificate was withheld. On a bill by the contractor to have it declared that the withholding of the final certificate was a fraud upon the contractor:—Held, that on proof of the "unsound and unworkmanlike manner of the buildings" the withholding of the final certificate was not a fraud upon the plaintiff, although the architect had given certificates from time to time to enable the builder to obtain moneys on account. Cooper v. Uttoxeter Burial Board, 11 L. T. 565.

A building agreement between the plaintiff and defendant contained a proviso that no instalment should be paid unless the plaintiff delivered to the defendant a certificate signed by the surveyor of the defendant, that the works were performed according to the specifications:—Held, that the want of a certificate was a good defence under the general issue to an action for the instalments, and that the plaintiff was not at liberty to prove that it was withheld by collusion with the defendant. Milner v. Field, 5 Ex. 829; 20 L. J., Ex. 68.

—— Action against Architect.]—When, under a building contract, it was a condition precedent to payment that the builder should execute the works to the satisfaction of a named architect:—Held, that an action could be maintained against the architect for collusively, fraudulently, and to the injury of the builder, refusing to certify that he was satisfied with the works. Ludbrook v. Barrett, 46 L. J., C. P. 798; 36 L. T. 616; 25 W. R. 649.

Statement of claim set out an agreement under which plaintiff contracted with a company to build for them a hall whereof defendant was employed as architect; defendant was to be allowed to order additions and deductions, the amounts of which were to be ascertained by him in a certain manner, all matters of dispute were to be left to defendant, and his decision was to be final; plaintiff was to be paid on the certificate of defendant. The statement of claim then alleged that the work was done and the certificate given, but that defendant did not use due care and skill in ascertaining the amounts to be paid by the company to the plaintiff, and neglected and refused to ascertain the amount of the said additions and deductions in the manner aforesaid, and knowingly or negligently certified for a much less sum than was, in fact, the nett balance payable; and further, that defendant refused to reconsider the said certificate and allow plaintiff to point out to him the said errors in the bill of quantities:—Held, that no cause of action against defendant was disclosed by the above statement of claim; defendant's duties involving the exercise of judgment and skill. Per Lord Coleridge, C.J.:—Had the defendant's duties been merely ministerial, the action would have been maintainable. Stevenson v. Watson, 48 L. J., C. P. 318; 4 C. P. D. 148; 40 L. T. 485; 27 W. R. 682.

A contract for the performance of works contained a provision that if the contractor shall not, according to the determination of the employers' engineer, enable the works to be completed according to the contract, the employers might put an end to the contract, and that the contractor should be paid such sum as the engineer should determine to have been reasonably earned for work actually done. The contract having been put an end to under this provision, the contractor filed a bill in equity against the employers and their engineer, complaining of undue delay on the part of the latter in awarding the amount earned by the contractor, and seeking payment of what was due upon the contract, but did not establish any case of fraud or collusion against the engineer:—Held, that the bill was properly dismissed, with costs. Scott v. Liverpool Corporation, 3 De G. & J. 334; 28 L. J., Ch. 230; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 104; 7 W. R. 153.

6. Deductions.

On Account of Bad Work.]—If A. employs B. to make bricks for him at a stipulated price per thousand, and B. does so, and some of the bricks are so badly made as to be good for nothing, A. will be entitled to make a deduction for those badly-made bricks out of the stipulated price, and may make such deduction in an action brought by B. for the stipulated price; but if the bricks are badly made in a trifling degree, only so as merely to be less valuable than they otherwise would have been, A., in an action for the stipulated price, will not be entitled to make any deduction on this account. Pardow v. Webb, Car. & M. 531.

Where a plaintiff declares on a quantum meruit for work and labour and materials, the defendant may reduce the damages by shewing that the work was improperly done, and may entitle himself to a verdict by shewing that it was wholly inadequate to answer the purpose intended. Farnsworth v. Gerrard, 1 Camp. 38; 10 R. R. 624. S. P., Grounsell v. Lamb, 1 M. & W. 352; 5 L. J., Ex. 154.

Where a party contracted to supply and erect a warm-air apparatus for a certain sum:—Held, in an action for the price (the defence to which was, that the apparatus did not answer), that if the jury thought it was substantial in the main, though not quite so complete as it might be under the contract, and could be made good at a reasonable rate, the proper course would be to find a verdict for the plaintiff, deducting such sum as would enable the defendant to do what was requisite. Cutler v. Close, 5 Car. & P. 337.

—— Not a Set-off.]—In actions for work and labour, as well as in actions for goods to be supplied according to contract, a defence that the subject-matter of the action is not worth the contract price, by reason of a breach of the contract, is not a set-off in the nature of a cross action. Mondel v. Steel, 8 M. & W. 858; 1 D. (N.S.) 1; 10 L. J., Ex. 426. And see Set-off.

Price of Materials.]—The plaintiff contracted in writing to do work for the defendant, and find the materials for it, for a fixed sum. The defendant afterwards supplied a portion of the materials, which the plaintiff accepted and used up in the work. In an action for the work done by the plaintiff:—Held, that the defendant was entitled to deduct from the damages the value of the materials supplied by him without pleading a set-off. Newton v. Forster, 12 M. & W. 772.

Re-entry of Employer—Cost of Work.]—The plaintiff contracted to execute certain work for the defendants, the agreement containing the following proviso: "That if the works did not proceed as rapidly and satisfactorily as required by the defendants or their agents, they should have power to enter thereupon, pay whatever number of men were unpaid, and set to work whatever number of men they should think necessary, the amount so paid, and the cost of the men so set to work, to be deducted from whatever moneys might be due to the plaintiff":—Held, that the intention of the parties was that the defendants if bonâ fide dissatisfied, whether with or without sufficient reason, with the progress of the work, should be at liberty to deduct from the money due to the plaintiff such sums as had been expended in pursuance of the said proviso. Stadhard v. Lee, 3 B. & S. 364; 32 L. J., Q. B. 75; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 908; 7 L. T. 815; 11 W. R. 361.

E. Pleadings and Evidence.

Common Counts.]—When a person contracts to build a house, he is not entitled to recover for the materials on a count for goods sold and delivered. Cottrell v. Apsey, 1 Marsh. 581; 6 Taunt. 322.

Materials cannot be recovered under a count for work and labour only. Heath v. Freeland, 1 M. & W. 543; 2 Gale, 140; 5 D. P. C. 166; 1 Tyr. & G. 918; 5 L. J., Ex. 253.

A count for work, labour and materials will enable a plaintiff to recover for attendances as a farrier, and for medicines administered. Clark v. Mumford, 3 Camp. 37.

A. contracted with B. to build an engine of one-hundred-horse-power for 2,500*l.*, to be completed and fixed by a certain time. The engine was intended for the purpose of pumping a mine, and was composed of various parts, which were made at A.'s factory, and conveyed thence and set up at different times at B.'s colliery, until the engine was completed. A. sued B. for the price, and claimed 3,000*l.* for the price and value of a main engine and other goods sold and delivered by him to B.:—Held, that the price agreed on could not be recovered under this count, but that the proper form of the count would have been either for work, labour and materials, or for erecting and constructing an engine. Clarke v. Bulmer, 11 M. & W. 243; 12 L. J., Ex. 463. See Chanter v. Dickenson, 6 Scott (N.R.) 182; 2 D. (N.S.) 838; 5 Man. & G. 253; 12 L. J., C. P. 147; 7 Jur. 89.

In an action for the price of and the setting up of a fourteen-horse-power steam engine, the last instalment to be paid two months after its completion, it appeared that the degree of power in the engine delivered was not equal to the power mentioned in the contract, and improvements and alterations were made from time to time till the action was brought:—Held, that the common counts would lie. Parsons v. Sexton, 2 Car. & K. 266.

A. was employed by B. to devise a method of curving metal tubing for the purpose of manufacturing life-buoys, of which B. was patentee:—Held, that A. might recover compensation for the labour and skill, and also the value of the materials employed by him in the course of the work, under a count for work and labour and materials. Grafton v. Armitage, 2 C. B. 336; 15 L. J., C. P. 20; 9 Jur. 1039.

In an action for work and labour, where there had been a breach of contract on the part of the plaintiff:—Held, that he could not recover a quantum meruit, nor prove that his breach of contract arose from the defendant's default. Kewley v. Stokes, 2 Car. & K. 435.

A claim for a month's wages by a menial servant, on dismissal, without warning and without cause, cannot be recovered under a count for work and labour. Fewings v. Tindal, 5 D. & L. 196; 1 Ex. 295; 17 L. J., Ex. 18; 11 Jur. 977.

If the entire work and labour to be done under a contract have been performed, and the benefit of it accepted by the defendant, the plaintiff can recover the value of the work and labour under the common count on a quantum meruit, although the evidence or proceedings in the case may establish that, up to the trial, he insisted on the special contract: it is not necessary that he, before bringing the action, should elect to abandon the special contract. Savage v. Canning, Ir. R. 1 C. L. 434; 16 W. R. 133.

Under a count for work and labour on a quantum meruit, evidence of skill is admissible. Bird v. M'Gaheg, 2 Car. & K. 707.

Surety of Testator—Fraud of Testator.]—In an action by executors for work and labour of their testator, money paid by him and on an account stated with him, and for work and labour and money paid by the executors, and on an account stated with them as executors, a plea, that the testator, in consideration of the defendant consenting to act on a provisional committee for a projected railway, agreed to indemnify him from any charges on account of the railway; and the work was done and money paid by the testator, and the account stated with him, in respect of the same, in surveying the line, and that the work was done and money paid by the executors in and about surveying the line, and the account was stated with them in respect of the same work; that all the causes of action accrued after the promise to indemnify, and that the defendant made the promises only in his character of member of the committee; that the railway was abandoned, and the work and payments became of no value, and all sums recovered from the defendant in respect thereof would be lost to the defendant, and he would be damnified to that extent:—Held, a good plea for avoiding circuity of action, since the defendant, on the facts alleged, was entitled to recover from the testator, in his life or from his representatives, as much as they would recover from him. Connop v. Levy, 11 Q. B. 769; 5 Railw. Cas. 124; 17 L. J., Q. B. 125; 12 Jur. 306.

Another plea alleged that the testator in his lifetime caused the defendant to enter into the contracts by fraud:—Held, a good plea, not only to the first count, but also to the second count, since, if the defendant was induced by the testator's fraud to make the original contract with him, the same fraud procured the implied promise to the executors for the work they had done, and money they had paid in pursuance of that contract. Ib.

Evidence.]—In an action for a tradesman's bill, where the work has been done by several persons under him, any of the workmen called may be asked as to the particular sums which they received. Fricker v. French, 5 Esp. 79.

In an action for work and labour, it is presumptive evidence for the defendant that he was in the habit of paying other workmen employed by him in the same line of business regularly and at stated times, and that the plaintiff had been at such times with the other workmen. Lucas v. Novosilieski, 1 Esp. 296.

In an action for work done and materials supplied to the defendant in respect of certain dwelling-houses, the question being whether he was really the owner and person interested in the houses, it is competent to the plaintiff to call other tradesmen as witnesses to prove that the defendant had personally given orders to them to do work and supply materials in respect of the same houses. Woodward v. Buchanan, 39 L. J., Q. B. 71; L. R. 5 Q. B. 285; 22 L. T. 123.

Under a count of quantum meruit evidence of skill is admissible. Bird v. M'Gaheg, 2 Car. & K. 707.

—— Production of Documents.]—When a man is employed to do work under a written contract, and a separate order for other work is afterwards given by parol during the continuance of the first employment, the written contract need not be produced in an action for the second work. Reid v. Batte, M. & M. 413.

The defendant entered into a contract with H. for the execution, by H., of works at a shed belonging to the defendant. In order to induce M. to supply H. with the castings necessary for the carrying out of this contract, the defendant promised M. to pay her 218*l.* then due to her from H. within six months, provided he had work done by H. as security for the same:—Held, in an action by the executors of M., to recover the 218*l.* under this agreement, that they were bound to shew that work to that amount had been done for the defendant by H., and that for this purpose it was necessary to produce the contract between H. and the defendant, under which the work was executed. Hill v. Nuttall, 17 C. B. (N.S.) 262; 33 L. J., C. P. 303.

In addition to the agreement, the defendant also undertook to pay M. for such further castings as should be required for his shed, and should be supplied by her on account of H.

Further castings were supplied by M. to H., but as to some of them there was no evidence that they were delivered by H. at the shed:—Held, that there was evidence for the jury to find the defendant liable for these castings under the second agreement. Ib.

If an agreement cannot be read for want of a stamp, the plaintiff cannot recover the value of the work and labour to which the agreement refers, although the defendant may have had the benefit of it. Hughes v. Budd, 8 D. P. C. 478.

When work has been done under a written contract, evidence of extra work cannot be given without proof of the written contract, and, if it is inadmissible for want of a stamp, the judge cannot look at it for the purpose of determining whether or not the proposed evidence relates to it. Buxton v. Cornish, 1 D. & L. 585; 12 M. & W. 426; 13 L. J., Ex. 91; 8 Jur. 46. S. P., Jones v. Howell, 4 D. P. C. 176.

A. had built a house for B. under a written contract, not admissible in evidence for want of a stamp; A. sued B. for the value of certain works about the house, alleging them to be extras, and not included in the contract:—Held, that the court could not look at the unstamped contract to ascertain whether those works were included in it or not, and that the plaintiff must be nonsuited. Vincent v. Cole, 3 Car. & P. 481; M. & M. 257.

—— Surveyors.]—Little reliance is to be placed on the evidence of surveyors in a contest as to value. Waters v. Thorn, 22 Beav. 547.

The court looks with suspicion at the evidence of value derived from the mere opinion given by surveyors, unsupported by any other circumstances. Cockell v. Taylor, 15 Beav. 103; 21 L. J., Ch. 545.

A surveyor appointed by the parties, at the instance of the judge, to make a report, acts in a quasi-judicial capacity, and ought not to be examined in the action. Broder v. Saillard, 24 W. R. 456.

A. ELDEST SON.

1. MEANING OF WORD.

Firstborn.]—"Eldest" and "firstborn" are to be treated as synonymous terms. Tuite v. Bermingham, L. R. 7 H. L. 634; 24 W. R. 549.

The only son of a marriage cannot succeed to an estate which has been limited to A. and his heirs in tail male, except an eldest son, and does not come in under a proviso giving an estate to A., and "all and every other the son of the body of A., save and except an eldest son." Ib.

Except in cases of portions or of a specially qualifying context "eldest son" means "firstborn son." Meredith v. Treffry, 48 L. J., Ch. 337; 12 Ch. D. 170; 27 W. R. 406.

A testator, by will dated in 1841, devised lands to the use of A. for life, with remainder to the use of "the eldest son" of A. for life, with remainder, after the decease of the eldest son of A., to the use of the eldest son of his body and his heirs for ever; but in case of the death of the eldest son of A. without issue male, to the use of the second, third, fourth, and every other son of A. successively in tail male; and the will contained a proviso that the first, second, third, and every other son of A. should, before receiving the rents of the lands, take and use the name and arms of the testator. The firstborn son of A. was living at the date of the will, but died an infant. C., the second born son of A., was his eldest living son at the time of the death of the testator:—Held, that the word "eldest" must be construed as "firstborn;" and that, subject to his father's life estate. C. was tenant in tail under the will. Ib.

Held, also, that the eldest son of A. took by implication an estate tail in remainder after the estate tail of his eldest son. Ib.

The eldest son of a man is his firstborn—the primogenitus; and the words "shall become the eldest son" of a person living at the date of a will cannot, without an explanatory context, be extended beyond the lifetime of that person; they are connected with the heirship of, and right of succession to, a living man. Bathurst v. Errington, 46 L. J., Ch. 748; 2 App. Cas. 698; 37 L. T. 338; 25 W. R. 908—H. L. (E.)

A testator gave real estate to A. for life, and afterwards to her eldest son on his taking the name of M.; but should he refuse to take the name, or A. depart this life without a son, then over. A. had no son at the date of the will, but afterwards had four sons, all of whom had the name of M. given to them at their baptism:—Held, that A. took an estate for life, with remainder in fee to her firstborn son. Bennett v. Bennett, 2 Dr. & Sm. 266; 34 L. J., Ch. 34; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1170; 11 L. T. 362; 13 W. R. 66.

One has two sons, A. and B., and three daughters, and devises his lands to be sold to pay his debts; and as to the moneys arising by sale after debts paid, he gives 200*l.* thereout to his eldest son A., at twenty-one, the residue to his four younger children equally. A., the eldest, dies before twenty-one, this 200*l.* shall go to the heir of the testator. Cruse v. Barley, 3 P. Wms. 19; 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 543, pl. 15.

Bequest to a daughter's "younger children":—Held, to mean the children other than the eldest in age, and therefore to exclude the eldest child, a daughter, and to include her younger brother, though, under his parents' marriage settlement, the family estates stood settled on him. Lyddon v. Ellison, 19 Beav. 565; 18 Jur. 1066; 2 W. R. 590.

A testator directed that the income of certain property mentioned in his will should be enjoyed by his wife and his unmarried daughters during their lives, and after the death of the last survivor of his wife and unmarried daughters the principal of the stock should be divided equally among the two eldest children born in legitimate wedlock to each of his sons and daughters. But in case there should be only one child living to any of his married sons or daughters, that that child should receive only the proportion divided equally, according to the number there might be:—Held, that after the death of the widow and unmarried daughters, those children only were entitled to take who were living at the period of distribution, and the property was not vested in those who were priores natu. Madden v. Ikin, 2 Dr. & Sm. 207; 1 N. R. 11; 32 L. J., Ch. 3; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1168; 7 L. T. 264; 11 W. R. 2.

"Eldest or only son," primâ facie, mean an individual. See Domvile v. Winnington, post, col. 1853.

Son taking the Estate.]—Elder son unprovided for, considered as a younger. Teynham (Lord) v. Webb, 2 Ves. Sen. 198.

Elder son provided for by collateral relations considered as a younger. Duke v. Doidge, 2 Ves. 203, n.

A father's estate was limited after his death to the eldest son in tail, and the mother's estates were limited after her death to the sons and daughters (other than an eldest son) as tenants in common in tail:—Held, that the rule of construction was the same as to realty and personalty, and that the son of a younger son who had succeeded to the father's estate was excluded from all interest in the mother's estates. Bayley's Settlement, In re, L. R. 6 Ch. 590; 25 L. T. 249; 19 W. R. 789. Affirming 39 L. J., Ch. 388. And see Windham v. Graham, post, col. 1841.

A second born son, who attained twenty-one, and on his father's death succeeded to his title, but died before the period of distribution, was held to be excluded as an "eldest son" from sharing in certain unappointed trust funds. His younger brother, who succeeded him in the title, and was living at the period of the distribution of the funds, was held entitled to share in them. Rivers's Settlement Trust, In re, 40 L. J., Ch. 87; 24 L. T. 253; 19 W. R. 318.

In a settlement where there is a clause excluding the eldest son from the benefit of a fund provided for children other than an eldest son, the time for ascertaining who fills the character of eldest son is the period fixed by the settlement for the distribution of the fund. Collingwood v. Stanhope, 38 L. J., Ch. 421; L. R. 4 H. L. 43; 17 W. R. 537.

In such a case "eldest" is not solely senior in age, for (as stated by Lord Hardwicke in Duke

v. Doidge, 2 Ves. Sen. 203, n.), "eldership not carrying the estate along with it is not such an eldership as will exclude." Ib.

2. Right to Portion or Parental Provision when not Taking the Estate.

Death of eldest Son without becoming Entitled.]—By a settlement for the benefit of younger children, a sum of money was to be raised, after the death of T., for all the children of E. other than an eldest or only son for the time being entitled to certain estates. The eldest son of E. died in his father's lifetime, and E. died in T.'s lifetime. At T.'s death W. was the eldest living son of E., and entitled to the estates:—Held, that the representatives of the eldest son of E. took a share in the money. Ellison v. Thomas, 1 De G. J. & S. 18; 1 N. R. 37; 32 L. J., Ch. 32; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1139; 7 L. T. 342; 11 W. R. 56. And see Chadwick v. Doleman, post, col. 1839. Johnson's Trusts, In re, L. R. 2 Eq. 716.

The persons entitled must be ascertained at the time when the money is directed to be raised and divided, and the words of exception attach at that time upon the son who then answers the description, and exclude him only from the class of persons interested. Ib.

By a settlement a gross sum was directed to be raised after the decease of the settlor and his wife (tenants for life) for portions for children other than their eldest or only son, equally to be divided:—Held, that the personal representatives of the eldest son, who attained twenty-one, and died in his father's lifetime, were entitled to one share. Davies v. Huguenin, 1 H. & M. 730; 2 N. R. 101; 32 L. J., Ch. 417; 8 L. T. 443; 11 W. R. 1040.

Held, also, that a daughter who attained twenty-one, and died unmarried in her father's lifetime, was entitled to a share. Ib.

Held, also, that the second son, who, during the father's life and after attaining his majority, became the eldest son and succeeded to the settled estate, and the personal representatives of a child who died in infancy, were not entitled. Ib.

The only person who is properly described as an eldest son, so as to be excluded from a share of portions for younger children, is the son who eventually takes possession of the estate. Ib.

Grandmother, under a power, creates by deed a term to commence after her death for raising money for younger children, as their father should appoint; if no appointment, equally; if but one besides the eldest, then to that one; if none except the eldest, then to him; if no eldest son, then to her own executors. At the date of the deed there was one grandson and one granddaughter. The father afterwards had another son, and died without appointment. The eldest son having died under age:—Held, that the whole sum belonged to the daughter, and that the younger son, having thus become an eldest son, was excluded. Elder son, unprovided for, considered as a younger. Teynham (Lord) v. Webb, 2 Ves. Sen. 198.

By a settlement real estates stood limited to S. for life, and after his death as to part to E., his son, for life, remainder to H., the eldest son of E., for life, and to his first and other sons in tail, remainder to J., the second son of E., for life, and to his first and other sons in tail, with remainders over; and as to the remaining part, to trustees for sale and conversion, the proceeds to be held as personal estate in trust for the children of E., "other than or not being an eldest or only son for the time being entitled under the limitations hereinbefore contained to the manors," &c.—the unsold part of the settled estates—"either in possession or in remainder expectant on the decease of the survivor of S. (the grandfather) and E.," the shares to vest in such of them as should attain twenty-one, or, if daughters, marry under that age, and to be paid at such age or days of marriage, or immediately after the decease of the survivor of S. and E., which should last happen. The father died in the lifetime of the grandfather, and J. (having attained twenty-one) died in the lifetime of both his father and grandfather. S., the second son of E., attained twenty-one in the lifetime of H., and became entitled, as tenant for life in possession, to the unsold part of the settled estates on the death of his grandfather:—Held, that under these circumstances, and notwithstanding the fact that the settlement contained a separate provision for H. by way of rent-charge, his personal representative was, and J., the second son, was not, entitled to share the personal estate with the younger children. Swinburne v. Swinburne, 17 W. R. 47.

Disentail and Mortgage by Eldest Son.]—A person who is to be excluded from sharing in a portions fund by reason of his being, at a particular time, the eldest son entitled to a settled estate, is ordinarily entitled, if he dies before that time, to share as if he were a younger child; but he is not so entitled when he has concurred, as remainderman in tail, in disentailing the estate and in raising by mortgage thereof money out of which he received a sum equal in value to a younger child's aliquot share of the fund, as he then would, in effect, be taking a double portion. Fitzgerald's Estate, In re, Saunders v. Boyd, 60 L. J., Ch. 624; [1891] 3 Ch. 394; 65 L. T. 242; 40 W. R. 29.

Right to Portions in General.]—See PORTION.

3. Other Cases.

Bequest to Younger Sons—Gift over on Death before Period of Distribution — Next Eldest Brother.]—Bequest to younger sons, as tenants in common; and, if any of them should die before the period of distribution, not leaving any wife or children, his share to go to his next eldest brother, and so on to the youngest. The fifth son having died without leaving a wife or child, his share was held to go to the sixth. Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald, 12 Ir. Ch. R. 442.

Eldest Son included under Term Children.]—K., by will, directed his trustees, on R., the eldest son of K., and failing him the next eldest son, attaining twenty-one, to convey certain real estates to R., but in case any of the children conducted themselves so as not to merit the approbation of the trustees, then such children were to have life estates only. K., by codicil, directed his trustees to postpone the conveyance to R. till he attained twenty-five. R. at twenty-three married, with the approbation of the trustees, though they were not parties to his marriage settlement, which settlement disposed of his interest under his father's will as if it were an estate in fee. When R. attained twenty-five, the trustees, not being satisfied with R.'s conduct, conveyed to him only a life estate in the premises:—Held, first, that the eldest son was included under the term children; secondly, that the trustees were not bound to declare their dissatisfaction until R. attained twenty-five, and that they could not, by having assented to R.'s marriage, preclude themselves from discharging the duty of reviewing his conduct when he attained twenty-five. Weller v. Ure, 15 L. T. 97.

One gave legacies to each of his younger children, payable at twenty-one, and the residue of his personal estate to his eldest son at twenty-one; and if he die before twenty-one, then to his younger children in succession; and if any of his younger children should die before twenty-one, their respective legacies to go equally to all the survivors; and if all his children should die before twenty-one, then the whole to go to a charity. One of the younger sons died under twenty-one; the other children attained twenty-one:—Held, the eldest son should take his legacy equally with the other younger children. Hiern v. Ley, Amb. 569.

Bequest of 5,000*l.* out of an estate, equally to testator's children, with remainder in the same estate to his first and other sons; the eldest son shall have a share. Incledon v. Northcote, 3 Atk. 438.

Future Eldest Sons.]—Gift to the eldest sons for the time being of testator's four brothers in remainder after a life estate:—Held, a vested interest in them as tenants in common. Harvey v. Towell, 7 Hare, 231; 17 L. J., Ch. 217; 12 Jur. 241.

Gift of Residue to Children—Property Derived Aliunde—Period of Distribution.]—A testator, who had been twice married, and had three sons by the first marriage, and a son and a daughter by the second, gave his residuary estate to his five children, share and share alike, the shares of his sons to be payable at twenty-one, and of his daughter at that age or upon marriage, with a gift over in case of death before the shares became payable; and he directed that in case his three children by his first wife should receive any moneys which should become payable to them as the children of their mother, such moneys should be considered as deduction from the shares of such children, it being his desire that all his children should share and share alike. After the eldest child attained twenty-one, but before any of the rest attained that age, the children of the first marriage became entitled to a fund as children of their mother:—Held, that, as the share of this fund coming to the eldest son could not be deducted from his share of the residue, and it was the intention of the testator that the proviso in his will should operate on all the children alike, no deduction could be made from the shares of the other children of the said marriage. Stares v. Penton, L. R. 4 Eq. 40.

Direction to Distribute among Brothers and Sisters according to their Needs—Double Share to Eldest Son and Heir.]—A. makes two of his daughters his executrixes, and directs them to distribute a sum of 400*l.*, and also the residue of his personal estate, among themselves, and their brothers and sisters, according to their needs and necessities, as they in their discretion should think fit. The court restrained the exercise of this power by decreeing a double share to the eldest son and heir, looking upon him as a necessitous person. Warburton v. Warburton, 4 Bro. P. C. 1.

B. YOUNGER SON.

1. MEANING OF WORD.

Son not taking the Estate.]—Elder son provided for by collateral relations considered as younger. Duke v. Doidge, 2 Ves. 203, n.

Every one but the heir is a younger child in equity. Younger children are those who do not take the estate. The character of younger children must continue until the time of payment. Savage v. Carroll, 1 Ball & B. 278. See 12 R. R. 32.

If money is bequeathed to younger children, where there are several daughters and a son, who by birth is the youngest, but heir to a fair inheritance, he shall not be considered as a younger child to take the legacy. Bretton v. Bretton, 3 Ch. Rep. 1. S. P., Mead v. Cave, 1 Ch. Rep. 224.

When a real estate is so settled that it must, on the death of a parent, go to his eldest son, and provision is made by that parent or by any person in loco parentis, whether by settlement in contemplation of marriage or by will, for the younger children of such parent, courts of equity have considered the presumption, that it was intended to make provision for all the children so strong, as to warrant them in holding that by the word "younger" must have been intended all except the one child who succeeds to the estate. But this does not apply to the case of a will in which the primary intentions of the testator appear to have been to found certain families, or to do something beyond merely making a provision for children. And the circumstance that the will is not of an executory nature will make no difference. Scarisbrick v. Skelmersdale (Lord), 4 Y. & C. 78.

Lands were settled to the use of A. for life, remainder to his eldest son B. for life, remainder to C. (eldest son of B.) for life, with remainder to C.'s first and other sons successively in tail, remainder to D. (the second of B.) for life, remainder to D.'s first and other sons in tail, with remainder over; with a power of limiting portions in favour of the children of B., "not being and besides an eldest or other son, who, on the decease of B. and A., shall be entitled to the settled estates"; the portions to vest, in the case of sons, at twenty-one, but not to be raisable in the lifetime of A. and B., or either of them, without consent. B. died first; then C., without issue, but having attained twenty-one; then A.; whereupon D. succeeded to the estates. He attained twenty-one in C.'s lifetime. No portion had been limited or raised:—Held, that neither D. nor C.'s representatives had any title under the portion trusts. Gray v. Limerick (Earl), 2 De J. & Sm. 370; 17 L. J., Ch. 443; 12 Jur. 817.

—— Provision by Parent or Person in loco parentis.]—The rule, that a limitation in favour of younger children will not operate in favour of a younger child who becomes an eldest son and succeeds to the estates, is confined to cases where the provision is made by a parent or a person in loco parentis. Sandeman v. Mackenzie, 1 J. & H. 613; 30 L. J., Ch. 838; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1231; 5 L. T. 175. S. P., Hall v. Hewer, Amb. 203.

Where, in a marriage settlement, the husband covenanted to pay 10,000*l.* for the children of the marriage; and, for want of such children, for the children of the wife by a former marriage (other than A., her eldest son) as the husband should appoint; and in default, for all who should attain twenty-one, equally, or, if only one, then for such one younger child:—Held, that the wife could not be considered as purchasing the provision in such a sense as to make her the settlor; and that the settlement was not by a person in loco parentis. Ib.

—— Will of a Grandmother.]—In the will of a grandmother, "younger children" does not necessarily mean children unprovided for. Lyddon v. Ellison, 19 Beav. 565; 18 Jur. 1066; 2 W. R. 690. And see Longfield v. Bantry (Earl), 15 L. R., Ir. 101. Teynham (Lord) v. Webb, 2 Ves. Sen. 198.

2. Right to Portion or Parental Provision when becoming Eldest.

a. In General.

General Rule.]—Where there is a sum of money provided for younger children, and one of the younger becomes eldest, he shall have no part of this money: but where the money was, by a private act of parliament, to be appointed among A., B. and C. (naming them), and A. afterwards becomes eldest, he is capable of an appointment in his favour. Jermyn v. Fellows, Cas. t. Talb. 93. And see Sandeman v. Mackenzie, 1 J. & H. 613; 30 L. J., Ch. 838; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1231; 5 L. T. 175. Reid v. Hoare, post, col. 1854.

Marriage Settlement—Younger Son becoming the Eldest, mentioned by Name in Appointment.]—A. by marriage settlement is tenant for life, remainder to trustees, to raise 4,000*l.* for younger children's portions, as A. should appoint; remainder to his first and other sons in tail. A. appoints the 4,000*l.* amongst his younger children, and particularly 2,600*l.* thereof to B., his second son. The eldest son dies six years afterwards, whereby B. became eldest son, and entitled to the whole estate after his father's death; and thereupon A. makes a new appointment of the 2,600*l.* to one of his daughters. Decreed, the last appointment to take place; the first being made to B. upon a tacit or implied condition, that he should not become the eldest son. Chadwick v. Doleman, 2 Vern. 528; 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 343, pl. 8.

Under a power to appoint a sum of money among children, but that the eldest son, or the son possessing the estate, shall have no part of the money; a younger son becoming an eldest is excluded, though mentioned by name in the execution of the power whilst he was a younger son. Broadmead v. Wood, 1 Bro. C. C. 77.

A. devised to B., for life, remainder to his first and other sons in tail male, remainder over, in trust to convey the premises, or any part thereof, to such child or children of the testator's daughter, and her then husband, other than and except their eldest son for the time being, and the issue male or female of such child or children (except as before excepted), for such estates, and in such shares, and subject to such limitations as she, by deed or will, should appoint; and for want of appointment by her, or for so much as shall not have been appointed by her, then as her husband should, by deed or will, appoint; and for want of such appointment, or for so much, &c., then as their eldest son for the time being shall appoint. The husband by his will (his wife having died without appointing), appointed to his younger sons, by name, in tail with cross remainders in tail; and if all his said younger sons should die without issue, then to his daughters. He died, leaving his sons, the appointees, still younger sons; afterwards one of them became the only surviving son, the rest being dead without issue, and then the trust estate vested in possession by the death of B. without issue male. The daughters of the appointor claimed the estate, considering the appointment to their surviving brother as defeated by his being, as they said, an eldest son for the time being, and so excluded by the will of A.; and the other brothers, the appointees, being dead without issue. But it was decreed by Lifford, Ch., that the appointment to him continued undisturbed; that "time being" meant the time of the appointment being made; that the appointees were as if named in the will of A., and that the daughters could only claim under the appointment of their father, who limited it to them in the event of all his sons, the appointees, dying without issue, which did not happen. Jones v. Cope, Vern. & Scriv. 29.

—— Advancements in Satisfaction—Advances received by Younger Son becoming the Eldest.]—Portions by settlements for younger children, living at the death of the survivor of the parents; with a proviso, that advancements should be in satisfaction, unless the contrary is declared. The father by will, desiring the settlement may be punctually complied with, made a residuary disposition of real and personal estates among the younger children; directing that what they may have received in his life shall be brought into the account, so as to make them all equal; construction upon the whole, that advancement in marriage, or otherwise, though not the grammatical construction, is within the proviso; and, equality being the object, an arrangement was made upon that principle. One of the younger children, having become the eldest, and therefore owner of the estate, between the death of the parents, after advances received in satisfaction of the portion in the former character, is to be considered a younger child in the account. Leake v. Leake, 10 Ves. 477.

Persons specifically included in Class of Younger Children.]—A testator devised real estate on trust after the death of his wife in strict settlement on his four sons, A., B., C. and D., and their issue male successively. He bequeathed a legacy of 14,000*l.* after the death of his wife to be paid to his "younger children," namely, B., C., D., E., F., G., H., K. and L. (the six latter being his daughters), in equal share, so that the share of each of his said younger children should be absolutely vested at twenty-one, whether the preceding trusts should be determined or not. A. and B. died in the lifetime of the testator's widow without issue male. C. attained twenty-one in the lifetime of B., and on the death of the widow became tenant for life under the will of the real estate:—Held, that he was entitled to a share in the legacy of 14,000*l.* Prytherch, In re, Prytherch v. Williams, 42 Ch. D. 590; 61 L. T. 799.

Eldest Son excluded by Name.]—A testator bequeathed 20,000*l.* to his son A. for life, with remainder, "in case F., the eldest son of A., shall be living," to F. for life, with remainder to his children, and in default of children to the other sons of A. successively, in strict settlement. He also bequeathed a share of the residue to A. for life, with remainder to "all the children of A., except F." F. died in the lifetime of A., unmarried, when B. became the eldest son of A., and entitled on A.'s death to a life interest in the legacy of 2,000*l.*:—Held, that, notwithstanding B. having become the eldest son, he was entitled to a share in the residue, and that the representatives of F. were excluded. Wood v. Wood, L. R. 4 Eq. 48; 15 W. R. 389.

Character to be Ascertained when Portions Vest.]—A son who, when he attained twenty-one, was a younger child, but, by the subsequent death of his elder brother, in the lifetime of his parents, becomes an eldest son before the time fixed for the payment of the younger children's portions, is entitled to his share of portions which are directed to vest in the younger sons at twenty-one, though not payable till after the death of the parents; there being enough in the settlements by which the portions were provided, to shew that the character of younger child was to be ascertained by reference to the time when the portions vested, and not to the time when they became payable. Windham v. Graham, 1 Russ. 331: 25 R. R. 62. And see Loder v. Loder, 2 Ves. Sen. 531.

Portions not Raisable.]—By marriage settlement lands were limited to the husband and wife successively for life, remainder to the first son of the marriage and the "heirs" of such first son, remainder to the second, third and every other son of the marriage and their respective heirs, with remainder to the issue female of the marriage and their heirs, as tenants in common, subject, "in case there should be a son, and a younger child or younger children" of said marriage, to a charge of 1,000*l.* for such younger child or younger children. There was issue of the marriage an only son, who survived his father, but died in the lifetime of his mother, and three daughters:—Held, first, following Doe d. Littledale v. Smeddle (2 B. & Ald. 126; 20 R. R. 377), that under the settlement the son took an estate tail, and the daughters estates as tenants in common in fee; secondly, that the daughters having succeeded to the estates in fee, under the limitations in the settlement, the portions were not raisable. Smith's Estate, In re, 27 L. R., Ir. 121.

b. Where not taking the Estate.

Death before Entering into Possession.]—A younger child becoming the eldest son, but not living to enter into possession of the estates, remains a younger child for the purpose of receiving a portion. Sing v. Leslie, 2 H. & M. 68; 4 N. R. 17; 33 L. J., Ch. 549; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 794; 10 L. T. 332.

Revocation of Uses—New Uses Declared.]—When, under a power in a marriage settlement, uses are revoked, and new uses declared, whereby a younger child, who has since become an eldest son, takes, through the mere bounty of the donor, property which, but for such revocation, he would have taken as eldest son under the settlement, he does not thereby cease to be entitled to the portion of a younger child under the settlement. Wandesforde v. Carrick, Ir. R. 5 Eq. 486.

Estate Tail Barred by Eldest Son—Portions subsequently Payable.]—A., on his marriage, settled real estates on himself for life, then to parties for a term to raise portions for his younger children, and subject thereto to his first and other sons in tail. The portions were to vest in sons at twenty-one, but to be payable after the death of the husband and wife. G., the second son, attained twenty-one, after which W., the eldest son, having barred the entail, died without issue, and subsequently the portions became payable:—Held, that G., although the eldest at the period of distribution, was entitled to a share of portions for younger children. Adams v. Beck, 25 Beav. 648.

—— Exclusion from Bulk of Estate.]—A second son, becoming the eldest son in the lifetime of his father, who was tenant for life, with remainder, subject to trusts for younger children's portions, in strict settlement, was prevented from taking an interest in the bulk of the estate by reason of a disentailing deed executed by his father and elder brother:—Held, that he was entitled to a share of the portions provided for younger children, notwithstanding a proviso for accruer, in the event of a younger son becoming an eldest son; the court being of opinion, that, in being excluded by the disentailing deed, he was in effect excluded by the settlement, of which the disentailing deed was necessarily an incident, and the intention was clear to exclude none from the portions who were excluded by the settlement from taking the bulk of the estate. Macoubrey v. Jones, 2 K. & J. 684.

The case of Peacocke v. Pares, infra, observed upon. It is in conflict with Spencer v. Spencer, infra, and not to be followed as an authority. Ib.

Where the bulk of an estate is limited in strict settlement, and by the same settlement portions are provided for younger children, no child taking the bulk of the estate by virtue of the limitations in strict settlement can take any benefit from the portions, whether the settlement does or does not contain an express provision to exclude him from a share in the portions. But where a younger child becomes the eldest without taking any part of the estate, whether or not he is entitled to share in the portions, is a question of intention. Ib.

Construction of a clause of accruer "in case of any younger son becoming an eldest or only son." Peacocke v. Pares, 2 Keen, 689; 6 L. J., Ch. 375; 1 Jur. 575.

An estate was limited to A. for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail; and a term was created, for raising portions for younger children, to be interests vested in sons at twenty-one, but payable after the death of A.; and it was provided, that in case any of the younger sons should become an eldest or only son, his portion should accrue to the other children. A. had two sons, B. and C., and one daughter; B. attained twenty-one, and suffered a recovery, whereby he destroyed C.'s estate in remainder. B. died in 1807, leaving C., an infant, to whom he devised the estate for his life. A. died in 1833:—Held, that C. was not entitled to participate in the portion. Ib.

Where estates were limited in a settlement for a term to raise a certain sum for portions of all the children of the marriage (except an eldest or only son), to be vested and paid at such times as the husband should appoint, and in default of his appointment, at twenty-one, but not to be paid until after his death, with a proviso, if any son should become an eldest or only son before the time appointed for payment of his portion, that, then, and in default of any such appointment, his share should go to the others; the eldest son attained twenty-one, and afterwards, with the father, suffered a recovery, and re-settled the estates to the use of the father for life, remainder to the son in fee; the other children, a son and three daughters, all attained twenty-one, and the eldest died intestate and without issue, and the father appointed the sum amongst the surviving son and three daughters, directing that the shares should vest on the execution of the deed, but not to be paid until after his death; and the second son also died before his father:—Held, that the share so appointed to him did not go over to the sisters. Spencer v. Spencer, 8 Sim. 87; 5 L. J., Ch. 310.

By a settlement executed in 1800, on his first marriage, A. was seised of an estate for life in certain lands, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail, with power to charge the lands with 2,000*l.* for such purposes as he should think fit, and with 1,000*l.* for his children by any after-taken wife. He also became entitled by subsequent events to two sums of 500*l.* and 1,000*l.* charged on the lands by the same deed. There was no issue of the first marriage. By a settlement executed in 1809, on his second marriage, he charged the lands with 2,000*l.* and 1,000*l.* under the powers, and assigned that 2,000*l.*, and 500*l.* and 1,000*l.*, to trustees in trust, if there should be two or more younger children or daughters, to be divided amongst them, after the death of their father and mother, as he should by deed or will appoint, and in default of appointment equally; and if there should be no issue of the marriage or issue only one son, or there should be issue one or more daughter or daughters, or one or more younger children who should die before the time of payment of the portions, then as to the 2,000*l.*, 1,000*l.* and 500*l.* in trust for A., his executors, &c. There was issue of the second marriage two sons and a daughter (B., C. and D.). The eldest son, B., joined A. in suffering a recovery of the estate, and, by a deed of 1834 it was conveyed subject to a term, to the use of A. for life, remainder to the use of B. for life, remainder to the first and other son of B. in tail, remainder over. The trusts of the term were to raise, by sale or mortgage, 12,500*l.* to be disposed of as A. and B. or the survivor, should appoint, which was raised. A. appointed 250*l.* of the sums of 500*l.*, 1,000*l.* and 2,000*l.* to D., and the residue to C., and afterwards B., the eldest son, died without issue, whereupon C. became entitled, subject to the charge of 12,500*l.*, to a life-estate in part of the lands, the remainder having been sold for payment of incumbrances:—Held, that the appointment of the 500*l.*, 1,000*l.* and 2,000*l.* did not become void by C. becoming an elder son, entitled to the lands under the deed of 1834. Tennison v. Moore, 13 Ir. Eq. R. 424.

3. SHIFTING CLAUSES.

Younger Son.]—In construing a will, the words "younger son," used by the testator in a proviso for the shifting, in certain events, of an estate thereby devised, are to be taken in their plain and ordinary sense as meaning "younger in order of birth," unless it satisfactorily appears from other parts of the will that they were used by the testator in another sense. Wilbraham v. Scarisbrick, 1 H. L. Cas. 167.

Younger Son or Daughter.]—A testator, after directing two estates, A. and B., to be settled upon his children in strict settlement, except that as to estate B. the first limitation was to his second son and his issue, T., the eldest (who was to take under the first limitation as to estate A.), being named last, directed that the settlement should provide that if W. and C. (naming the other children except T.), or any subsequently born sons or daughters, should become entitled to the A. estate, and any "younger son or daughter" of the testator or any issue of such younger son or daughter should be then living, the uses in the estate at B. to the child who, or whose issue, should so become entitled, should cease:—Held, that the words "younger son or daughter," in the shifting clauses, were to be construed distributively, viz. a son younger than a son, or a daughter younger than a daughter, and the estates to shift from sons to sons and from daughters to daughters, and not from sons to daughters according to seniority. Scarisbrick v. Eccleston, 5 Cl. & F. 399—H. L. (E.)

"Become the Eldest Son."]—E. devised his estates to R. the second, J. the third, and C. the fourth sons of his brother-in-law Sir T. S. (entirely passing over W., the eldest son), and to their sons successively in tail male. By a name and arms clause he directed that as any one became entitled under the will he should assume the name and arms of E. He then introduced a shifting clause, that in case R., or J., or C. "should become the eldest son" of Sir T. S., the E. estates should go over to the next in remainder under his will. The testator died in 1819. Sir T. S. survived the testator. W., the eldest son, succeeded his father in the S. baronetcy, and in the paternal estates; and disentailed and sold them. On his death without issue R. succeeded to the baronetcy. He had long before complied with the name and arms clause in the testator's will, and was in possession of the E. estates. R. died without male issue, and J., the third son, then claimed the E. estates:—Held, that he was entitled to them, for that upon the true construction of the will he had not "become the eldest son" of Sir T. S., and the shifting clause had therefore not taken effect. Bathurst v. Errington, 46 L. J., Ch. 748; 2 App. Cas. 698; 37 L. T. 338; 25 W. R. 908—H. L. (E.)

4. OTHER CASES.

Younger Son becoming Eldest.]—Younger son becoming an eldest, entitled to take eo nomine. Bridgewater v. Egerton, 2 Ves. Sen. 122. S. P., Stevens v. Pyle, 30 Beav. 284; post, col. 1851.

Construction of an obscure will; first, that the income only, not the capital, was disposed of; secondly, that the disposition was in favour of the younger children, excluding the eldest. Sansbury v. Read, 12 Ves. 75.

A. made a voluntary settlement of lands (subject to an annuity of 100*l.* to his youngest son), in trust for his eldest son and his heirs, which settlement did not contain any power of revocation; the eldest son being dead, the father made another voluntary settlement of the same lands to the use of himself for life, remainder to his youngest son for life, remainder to trustees to preserve, &c., remainder to first and other sons of youngest son in tail. The first deed came into the hands of the eldest son's heir, and the other to the second son, who brought a bill to set aside the first. Both sons having been otherwise provided for, it was held, that though both deeds were voluntary, yet the consideration of being a younger child was not sufficient to set aside the first deed. Clavering v. Clavering, 7 Bro. P. C. 410.

Youngest construed as Only.]—Bequest to the youngest child of A., if she should have any child or children within a certain period; if no child or children within that period, over; her eldest child, being the only one within that period, is entitled. Emery v. England, 3 Ves. 232

C. GIFTS TO FIRST, SECOND, OR OTHER SONS.

In General.]—Second-born son may take under a limitation "to the first son," he being so at the time. Lomax v. Holmden, 1 Ves. Sen. 290.

A. devised the whole of his fortune equally to be divided between any second or younger sons of his brother S., and his sister T. The sister has one younger son, but the brother has none:—Held, that the youngest son of the sister was entitled to the whole. Wicker v. Mitford, 3 Bro. P. C. 442.

The limitation in remainder in a settlement was to the second son of a person who was living at the date of the settlement:—Held, that the second son living at that date was entitled. Saunders v. Richardson, 18 Jur. 714.

A. devises in trust for his daughter for life, remainder to the second son of her body in tail male, and so to every younger son, with remainders over. There were two sons, B. and C.; B. died, and, after his death, C. was born. C., though an only son, shall take, he being the second son in order of birth, and, as the will is worded, not to be excluded. Trafford v. Ashton, 2 Vern. 660.

Devise to B. F. for life; remainder to the second, third, fourth and other sons of B. F., except the first or eldest son, in tail male successively: remainder to F. S. B. F. had no issue at the time of the decease of the testatrix, but afterwards had four sons, of whom the second and third were living at the same time, and the second and fourth were also living at the same time; but at the decease of B. F. the fourth son only was living:—Held, that the remainder to the second and other sons of B. F., except the first or eldest son, was vested upon B. F. having two sons living at the same time, and was not subject to be divested by subsequent events, and consequently that the fourth and only surviving son of B. F. took an estate tail under the devise. Driver d. Frank v. Frank, 8 Taunt. 468. Affirming 3 M. & S. 25; 15 R. R. 385; 2 Moore, C. P. 519 And see Fen d. Lowndes v. Lowndes, 4 Burr. 2246.

Although the words "to be begotten" do not in their primary legal sense point to futurity, yet they will be held to do so if such an intention can be gathered from the will. Langston v. Langston, infra, and Blake, In re, infra, distinguished. Ib.

Bequest of the dividends of stock, in trust for the testator's nephew, son of his younger brother B. for life; unless under the will he should become entitled to the testator's real estate in America, devised to B. and his first and other sons in strict settlement, in remainder after similar estates to the testator's next brother A., and his issue male; and in that event, and so from time to time afterwards, or, if any future possessor should bar the entail by recovery or other means, as to the capital, for such person as shall be heir apparent or expectant next to the person then in possession; or, if he should have joined in barring the entail, for the persons next in succession to him. After the death of A. the title of his eldest son to the estate being in consequence of the American Revolution confiscated in 1779, upon the death of the son of B., the second son of A., his eldest son having no issue, was held entitled to the dividends of the stock, while his elder brother should have no issue male. Penn v. Barclay, 14 Ves. 122.

Testator by his will directed that the fourth part of the net annual income of his property, which was personal, should be paid in quarterly payments to the eldest son of E.; and that on his decease the quarterly payment of his annuity should be continued to his heir-at-law; and failing the latter by death, so on in like manner as long as there should be an heir:—Held, that this was an absolute gift of one-fourth of the property to the eldest son of E. Testator by his will directed the income of one-half of his personal estate to be paid in equal shares to the eldest sons of his sisters E. and M. At the date of the will, an eldest born son of M. was living, but he afterwards died in testator's lifetime, leaving a second born son of M. surviving him. After his death, and with knowledge of it, the testator, by a codicil, directed the trustees of his will to divide a certain sum among all the children then living of his sisters E. and M., with the exception of the two provided for in his will:—Held, that the second born son of M. took the share given by the will to her eldest son. Thompson v. Thompson, 1 Coll. C. C. 388; 8 Jur. 889.

Limitation to "Every other Son or Sons"—"To be Begotten."]—A testator devised real estate to his second son for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail male; with remainder to the testator's third son for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail male; with remainder to the testator's fourth, fifth and every other son and sons to be begotten, born or en ventre sa mère at the time of his decease, respectively in tail male; with remainder to the testator's daughters begotten or to be begotten equally as tenants in common in tail. All the testator's sons except the eldest having died without issue male, the eldest son claimed the estate:—Held, that, having regard to the various limitations in the will, the eldest son was excluded from taking under the expression "every other son." Locke v. Dunlop, 57 L. J., Ch. 1010: 39 Ch. D. 387; 59 L. T. 683—C. A. Affirming 36 W. R. 41.

Upon a will devising lands in trust to be conveyed and settled to the use of L., the devisor's eldest son, for his life, remainder to his second, third, fourth, fifth and all and every other the son and sons of the body of L., lawfully to be begotten, severally, successively and in remainder, one after another, as they and every of them should be in seniority of age, and priority of birth, and the heirs male of their bodies respectively :—Held, upon the words and context of the will, making provisions inconsistent with the intention that a first son of L. should be excluded, that such first son took an estate in the lands in tail male. Langston v. Langston, 8 Bli. (N.S.) 167 ; 2 Cl. & F. 194—H. L. (E.) S. P., Clements v. Paske, 2 Cl. & F. 230, n. And see Grattan v. Langdale, 11 L. R., Ir. 473.

By marriage settlement lands were limited to the use of the first son of the body of B. on the body of P. (his future wife), lawfully to be begotten, and the heirs male of the body of such son, with remainder to the use of the second, third, fourth, fifth, and all and every other the son and sons of the body of B. to be begotten severally and successively, one after another, as they and every of them should be in seniority of age and priority of birth, in tail male :—Held, that the eldest son of B. by his second marriage (there being no issue of his marriage with P.) was entitled to the lands as a tenant in tail in preference to the second son of such marriage. Blake's Settlement, In re, 19 W. R. 765—C. A. (Ir.).

"Other Child."]—A testator, after bequeathing his personal estate to trustees upon trust for sale, and after devising a freehold estate to his eldest son G., and providing for his maintenance during minority out of the rents and profits, directed his trustees to invest the proceeds of the sale of his personal estate, and to apply the income arising therefrom, and the rents and profits of his residuary real estate, towards the maintenance and education of "all his children living at his death or born in due time afterwards" ; and directed that when his youngest child should attain the age of twenty-one his trustees should "sell all his real estate, except the estate devised to his son G. . . . and divide the proceeds equally between his daughters, E., M., F., S. and A., and his sons F. and W., and such other child or children as might be living at his decease, or born in due time afterwards" :—Held, that the eldest son G. was entitled to share in the proceeds of sale of the real estate. Tavernor v. Grindley, 32 L. T. 424.

"Seventh or Youngest Child."]—Legacy to the seventh, or youngest child, of A. A. had six children at the testator's death, and had another, who died at the age of two months ; afterwards the plaintiff was born, and was the seventh child living, but eighth in order of birth ; other children were born afterwards. Under these circumstances the youngest child is entitled to the legacy, and not the plaintiff. West v. Lord Primate of Ireland, 2 Cox, 258 ; 3 Bro. C. C. 148.

Gift to "Next Surviving Son."]—A testator directed his trustees to receive the rents of all his real estate for maintenance of all his children during the minority of H., his youngest child, and on her attaining twenty-one, he gave to five of his sons, whom he named in descending order of birth, estates tail in five several portions of his real estate respectively. And he provided that in case any of these five sons died "during the minority of H. as aforesaid, or in the event of any of them dying without having such lawful issue as aforesaid, and either before or after their or his share should be divisible," then the share of the deceased son should accrue to the testator's "next surviving son according to seniority of age and priority of birth" :—Held, first, that on the death of one of the five sons during the minority of H., though leaving issue inheritable, the gift over took effect. Eastwood v. Lockwood, 36 L. J., Ch. 573 ; L. R. 3 Eq. 487 ; 15 W. R. 611.

Held, secondly, that having regard to the order in which the sons were named, "next surviving son" meant next in order according to the testator's arrangement. Ib.

D. DAUGHTERS.

Eldest Daughter.]—An elder daughter, where there is a son, is accounted a younger child in a court of equity. Heneage v. Hunloke, 2 Atk. 456. S. P., Beale v. Beale, 1 P. Wms. 244 ; Pierson v. Garnett, 2 Bro. C. C. 38 ; Pre. Ch. 201. And see S. C., Id. 226.

Where, by articles before marriage, it was agreed that a principal sum should be paid to trustee for benefit of younger children, and that certain freehold houses should be conveyed, after previous particular estates, to the younger child or children, in tail general ; and, by indenture of same date, the houses were settled to uses of the articles ; the husband and wife left a daughter, their eldest child, and a son :—Held, that the daughter was entitled to the principal sum, and the freehold houses ; for an elder daughter, where there is a son, is accounted a younger child. In an ejectment the daughter could not have recovered ; for, being the eldest, she would not, at law, be construed a younger child ; but, in a court of equity, as the articles are executory, they must be carried into execution agreeably to the intention of the parties. Ib.

Testatrix directed that her land at M. should, as the rents became due, be equally divided amongst the youngest of her son's children ; the son left four daughters (one of whom was his eldest child) and a son :—Held, that the daughters, including the eldest, took an estate in fee in the land, it appearing, by the context of the will, to be the testatrix's intention to exclude an elder son only. Hall v. Luckup, 4 Sim. 5.

Under a gift of the residue, for such child of testator's daughter as should first attain the age of twenty-one years, for his or her absolute use and benefit, the eldest child, a daughter, was held to take, notwithstanding many passages of the will created a doubt as to that being the testator's intention, he having given that daughter a legacy, and, by a codicil, declared that the furniture in a certain house which he had given (subject to a previous life estate) to the eldest son, should, after the death of the tenant for life, be held upon and for the same trusts and purposes as he had declared concerning his residuary personal estate. Shipperdson v. Tower, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 441 ; 6 Jur. 658.

Devise, in default of issue male of A., to the first daughter living at the death of the testator, who should attain twenty-five, for life, with remainder to her first and other sons in tail male ; remainders over ; subject to a trust for debts and accumulation of the surplus rents and profits, until a son or daughter should first come to the actual possession of the estates or receipt of the rents : after that period such person to take the surplus rents ; and the surplus of the accumulation, after payment of the debts, to be paid to such person or persons, who by the limitation should first come to the actual possession of the estates, or receipt of the rents and profits. A daughter living at the death of the testator, and having attained twenty-five, entitled to possession of the estate and to the accumulated fund. Barker v. Barker, 12 Ves. 409.

By marriage settlement, certain lands were conveyed to A. (the intended husband), his heirs and assigns ; and in case A. should die, leaving one or more son or sons on the body of his intended wife to be begotten, the elder of such sons, and the heirs male of his body, being always preferred to take place before the younger, with full liberty for A. "to make such reasonable provision as he should think fit for such younger child or children" ; and in case A. should die leaving no son, and that there should be one or more daughters, then to such daughter or daughters (if more than one) on their attaining their respective ages of twenty-one years, their heirs and assigns, share and share alike. There was issue of the marriage eight children, four sons and four daughters ; and A. by his last will and testament, in pursuance of the power contained in the marriage settlement, charged the lands with the sum of 1,500*l.*, to be divided amongst the younger children of the marriage in manner therein mentioned. The first taker having disputed the right to charge in favour of daughters, on a bill filed by one of the daughters to raise her portion of the 1,500*l.* :—Held, that the power was well exercised, and as the intention of the settlement was evidently to provide for all the children, as well daughters as sons, that the court would effect that intention, and support the appointment, by transposing the clause creating the power, and that containing the limitation to the daughters in the event of there being no son, whereby the words "such younger children" would include both sons and daughters. Fenton v. Fenton, 1 Dr. & Wal. 66. But see Flemyng's Trusts, In re, post, col. 1854. Smith's Estate, In re, ante, col. 1841.

Eldest Daughter excluded.] — A testatrix bequeathed her residuary estate to trustees upon trust for her daughter for life, with remainder to the "younger children" of her said daughter, the shares of sons to be paid at twenty-one, and those of daughters at twenty-one or marriage ; with a direction to invest the shares of daughters, and pay them the income for their separate use from the time of marriage or upon their attaining twenty-one, so that the capital of each daughter's share should pass to the children of such daughter ; with such trusts or remainders, in the event of there being no such issue, as the trustees should think proper : — Held, in the absence of evidence shewing an intention on the part of the testatrix to place herself in loco parentis towards her grandchildren, that the eldest child, a daughter, was excluded, and a younger child, a son, who succeeded to the family estates, was entitled to a share. Lyddon v. Ellison, 19 Beav. 565 ; 18 Jur. 1066 ; 2 W. R. 690. And see Jones v. Cope, ante, col. 1839 ; Teynham (Lord) v. Webb, 2 Ves. Sen. 198.

Gift to Younger Children other than Heir-at-Law.]—A settlement was made on the marriage of I. S., of two shares in the New River water, to I. S. for life, remainder to his wife for life, and after their decease, one share was limited to such of the younger children as should not be heir-at-law, or for want of such issue, to the sisters of I. S., and their children, as I. S. should appoint ; but in the case of no issue of I. S., or if he should make no appointment, the same was limited to the sisters, and the children of one of the sisters, under whom the plaintiff claimed, in such manner as they were entitled to one whole share. If there had been only one child, it would have been excluded by the words, "other than such as shall be heir-at-law" ; or if there had been several daughters, as they would have made but one united heir, they would have been excluded ; or if both sons and daughters, and reduced to only one child, that child could not have taken. Townsend v. Ash, 3 Atk. 336, 338.

E. CLASS WHEN ASCERTAINED AND PERIOD OF VESTING.

See also preceding subdivisions.

Death of Testator.] — Bequest of 3,000*l.* to Jane, the wife of C., for the use of her younger children, to be distributed as she should appoint, in default equally to all Jane's children by C., being born at the time of the will and death of the testator. It was held, vested as a present legacy to them, subject to variation as between them, but not to extend to her children by a future marriage. The period of vesting being as above, one who was a younger child at the testator's death, and became an elder afterwards, was held entitled. Coleman v. Seymour, 1 Ves. Sen. 209.

Legacy to the "eldest child of A.," who was alive at the date of the will, but died before the testator :—Held, to mean the eldest child living at the testator's decease. Harris's Trusts, In re, 2 Eq. R. 1110 ; 2 W. R. 689.

Under a trust for A. for life, "and after her death, to be divided equally between her younger children" :—Held, first, that the children took vested interests at their births, and secondly, that the character of youngest child was to be determined at the period of vesting, and not that of distribution. Adams v. Roberts, 25 Beav. 658.

Under a will directing the transfer of stock among all the children of the testatrix's daughter, except an eldest son, a second son having become the eldest living by the death of his elder brother, who survived the testatrix, is not entitled to a share, although an estate limited to his elder brother did not descend to him. Matthews v. Paul, 3 Swanst. 328 ; 2 Wils. Ch. 64 ; 19 R. R. 207.

Held, that under a bequest to the younger children of A., an only surviving younger child was upon the whole will entitled ; and the second, having become the eldest, was excluded. Lincoln (Lady) v. Pelham, 10 Ves. 166 ; 7 R. R. 370.

Happening of Contingency.] Legacy of 300*l.* to E., to be paid at twenty-one or marriage ; but if she died before, then to the younger children of F. E. having died unmarried, under twenty-one :—Held, to vest in such of the younger children as were living at that time. Ellison v. Airey, 1 Ves. Sen. 111.

Devise and bequest to A., and after her decease, leaving any child or children her surviving, who should attain twenty-one, to pay her share "to her eldest child, his executors, administrators and assigns," with a gift over in default of such child :—Held, that A.'s eldest child, who died in A.'s life, did not take, but that the second child, who survived her mother, was entitled. Stevens v. Pyle, 30 Beav. 284.

A testatrix, who died in 1819, bequeathed a legacy to accumulate in trust for the eldest daughter of A. B., to be paid at twenty-one, and if none, to the eldest daughter of C. D., payable in like manner. A. B. never had a daughter, and died in 1851. C. D. had a daughter G., born in 1821, and who died in 1827, and other daughters :—Held, that the representative of G. was entitled to the legacy, and to the accumulations accrued down to 1827, together with simple interest thereon from that time to the day of payment in 1852. Bryan v. Collins, 16 Beav. 14.

Death of Tenant for Life.]—Where there is a devise of real estate to A. for life, with remainder to his eldest son, and A. has B., his eldest son, at the time of the date of the will, who afterwards dies, and A. leaves another child, C., his eldest son. Quære, as to the construction of such a devise ; but, semble that C. would take. Spurrell v. Spurrell, 22 L. J., Ch. 1076 ; 17 Jur. 755.

A limitation by settlement of a fund vested in trustees, upon trust to pay the income to M. for life, and after her death, "to pay or transfer the capital to all her children (except her eldest or only son), in equal shares, at their respective ages of twenty-one years," confers a vested interest on all the children of M. who attain twenty-one, although they may die before the period of division. Theed's Trusts, In re, 3 K. & J. 375 ; 26 L. J., Ch. 514.

A younger son attained twenty-one, and then became the eldest by the death of his elder brother before the period of division :—Held, that as there was no reason shewn by the settlement for excluding the eldest son, such as his accession to another estate, the share that was vested in the younger son was not divested by his becoming the eldest. Ib.

The character of "eldest son" is, in ordinary cases, to be ascertained at the period of vesting, and not of payment. Adams v. Adams, 25 Beav. 652.

Bequest to A. for life, and afterwards in trust for her children who, not being an eldest or only son, should attain twenty-one. In 1854, after G., the second son, had attained twenty-one, the eldest son died, and the second son thereupon became eldest. The tenant for life died in 1857 :—Held, that G., though an eldest son at the time the fund became payable to the children, took a share. Ib.

Construction of will, that under a bequest to the children of A., a second son of three at the death of the testator and the tenant for life, who became the eldest before the age of twenty-one, till which it was subject to survivorship, was, upon the whole will, not entitled. Bowles v. Bowles, 10 Ves. 177.

Provisions made by Strangers.]—In cases of provisions made by strangers, the time for ascertaining the class of younger children is in general the period of vesting, not the period of distribution, as in settlements by parents. Sandeman v. Mackenzie, 1 J. & H. 613 ; 30 L. J., Ch. 838 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1231 ; 5 L. T. 175.

Youngest Child attaining 21.]—A testatrix gave to the eldest son of her daughter Eliza, and of her husband, E. L., who should be living at the time of her own decease, ten guineas, adding that she left him no larger sum, because he would have a handsome provision from the estates of her late husband and of his own father (who was still alive) ; and she gave the residue of her property to her executors, upon trust, as to one moiety thereof, to pay and divide the same unto and amongst all the children of her daughter Eliza, who were then in being or should be thereafter born, except her eldest son, or such of her sons as should, by the death of an elder brother, become an eldest son, equally to be divided amongst them, and the survivors or survivor, when the youngest should arrive at the age of twenty-one years. At the death of the testatrix, her daughter Eliza had five children, and the eldest son was provided for from the estates in the will mentioned, and he received the ten guineas, but died without issue before the youngest child attained twenty-one. The second, who then became an eldest son, did not succeed to the provision which had been made for the eldest son :—Held, notwithstanding, that he, being the eldest son at the time the youngest of the children attained twenty-one, was excluded from any share in the moiety of the residue. Livesey v. Livesey, 2 H. L. Cas. 419 ; 13 Jur. 371. Affirming 13 Sim. 33 ; 15 L. J., Ch. 357.

Death of Survivor of Several Tenants for Life.]—A testator gave personal property, upon the death of the survivor of several tenants for life, "to be divided equally between the two eldest children born in wedlock of each" of his sons and daughters ; but if there should be only "one child living" to any of his married sons or daughters, that child to "receive only the proportion divided equally according to the number there may be" :—Held, that "the two eldest born" meant the two actual eldest living at the date of distribution, and the representatives of a deceased eldest, and a deceased second eldest, were excluded. Madden v. Ikin, 2 Dr. & Sm. 207 ; 1 N. R. 11 ; 32 L. J., Ch. 3 ; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1168 ; 7 L. T. 264 ; 11 W. R. 2.

Settlement—"Eldest Son for Time being entitled."]—By a settlement made in 1820, on the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. C., certain funds were settled upon trust, after the death of the survivor of them, for their children or child, "other than and except an eldest son for the time being entitled," under a will, recited in the settlement, to a property at N. D., "for an estate in tail male in possession or remainder immediately expectant upon the death" of C. ; the fund to vest in such children or child at twenty-one. C. was tenant for life of the property at N. D. There were three children, a son, E. C., and two daughters. The son, in the father's lifetime, concurred with him in barring the entail in the property at N. D., which was thereupon resettled, the son taking only an estate for life after his father's death, but taking also out of the property an immediate provision of 500*l.* a year :—Held, that, although the time of distribution of the trust funds was the proper period for ascertaining who was the "eldest son" to be excepted out of the settlement as being entitled under the will as tenant in tail in possession to the estates at N. D., and, although at that time E. C. was only entitled to those estates as tenant for life, and so did not strictly answer the description of the child to be excluded, yet, as he had already acquired the larger interest in the landed property, and had dealt with it as it seemed good to him, he was by the terms of the settlement excluded from taking any portion of the trust funds. Collingwood v. Stanhope, 38 L. J., Ch. 421; L. R. 4 H. L. 43; 17 W. R. 537.

—— "Eldest or only Son."]—By a marriage settlement, real estate of the husband's father was limited (subject to life estates to the father and to the husband, and to a jointure to the wife) to the first and other sons of the marriage successively, in tail male. By another deed, in which the settlement was recited, real estate of wife was limited, subject to her life estate, to the use of all and every the son and sons, other than an eldest or only son, and daughter and daughters of the marriage, equally, as tenants in common in tail, and if any such younger son or daughter should die, and there should be failure of issue of his or her body, or in case any such younger son or sons should become an eldest or only son before attaining twenty-one, then the share of such son or daughter, as well original as accruing, should go over to the survivors or survivor or others or other of the younger sons or daughters, to be divided between them (if more than one) equally, as tenants in common in tail, and, if but one such son or daughter, the whole was to go to him or her in tail:—Held, that the period of distribution of the wife's estate was the time at which the class to participate in it was to be ascertained, and that, consequently, a younger son of the marriage, who succeeded to the paternal settled estates after he attained twenty-one, but who died in his mother's lifetime, was not entitled to any share in his mother's settled estate. Bayley's Settlement, In re, L. R. 6 Ch. 590; 25 L. T. 249; 19 W. R. 789. Affirming 39 L. J., Ch. 388. S. P., Rivers' Settlement Trust, In re, 40 L. J., Ch. 87; 24 L. T. 253; 19 W. R. 318. And see Windham v. Graham, 1 Russ. 331; 25 R. R. 62; ante, col. 1841; and Smyth, Ex parte, 12 Ir. Ch. L. 487.

Sir C. D. (who died in 1857), by deed in 1852, appointed a fund to trustees in trust for his daughter Lady W., for life, and after her death in trust for the child or all the children, "except an eldest or only son," if more than one, of Lady W., who should attain twenty-one or marry; and failing such trusts then over. Lady W. died in 1883, having had four children only, viz., Thomas, her eldest born son, who attained twenty-one in January, 1869, and died in April following; Sir F. W., who attained twenty-one in 1880; Helena, who attained twenty-one in 1865; and Edith, who died in infancy, in 1864; so that the fund vested in Helena (subject to let in other children) in the lifetime of the eldest born son, and before he attained twenty-one. At the date of the deed certain estates stood limited under a settlement, to which Sir C. D. was a party, to the use of Sir T. W. (the husband of Lady W.) for life with remainder to the issue of the first and other sons of Sir T. and Lady W. in tail male. In March, 1869, Sir T. W. and his son Thomas disentailed the estates, and limited them to the appointees of both, or of the survivor. The joint power was not exercised: but after the death of Thomas, Sir T. W. by will appointed the estates to Sir F. W. for life, with remainder to his sons in tail male. Upon Lady W.'s death, Sir F. W. claimed half the fund, and Helena, the whole of it:—Held, that, if the expression "eldest or only son" was to be read as referring to a son entitled under a settlement to settled estates, the time for ascertaining the excluded son would be the time for distributing the younger children's portions; but that if that expression was to be read according to its natural meaning, the time of vesting would be the time for exclusion. Domrile v. Winnington, 53 L. J., Ch. 782; 26 Ch. D. 382; 50 L. T. 519; 32 W. R. 699.

Held, also, that the words "an eldest or only son" primâ facie mean an individual, and that as there was an eldest son in existence when the provision vested in Helena, the clause of exclusion applied to him, and its operation was exhausted, so that any other son who attained twenty-one was entitled to take; held, therefore, that Sir F. W. was entitled to one-half of the fund. Matthews v. Paul, supra, col. 1850, observed upon. Ib.

—— Estates Sold under Paramount Title.]—By a marriage settlement an estate was settled on the wife and husband successively for life, with remainder to trustees for a term of 600 years, and subject thereto to the first and other sons in tail. Other estates were settled free from the portions term, but subject to prior charges which entirely absorbed them. The trusts of the term were if there should be any child, or children, of the husband and wife other than or besides an eldest or only son, who by virtue of the limitations should for the time being be entitled to the hereditaments and premises to raise for the portions of such child or children, other than or besides such eldest or only son, 5,000*l.*, to be vested in such of them as the husband and wife, or the survivor, should appoint, and in default of appointment equally. There were three children of the marriage, two sons and a daughter. In 1841 the estate was sold, under a paramount title, and produced a sum of about 2,400*l.* In 1842 the eldest son died an infant. In 1882 the surviving tenant for life died and the portions became payable. There had been no appointment. The younger son who had become the elder and had attained twenty-one claimed to take a share with his sister of the 2,400*l.*:—Held, that the effect of the settlement was to give 5,000*l.* to the sister as a first charge on the estate, and the rest of the estate to the brother, and whether the value of the residue were more or less than the portion, or, as in this case, nothing at all, the brother had no right to claim any share in the prior charge. Reid v. Hoare, 53 L. J., Ch. 486; 26 Ch. D. 363; 50 L. T. 257; 32 W. R. 609.

—— Money Fund for Younger Children.]—By settlement executed on the marriage of F. with H., a sum of 1,000*l.* the fortune of the wife, H., and 923*l.* 1*s.* 6*d.* the property of the husband, were vested in trustees in trust for F. for life, and after his decease in case he survived his wife (which event happened) in trust to pay and assign said funds among his children other than and besides an eldest or only son, as he should appoint, and in default of appointment then upon the trust declared concerning the trust fund secured by the term of 500 years for the benefit of F.'s younger children thereinafter mentioned; but if there were no such child or children as those for whom said trust fund was to be provided then in trust for F.'s father. By the same settlement certain lands were conveyed to the use of F. for life, remainder subject to a trust term of 500 years to the use of his first and other sons in tail male; remainder to the daughters, as tenants in common, in tail, with remainders over. The trusts of the term of 500 years were declared to be, that if there should be any child or children of the said F. other than and besides an eldest or only son who by virtue of the limitations before mentioned, should for the time being be entitled to the lands, then that the trustees should raise for such child or children other than or besides an eldest or only son, as aforesaid, the sums mentioned, 6,000*l.* if one such child, 8,000*l.* if two, and 10,000*l.* if three or more. There were two other clauses as to the vesting of these portions, which contained the words "other than or besides an eldest or only son for the time being entitled as aforesaid," and an advancement clause which contained the words "other than and except an eldest or only son for the time being entitled as aforesaid." There was issue of the marriage, two daughters only, both of whom died in F.'s lifetime, leaving children who became entitled on F.'s death to the settled lands:—Held, first, that the clauses in the settlement dealing with the money fund must be read as providing for children other than and besides an eldest or only son; secondly, that there not being any son of the marriage, the daughters did not come within the description of "a child or children other than and besides an eldest or only son," and that consequently the money fund of 1,923*l.* 1*s.* 6*d.* passed to F.'s father under the ultimate trust. Flemyng's Trusts, In re, 15 L. R. Ir. 363.

Gifts to a Class when Youngest Attains Twenty-one.]—See WILL.

F. CLAUSES EXCLUDING CHILD "ENTITLED," OR ELDEST SON FROM A CLASS OF CHILDREN.

Son "Entitled upon his Father's Decease."]—A testator bequeathed a legacy of 2,000*l.* upon trust for a married daughter, F., for life, then for her husband for life, and after the death of the survivor for such persons "related by blood" to F. as she should appoint; and in default of appointment to transfer the same to such persons as would be "the personal representatives" of F. in case she had died sole and unmarried. By a codicil, the testator, in reciting the bequest, referred to these trusts as being trusts for the benefit of his daughter's "relations and next of kin." F. died in the testator's lifetime:—Held, that by the "personal representatives" of F. were meant the persons who were her statutory next of kin at the testator's death. Grylls' Trusts, In re, L. R. 6 Eq. 589.

By the codicil the testator declared that 1,000*l.*, part of the 2,000*l.*, should be held for the absolute use and benefit of his son, H., but if he should be dead when the 1,000*l.* should "descend and come" to him under the trusts therein contained, then that the same should be paid to all the children of H. "except the one entitled to any real property upon his father's decease," share and share alike. Upon the death of H., in 1862, after the testator's death, his eldest son became next tenant for life in remainder of the settled estates, expectant on the death without issue of the then tenant for life in possession, which happened in 1863. The surviving tenant for life of the legacy died in 1867:—Held, that the eldest son of H. was excluded from participation in the 1,000*l.* Ib.

"Entitled" in Possession.]—A testator devised his real estate in trust for his nephew A. for life, with remainder to A.'s first and other sons successively in tail male; and failing such issue in trust for the testator's brothers B. and C. successively for their lives, and their sons successively in tail male; and failing such issue (in the events which happened) in trust for the testator's nephew D. in tail male. The testator bequeathed his residuary personalty equally among his nephews and nieces, except A. or other the person or persons entitled to the testator's real estates by virtue of the limitations therein-before contained. A. died unmarried in the testator's lifetime; C. survived the testator, but died unmarried; B. was sixty-eight years old at the time of the proceedings being taken, and had never been married:—Held, that D.'s expectation of a succession to the testator's real estate being contingent only, was not sufficient under the provisions of the will to disentitle D. to a share in the residuary personalty. Umbers v. Jaggard, L. R. 9 Eq. 200; 18 W. R. 283.

A testator gave Blackacre to his son F. for life, remainder to his eldest grandson, R., for life, remained to his (R.'s) first and other sons in tail, and in default of such issue to his second grandson, W., for life, remainder to his first and other sons in tail, and in default of such issue to his third grandson, F., for life, remainder to his first and other sons in tail, remainders over. The testator charged Blackacre with legacies of unequal amounts, in favour of his grandsons W. and F., to be paid as and when they attained twenty-one, with power to the trustees to advance the whole or part of the legacies for their benefit. The will contained a proviso that if either W. or F. should become entitled to an estate for life in Blackacre, then the legacies should not be paid, but should sink into Blackacre. R. died a bachelor, in the lifetime of F., the father, whereupon W. became tenant for life in remainder of Blackacre. He attained twenty-one:—Held, that the words in the proviso, "become entitled" meant "become entitled in possession," and that as at the time when he attained twenty-one his father was living, W. was entitled to have his legacy raised and paid. Chorley v. Loveland, 33 Beav. 189; 9 L. T. 596; 12 W. R. 187.

—— Only son born after Forfeiture by Tenant for Life—Accumulations.]—F. devised real estate in strict settlement, with a proviso that if any person entitled in possession for an estate for life or in tail to the hereditaments so devised should fail to reside for six successive calendar months in every year in the mansion house on the estate, the estate of him and his issue should cease, and the hereditaments immediately thereupon go over to the person next entitled in remainder as if the person so failing to reside were then dead without leaving any issue inheritable under such entail. She bequeathed the residue of her personal estate, in case the tenants for life should be or become at her death beneficially entitled in possession to the hereditaments so devised, and should have any children other than an eldest or only son or daughter beneficially entitled under the limitations aforesaid for an estate tail in remainder immediately expectant on the decease of his or her parent, in trust for such children as the tenant for life should appoint; and in default of such appointment, for "all and every the children or child of such tenant for life, other than and beside an eldest or only son or an eldest daughter entitled as aforesaid." The first tenant for life under the limitations of the will incurred the forfeiture consequent on failure to reside for the term prescribed by the will. After the forfeiture he married and left one child:—Held, that such child was entitled to the residuary personal estate, as he was not "an eldest child entitled as aforesaid," his remainder having been destroyed by the forfeiture incurred by his father prior to his birth. Johnson v. Foulds, 37 L. J., Ch. 260; L. R. 5 Eq. 268. And see Townsend v. Ash, ante, col. 1850.

By a will made in 1802, a testator gave his residuary personal estate to A., B. and C., successively for life, and after the death of the survivor in trust for all the children of B. who should live to attain twenty-one (other than and except the eldest and second sons if any, and any other child who should by virtue of the limitations thereinafter contained, be entitled in possession to his, the said testator's manors, &c., thereinafter mentioned, or the rents and profits thereof); and by his will the testator appointed the said manors, &c., in case D. should die without issue, to B. and C. successively for life, with remainder to first and other sons (except an eldest son) of B. successively in tail male, with remainder to the first and other daughters of B. successively, in tail male. In the events which happened, E., a daughter of B., became entitled to the manors, &c., as tenant in tail in remainder expectant on the death of D. and C., and joined them in suffering a recovery in 1823, and in making a re-settlement of the estate, reserving the life interests to D. and C., with remainder to trustees, for the benefit of B. for life, with remainder to her intended husband, with remainders over for the benefit of the issue of the marriage. E. died in the lifetime of C.:—Held, that E.'s personal representative was entitled to a share of the residuary personal estate of the testator. Wyndham v. Fane, 11 Hare, 287; 1 W. R. 467.

Bequest to Children at Twenty-five—Gift over of Eldest Son's Share if he succeeded to Inheritance—Time of Vesting.] — Testator, by his will, gave two-thirds of his residuary personal estate to belong to and to be given up to his child or children in the proportions therein named on their coming to the age of twenty-five years; provided that if his eldest son should thereafter come to the inheritance of the landed property of the testator's father or eldest brother, his share of the two-thirds above stated was to be made over to his brothers and sisters:—Held, that the eldest son of the testator on attaining twenty-five years of age without having then come to the inheritance mentioned, became entitled to his share of the two-thirds of the residuary personal estate under his father's will. Glyn v. Glyn, 26 L. J., Ch. 409; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 179; 5 W. R. 241.

The Most Notable Legal Work of the Century.

ENCYCLOPÆDIA
OF THE LAWS OF ENGLAND

Being a New Abridgment
BY THE MOST EMINENT LIVING AUTHORITIES.

THIS Encyclopædia is the work, not of one author, but of the best authorities that can be obtained on the multitudinous and comprehensive subjects with which it deals. It is, moreover, no mere collection of short legal essays, but has been planned and written in a thoroughly practical way, with references to all important decisions and text-books which a lawyer in practice may require.

No considerations of labour and expense have been allowed to outweigh the great object of making the work complete, accurate, and authoritative.

For editorial supervision the Publishers have secured the services of Mr. A. WOOD RENTON, M.A., LL.B., Barrister-at-Law, sometime Editor of the Law Journal, Member of the Mercantile Law Committee of the Society of Comparative Legislation.
